

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

THE
LAWYERS REPORTS
ANNOTATED

---

BOOK XXVII.

---

ALL CURRENT CASES OF GENERAL VALUE AND IMPORTANCE WITH FULL ANNOTATION
BURDETT A. RICH, EDITOR, HENRY .
P. FARNHAM, ASSISTANT

---

1895.

---

EXTRA ANNOTATED EDITION

WITH L. R. A. CASES AS AUTHORITIES.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING COMPANY.

1905.

122089

JUL 29 1942

---

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year eighteen hundred ninety five, by
THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING CO.,
In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington, D. C.

---

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year nineteen hundred five, by
THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING CO.,
In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington, D. C.

---

SUPPLEMENTAL TABLE

OF ALL

CASES REPORTED IN LAWYERS' REPORTS, ANNOTATED, BOOK 27,

NOT OFFICIALLY REPORTED WHEN THIS BOOK WENT TO PRESS.

(To be "tipped in" in front of regular table, used as a book mark or as data for marking each case. Like tables will be furnished for subsequent volumes as fast as possible.)

Ballin v. Merchants' Exch. Bank (89 Wis. 278)	357	Guild v. Goodwin (94 Tenn. 486)	660
Baltimore v. Keeley Institute (81 Md. 106)	646	Hart v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. (9 Wash. 620)	86
Baltimore & E. S. R. Co. v. Spring (80 Md. 510)	72	Hatcher v. Buford (60 Ark. 160)	507
Beehler v. Daniels (18 R. I. 568)	512	Henderson v. James (52 Ohio St. 242)	290
Beesley v. Wheeler (108 Mich. 196)	266	Hodgkinson v. Hodgkinson (48 Neb. 269)	120
Bingham v. Mears (4 N. D. 437)	257	Holland v. Silver Bow County (15 Mont. 460)	797
Birmingham M. R. Co. v. Parsons (100 Ala. 662)	263	Home Bldg. & C. Co. v. Roanoke (91 Va. 52)	551
Block v. Milwaukee Street R. Co. (89 Wis. 371)	365	Houston, C. A. & N. R. Co. v. Bolling (59 Ark. 395)	190
Bowler v. O'Connell (162 Mass. 319)	178	Howser v. Cumberland & P. R. Co. (80 Md. 146)	154
Braithwaite v. Harvey (14 Mont. 208)	101	Indianapolis v. Consumers' Gas Trust Co. (140 Ind. 107)	514
Brown v. Epps (91 Va. 726)	676	Jackson v. Greenville (72 Miss. 220)	527
Bullock v. Bullock (52 N. J. Eq. (7 Dick.) 561)	218	Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Smith (72 Miss. 677)	762
Bush v. McFarland (94 Tenn. 538)	662	Kilpatrick v. Baltimore (81 Md. 179)	643
Butler v. Fitzgerald (43 Neb. 192)	252	Kroessin v. Keller (60 Minn. 372)	685
Caswell, Re (18 R. I. 885)	82	Lamport v. Miller (158 Ill. 244)	449
Central R. Co. v. Brewer (78 Md. 394)	63	Langhammer v. Munter (80 Md. 518)	330
Chafey v. Mathews (104 Mich. 103)	558	Lawrence v. Louisville (96 Ky. 595)	560
Cincinnati v. Batsche (52 Ohio St. 324)	536	Leavell v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (116 N. C. 211)	843
Cochrane v. Frostburg (81 Md. 54)	728	Lindsey v. Anniston (104 Ala. 257)	436
Combes v. Milwaukee & M. R. Co. (89 Wis. 297)	369	Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hailey (94 Tenn. 883)	549
Contested Election of School Directors, Re (165 Pa. 233)	284	Lowe, Re (54 Kan. 757)	545
Craig v. Gunn (67 Vt. 92)	511	McFarland v. Railway Officials & E. A. Asso. (— Wyo. —)	48
Crane v. Pacific Bank (106 Cal. 64)	562	McMullan v. Dickinson Co. (60 Minn. 156)	409
Culbertson v. Nelson (93 Iowa, —)	222	Magnetic Ore Co. v. Marbury Lumber Co. (104 Ala. 465)	434
Dashiell v. Grosvenor (C. C. App. 4th C.) (25 U. S. App. 227)	67	Mauldin v. Greenville (42 S. C. 293)	284
Decker v. Schulze (11 Wash. 47)	335	Morgan v. Hudnell (52 Ohio St. 552)	862
Denver v. Coulehan (20 Colo. 471)	751	Mt. Carmel v. Shaw (155 Ill. 37)	580
Detroit v. Ellis (103 Mich. 612)	211	Nashville Lumber Co. v. Fourth Nat. Bank (94 Tenn. 374)	519
Drake v. Crane (127 Mo. 85)	653	Nashville Trust Co. v. Smythe (94 Tenn. 518)	663
Eighmy v. Union P. R. Co. (93 Iowa, —)	296	National Union Bank v. National Mechanics' Bank (80 Md. 371)	476
Erskine v. Nelson County (4 N. D. 66)	696	National Water Works Co. v. Kansas City (C. C. App. 8th C.) (27 U. S. App. 165)	827
First Nat. Bank v. Buckhannon Bank (80 Md. 475)	332	New Concord Village School Dist. v. Best (52 Ohio St. 138)	77
v. Mann (94 Tenn. 17)	565	New Hampshire F. Ins. Co. v. Bohn (C. C. App. 8th C.) (27 U. S. App. 564)	614
Flaherty, Re (105 Cal. 558)	529	v. National L. Ins. Co. (C. C. App. 8th C.) (27 U. S. App. 564)	614
Flinn v. Prairie County (60 Ark. 204)	669	Pekin v. McMahon (154 Ill. 141)	206
Fioraheim Bros. Dry Goods Co. v. Lester (60 Ark. 120)	505
Ford v. Chicago Milk Shippers' Asso. (155 Ill. 160)	298
Gate City Bldg. & L. Asso. v. National Bank of Commerce (126 Mo. 82)	401
Germania Bank v. Boutell (60 Minn. 189)	635
Goodlander Mill Co. v. Standard Oil Co. (C. C. App. 7th C.) 24 U. S. App. 7)	588

SUPPLEMENTAL TABLE OF CASES.

Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Montgomery	State v. Neelly (60 Ark. 66)	503
County Pass. R. Co. (167 Pa. 82)	State, Funck, v. McCarty (52 Ohio St. 363)	534
People v. Bray (105 Cal. 344)	Independent Dist. Teleg. Co., v.
v. Ketchum (103 Mich. 443)	Second Judicial Dist. Ct. (15
People, Hoffman, v. Hecht (105 Cal. 621)	Mont. 824)	392
People's Bank v. Jackson (43 S. C. 86)	Miller, v. Barber (— Wyo. —)	45
Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Smith (C. C.	Richards, v. Cincinnati (52 Ohio St.
App. 3d C.) (23 U. S. App. 134)	419)	737
Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Sulli-	Tide Water Pipe Co., v. State Bd.
van (141 Ind. 83)	of Assessors (— N. J. —)	634
Puget Sound Dressed Beef & P. Co. v.	Steinhauser v. Spraul (127 Mo. 541)	441
Jeffs (11 Wash. 466)	Stroup v. Stroup (140 Ind. 179)	523
Rieh v. Chamberlain (104 Mich. 436)	Syndicate Ins. Co. v. Bohn (C. C. App.
Roberts v. Detroit (102 Mich. 64)	8th C.) (27 U. S. App. 564)	614
Robinson v. Leach (67 Vt. 128)	v. National L. Ins. (C. C. App. 8th
Robinson Bank v. Miller (153 Ill. 244)	C.) (27 U. S. App. 564)	614
Rose v. Kimberly & C. Co. (89 Wis. 545)	Talbot Pav. Co. v. Gorman (103 Mich.
Rouse, H. & Co. v. Donovan (104 Mich. 284)	403)	96
Saleno v. Neosho (127 Mo. 627)	Texas & P. R. Co. v. Scoville (C. C.
Scott v. School Dist. No. 9 (67 Vt. 150)	App. 5th C.) (23 U. S. App. 506)	179
Seamans v. Knapp, S. & C. Co. (89 Wis. 177)	Thompson v. Jackson (93 Iowa, —)	92
Seevers v. Gabel (93 or 94 Iowa, —)	Tombler v. Koelling (60 Ark. 62)	502
Shanfelter v. Baltimore (80 Md. 483)	Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Melick (C. C. App.
Shields v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (97 Ky. 103)	8th C.) (27 U. S. App. 547)	629
Smiley v. MacDonald (42 Neb. 5)	Vanbebber v. Plunkett (26 Or. 562)	811
Southern Home Bldg. & L. Asso. v.	Van Osdel v. Champion (89 Wis. 661)	773
Home Ins. Co. (94 Ga. 167)	Walker v. Walker (66 N. H. 390)	799
State v. Belvel (89 Iowa, 405)	Webb, Re (89 Wis. 354)	356
v. Higgins (60 Minn. 1)	Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Call Pub. Co.
v. Hoskins (60 Minn. 168)	(44 Neb. 326)	622
v. Kent (4 N. D. 577)	White v. Providence Sav. L. Assur. Soc.
v. Lee (65 Conn. 265)	(163 Mass. 108)	308
v. Mrozinski (59 Minn. 465)	Wind v. Her (93 Iowa, —)	219
	Woodward-Holmes Co. v. Nudd (58 Minn. 236)	840
	Wyeth Hardware & M. Co. v. Lang (127
	Mo. 242)	651

TABLE OF CASES REPORTED

IN LAWYERS' REPORTS, ANNOTATED, BOOK XXVII.

A.
Abbott, New England Trust Co. v. (Mass.)	271	Bird v. Merkle (N. Y.)	423
Allen, First Nat. Bank of Birmingham v. (Ala.)	426	Birmingham First Nat. Bank v. Allen (Ala.)	426
American Sugar Ref. Co. v. Fancher (N. Y.)	757	Birmingham M. R. Co. v. Parsons (Ala.)	263
Anderson v. Rodgers (Kan.)	248	Blake, Hanover Nat. Bank v. (N. Y.)	33
Anniston, Lindsey v. (Ala.)	436	Block v. Milwaukee Street R. Co. (Wis.)	365
		Board of Education of New Concord Village School Dist. v. Best (Ohio)	77
		Bohn, New Hampshire F. Ins. Co. v. (C. C. App. 8th C.)	614
		Syndicate Ins. Co. v. (C. C. App. 8th C.)	614
B		Bolling, Houston, C. A. & N. R. Co. v. (59 Ark. 395)	190
Ballin v. Merchants' Exch. Bank (Wis.)	857	Boutell, Germania Bank v. (Minn.)	635
Baltimore v. Keeley Institute (Md.)	646	Boutwell, Topeka v. (Kan.)	593
Kilpatrick v. (Md.)	648	Bowler v. O'Connell (Mass.)	173
Shanfelter v. (Md.)	648	Braithwaite v. Harvey (Mont.)	101
Baltimore & E. S. R. Co. v. Spring (80 Md. 510)	72	Bray, People v. (Cal.)	158
Baltimore Breweries Co. v. Ranstead (Md.)	294	Brewer, Central R. Co. v. (Md.)	63
Bank, Buckhannon, First Nat. Bank of Grafton v. (80 Md. 475)	332	Brown v. Epps (Va.)	676
First Nat., of Birmingham v. Allen (Ala.)	426	Buckhannon Bank, First Nat. Bank of Grafton v. (80 Md. 475)	332
First Nat., of Grafton v. Buckhannon Bank (80 Md. 475)	332	Budd v. United Carriage Co. (Or.)	279
First Nat., of Johnson City v. Mann (94 Tenn. 17)	565	Buford, Hatcher v. (60 Ark. 169)	507
Fourth Nat., of Nashville, Nashville Lumber Co. v. (Tenn.)	519	Bullock v. Bullock (N. J.)	213
Germania v. Boutell (Minn.)	635	Bush v. McFarland (Tenn.)	662
Hanover Nat. v. Blake (N. Y.)	33	Butler v. Fitzgerald (Neb.)	252
Merchant's Exch., Ballin v. (Wis.)	857
National, of Commerce, Gate City Bldg. & L. Asso. v. (Mo.)	401	C.
National Mechanics', National Union Bank v. (80 Md. 371)	476	Call Pub. Co., Western U. Teleg. Co. v. (Neb.)	622
National Union v. National Mechanics' Bank (80 Md. 371)	476	Caswell, Re (R. I.)	82
Pacific, Crane v. (Cal.)	562	Central R. Co. v. Brewer (Md.)	63
People's v. Jackson (S. C.)	569	Chafey v. Mathews (Mich.)	558
Robinson v. Miller (Ill.)	449	Chamberlain, Rich v. (Mich.)	573
State, of Nebraska, Globe Pub. Co. v. (Neb.)	854	Champion, Van Osdel v. (Wis.)	778
Barber, State, Miller v. (Wyo.)	45	Charles S. Higgins Co. v. Higgins Soap Co. (N. Y.)	42
Batsche, Cincinnati v. (Ohio)	536	Chicago Milk Shippers' Asso., Ford v. (Ill.)	298
Beebler v. Daniels (R. I.)	512	Cincinnati v. Batsche (Ohio)	536
Beasley v. Wheeler (Mich.)	266	State, Richards v. (Ohio)	737
Belvel, State v. (Iowa)	846	Clark, Webster v. (Fla.)	126
Best, New Concord Village School Dist. Bd. of Edu. v. (Ohio)	77	Cochrane v. Frostburg (Md.)	728
Bingham v. Mears (N. Dak.)	257	Colgrove v. Smith (Cal.)	590
27 L. R. A.		Combes v. Milwaukee & M. R. Co. (Wis.)	369
		Com. v. Harmel (Pa.)	388
		v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. (Pa.)	281
		Consumers' Gas Trust Co., Indianapolis v. (Ind.)	514
		Contested Election of School Directors, Re (Pa.)	284

Coulehan, Denver v. (Colo.)	751
Craig v. Gunn (Vt.)	511
Crane, Drake v. (Mo.)	653
v. Pacific Bank (Cal.)	562
Culbertson v. Nelson (Iowa)	222
Cumberland & P. R. Co., Howser v. (80 Md. 146)	154
Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. United Electric R. Co. (Tenn.)	236

D.

Daniels, Beehler v. (R. I.)	512
Dashiell v. Grosvenor (66 Fed. Rep. 334)	67
Decker v. Schulze (Wash.)	335
Denver v. Coulehan (Colo.)	751
Detroit v. Ellis (Mich.)	211
Roberts v. (Mich.)	572
Dewey, Peabody v. (Ill.)	322
Dickinson Co., McMullan v. (Minn.)	409
Donovan, Rouse, H. & Co. v. (Mich.)	577
Douglas County, Pennoek v. (Neb.)	121
Drake v. Crane (Mo.)	653
Dunn, State, ex rel. v. Elliott (Wis.)	776
State, ex rel. v. Noyes (Wis.)	776

E.

Eighmy v. Union P. R. Co. (Iowa)	296
Elliott, State, Dunn v. (Wis.)	776
Ellis, Detroit v. (Mich.)	211
Enders v. Enders (Pa.)	56
Eppe, Brown v. (Va.)	676
Erskine v. Nelson County (N. Dak.)	696

F.

Fancher, American Sugar Ref. Co. v. (N. Y.)	757
Felix, Frame v. (Pa.)	302
Field v. Lamson & G. Mfg. Co. (Mass.)	136
First Nat. Bank of Birmingham v. Allen (Ala.)	426
Grafton v. Buckhannon Bank (Md.)	332
Johnson City v. Mann (94 Tenn. 17)	565
Fitchburg R. Co., Walsh v. (N. Y.)	724
Fitzgerald, Butler v. (Neb.)	252
Flaherty, Re (Cal.)	529
Flinn v. Prairie County (80 Ark. 204)	669
Florsheim Bros. Dry Goods Co. v. Lester (60 Ark. 120)	505
Ford v. Chicago Milk Shippers' Asso. (Ill.)	298
Holbrook v. (Ill.)	324
Fourth Nat. Bank of Nashville, Nashville Lumber Co. v. (Tenn.)	519
Frame v. Felix (Pa.)	302
Frank v. Swan Land & C. Co. (Ill.)	313
Frere v. Von Schoeler (La. Ann.)	414
Friend v. Swan Land & C. Co. (Ill.)	313
Frostburg, Cochrane v. (Md.)	728
Funck, State, ex rel. v. McCarty (Ohio)	584

G.

Gabel, Seevers v. (Iowa)	733
Gate City Bldg. & L. Asso. v. National Bank of Commerce (Mo.)	401

27 L. R. A.

Germania Bank v. Boutell (Minn.)	635
Globe Pub. Co. v. State Bank (Neb.)	854
Goodlander Mill Co. v. Standard Oil Co. (C. C. App. 7th C.)	583
Goodwin, Guild v. (Tenn.)	660
Gorman, Talbot Paving Co. v. (Mich.)	96
Grafton First Nat. Bank v. Buckhannon Bank (80 Md. 475)	332
Graham v. St. Charles Street R. Co. (La. Ann.)	416
Grant v. Lookout Mountain Co. (Tenn.)	98
Greenstreet v. Thornton (Ark.)	735
Greenville, Jackson v. (Miss.)	527
Mauldin v. (S. C.)	284
Grosvenor, Dashiell v. (66 Fed. Rep. 334)	67
Guild v. Goodwin (Tenn.)	660
Gunn, Craig v. (Vt.)	511

H.

Hailey, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. (Tenn.)	549
Hanover Nat. Bank v. Blake (N. Y.)	33
Harmel, Com. v. (Pa.)	383
Hart v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. (Wash.)	86
Harvey, Braithwaite v. (Mont.)	101
Hatcher v. Buford (60 Ark. 169)	507
Health Dept. v. Trinity Church (N. Y.)	710
Hecht, People, Hoffman v. (Cal.)	203
Henderson v. James (Ohio)	290
Hess, Long v. (Ill.)	791
Higgins, State v. (Minn.)	74
Higgins Soap Co., Charles S. Higgins Co. v. (N. Y.)	42
Hodgkinson v. Hodgkinson (Neb.)	120
Hoffman, People, ex rel. v. Hecht (Cal.)	203
Holbrook v. Ford (Ill.)	324
Holland v. Silver Bow County (Mont.)	797
Home Bldg. & C. Co. v. Roanoke (Va.)	551
Home Ins. Co., Southern Home Bldg. & L. Asso. v. (Ga.)	844
Homestead Street R. Co. v. Pittsburg & H. E. S. R. Co. (Pa.)	363
Hoskins, State v. (Minn.)	412
Houston, C. A. & N. R. Co. v. Bolling (59 Ark. 395)	190
Howser v. Cumberland & P. R. Co. (80 Md. 146)	154
Hudnell, Morgan v. (Ohio)	862

I.

Iler, Wind v. (Iowa)	219
Independent Dist. Teleg. Co., State, ex rel. v. Second Judicial Dist. Ct. (Mont.)	392
Indianapolis v. Consumers' Gas Trust Co. (Ind.)	514
Insurance Co., Home, Southern Home Bldg. & L. Asso. v. (Ga.)	844
National L., New Hampshire F. Ins. Co. v. (C. C. App. 8th C.)	614
National L., Syndicate Ins. Co. v. (C. C. App. 8th C.)	614
New Hampshire F. v. Bohn (C. C. App. 8th C.)	614
v. National L. Ins. Co. (C. C. App. 8th C.)	614
Niagara F., Hart v. (Wash.)	86
Syndicate v. Bohn (C. C. App. 8th C.)	614

Insurance Co., Syndicate, v. National L.
Ins. Co. (C. C. App. 8th C.) 614 Travelers' v. Melick (C. C. App.
8th C.) - - - - - 629

J.

Jackson v. Greenville (Miss.) - - - 527
People's Bank v. (S. C.) - - - 569
Thompson v. (Iowa) - - - 93
James, Henderson v. (Ohio) - - - 290
Jeffs, Puget Sound Dressed Beef & P.
Co. v. (Wash.) - - - 808
Johnson City First Nat. Bank v. Mann
(94 Tenn. 17) - - - 565

K.

Kansas City, National Water Works Co.
v. (C. C. App. 8th C.) - - - 827
Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Smith
(Miss.) - - - 763
Keeley Institute, Baltimore v. (Md.) - - 646
Keller, Kroessin v. (Minn.) - - - 685
Kent, State v. (N. Dak.) - - - 686
Ketchum, People v. (Mich.) - - - 448
Kilpatrick v. Baltimore (Md.) - - - 643
Kimberly & C. Co., Rose v. (Wis.) - - 556
Knapp, S. & Co. Company, Seamans v.
(Wis.) - - - 863
Koelling, Tombler v. (60 Ark. 63) - - 502
Kountz, Sturgis v. (Pa.) - - - 890
Kroessin v. Keller (Minn.) - - - 685

L.

Lamport v. Miller (Ill.) - - - 449
Lamson & G. Mfg. Co., Field v. (Mass.) 136
Lang, Wyeth Hardware & M. Co. v. (Mo.) 651
Langhammer v. Munter (Md.) - - - 330
Lawrence v. Louisville (Ky.) - - - 560
Leach, Robinson v. (Vt.) - - - 303
Leavell v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (N. C.) 843
Lee, State v. (Conn.) - - - 498
Lehigh Valley R. Co., Com. v. (Pa.) - - 281
Lester, Florsheim Bros. Dry Goods Co.
v. (60 Ark. 120) - - - 505
Lindsey v. Anniston (Ala.) - - - 436
Little Beaver Twp., Contested Election of School Directors of, Re (Pa.) - - 284
Long v. Hess (Ill.) - - - 791
Lookout Mountain Co., Grant v. (Tenn.) 98
Louisville, Lawrence v. (Ky.) - - - 560
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Halley (Tenn.) 549
Shields v. (Ky.) - - - 680
Lowe, Re (Kan.) - - - 545

M.

McCarty, State, Funck v. (Ohio) - - - 584
MacDonald, Smiley v. (Neb.) - - - 540
McFarland, Bush v. (Tenn.) - - - 662
v. Railway Officials & E. A. Asso.
(Wyo.) - - - 48
McMahon, Pekin v. (Ill.) - - - 206
McMullan v. Dickinson Co. (Minn.) - - 409
Magnetic Ore Co. v. Marbury Lumber
Co. (Ala.) - - - 434
Mandel v. Swan Land & C. Co. (Ill.) - 313
Mann, First Nat. Bank of Johnson City
v. (94 Tenn. 17) - - - 565

27 L. R. A.

Marbury Lumber Co., Magnetic Ore Co.
v. (Ala.) - - - 434
Mathews, Chafey v. (Mich.) - - - 553
Matson, Sweetser v. (Ill.) - - - 374
Mauldin v. Greenville (S. C.) - - - 284
Mears, Bingham v. (N. Dak.) - - - 257
Melick, Travelers' Ins. Co. v. (C. C. App.
8th C.) - - - 629
Merchants' Exch. Bank, Ballin v. (Wis.) 357
Merklee, Bird v. (N. Y.) - - - 423
Metalline Land Co., Morris v. (Pa.) - - 305
Milk Exch., People v. (N. Y.) - - - 437
Miller, Lamport v. (Ill.) - - - 449
Robinson Bank v. (Ill.) - - - 449
State v. Barber (Wyo.) - - - 45
Milwaukee & M. R. Co., Combes v. (Wis.) 369
Milwaukee Street R. Co., Block v. (Wis.) 365
Montgomery County Pass. R. Co., Pennsylvania R. Co. v. (Pa.) - - - 766
Morgan v. Hudnell (Ohio) - - - 862
Morris v. Metalline Land Co. (Pa.) - - 305
Mt. Carmel v. Shaw (155 Ill. 37) - - 580
Mrozinski, State v. (Minn.) - - - 67
Munter, Langhammer v. (Md.) - - - 330
Murdock v. Waterman (N. Y.) - - - 418

N.

Nashville Fourth Nat. Bank, Nashville
Lumber Co. v. (Tenn.) - - - 519
Nashville Lumber Co. v. Fourth Nat.
Bank of Nashville (Tenn.) - - - 519 Nashville Trust Co. v. Smythe (94 Tenn.
513) - - - 663
National Bank of Commerce, Gate City
Bldg. & L. Asso. v. (Mo.) - - - 401
National L. Ins. Co., New Hampshire F.
Ins. Co. v. (C. C. App. 8th C.) 614 Syndicate Ins. Co. v. (C. C. App.
8th C.) - - - 614
National Mechanics' Bank, National Union Bank v. (80 Md. 371) - - - 476
National Union Bank v. National Mechanics' Bank (80 Md. 371) - - - 476
National Water Works Co. v. Kansas
City (C. C. App. 8th C.) - - - 827
Nechamcus, People, ex rel., v. Warden of City Prison (N. Y.) - - - 718
Neelly, State v. (60 Ark. 66) - - - 503
Nelson, Culbertson v. (Iowa) - - - 222
Nelson County, Erskine v. (N. Dak.) 696
Neosho, Saleno v. (Mo.) - - - 769
New Concord Village School Dist. Bd. of
Edu. v. Best (Ohio) - - - 77
New England Trust Co. v. Abbott
(Mass.) - - - 271
New Hampshire F. Ins. Co. v. Bohn (C.
C. App. 8th C.) - - - 614
v. National L. Ins. Co. (C. C. App.
8th C.) - - - 614
New York Health Dept. v. Trinity Church (N. Y.) - - - 710
Niagara F. Ins. Co., Hart v. (Wash.) 86
Noyes, State, Dunn v. (Wis.) - - - 776
Nudd, Woodward-Holmes Co. v. (Minn.) 840

O.

O'Connell, Bowler v. (Mass.) - - - 173

P.

Pacific Bank, Crane v. (Cal.)	563
Parsons, Birmingham M. R. Co. v. (Ala.)	268
Peabody v. Dewey (Ill.)	322
Pekin v. McMahon (Ill.)	206
Pennock v. Douglas County (Neb.)	121
Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Montgomery County Pass. R. Co. (Pa.)	766
Willock v. (Pa.)	228
People v. Bray (Cal.)	158
v. Ketchum (Mich.)	448
v. Milk Exch. (N. Y.)	437
Hoffman v. Hecht (Cal.)	203
Nechamcus v. Warden of City Prison (N. Y.)	718
People's Bank v. Jackson (S. C.)	569
Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Smith (C. C. App. 3d C.)	181
Pittsburg & H. E. S. R. Co., Homestead Street R. Co. v. (Pa.)	383
Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Sullivan (Ind.)	840
Plunkett, Vanbebber v. (Or.)	811
Prairie County, Flinn v. (60 Ark. 204)	669
Providence Sav. & L. Assur. Soc., White v. (Mass.)	398
Puget Sound Dressed Beef & P. Co. v. Jeffs (Wash.)	808

R.

Railroad Co., Baltimore & E. S. v. Spring (80 Md. 510)	72
Birmingham M. v. Parsons (Ala.)	268
Central v. Brewer (Md.)	68
Cumberland & P., Howser v. (80 Md. 146)	154
Fitchburg, Walsh v. (N. Y.)	724
Houston, C. A. & N. v. Bolling (59 Ark. 395)	190
Kansas City, M. & B. v. Smith (Miss.)	762
Lehigh Valley, Com. v. (Pa.)	231
Louisville & N. v. Hailey (Tenn.)	549
Shields v. (Ky.)	680
Milwaukee & M., Combes v. (Wis.)	369
Pennsylvania v. Montgomery County Pass. R. Co. (Pa.)	766
Pennsylvania, Willock v. (Pa.)	228
Philadelphia & R. v. Smith (C. C. App. 3d C.)	181
Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. v. Sullivan (Ind.)	840
St. Charles, Graham v. (La. Ann.)	416
Union P., Eighth v. (Iowa)	296
Railway Co., Homestead Street v. Pittsburg & H. E. S. R. Co. (Pa.)	383
Milwaukee Street, Block v. (Wis.)	365
Montgomery County Pass., Pennsylvania R. Co. v. (Pa.)	766
Pittsburg & H. E. S. R. Co., Homestead Street R. Co. v. (Pa.)	383
Texas & P. v. Scoville (C. C. App. 5th C.)	179
United Electric, Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. (Tenn.)	236
Railway Officials & E. A. Asso., McFarland v. (Wyo.)	48
Ranstead, Baltimore Breweries Co. v. (Md.)	294

87 L. R. A.

Rich v. Chamberlain (Mich.)	573
Richards, State, ex rel. v. Cincinnati (Ohio)	787
Ritchie v. Waller (Conn.)	161
Roanoke, Home Bldg. & C. Co. v. (Va.)	551
Roberts v. Detroit (Mich.)	572
Robinson v. Leach (Vt.)	303
Robinson Bank v. Miller (Ill.)	449
Rodgers, Anderson v. (Kan.)	248
Rose v. Kimberly & C. Co. (Wis.)	556
Rouse, H. & Co. v. Donovan (Mich.)	577

S

St. Charles Street R. Co., Graham v. (La. Ann.)	416
Saleno v. Neosho (Mo.)	769
Schulze, Decker v. (Wash.)	335
Scott v. Williamstown School Dist. No. 9 (Vt.)	588
Scoville, Texas & P. R. Co. v. (C. C. App. 5th C.)	179
Seamans v. Knapp, S. & Co. Company (Wis.)	362
Second Judicial Dist. Ct., State, Independent Dist. Teleg. Co. v. (Mont.)	392
Seever v. Gabel (Iowa)	733
Shanfelter v. Baltimore (Md.)	648
Shaw, Mt. Carmel v. (155 Ill. 37)	580
Shields v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.)	680
Silver Bow County, Holland v. (Mont.)	797
Smiley v. MacDonald (Neb.)	540
Smith, Colgrove v. (Cal.)	590
Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. (Miss.)	762
Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. (C. C. App. 3d C.)	131
Smythe, Nashville Trust Co. v. (94 Tenn. 518)	663
Southern Home Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Home Ins. Co. (Ga.)	844
Spraul, Steinhauser v. (Mo.)	441
Spring, Baltimore & E. S. R. Co. v. (80 Md. 510)	72
Standard Oil Co., Goodlander Mill Co. v. (C. C. App. 7th C.)	583
State v. Belvel (Iowa)	846
v. Higgins (Minn.)	74
v. Hoskins (Minn.)	412
v. Kent (N. Dak.)	686
v. Lee (Conn.)	498
v. Mrozinski (Minn.)	76
v. Neely (80 Ark. 66)	503
Dunn v. Elliott (Wis.)	776
Dunn v. Noyes (Wis.)	776
Funch v. McCarty (Ohio)	534
Independent Dist. Teleg. Co. v. Second Judicial Dist. Ct. (Mont.)	392
Miller v. Barber (Wyo.)	45
Richards v. Cincinnati (Ohio)	787
Tide Water Pipe Co. v. State Bd. of Assessors (N. J.)	684
State Bank, Globe Pub. Co. v. (Neb.)	854
State Bd. of Assessors, State, Tide Water Pipe Co. v. (N. J.)	684
Steinhauser v. Spraul (Mo.)	441
Stroup v. Stroup (Ind.)	523
Sturgis v. Kounitz (Pa.)	390
Sullivan, Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. (Ind.)	840

CASES REPORTED.

9

Swan Land & C. Co., Frank v. (Ill.)	313
Friend v. (Ill.)	313
Mandel v. (Ill.)	313
Sweetser v. Matson (Ill.)	374
Syndicate Ins. Co. v. Bohn (C. C. App. 8th C.)	614
v. National L. Ins. Co. (C. C. App. 8th C.)	614

T.

Talbot Paving Co. v. Gorman (Mich.)	96
Texas & P. R. Co. v. Scoville (C. C. App. 5th C.)	179
Thompson v. Jackson (Iowa)	92
Thornton, Greenstreet v. (Ark.)	785
Tide Water Pipe Co., State, ex rel. v. State Bd. of Assessors (N. J.)	684
Tombler v. Koelling (60 Ark. 62)	502
Topeka v. Boutwell (Kan.)	593
Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Melick (C. C. App. 8th C.)	629
Trinity Church, Health Dept. v. (N. Y.)	710

U.

Union P. R. Co., Elighmy v. (Iowa)	296
United Carriage Co., Budd v. (Or.)	279
United Electric R. Co., Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. (Tenn.)	286

V.

Vanbebbber v. Plunkett (Or.)	811
Van Osdel v. Champion (Wis.)	773
VonSchoeler, Frere v. (La. Ann.)	414

W.

Walker v. Walker (N. H.)	799
Waller, Ritchie v. (Conn.)	161
Walsh v. Fitchburg R. Co. (N. Y.)	724
Warden of City Prison, People, Nechamus v. (N. Y.)	718
Waterman, Murdock v. (N. Y.)	418
Webb, Re (Wis.)	356
Webster v. Clark (Fla.)	126
Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Call Pub. Co. (Neb.)	622
Leavell v. (N. C.)	843
Wheeler, Beasley v. (Mich.)	266
White v. Providence Sav. L. Assur. Soc. (Mass.)	398
Williamstown School Dist. No. 9, Scott v. (Vt.)	588
Willock v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Pa.)	228
Wind v. Her (Iowa)	219
Woodward-Holmes Co. v. Nudd (Minn.)	340
Wyeth Hardware & M. Co. v. Lang (Mo.)	651

IN OPINIONS OF THE JUDGES CONTAINED IN THIS BOOK.

A.		B.
221	Atty-Gen. v. Earl of Lonsdale, L. R. 7 Eq. 387.	200
227	v. Utica Ins. Co., 2 Johns. Ch. 383, 1 L. ed. 420	205
237	Atwood v. Atwood, 22 Pick. 283	227
237	Aultman v. Smith, 52 Mo. App. 351	250
251	Au Sable Lumber Co. v. Detroit Mfrs. Mut. F. Ins. Co., 89 Mich. 407	91
255	Auspach v. Ferguson, 71 Iowa, 144	94
243	Autauga County v. Davis, 22 Ala. 703	206
	Ayer v. Spring, 9 Mass. 8	256
2, 200
420
242	E	205
279	E	245
278		65
506	E	506
123	E	604
310	E
458		714
710		582
302		509
406		292
	E	322
7, 848		619
873		66
58	E	242
254	E	16, 300
329	E	650
259		78
		796
547		538
606	E
810		259
653	E
229		373
		373
534		328
American Transp. Co. v. Moore, 5 Mich. 368, 386		607
American U. Teleg. Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co., 67 Ala. 22, 42 Am. Rep. 90	264
Ammon v. Martin, 59 Ark. 191	508
Amory v. Francis, 16 Mass. 306	463		640
Anderson v. Bennett, 16 Or. 515	268
v. Fitzgerald, 4 H. L. Cas. 484, 496	400		321
v. Gill, 25 L. R. A. 200, 80 Md.	332
v. Rademacher Cases, 49 Ohio St. 384	539		61
v. Scholey, 114 Ind. 558	284
v. Sloan, 1 Colo. 484	263
v. Wellington, 2 L. R. A. 110, 40 Kan. 173	533
Andrews v. Hobgood, 1 Lea. 693	667
Angus v. Radin, 5 N. J. L. 515, 8 Am. Dec. 626	563
Arapahoe County Comrs. v. Cutter, 3 Colo. 349	796
Archer v. American Waterworks Co., 50 N. J. Eq. 83	306
Arkansas County v. Freeman, 81 Ark. 300	673
Arkerson v. Dennison, 117 Mass. 407	306
Armfield v. Nash, 31 Mass. 331	310
Armistead v. Com., 11 Leigh, 657, 37 Am. Dec. 633	606
Armour v. McMichael, 36 N. J. L. 92	213
Arnold v. Sprague, 84 Vt. 402	228
Arnot v. Pittston & E. Coal Co., 58 N. Y. 556, 28 Am. Rep. 190	440
Aspden v. Nixon, 45 U. S. 4 How. 467, 11 L. ed. 1069	115		178
Atchison v. Butcher, 3 Kan. 104	606		500
Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Plunkett, 25 Kan. 196	600		44
Atkinson v. Goodrich Transp. Co., 80 Wis. 141, 163, 50 Am. Rep. 352	363		663
Atlantic City Waterworks Co. v. Niles, 59 Mich. 811	772		663
v. Read, 50 N. J. L. 506	773		511
Atlantic Exp. Co. v. Wilmington & W. E. Co., 18 L. R. A. 383, 111 N. C. 463	343		626
			778
			134
			205
			11
27 L. R. A.

Osro, V. & C. B. Co. v. Brevoort, 25 L. R. A. 287	768	Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Elliott, 29 L. R. A. 583, 5 C. C. A. 347, 56 Fed. Rep. 949	975
Osro & V. R. Co. v. Stevens, 79 Ind. 288, 26 Am. Rep. 189	768	Chidsey v. Canton, 17 Conn. 475	973
Osldwell v. Carthage, 49 Ohio St. 384	589	Chionery v. Evans, 11 H. L. Cas. 115	428
Callahan v. Mitchell, 39 Ind. 419	259	Christensen, Ex parte, 85 Cal. 205	981
Callan v. Wilson, 127 U. S. 540, 33 L. ed. 228	979	Christian v. Clark, 10 Lea, 630	985
Cameron v. Fay, 55 Tex. 62	810	Christian County Bank v. Goode, 44 Mo. App. 129	268
v. Ravenna, Conn. 403	444	Christie v. Griggs, 2 Campb. 80	269
v. 170	900	Churchman v. Indianapolis, 110 Ind. 389	136
P. R. Co., 17 L. R. A.	843	Chute v. Quincy, 156 Mass. 189	379
Ohio St. 463	81	Cincinnati Inclined Plane R. Co. v. City & Suburban Teleg. Assn., 12 L. R. A. 534, 45 Ohio St. 890	239, 344, 345
ut. L. Ins. Co., 98 Mass.	400	Citizens Gas & Min. Co. v. Elwood, 114 Ind. 383	517
v. 65, 68	139	Citizens Horse R. Co. v. Belleville, 47 Ill. App. 388	218
El N. H. 201	772	Citizens Sav. & Loan Assn. of Cleveland, Ohio v. Topeka, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 865, 28 L. R. A.	74, 800
r, Light & Power Co.,	772
Power Co. v. Carlsruhe,	778
n, 25 Wend. 370, 37 Am.	810
v. 16 Wall. 371, 21 L. ed.	608
v. People, 8 Colo. 116	758
v. People, 64 N. Y. 488	791
Carriger v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co., 7 Lea, 388	768
Carroll County Sav. Bank v. Strother, 28 S. C. 604	228
Carter v. Howe Mach. Co., 51 Md. 236, 34 Am. Dec. 682	86
n. Dec. 682	587
Cal. 473	54
v. 236	531
v. 473	133
v. 798	567
v. 528	279
t. 371, 5 L.	587
Causey v. Yates, 8 Humph. 608	761
Cavin's Petition v. Gleason, Re, 105 N. Y. 266	227
Cayuga County Nat. Bank of Auburn v. Purdy, 56 Mich. 6	44, 45
Celluloid Mfg. Co. v. Cellonite Mfg. Co., 28 Fed. Rep. 94	100
Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Pettus, 113 U. S. 116, 28 L. ed. 915	123
Central Trust Co. of New York v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 57 Fed. Rep. 441	648
Cerro Gordo County v. Wright County, 59 Iowa, 485	821
Chace v. Trafford, 116 Mass. 529, 17 Am. Rep. 171	144
Chaffee v. Quidnick Co. 12 R. L. 449	84
Chaffee v. Rutland R. Co., 55 Vt. 110	68
Chambers, Re, 44 Fed. Rep. 786	124
Chambers v. Atlas Ins. Co., 51 Conn. 17, 50 Am. Rep. 1	784
Chandler v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 21 Minn. 35, 18 Am. Rep. 385	124
Chapman v. Brooklyn, 40 N. Y. 373	879
v. Copeland, 55 Miss. 476	278
v. Douglas County Comrs., 107 U. S. 348, 27 L. ed. 378	290
Chapman v. Thomas, 5 Mich. 58	586
Chappell's Case, L. R. 6 Ch. 908	591
Charleston v. Werner, 38 S. C. 486	599
Chase v. Curtis, 113 U. S. 452, 28 L. ed. 1086	219
v. Miller, 41 Pa. 403	780
v. Redding, 18 Gray, 418	528
v. Western, 12 N. H. 418	588
Cheever v. Wilson, 78 U. S. 9 Wall. 108, 19 L. ed. 604	219
Cheney v. Gleason, 117 Mass. 557	780
Chicago v. Keefe, 114 Ill. 222, 55 Am. Rep. 860	528
v. Sheldon, 75 U. S. 9 Wall. 50, 19 L. ed. 594	665
v. Trotter, 126 Ill. 420	588
v. Union Bldg. Assn., 108 Ill. 379, 40 Am. Rep. 598	582
Chicago & A. R. Co. v. People, 67 Ill. 11, 16 Am. Rep. 589	625
v. Shenk, 131 Ill. 288	694
v. Summers, 113 Ind. 10	738
Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Oconto, 50 Wis. 189, 35 Am. Rep. 840	755
Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Dickson, 68 Ill. 151, 14 Am. Rep. 114	186
v. Quincy, 156 Ill. 568	540
Chicago City R. Co. v. Wilcox, 21 L. R. A. 176, 128 Ill. 870	210
27 L. R. A.
		Commercial Ins. Co. v. Ives, 56 Ill. 408	618
		Com. v. Abraham, 156 Mass. 87	60
		v. Alger, 7 Oush. 58	545, 714
		v. Bowden, 9 Mass. 494	469
		v. Brooks, 109 Mass. 365	531
		v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 27 Gratt. 344	798
		v. Davis, 140 Mass. 485	531
		v. Gibbs, 4 Gray, 146	690
		v. Holmes, 127 Mass. 424, 34 Am. Rep. 391	694
		v. Keeper, 114 Mass. 278	604
		v. Merrill, Thatcher Crim. Cas. 1	699
		v. Mitchell, 52 Pa. 343	806
		v. Price, 71 Am. Dec. 671	804
		v. Roberts, 18 L. R. A. 400, 155 Mass. 281	715
		v. Stodder, 2 Cush. 563, 48 Am. Dec. 679	436
		v. Stremback, 8 Rawle, 341, 24 Am. Dec. 361	362
		Comstock v. Hler, 73 N. Y. 269, 29 Am. Rep. 143	622
		Cone v. Lewis, 64 Tex. 361, 53 Am. Rep. 667	611
		Conhocton Road v. Buffalo, N. Y. & R. R. Co., 51 N. Y. 573, 10 Am. Rep. 846	188
		Connaughton v. Banda, 32 Wis. 387	809
		Connolly v. Scarr, 72 Iowa, 223	222
		Conser v. Snowden, 54 Md. 175, 39 Am. Rep. 808	509
		Consolidated Tank-Line Co. v. Kansas City Varnish Co., 43 Fed. Rep. 204	397
		Converse v. Cooke, 25 Hun. 44	263
		Conway v. Beaumont, 55 Vt. 8, 45 Am. Rep. 879	304
		Cook v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 9 L. R. A. 764, 51 Iowa, 551, 3 Intern. Com. Rep. 586	628
		v. Penrhyn Slate Co., 35 Ohio St. 125	136
		Cooke v. Forbes, L. R. 5 Eq. 166	242
		Coomes v. Eiling, 3 Atk. 678	800
		Coope v. Creswell, L. R. 3 Ch. 12	423
		Cooper v. Beers, 143 Ill. 25	324
		v. Dillon, 56 Iowa, 365	84
		v. Lampeter Twp., 8 Watts, 125	768
		v. Ulmann, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 261	667
		v. United States Mut. Ben. Assn., 16 L. R. A. 138, 182 N. Y. 334	55
		Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 113 U. S. 726, 28 L. ed. 1187	506

Cochin v. Davenport, 9 Iowa, 229	124	C. Headley, 22 N. J. Eq. 115	214, 215
Cordell v. Coryell, 4 Wash. C. C. 200	160	C. Houghton, 14 L. R. A. 797, 80 Neb. 508	177
Cornick v. Digby, 9 Ir. C. L. Rep. 507	167	C. Minor, 1 How. (Mass.) 181, 20 Am. Dec.	200
Crotello v. Wyoming, 49 Ohio St. 302	167	205	200
Coulson v. Portland, Dundy, 461	779	C. Patrick, 8 C. C. A. 628, 57 Fed. Rep. 909	229, 230, 231
Council Bluffs Iron Works v. Cuppay, 41 Iowa, 104	229	C. Second Universalist Meeting-House
Cowden's App., 1 Pa. 278	207	Proprs. in Lowell, 5 Met. 221	272
Cowert, Ex parte, 92 Ala. 97	206	C. State, 66 Ala. 63, 44 Am. Rep. 125	206
Cowles v. Buckman, 6 Iowa, 169	640	Day v. Elmora, 4 Wis. 180, 190	209
Cox v. Hickman, 8 H. L. Cas. 209	120	Dayton v. Corner, 18 L. R. A. 20, 51 Minn. 408	254
a. Long, 69 N. C. 7, 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 6th		Decker v. Wilson, 8 Best. 181	108
Am. ed. p. 26	95	Deane v. Clayton, 7 Taunt. 490	737
a. People, 60 N. Y. 800	799	Dearmond v. Dearmond, 10 Ind. 191	228
a. Watts, 157 Pa. 93	879	E	227
Coy v. Jones, 10 L. R. A. 656, 30 Neb. 798	691	E	708
Craig v. Kittredge, 46 N. H. 57	601	E	410
Cramer v. Willetts, 61 Ill. 481	604	E	728
Crandall's Petition, Re, 34 Wis. 177	709	E	608
Crane v. French, 35 Me. 508	764	E	700
a. Turner, 67 N. Y. 427	606	E	609
Cranson v. Cranson, 4 Mich. 239, 60 Am. Dec. 584	809	L
Crawford v. Dunbar, 22 Cal. 30	210	E	423
a. Rambo, 44 Ohio St. 287	769	E	400
Creed v. Horst, 4 Mo. App. 419	227	D	327
Creed v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 66 Pa. 129, 20 Am. Rep. 646	540	E	444
Crispin v. Habbitt, 61 N. Y. 516, 37 Am. Rep. 331	206		334
Croft v. Alston, 4 Barn. & Ald. 640	176		697
a. Day, 7 Beav. 64	44		419
Croft v. Waterhouse, 3 Bing. 321	202		673
Crookbrite v. Travelers Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., 70 Wis. 118	481		233
Crosby v. Wadsworth, 8 East. 808	608		628
Crosley v. Hutton, 66 Mo. 168	736		129
Crow v. Brown, 11 L. R. A. 110, 61 Iowa, 244	711		267
Crowder v. Sullivan, 12 L. R. A. 647, 126 Ind. 406	773
Crowe v. People, 22 Ill. 231	413		673
Crowley v. Christensen, 187 U. S. 68, 34 L. ed. 620	522		739
Cruikshank v. Charleston, 1 McCord, L. 200	210		712
Cullen's Case, 34 Gratt. 624	679		212
Culley v. Edwards, 44 Ark. 428, 51 Am. Rep. 614	129		210
Cullum v. Erwin, 4 Ala. 462	667		706
Culp v. Atchison & N. R. Co., 17 Kan. 475	180		446
Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. United Electric R. Co., 12 L. R. A. 544, 42 Fed. Rep. 279	244		270
Cummings v. National Furnace Co., 60 Wis. 608	156		207
a. Seymour, 79 Ind. 491, 41 Am. Rep. 618	617		272
Curry v. Keyser, 30 Ind. 214	606		422
Curson v. Betworthy, 22 Eng. L. & Eq. 1	71		640
Curtice v. Thompson, 19 N. H. 471	129		841
Curtin v. Somerset, 13 L. R. A. 322, 140 Pa. 70	600		728
Cushman v. Thayer Mfg. Jewelry Co., 70 N. Y. 263, 32 Am. Rep. 218	279		200
Custick v. Adams, 115 N. Y. 54	775		619
Cutler v. Howard, 9 Wis. 309	602		409
a. Russellville, 40 Ark. 105	82		254
a. Wright, 20 N. Y. 472	668		773
Cutler v. Powell, 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. L.	98		539
			607
			156
			124
			606
			201
			701
			519
			240
			608
			607
			510
			607
			506
			229
			701
			734
			261
			478
			129
			606
			829
			709
			227
			506
			607
			619
			609
			423

D.

Daley v. Norwich & W. R. Co., 20 Conn. 601, 60 Am. Dec. 412	200, 210
Daly v. Morgan, 1 L. R. A. 707, 60 Md. 400	74
Dame v. Kempster, 146 Mass. 484	120
Dane v. National Bank of the Republic, 122 Mass. 169	620
Danby v. Boardley, 43 L. T. N. S. 639	97
Danforth v. Penny, 3 Met. 684	611
Daniel v. Smith, 64 Cal. 240	679
Daniel v. Kyle, 1 Ga. 304	261
a. New York & N. E. R. Co., 15 L. R. A. 745, 154 Mass. 269	779
Darrell v. Tibbitts, L. R. & Q. B. Div. 640	204
Dartmouth College Trustees v. Woodward, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 629	617
Dash v. VanKleeck, 7 Johns. 477, 8 Am. Dec. 291	661
Dasler, Re, 25 Kan. 679	606
Davenport v. Kleinschmidt, 6 Mont. 600	778
Davey v. Turner, 1 Dall. 111	231
David v. Ryan, 47 Iowa. 643	734
Davidson v. Cornell, 122 N. Y. 229	267
a. McGregor, 8 Minn. & W. 708	89
a. Nichols, 11 Allen. 514	506
a. Wright, 46 Iowa, 663	650
Davis v. Bronson, 6 Iowa, 410	221
a. Davis & Co. 178	610, 800
a. German-American Ins. Co., 125 Mass. 261	600
a. Guarneri, 46 Ohio St. 470	602
77 L. R. A.

E.

Earle v. James, 8 Md. Ch. 290.....	645
Earl v. Chicago, 186 Ill. 277.....	582
East End Street R. Co. v. Doyle, 9 L. R. A. 100, 88 Tenn. 747.....	243, 245
Easterly v. Barber, 65 N. Y. 253.....	668
Eastern Counties R. Co. v. Broom, 6 Exch. 314.....	66
Eastman v. Clark, 68 N. H. 276, 16 Am. Rep. 192.....	129
Easton Comrs. v. Covey, 74 Md. 262.....	581
East St. Louis v. East St. Louis Gas-Light & Coke Co., 98 Ill. 415, 38 Am. Rep. 97.....	778
Eaton v. Boston, C. & M. Railroad, 51 N. H. 504, 12 Am. Rep. 147.....	554
v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 87 N. Y. 382, 15 Am. Rep. 513.....	201
Eberle v. Mayer, 1 Rawle, 386.....	982
Edgerton v. New York & H. R. Co., 89 N. Y. 227.....	156
Edison v. Edison United Phonograph Co. (N. J.) 29 Atl. Rep. 197.....	898
Edmondson v. Cox, 7 Vin. Abr. 208.....	800
Edwards v. Jones, 1 Myl. & C. 225.....	607
v. London & S. W. R. Co., L. R. 6 Q. B. 65 v. McLeary, 10 Eng. Ch. 307.....	538
Ellis v. Holder, 2 McCrary, 622, 13 Fed. Rep. 668.....	798
Eggleston v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co., 65 Iowa, 308.....	501
Ehrisman v. Sener, 162 Pa. 577.....	775
Elghmy v. Union Pac. R. Co. (Iowa) 27 L. R. A. 296.....	848
Einstein v. Rosenfeld, 88 N. J. Eq. 808.....	988
Elizabethown Sav. Institution v. Gerber, 35 N. J. Eq. 153.....	216, 218
Elk r. Wilkins, 112 U. S. 94, 28 L. ed. 648.....	159
Elliott v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 150 U. S. 245, 37 L. ed. 1063.....	584
Ellis v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co., 64 Iowa, 507.....	51
v. Laume, 42 Mo. 168.....	667
v. Roscoe, 4 Bart. 418.....	667
Embree v. Hanna, 5 Johns. 101.....	329
Emery v. Batsholder, 78 Me. 238.....	669
v. Clough, 68 N. H. 553, 55 Am. Rep. 548.....	509
Emigrant Industrial Sav. Bank, Re, 75 N. Y. 283.....	805
Emporia v. Volmer, 12 Kan. 623.....	604
Engel r. Smith, 22 Mich. 1.....	514
English v. Carney, 25 Mich. 178.....	667
v. Thomason, 32 Ky. 351.....	838
Enns v. Priest, 65 Iowa, 232.....	221
Eric's App., 91 Pa. 386.....	773
Eshelman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 67 Iowa, 296.....	849
Etting v. Bank of United States, 24 U. S. 11 Wheat, 50, 6 L. ed. 419.....	55
Evansich v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co., 57 Tex. 123.....	207
Ewing v. Arthur, 1 Humph. 537.....	609
Extension of Boundaries of Denver, Re, 13 Colo. 283.....	757
Eyre v. Potter, 55 U. S. 15 How. 42, 14 L. ed. 542.....	71

F.

Fairebeard v. Bowers, 2 Vern. 202.....	800
Famous Shoe & Clothing Co. v. Crosswhite (Mo.) 26 L. R. A. 568.....	406
Farish v. Reigle, 11 Gratt. 711, 62 Am. Dec. 668.....	283
Farnham v. Benedict, 107 N. Y. 159.....	522
Farnum v. Boutelle, 19 Met. 159.....	483
Farrant v. Barnes, 11 C. B. N. S. 553.....	586
Farrior v. New England Mortg. Secur. Co., 6 Ala. 275.....	506
Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp., 4 Met. 49, 38 Am. Dec. 339.....	207
v. Curtis, 7 Blee. 160.....	251
Fassett v. Smith, 23 N. Y. 252.....	761
Faulds v. Yates, 57 Ill. 416, 11 Am. Rep. 24.....	467
Featherstone v. Cooke, L. R. 16 Eq. 298.....	306
Fee v. Smingly, 6 Mont. 586.....	798
Feigley r. Feigley, 7 Md. 537, 61 Am. Dec. 375.....	801
Fellows v. Stevens, 24 Wend. 294.....	40
Feltus v. Swan, 62 Minn. 415.....	444
Ferguson v. Columbus & R. Railway, 75 Ga. 637, 77 Ga. 102.....	209
Fernon v. Farmer, 1 Harr. (Del.) 83.....	609
Ferris v. People, 81 How. Pr. 145.....	789
Fielder v. Jessup, 24 Mo. App. 91.....	652
Findley v. Pittsburgh, 83 Pa. 351.....	805
Finley v. State, 61 Ala. 205.....	853
Fire Ins. Patrol of Philadelphia v. Boyd, 1 L. R. A. 417, 120 Pa. 642.....	843
Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. of California v. Buck- staff, 38 Neb. 150.....	51

37 L. R. A.

First Nat. Bank of Ballston Spa v. Insurance

Co. of North America, 50 N. Y. 45.....	90
Boston r. Eastern R. Co., 124 Mass. 524.....	423
Buffalo v. Wood, 17 N. Y. 407, 411, 412, 37 Am. Rep. 66.....	260
Butte v. Bell Silver & Copper Min. Co., 8 Mont. 32.....	798
Canton r. Dubuque S. W. R. Co., 52 Iowa, 378.....	237
Evansville v. Fourth Nat. Bank of Louis- ville, 6 C. C. A. 183, 56 Fed. Rep. 967.....	251
Grand Haven v. Zeilms (Iowa) 61 N. W. Rep. 488.....	234
Mauch Chunk v. United States Encaustic Tile Co., 105 Ind. 227.....	397
New Windsor v. Bynum, 84 N. C. 24, 37 Am. Rep. 604.....	226
Selma v. Colby, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 609, 611, 614, 23 L. ed. 687, 688.....	374
Stouss City v. Gage, 93 Ill. 172.....	323
Stevens Point v. Knowles, 67 Wis. 373.....	390
Fisher v. Boody, 1 Curt. C. C. 208.....	71
Fisk, 22 parts, 73 Cal. 125.....	531
Fitzharris v. Leggett, 10 Mo. App. 529.....	226
Fitzpatrick v. People, 68 Ill. 259.....	293
Flagg v. Barnes County School Dist. No. 70 (N. Dak.) 25 L. R. A. 353.....	826
Flash v. Conn. 109 U. S. 371, 37 L. ed. 906.....	860
Flesh v. Lindsay, 115 Mo. 1.....	446
Fletcher v. Rylands, L. R. 1 Exch. 265, 279.....	565
Filke v. Boston & A. R. Co., 53 N. Y. 549, 13 Am. Rep. 545.....	268
Flint v. Gibson, 106 Mass. 391.....	279
Flint & F. Pl. Road Co. v. Woodhull, 25 Mich. 99, 12 Am. Rep. 233.....	708
Flower v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 69 Pa. 210, 8 Am. Rep. 251.....	300
Fogg v. Blair, 133 U. S. 584, 33 L. ed. 721.....	861
Foley v. Felrath, 96 Ala. 176.....	220
Ford v. Buckeye State Ins. Co., 6 Bush, 183, 99 Am. Dec. 663.....	365
v. Fitchburg R. Co., 110 Mass. 240, 14 Am. Rep. 598.....	268
v. McClung, 5 W. Va. 163.....	261
v. Plankinton Bank, 37 Wis. 363.....	390
Foreman v. Byrns, 63 Ind. 247.....	796
Fosdick v. Hempstead, 11 L. R. A. 715, 123 N. Y. 581.....	425
Foster v. Foster, 133 Mass. 179.....	775
v. Territory, 1 Wash. 419.....	612
Fowler v. Armour, 24 Ala. 194.....	411
Fox v. Hazleton, 10 Pick. 375.....	278
Frank v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 89 N. Y. 309, 38 Am. Rep. 501.....	430
Franklin v. Coffee, 18 Tex. 412, 70 Am. Dec. 222.....	810
Frazier's Case, 33 Mich. 396.....	531
Frazier v. State, 23 Ohio St. 551.....	665
Freeman v. Carpenter, 10 Vt. 433, 83 Am. Dec. 210.....	810
v. Venner, 120 Mass. 424.....	622
French, Re, 81 Wis. 597.....	785
French Bank Case, 53 Cal. 550.....	805
Friery v. People, 2 Keyes, 450.....	739
Friesen v. Ahemania F. Ins. Co., 80 Fed. Rep. 253.....	50, 53
Frink v. Branch, 16 Conn. 260.....	464
v. Coe, 4 G. Greene, 558, 61 Am. Dec. 141.....	223
Frost v. Eastern Railroad, 64 N. H. 220.....	209
Fry's Election Case, 71 Pa. 302, 10 Am. Rep. 698.....	321
Fugler v. Bothe, 117 Mo. 475.....	443
Fullam v. New York Union Ins. Co., 7 Gray, 61, 63 Am. Dec. 462.....	53
Fuller v. Loring, 42 Me. 431.....	229
v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 61 Iowa, 350.....	618
Funk v. McReynolds, 83 Ill. 481.....	667
Furnham v. Camden & A. R. Co., 55 Pa. 53.....	229

G.

Gadsden v. Woodward, 108 N. Y. 243.....	856
Gady v. State, 83 Ala. 51.....	611
Gale v. Davis, 4 Mart. (La.) 645.....	796
Galesburg v. Hawkinson, 75 Ill. 153.....	755
Gallatin County v. Beattie, 2 Mont. 173.....	798
Gandell v. Pontigny, 4 Campb. 375.....	410
Gannon, Re, 69 Cal. 541.....	791
Gane v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 43 Wis. 108, 23 Am. Rep. 535.....	89
Garden City Bank & Trust Co. v. Gedifuss, 98 Wis. 612.....	390
Gardner v. Parker, 3 Madd. 184.....	509
v. State, 55 N. J. L. 17.....	661
Garido v. American Cent. Ins. Co. of St. Louis (Cal.) 8 Pac. Rep. 512.....	89

Gerland, Ex parte, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 303, 13 L. ed.
Garlington v. Coleman, 2 Spence, L. 222.
Garner v. Garner, 1 Low, 29.
Garr v. Stokes, 18 N. J. L. 404.
Garrity v. Cripp, 6 Bart. 26.
Gaylord v. Dodge, 31 Ind. 41.
Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 174, 17 L. ed. 320.
George v. Cohey, 123 Mass. 200, 35 Am. Rep. 376.
German Ins. Co. v. Fairbank, 32 Neb. 700.
German Nat. Bank of Denver v. Burns, 19 Colo. 339.
Germania F. Ins. Co. v. Francis, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 210, 20 L. ed. 77.
Germantown Pass. R. Co. v. Fidler, 69 Pa. 100, 100 Am. Dec. 346.
Gibson, Ex parte, 31 Cal. 683, 91 Am. Dec. 546.
Gibson v. Leonard, 37 Ill. App. 344.
Giles v. Haremore, 3 Johns. Ch. 343, 2 L. ed. 1130.
Gill v. Kaufman, 16 Kan. 671.
v. Creed, 2 Coldw. 229.
Gill's Case, 25 Ct. Cl. 415.
Gillespie v. McGowan, 100 Pa. 144, 45 Am. Rep. 305.
Gilsman v. Williams, 1 Wis. 229, 75 Am. Rep. 219.
Gilmore v. Davis, 34 Ill. 487.
Gibson v. Hutchinson, 120 Mass. 29.
Gipps Brewing Co. v. De France (Iowa) 99 N. W. Rep. 1077.
Gladden v. State, 12 Flo. 689.
Glasscott v. Lang, 3 Phill. Ch. 316.
Glendale Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Protection Ins. Co., 31 Conn. 13, 54 Am. Dec. 309.
Goddard v. East Texas F. Ins. Co., 67 Tex. 65, 65 Am. Rep. 1.
Goepper v. Kilmelinger, 39 Ohio St. 429.
Gold v. Housatonic R. Co., 1 Gray, 694.
Goldrey v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 30 Pa. 243, 73 Am. Dec. 703.
Goldgart v. People, 103 Ill. 25.
Good v. Fogg, 61 Ill. 443, 14 Am. Rep. 71.
Goodman v. Gay, 13 Pa. 134, 66 Am. Dec. 629.
v. Pcoock, 15 Q. B. 74.
Goodwin v. Blackley 4 Ind. 439.
v. Simonson, 74 N. Y. 129.
v. Wertheimer, 30 N. Y. 149.
Gordon v. Anderson, 13 L. R. A. 493, 95 Iowa, 294.
v. Brewster, 7 Wis. 255.
v. Cummings, 9 L. R. A. 645, 129 Mass. 513.
v. Gordon, 49 Mich. 301.
Gomelin v. Chicago, 103 Ill. 689.
Gough v. Findon, 7 Eneb. 45.
Gourley v. Linsentbigher, 31 Pa. 345.
Gouverneur v. Elmendorf, 3 Johns. Ch. 73, 1 L. ed. 1016.
Gove v. Catber, 23 Ill. 634, 75 Am. Dec. 711.
Grady v. McCorkle, 97 Mo. 173, 17 Am. Rep. 676.
Graeme v. Adams, 28 Gratt. 225, 14 Am. Rep. 130.
Grat's Case, 10 Md. 644.
Graham, Re, 74 Wis. 490.
Graham v. McCampbell, Meigs, 53, 38 Am. Dec. 126.
Grand Trunk R. Co. of Canada v. Ives, 144 U. S. 470, 417, 36 L. ed. 493, 459.
Granite State Provident Assn. v. Lloyd, 143 Ill. 680.
Grant v. Baker, 12 Or. 331.
v. Bennett, 93 Ill. 513.
v. Davenport, 35 Iowa, 407.
v. Jones 39 Ohio St. 314.
Grappmether v. Fejerary, 9 Iowa, 163, 74 Am. Dec. 323.
Gratten v. Wiggins, 29 Cal. 14.
Gray v. Fox, 1 N. J. Eq. 229, 23 Am. Dec. 303.
v. Knoxville, 85 Tenn. 99.
Greely v. Smith, 9 Story, C. C. 607.
Green v. Adams, 3 Vt. 603, 39 Am. Rep. 791.
v. Banta, 18 Joors & S. 159.
v. Nite, 73 Ala. 32.
v. Weller, 39 Miss. 429.
Green's Bank v. Wickham, 39 Mo. App. 649.
Green County v. Connors, 108 U. S. 104, 37 L. ed. 373.
Greene v. O Connor, 19 L. R. A. 322, 13 N. L. 49.
Greenfield v. People, 74 N. Y. 277.
Greenleaf v. Cook, 13 U. S. 9 Wheat. 13, 4 L. ed. 173.
Gregg v. George, 16 Kan. 346.
Gregory v. Jackson, 33 Ark. 433.
H. L. R. A.

Gregory v. German Bank of Denver, 8 Colo.	522, 26 Am. Rep. 790.	550
v. New York, 40 N. Y. 513.		549
Grey v. Mobile Trade Co., 56 Ala.	650, 26 Am. Rep. 729	550
Griffith v. State, 80 Ala.	593	550
Grigsby v. Hair, 26 Ala.	587	547
Grigsby v. Clear Lake Waterworks Co., 60 Cal.	586	550
Grogan v. Adams Exp. Co., 116 Pa.	588, 60 Am. Rep. 590	549
Groves v. Richmond, 88 Iowa,	600	545
Grutz	20, 807	548
Gryn	Am. Rep. 813.	548
Guar	16, 5 Bina. 564.	548
Guar	1011, 76 Tex. 174.	547
Gulf,	614, 4 C. C. A.
	9, 191, 1 C. C. A.	546
		546
II.
Hans v. Missionary Soc. of Most Holy Redeem-	er, 5 Miss. 593	545
v. Bockett, 2 L. R. A. 448, 45 Minn. 86.		545
Hahn v. Hutchinson, 160 Pa.	138, 139-141	775
v. Kelly, 34 Cal	891, 94 Am. Dec. 763	775
Haigbt v. Hall, 74 Wis	138	775
Haley v. Bellamy, 127 Mass.	597, 599	775
Hall v. Hall, 2 Vern.	577	550
Hallett's Estate, Ha. L. R. 12 Ch. Div.	606	769
Hallorn v. Trum, 126 Ill.	267	550
Halsey v. Rapid Transit Street R. Co., 41 N. J.	Eq. 360	550
Hamilton v. Looming Mut. Ins. Co., 5 Pa.	590	548
v. Southern Nevada Gold & Silver Min.	Co., 38 Fed. Rep. 548	548
Hammeck v. White, 11 C. B. N. S.	589	187
Hammond v. Pennock, 61 N. Y.	143	760
Hanchett v. Weber	17 Ill. App. 116	605
Hancock's App.	36 Pa. 156	607
Hannahan v. State,	7 Tex. App. 684	588
Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Cruise, 108 Ill.	228, 40 Am. Rep. 561	605
Hansbrough v. Peck, 78 U. S.	5 Wall. 508, 18 L. ed. 584	547
Hanson v. Eichstaedt, 69 Wis.	585	56
Hapgood v. Cornwell, 68 Ill.	68, 65 Am. Dec. 616	670
Hardy v. Chesapeake Bank, 61 Md.	600, 94 Am. Rep. 28	607
v. Milwaukee Street R. Co. (Wis.)		549
Harpeaves v. Deacon, 26 Mich.	1	510
Harker v. Brink, 24 N. J. L.	583	518
Harlock v. Ashberry, L. R. 10 Ch. Div.	600	623
Harlow v. Foster, 66 N. Y.	588	40
Harper v. Fairley, 58 N. Y.	448	621
v. Rowe, 58 Cal.	598	175
Harriman v. Stowe, 87 Mo.	59	644
Harris v. Newell, 43 Wis.	601	583
v. Nicholas & Munf.	495	734
Harrison v. Burlingame, 48 Hun.	522	605
v. Com., 51 Va.	601	671
v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 7 L. R. A.	608, 70 Mich. 408	570
Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Olcott, 97 Ill.	629, 665	610
Harvey v. Murray, 128 Mass.	577	781
v. Great Northern R. Co., 17 L. R. A.	84, 50 Minn. 406	600
v. Tyler, 66 U. S.	2 Wall. 847, 17 L. ed. 575	601
Harwood v. Lowell, 4 Cush.	510	673
Haskell v. Brown, 66 Ill.	29	606
Hastings v. Thompson, 21 L. R. A.	178, 54 Minn. 184	580
v. Westchester F. Ins. Co., 70 N. Y.	141, 180	610
Hatch v. Trayer, 11 Ad. & M.	708	585
Hatchett v. Stanton, 72 Ala.	488	480
Hatborn v. Chief, 69 U. S.	2 Wall. 10, 17 L. ed. 778	580
Hauselt v. Patterson, 134 N. Y.	510	621
Hauser v. Rute, 39 Wis.	678	768
Hawes v. Knowles, 114 Mass.	518, 19 Am. Rep. 589	178
Hawkins v. Rice, 40 Iowa.	407	600
Hawks v. (Barliment), 107 Mass.	614	178
Hawthorne v. Smith, 3 Nev.	122, 98 Am. Dec. 597	516
Hay v. Star F. Ins. Co., 77 N. Y.	596	61
Hayes v. Holly Springs, 114 U. S.	132, 29 L. ed. 61	700, 700
v. Ward, 4 Johns. Ch.	129-132, 1 L. ed. 790, 100, 3 Am. Dec. 584	588, 588

K.

Kahl v. Love, 37 N. J. L. 5.....	584
Kalamazoo Hack & Bus Co., Limited v. Bootsma, 10 L. R. A. 512, 22 Am. St. Rep. 599, 84 Mich. 194.....	487
Kansas Cent. R. Co. v. Fitzsimmons, 23 Kan. 539, 31 Am. Rep. 203.....	728
Karstendick, Ex parte, 93 U. S. 393, 23 L. ed. 899.....	609
Kaunai v. Minnesota Farmers Mut. F. Ins. Asso., 51 Minn. 17, 47 Am. Rep. 778.....	89
Kean v. Roe, 2 Harr. (Del.) 103, 29 Am. Dec. 336.....	656
Kearney v. London, E. & S. C. R. Co., L. R. 5 Q. B. 411.....	155
Keating v. American Refrigerator Co., 32 Mo. 653.....	653
Keels v. Life Asso., 29.....	684
Keffe v. 21 Minn. 207.....	309
Kehrer 745, 558.....	555
Keith v. 101.....	101
Kellogg 382.....	382
Kelly v. 300.....	300
v. Am. Rep. 738.....	738
Kelsh v. 649.....	649
Kendal w. 37 98, 11 L.....	651
Kentico ra., 33 U. S. 13.....	608
Kenned 293.....	293
Keokuk & W. R. Co. v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 301, 35 L. ed. 450.....	374
Kernaghan v. Williams, L. R. 5 Eq. 228.....	100
Kerr v. Forgue, 54 Ill. 432, 5 Am. Rep. 148.....	210
Key v. Jennings, 33 Mo. 359.....	399
Keyes v. State, 122 Ind. 527.....	691
v. Wood, 21 Vt. 331.....	607
Killea v. Faxon, 125 Mass. 485.....	269
Kilfinger v. Reidenhauer, 6 Serg. & R. 581.....	501
Kilvington v. Superior, 18 L. R. A. 45, 39 Wis. 222.....	645
Kimball v. Cushman, 103 Mass. 194, 4 Am. Rep. 528.....	187
v. Beding, 31 N. H. 333, 64 Am. Dec. 333.....	659
King v. Baldwin, 17 Johns. 236, 3 Am. Dec. 415.....	200, 231, 202
v. Goodwin, 130 Ill. 102.....	323
v. Watertown F. Ins. Co., 47 Hun, 1.....	52
Kingsley v. New England Mut. Ins. Co., 3 Cush. 398.....	91
Kinloch's Care, Post. O. L. 16.....	500
Kinnaird v. Standard Oil Co., 7 L. R. A. 451, 39 Ky. 468.....	242
Kinsman v. Cambridge, 121 Mass. 553.....	561
Kip v. Brigham, 6 Johns. 158, 7 Johns. 166.....	643
Kirby v. Great Western R. Co., 18 L. T. N. S. 658.....	230
Kirst v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co., 26 Wis. 489.....	156
Kirtland v. Hotchkiss, 100 U. S. 491, 25 L. ed. 558.....	323

L.

Larabee v. Carleton, 53 Me. 211.....	645
Lackawanna & B. R. Co. v. Chenewith, 33 Pa. 332, 91 Am. Dec. 163.....	550
Laing v. Colder, 3 Pa. 479, 49 Am. Dec. 533.....	229
Lake v. Nolan, 51 Mich. 112.....	536
Lamar Water & Electric Light Co. v. Lamar (Mo.) 28 S. W. Rep. 1025.....	772
Lane v. Cotton, 12 Mod. 488.....	443
Langdon v. Castleton, 30 Vt. 235.....	539
Lange, Ex parte, 35 U. S. 13 Wall. 163, 21 L. ed. 372.....	736
Laupher v. Dewell, 55 Iowa, 153.....	96
Lansing v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 35 Iowa, 315.....	343

27 L. R. A.

LaPierre v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 30 Mich. 212.....	379
Larimer County Comrs. v. Lee, 3 Colo. App. 177.....	672
Larkin v. Wilson, 106 Mass. 120.....	513
Larney v. Cleveland, 34 Ohio St. 599.....	236
Larsen v. James, 1 Colo. App. 313.....	399
Larson v. Aultman & Taylor Co., 66 Wis. 233, 234.....	364, 373
Leather v. St. Joseph Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 36 N. Y. 423, 427.....	613
Leasure v. State, 19 Ohio St. 51.....	293
Laton v. Baloom, 64 N. H. 92, 94-95.....	301
Laubheim v. De Koninglyke Nederlandsche Stoomboot Maatschappij, 107 N. Y. 229.....	297, 343
Lauder v. Logan, 123 Pa. 34.....	579
v. Tilla, 117 Pa. 304.....	579
Law v. New England Mut. Acc. Asso. 94 Mich. 203.....	54
v. People, 37 Ill. 365.....	733
Lawrence v. Great Northern Co., 16 Q. B. 642.....	763
v. State, 50 Wis. 507.....	691
Lawsen v. Buckley, 45 Hun, 339.....	202
v. Lawson, 1 P. Wms. 441.....	503
I.....	523
I.....	339
I.....	514
I 117 U. S.....	439
I.....	506
I 1 423.....	796
I.....	425
I.....	44
I.....	279
I.....	595
I.....	225
I a, 145 U. ra. Com.....	343
I.....	37, 38
I 60. App.....	651
I 110.....	110
Lelay v. Hardin, 125 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 123, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36.....	221
Lents v. Teutonia F. Ins. Co., 36 Mich. 445.....	54
Leonard v. Poole, 4 L. R. A. 723, 114 N. Y. 371.....	441
Le Page v. Russia Cement Co., 17 L. R. A. 254, 3 C. C. A. 555, 51 Fed. Rep. 942, 5 U. S. App. 112.....	44
Levi v. Brooks, 121 Mass. 501.....	173
Lavy v. Walker, L. R. 10 Ch. Div. 436.....	44
Lewis Re., 31 Kan. 71.....	511
32 Kan. 660.....	306
Lewis v. Smith, 107 Mass. 334.....	391
Lewisville Natural Gas Co. v. State, 31 L. R. A. 734, 135 Ind. 149.....	513
Liberty Ins. Co. of New York v. Boulden, 96 Ala. 508.....	613
Life Asso. of America v. Fassett, 102 Ill. 515.....	323
Limpus v. London General Omnibus Co., 1 Hurst. & C. 539.....	173
Lincoln v. Sun Vapor Street-Light Co., 3 C. C. A. 233, 237, 258, 59 Fed. Rep. 756.....	632
Lindley v. O'Reilly, 1 L. R. A. 79, 50 N. J. L. 636.....	215, 216
Lindsay v. Charleston Comrs., 3 Bay. 38.....	293
Lines v. L.....	510
Littell v. J.....	510
Little v. P.....	251
Littleton.....	523, 300
Liverpool.....	x Ins.
Liverpool C.....	230
Liverpool Asso.....	796
Liverpool 30.....	77 U.
Liverpool 3.....	373, 634
Lloyd v. J.....	333
Lockhart.....	239
v. V.....	Rep.
153.....	144
Logan v. Cassell, 33 Pa. 233, 33 Am. Rep. 453.....	566
Logansport v. Humphrey, 34 Ind. 497.....	125
London & N. W. R. Co. v. Evershed, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 1029.....	626
London, Paris, & American Bank, Limited, v. Smith, 101 Cal. 415.....	300
Long, Re., 37 Ala. 46.....	311
Long v. San Francisco City & County Super. Ct. 102 Cal. 449.....	564
v. Timms, 107 Mo. 512.....	653
Longshore Printing & Pub. Co. v. Howell (Or.) 33 Pac. Rep. 543.....	417
Longwell v. Hartwell, 154 Pa. 533.....	234
Loomis v. Los Angeles County, 59 Cal. 456.....	125
v. Terry, 17 Wend. 497, 31 Am. Dec. 303.....	237

598	M
599		685
600	M	66
601	M	40
602	M	41
603	M	379
604	M	306
605	M	510
606	M	527
607	M	268
608	M
609	M	420
610	M
611	M	607
612	M	254
613	M	731
614	M	444
615	M	509
616	M	754
617
618		519
619	M	279
620	M
621	M	723
622	M
623	M	44
624	M
625	M	215
626	M	512
627	M	761
628	M	51
629	M	467
630	M	606
631	M	263
632	M	96
633	M	26
634	M	653
635	M	1, 302
636	M	263
637	M	308
638	M	100
639	M	129
640
641		100
642		690
643		264
644		43
645		605
646		502, 509
647		568
648		261
649		619
650		750
651		608
652		124
653		802
654		259
655		343
656		618
657		625
658		88
659		749
660		522
661		606
662		40
663		552
664		270
665		679
666		51
667		716
668		228
669		143
670		268
671		369
672		545
673		365
674		44
675		609
676		308
677		664, 527, 631, 632, 634
678		308

McAlpin v. Powell, 70 N. Y. 129, 26 Am. Rep. 555	728
McCartar v. Nail, 50 Ark. 188	736
McCartney v. Smalley, 11 Iowa, 86	223
McCarty v. Gordon, 16 Kan. 85	221
McClanahan v. Porter, 10 Mo. 746	256
McClinton v. Wise, 25 Gratt. 443, 18 Am. Rep. 694	657
McConnell v. Iowa Mut. Aid Assn., 79 Iowa, 575	51
McCormack v. Brown, 36 Cal. 185, 65 Am. Dec. 170	119
McCormick v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 68 Cal. 361	617
McCormick's Petition, 24 Wis. 493, 1 Am. Rep. 197	202
McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Gates, 75 Iowa, 343	775
McCort Re, 52 Kan. 13	603, 605
McCurdy v. Clark, 27 Mich. 445, 448	697
McCutcheon v. Homer, 43 Mich. 433, 38 Am. Rep. 212	672
McDade v. People, 29 Mich. 50	572
McDevitt v. People's Nat. Gas Co., 160 Pa. 397	767
McDonald v. Massachusetts General Hospital, 120 Mass. 482, 21 Am. Rep. 529	297, 343
McDonough v. Gilman, 8 Allen, 264, 80 Am. Dec. 272	189
McDuffee v. Portland & R. Railroad, 62 N. H. 430, 18 Am. Rep. 72	625
McElhone v. Massachusetts Ben. Assn., 29 Wash. L. Rep. 187	80
McElmoyle v. Cohen, 38 U. S. 19 Fed. 312, 10 L. ed. 177	219
McElroy v. Continental Ins. Co., 48 Kan. 300	68
McEvers v. Steamboat Sangamon, 23 Mo. 186	724
McFetridge v. Phoenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn, 54 Wis. 200	618
McGee v. McGee, 26 N. C. 105	527, 500
McGill v. State, 34 Ohio St. 225	748
McGinnis v. State, 9 Humph. 43, 49 Am. Dec. 697	677
McIntyre v. Costello, 47 Hun, 289	527
Mark v. Lee, 13 R. L. 238	221
Mackey v. Vicksburg, 64 Miss. 777	309, 310
McKibben v. Lester, 9 Ohio St. 627	747
McKinney v. Neil, 1 McLean, 540	259
McLean v. Meek, 59 U. S. 18 How. 12, 15 L. ed. 277	115
McManus v. Crickett, 1 East, 106	123
McManus v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co., 4 Hurlst. & N. 527	280
McMaster v. Insurance Co. of North America, 55 N. Y. 222, 223, 228, 14 Am. Rep. 299	694
McMillan v. Richards, 9 Cal. 365, 70 Am. Dec. 655	736
McMullen v. Rafferty, 39 N. Y. 456	421
Macon & A. R. Co. v. Vason, 57 Ga. 314	310
Mactier v. Frith, 6 Wend. 103, 21 Am. Dec. 263	365
Madison v. Spitsnogle, 58 Iowa, 369	94
Maggort v. Hansbarger, 8 Leigh, 589	734
Mahan, Re, 20 Hun, 301	303
27 L. R. A.

Owen v. Gooch, 2 Esp. 567.....	504	People
v. Howard Ins. Co., 87 Ky. 671.....	58		642
Owensboro & N. R. Co. v. Todd, 11 L. R. A. 285, 91 Ky. 175.....	205		726
P.
Packard v. Ames, 18 Gray. 327.....	645		704
Page v. Allen, 58 Pa. 398, 38 Am. Dec. 273.....	504		726
v. Pierce, 26 N. H. 317.....	567		726
Paige v. Paige, 71 Iowa, 318, 60 Am. Rep. 799.....	454		721
Pain v. Packard, 13 Johns. 174, 7 Am. Dec. 369.....	261		367
Paine, Re, 28 Hun. 431.....	805, 806		375
Palmer v. Clark, 106 Mass. 373, 389.....	273		47
v. Fahnstock, 9 U. C. C. P. 172.....	226		245
Parchon v. Anderson, 5 Mont. 438, 51 Am. Rep. 65.....	129		704
Paris Exchange Bank v. Beard, 49 Tex. 363.....	667		469
Parish of East Feliciana v. Levy, 40 La. Ann. 332.....	415		704
Parham v. Randolph, 4 How. (Miss.) 435, 35 Am. Dec. 408.....	336		689
Park v. Johnson, 4 Allen, 269.....	279		773
Parker v. Barnard, 125 Mass. 115, 45 Am. Rep. 450.....	514		3, 351
v. Bowles, 57 N. H. 491.....	451, 453		384
v. Mercer, 6 How. (Miss.) 320, 324, 35 Am. Dec. 438.....	667		601
v. Portland Pub. Co., 69 Me. 173, 31 Am. Rep. 252.....	513		669
Parmelee v. Hoffman F. Ins. Co., 54 N. Y. 193.....	634		564
Parsons v. Russell, 11 Mich. 113, 39 Am. Dec. 723.....	580		440
Paschall v. Passmore, 15 Pa. 295.....	645		796
Patrick v. Cross Roads Comrs. on Charleston Neck, 4 McCord, L. 541.....	288		691
Pattison v. Hull, 9 Cow. 747.....	667		658
Patton v. Rea, 2 O. B. N. 8. 606.....	168		685
v. Taylor, 48 U. S. 7 How. 150, 12 L. ed. 646.....	338		685
Paul v. Willis, 69 Tex. 269.....	736		713
Pawson v. Watson, Cowp. 735.....	400		563
Paxton v. Rich, 1 L. R. A. 639, 35 Va. 373.....	263
Pearce v. Austin, 4 Whart. 489, 34 Am. Dec. 523.....	566		641
Pears v. Laing, L. R. 12 Eq. 41.....	423		101
Peck v. Barnum, 24 Vt. 75.....	511		304
Peckham v. Newton, 15 R. I. 321.....	659		798
Peddicoord v. Whitman, 9 Iowa, 471.....	223		667
Pedrick v. Bailey, 12 Gray, 161.....	531		106
Peck v. North Staffordshire R. Co., 10 H. L. Cas. 473.....	230		125
Pelican Ins. Co. v. Smith, 92 Ala. 423.....	613		185
Pelzer v. Campbell, 15 S. C. 592, 40 Am. Rep. 706.....	268		263
Penn v. Bornman, 102 Ill. 623.....	303		236
v. Ingles, 32 Va. 65.....	259
v. Lord Baltimore, 1 Ves. Sr. 444.....	215		617
Pennell v. Daffell, 4 DeG. M. & G. 373.....	760		124
Penney, Ex parte, L. R. 8 Ch. 446.....	278		125
Pennsylvania Co. v. Weddle, 100 Ind. 103.....	342		329
Pennsylvania Lead Co's App., 96 Pa. 116, 42 Am. Rep. 534.....	342		619, 636
Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hope, 80 Pa. 377, 21 Am. Rep. 100.....	391		330
v. Miller, 97 Pa. 365.....	229		239
v. Balordon, 119 Pa. 577.....	229
Penruddock's Case, 5 Coke, 101.....	123, 124, 135		41
Penzel v. Brookmire, 51 Ark. 105.....	667		262
People v. Arensberg, 105 N. Y. 123, 59 Am. Rep. 433.....	713		431
v. Bemis, 51 Mich. 423.....	690		599
v. Bivven, 132 N. Y. 79.....	656, 659		124
v. Brown, 54 Mich. 23.....	515		366
v. Cloonan, 50 Cal. 449.....	694
v. Coghill, 47 Cal. 363.....	205		320
v. Coyodo, 40 Cal. 593.....	696		97
v. Cummings, 14 L. R. A. 285, 38 Mich. 251.....	575		134
v. Damon, 13 Wend. 351.....	499		254
v. Degnen, 54 Barb. 105, 6 Abb. Pr. N. S. 87.....	512		304
v. Dolan, 6 Hun. 233.....	739, 790		731
v. Eastman, 25 Cal. 606.....	798
v. Everhardt, 104 N. Y. 591.....	694		533
v. Ewer, 25 L. R. A. 794, 141 N. Y. 129.....	721		617, 653
v. Fire Department of Detroit, 31 Mich. 453.....	310		139
v. Fisher, 14 Wend. 9, 25 Am. Dec. 501.....	441		679
v. Fitzpatrick, 65 How. Pr. 14.....	730		661
v. Forquer, 1 Ill. 104.....	45		226
v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389.....	713, 721		273
v. Gordon, 31 Mich. 306.....	545		663
v. Hare (Mich.) ? Crim. L. Mag. 198.....	695		10
v. Harrington, 63 Cal. 267.....	205
v. Hoge, 65 Cal. 612.....	205		215
v. Hurst, 41 Mich. 328.....	630		96
v. Hyde Park, 117 Ill. 462.....	582		763
v. Jewett, 3 Wend. 314.....	739
		People
		People
			641
			101
			304
			798
			667
			361
			263, 269, 271
			12
			601
			639, 800
			809
			667, 669
			106
			125
			185
			263, 263
			236
			617
			124
			125
			329
			619, 636
			330
			239
			41
			262
			431
			599
			124
			366
			320
			97
			134
			254
			304
			731
			533
			617, 653
			139
			679
			661
			226
			273
			663
			10
			215
			96
			763

State v. Hession, 55 Iowa, 68	68
v. Hicks (S. Dak.) 60 N. W. Rep. 68	68
v. Hudson, 44 Ohio St. 737	747
v. Hugulus, Harp. L. 120	308
v. Jancerville Street R. Co., 22 L. R. A. 708, 87 Wis. 72	200
v. Jefferson Iron Co., 60 Tex. 312	374
v. Jones, 19 Ind. 264	48
v. Judges of Common Pleas Ct., 21 Ohio St. 1	740
v. Kaufman, 51 Iowa, 673, 28 Am. Rep. 148	680
v. Larrigan, 68 Iowa, 420	850
v. Lowery, 40 N. J. L. 391	545, 645
v. McCauley, 15 Cal. 429	773
v. McKee, 1 Ball. L. 621, 21 Am. Dec. 499	49
v. McLeomore, 2 Hill. L. 600	600
v. Maxcy, 1 McMull. L. 508	200
v. Milwaukee, L. B. & W. E. Co., 45 Wis. 679	372
v. Murdy, 81 Iowa, 608	818
v. Ostrander, 18 Iowa, 420	350
v. Palmer (S. Dak.) 57 N. W. Rep. 430	608
v. Peterson, 85 Minn. 143	611
v. Phelps (S. Dak.) 59 N. W. Rep. 471	629
v. Picotaway, 48 N. J. L. 853	125
v. Pugh, 43 Ohio St. 95	747
v. Rachac, 37 Minn. 373	84
v. Rainberger, 74 Iowa, 120	364
v. Reed, 28 Conn. 206	400
v. Reid, 30 Iowa, 422	340
v. Romer, 44 Mo. 90	510
v. Root, 28 Wis. 680	344
v. Russell (Iowa) 58 N. W. Rep. 690	694
v. Second Judicial Dist. Ct. Judge, 10 Mont. 401	306
v. Shelton, 64 Iowa, 526	850
v. Simons, 2 Speers. L. 751	200
v. Sloan, 68 Wis. 447	786
v. Smith, 5 Day, 175, 5 Am. Dec. 123	202
v. Smith, 48 Ohio St. 211	747
v. Standard Oil Co., 15 L. R. A. 145, 48 Ohio St. 137	302
v. Teipuer, 35 Minn. 635	673
v. Tenant, 16 L. R. A. 423, 110 N. C. 619	534
v. Topeka, 35 Kan. 76, 59 Am. Rep. 309, 404	604
v. Townsend, 19 Or. 213	694
v. Tuller, 34 Conn. 294	490
v. United States Mut. Accl. Assn., 67 Wis. 629	304
v. Vanyackie, 49 N. J. L. 285	730
v. VanWinkle, 30 Iowa, 18	604
v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 68 Mo. 144- 145	710
v.	747
v.	N. C. 604
v.	Ilben's Case) 23
v.	15
v.	543, 644
v.	601
v.	600
v.	Am. Dec. 123 40, 500
v.	146, 161
v.	47
State vs	f, 3 Blackf. 447,
State vs	m. Rep. 544
v.	619
v. Stoffels, 55 Kan. 305	62
State Tax on Foreign-Held Bonds, 38 U. S. 15 Wall. 330, 21 L. ed. 187	653, 700
State Tax on Railway Gross Receipts, 62 U. S. 15 Wall. 204, 21 L. ed. 164	415
State Treasurer v. Auditor-General, 48 Mich. 224	303
Steckert v. East Saginaw, 22 Mich. 104	51
Steel v. Phoenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn, 3 Q. C. A. 483, 51 Fed. Rep. 715	50, 53, 55
Stelb v. Whitehead, 111 Ill. 351	776
Stephenson v. Southern Pac. Co., 15 L. R. A. 475, 99 Cal. 555	126
Sterling's App., 111 Pa. 35, 68 Am. Rep. 246	707
Sievens v. Pratt, 101 Ill. 206	330
v. South Devon R. Co., 9 Hare, 215	149
Stevenson v. Black, 1 N. J. Eq. 389	667
v. Watson, L. R. 4 C. P. Div. 143	279
Stewart v. Everitt, 78 Wis. 35	857
Stokes v. Baltonstall, 38 U. S. 12 Pet. 151, 10 L. ed. 115	200
v. Stickney, 35 N. Y. 288	858
Stone v. Hills, 45 Conn. 47, 29 Am. Rep. 695	105, 167, 308
v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 314, 25 L. ed. 1079	513
v. People, 5 Ill. 230	490
v. Stone, 18 Mo. 309	510, 607, 800
Storey v. Ashton, L. R. 4 Q. B. 476	165, 173
Story v. New York Elev. R. Co., 30 N. Y. 123, 43 Am. Rep. 149	559
Strat v. O'Neil, 34 Mo. 68	610
27 L. R. A.
Strass v. Meertlef, 64 Ala. 203, 35 Am. Rep. 9	410, 412
Streeter v. Western Union Mut. Life & Accl. Soc. of United States, 65 Mich. 120	605
Strong v. McCagg, 5 Wis. 394	379
v. Strong, 9 Camb. 509	379
Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 169, 30 Am. Rep. 300	714
Stults v. Dickey, 5 Blon. 339, 6 Am. Dec. 411	303
Sturge v. Eastern Counties R. Co., 1 De G. M. & G. 159	149
Stuyvesant v. New York, 1 Cow. 604	714
Sullivan v. Davis, 28 Kan. 28	126
v. Vickburg, S. & P. R. Co., 39 La. Ann. 800	120
Summers v. Babb, 18 Ill. 498	256
v. State, 5 Tex. App. 374, 33 Am. Rep. 573	373
Sun Ins. Co. v. Jones, 54 Ark. 379	5
Supreme Sitting Order of Iron Hall v. Baker, 20 L. R. A. 210, 124 Ind. 238	307
Swaz County Chosen Freeholders v. Strader, 18 N. J. L. 103, 38 Am. Dec. 300	552
Swaine v. Perine, 5 Johns. Ch. 423, 1 L. ed. 1143, 9 Am. Dec. 313	305
Swift v. Appleboro, 34 Mich. 303	604
v. Poughkeepsie, 37 N. Y. 611	126
T.
Taft v. Hartford, P. & F. R. Co., 13 R. I. 310, 5 Am. Rep. 375	144, 148
Taggart v. Newport Street R. Co., 1 L. R. A. 205, 18 R. L. 688	230, 245
v. Sanilac County Supra, 71 Mich. 31	790
Taintor v. Prendergast, 3 Hul. 72, 38 Am. Dec. 415	304
Talcott v. Blanding, 54 Cal. 239	305
Taunton v. Wareham, 153 Mass. 191	308
Taylor v. Cumberland, 44 Md. 63, 54 Am. Rep. 759	730
v. Floss, 64 Ind. 167, 31 Am. Rep. 114	784
v. Monroe, 48 Conn. 46	801

Amend. 5.	Compensation for property taken.....	70
	Second jeopardy.....	498
6.	Jury trial.....	679
	Rights of one accused of crime.....	689
12.	Involuntary servitude.....	607
14, § 1.	Due process of law.....	578

Statutes.

1843, Aug. 12 (9 Stat. at L. chap. 166).	Right to examine records.....	84
1867, Feb. 8 (24 Stat. at L. 890).	Indians as citizens.....	159

Alabama.*Statutes.

1886, Dec. 11 (p. 168).	Cattle-guards on railroads.....	264
1890-1, p. 104.	Charter of Anniston.....	496
1892-3, p. 42.	Determination of claims to real estate.....	434

Arkansas.*Constitution.

Art. 12, § 11.	Foreign corporations.....	505
----------------	---------------------------	-----

Statutes.

1887, p. 284, § 1.	Requirements for business by foreign corporations.....	505
--------------------	--	-----

Sandels & Hill's Digest.

§ 1812.	Selling liquor to minor.....	504
2541.	Dower.....	508
§ 5344-6.	General notice of tax assessment.....	736

California.*Constitution.

Art. 11, § 5.	Boards of supervisors.....	205
§ 2.	Framing city charters.....	204

Statutes.

1856, Apr. 19.	San Francisco charter.....	204
1862, Apr. 11.	Corporations for accumulation of savings.....	563
1866, Mar. 21.	Pacific Accumulation & Loan Co.....	563
1877-78, p. 740.	Bank commissioners.....	564
1887, p. 90.	Bank commissioners.....	564
1898, p. 98.	Intoxicating liquor.....	159

Code of Civil Procedure.

§ 538.	Attachment.....	564
--------	-----------------	-----

Political Code.

§ 15.	Acts by majority of board of public officers.....	205
-------	---	-----

Penal Code.

§ 207.	Intoxicating liquor.....	159
--------	--------------------------	-----

Colorado.*Constitution.

Art. 5, § 21.	Titles of acts.....	756
14, § 12.	Organization of cities.....	756
§ 14.	Special municipal charters.....	753
15, § 2.	Special municipal charters.....	753

Statutes.

1898, Apr. 2, p. 121.	Amendment of sewer charter.....	753
-----------------------	---------------------------------	-----

Revised Statutes, 1868.

Chap. 12, § 15.	Report of corporate indebtedness.....	859
-----------------	---------------------------------------	-----

Connecticut.*Statutes.

1882, p. 144.	Appeal.....	501
1884, p. 500.	Appeal by the state in criminal cases.....	501

General Statutes.

§ 1023.	Amendment of pleadings.....	172
1887.	Appeal in criminal cases.....	498

27 L. R. A.

Florida.*Constitution.

Art. 6, § 12.	Pardons.....	576
---------------	--------------	-----

Georgia.*Constitution, 1790.

Art. 2, § 2.	Due process of law.....	239
--------------	-------------------------	-----

Bill of Rights.

§ 23.	Separation of departments of government.....	237
-------	--	-----

Constitution.

Art. 1, § 14.	Due process of law.....	238
§ 23.	Compensation for property.....	238
2, § 1.	Legislative power.....	237
9, § 8.	Municipal taxation.....	238
§ 9.	Municipal organization.....	238

Statutes.

1696 (7 Stat. at L. p. 12).	Sidewalks in Charleston.....	239
-----------------------------	------------------------------	-----

1850 (12 Stat. at L. p. 5455).	Assessments for improvements.....	238
--------------------------------	-----------------------------------	-----

Statutes at Large.

Vol. 20, p. 1372.	Paving Greenville streets.....	237
-------------------	--------------------------------	-----

Illinois.*Constitution.

Art. 2, § 14.	Impairing obligation of contracts.....	239
---------------	--	-----

Statutes.

1891, June 11.	Punishment for formation of pools.....	239
----------------	--	-----

Revised Statutes.

Chap. 57, §§ 15, 18.	Proving corporate records.....	321
----------------------	--------------------------------	-----

Indiana.*Statutes.

1887, March 7 (p. 36).	Municipal power to regulate supply of gas.....	516
------------------------	--	-----

Revised Statutes, 1881.

§ 2491.	Dower.....	526
2681.	Conveyance to nominal trustee.....	525
3161.	Municipal corporations.....	516

Revised Statutes, 1894.

§ 2652.	Dower.....	526
3403.	Conveyance to nominal trustee.....	525
3623.	Municipal corporations.....	516

Iowa.*Constitution.

Art. 1, § 9.	Right to jury trial.....	849
§ 11.	Necessity for action by grand jury.....	849
5, § 15.	Number of grand jurors.....	843

Statutes.

21 Gen. Assem. chap. 42.	Number of grand jurors.....	847
--------------------------	-----------------------------	-----

Code.

§ 231.	Number of grand jurors.....	847
241.	Number of grand jurors.....	848
1550.	Recovery of money paid for intoxicating liquor.....	220
2062.	Negotiability of notes.....	227
2065.	Negotiable instruments.....	227
2814.	Right to waive jury.....	849
3173.	Certificate for appeal.....	94
3507.	Territorial jurisdiction.....	94
3509.	Place of suit.....	94
3510.	Suit where service made.....	94
4200.	Challenge to panel of jurors.....	848
4291.	Requisite concurrence to find indictment.....	851
4387, subd. 5.	Motion to set aside indictment.....	848
4389.	Waiver of right of challenge to juror.....	848
4374.	Right to change of venue.....	859

Kansas.Bill of Rights.*

§ 2. Special privileges or immunities.....	548
6. Involuntary servitude .....	602

General Statutes, 1889.

Chap. 18, § 11, subd. 27. Power of mayor and council.....	607
subd. 27. Power to enact ordinances .....	602
Par. 571. Confidence men and vagrants.....	607
2510. Compelling prisoners to work.....	607
5425. Compelling prisoners to work.....	607

Kentucky.Constitution.*

§ 59, subd. 5. Special acts to regulate limitation of actions.....	580
--	-----

Statutes.

1862, March 29. Limitation of time for action against Louisville .....	580
--	-----

Louisiana.Constitution, 1868.*

Tit. 3. Pardons .....	576
-----------------------	-----

Statutes.

1890, No. 150. Taxing steamboats.....	415
---------------------------------------	-----

Maine.Constitution.*

Art. 5, § 11. Pardons.....	576
----------------------------	-----

Maryland.Declaration of Rights.*

Art. 15. Purpose of taxation .....	74
------------------------------------	----

Constitution.

Art. 1, § 1. Residence for voting purposes....	381
§ 4. Publication of laws.....	78
§ 29. Title and scope of acts.....	648
54. Taxing power.....	74

Statutes.

1896, chap. 509. Baltimore & Eastern Shore Railroad bonds.....	72
1890, chap. 159. County subscription to railroad bonds.....	73
1892, chap. 225. Talbot county bonds.....	72
1894, chap. 152. Talbot county bonds.....	72
chap. 247. Treatment of drunkards.....	647

Code.

Art. 16, § 47. Arrest of habitual drunkards....	647
59. Examination of lunatic paupers.....	647

Code of Public Local Laws.

Art. 1, § 144. Power to pass ordinances for Frostburg.....	730
--	-----

Massachusetts.Constitution.*

Chap. 2, art. 3, § 1. Pardons.....	576
------------------------------------	-----

Statutes.

1818, chap. 180. Hospital Life Ins. Co.....	278
1861, chap. 152. Insurance contract.....	399
1864, chap. 196. Insurance contract.....	399
1869, chap. 182. New England Trust Co.....	277
1874, chap. 331. Insurance policies.....	400
1878, chap. 157, § 1. Misrepresentation in procuring insurance.....	399
1880, chap. 175. Insurance policies.....	400
1881, chap. 166. Insurance policies.....	400
1885, chap. 349. Corporate stock.....	144
1887, chap. 214, § 21, 59. Effect of misrepresentation in procuring insurance.....	399
chap. 214, § 60. Insurance policies.....	400
1894, chap. 522, § 21, 59. Effect of misrepresentation in procuring insurance.....	399
chap. 522, § 60. Insurance policies.....	400

27 L. R. A.

Revised Statutes.

Chap. 109, § 6. Corporations summoned as trustees.....	513
--	-----

Public Statutes.

Chap. 106, § 43. Dividend on preferred stock..	151
§ 60. Liability for preferred dividend.....	152
119, § 139. Insurance policies.....	400
§ 181. Misrepresentation in procuring insurance.....	399

Michigan.Constitution.*

Art. 5, § 11. Pardons.....	574
6, § 32. Due process of law.....	578

Public Statutes.

1877. Joint stock companies.....	579
1888, No. 118. State prisons.....	573
No. 150. Advisory board in matter of pardons.....	576

Howell's Statutes.

Vol. 2, §§ 1446c-h. Liability for injury on street.....	572
§ 2368. Execution against members of corporation.....	573

Minnesota.Statutes.*

1887, chap. 207, § 1. Powers of married women	686
1893, chap. 124, § 15. Regulating taking of fish.	77

General Statutes, 1878.

Chap. 46, § 3. Dower.....	264
---------------------------	-----

Penal Code.

§ 211. Libel.....	413
213. Justification for libel.....	413

Mississippi.Statutes.*

1873, chap. 75, p. 813. Subscriptions to stock of Selma, Marion & Memphis R. Co.....	708
--	-----

Missouri.Constitution.*

Art. 10, § 12. Limitation of municipal indebtedness.....	772
--	-----

Statutes.

1878, March 24. Kansas City Water Works....	627
---	-----

Revised Statutes, 1839.

§ 1589. Power of city to prevent fires.....	773
1599. Passage of ordinances.....	771
1610. Mayor as president of aldermen.....	771
1613. Effect of neglect to sign ordinance.....	771
3691. Responsibility of bank for application of proceeds of check.....	406

Montana.Statutes.*

1891. Revenue law.....	796
------------------------	-----

Code of Civil Procedure.

§ 229. Appointment of receivers.....	396
371. Mortgage not a conveyance.....	798
564. Receiver of corporation.....	395

Nebraska.Constitution.*

Art. 3, § 15. Granting exclusive franchises or privileges.....	544
11, § 7. Discrimination.....	624
12, § 4. Individual liability of stockholders.....	623

General Statutes, 1873.

Chap. 11, § 138. Notice of corporate indebtedness.....	657
--	-----

Compiled Statutes, 1893.

Chap. 12a, § 23. Police regulations.....	544
§ 27. Removal of ofal.....	545
12, § 27. Recovery of claims against counties.....	123
P. 401, chap. 23, § 1. Dower.....	253
Chap. 23, § 7. Dower in aliened lands.....	255
§§ 12, 13, 15. Barring dower.....	255
23, § 23. Barring dower.....	254
73, § 43. Conveying dower rights.....	255
77, § 131. Liability of county to refund a void tax.....	124
§§ a. & Discrimination by telegraph companies.....	624

Code of Civil Procedure.

§ 477. Judgments as liens.....	255
491a. Execution on real estate.....	255
§§ 490, 500. Effect of execution sale.....	255

Nevada.Constitution, 1864.

Art. 5, § 14. Pardons.....	576
----------------------------	-----

New Hampshire.Constitution.

Art. 51. Pardons.....	576
-----------------------	-----

New Jersey.Constitution.

Art. 5, § 10. Pardons.....	576
----------------------------	-----

Statutes.

1880. Joint stock companies.....	579
----------------------------------	-----

Revision.

P. 175. Powers of corporations.....	664
-------------------------------------	-----

Revision, Supplement.

P. 101a. Corporation tax act.....	664
-----------------------------------	-----

New York.Statutes.

1819, § 13. Report of corporate indebtedness..	556
1849. Joint stock companies.....	579
1867, chap. 84. Tenement houses.....	711
chap. 462. Manufacturing establishments.....	714
1892, chap. 602. Board for examination of plumbers.....	720

Code of Procedure.

§ 90. Limitation of time for suing on sealed instrument.....	420
110. Tolling statute of limitations.....	421

Code of Civil Procedure.

§§ 380, 381. Limitation of time for suing on sealed instrument.....	420
---	-----

Revised Statutes.

Vol. 1, p. 749, § 4. Liability of heir on mortgage.....	421
P. 301, § 48. Tolling statute of limitations.....	420

North Carolina.Statutes.

1861, chap. 230. Railroad and telegraph commission.....	643
---	-----

North Dakota.Statutes.

1861, chap. 16. Hutchinson county indebtedness.....	707
1865, March 13. Nelson county indebtedness.....	699
1891, chap. 120, § 22. Breach of appeal bond.....	263
chap. 1199, § 7. Admission of attorneys.....	691

Compiled Statutes.

§ 427-428. Duty of public prosecutor.....	690
§ 493. Failure to sue principal; effect on liability of surety.....	269
498. Right of surety to compel suit against principal.....	269
§ 7 L. R. A.

4810. Collection of debt out of collaterals before suing surety.....	266
5166. Execution against principal and surety.....	262
6449. Death penalty for murder.....	655
7241. Form of indictment.....	659
7242. Indictment for murder.....	659
7280. Accessory before the fact.....	653
7312. Removal of criminal trial.....	691
7847. Challenge to juror because of bias of officer.....	685
7361. Competency of sheriff as juror.....	685
7384. Effect of testimony of accomplice.....	694

Ohio.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 10. Trial of accused.....	555
2, § 26. Uniform operation of laws.....	748
§ 78. General laws; uniform operation.....	585
4, § 1. Judicial power.....	748
§ 3. Common pleas districts.....	585
4. Jurisdiction of common pleas.....	749
15. Power to change districts.....	585
7, § 12. Apportionment for judicial purposes.....	555
12, § 1. Conferring corporate power by special legislation.....	746

Statutes.

1816, Feb. 28. Mode of trying criminals.....	536
1873, Apr. 12 (70 Laws, p. 136). Municipal code.....	539
1881. Joint stock companies.....	579
1893, Apr. 13. Annexation of territory to municipalities.....	738
Apr. 24. Annexation of territory to municipalities.....	738

Revised Statutes.

§ 883. Duty of court to fix number of justices of peace.....	748
§§ 882-887. Control of court of commissioners to fix county seat.....	748
§ 917. Duty of court to appoint examiners of commissioner's report.....	748
1181. Duty of court to appoint examiners of treasurer's report.....	748
1694. Passage of ordinances.....	80
2364. Assessment for improvements.....	539
2369. Special assessments.....	539
2377. Apportioning assessments.....	539
2659a, 1. Duty of court to appoint city hall trustees.....	748
2690a. Duty of court to appoint tax commissioners.....	748
3662. Election of school employe.....	80
3665. Rules for government of school district boards.....	80
4098. Duty of court to appoint directors of universities.....	748
§§ 4222-23. Duty of court to grant licenses.....	748
4266-69. Duty of court to grant auctioneers' licenses.....	748
§ 5761. Review of habeas corpus proceedings.....	293
6726. Stay of execution.....	298
7284. Trial of person in prison.....	293
7338. Second conviction of imprisoned person.....	292
7363. Venue in criminal cases.....	635
7325. Effect of escape from imprisonment.....	291
7715. Duty of court to appoint trustees of sinking fund.....	748
§§ 7913-37. Duty of court to appoint trustees of children's homes.....	748

Code of Civil Procedure.

§ 604. Habeas corpus.....	266
---------------------------	-----

Pennsylvania.Constitution, 1873.

Art. 4, § 9. Pardons.....	576
---------------------------	-----

Duke of York's Laws.

P. 100, art. 6. Appearance in court.....	232
--	-----

Statutes.

1668, March 10, chap. 66. Default judgments.....	238
1710 (Duke of York's Laws, p. 537). Default judgments.....	239
1715 (Duke of York's Laws, p. 537). Default judgments.....	238
1718, May 31 (1 Smith, Laws, 116). For advancement of justice.....	238

LAWYERS' REPORTS,

ANNOTATED.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

HANOVER NATIONAL BANK of the City of New York, Appt.,
v.
Sarah F. BLAKE, Respt.

(143 N. Y. 404.)

A composition with creditors is not made entirely void so as to defeat a recovery on notes given in furtherance thereof merely because of a secret agreement giving to that creditor a preference by way of security for other notes given him under the composition.

(June 5, 1894.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming a judgment of the New York Circuit in favor of defendant in an action brought to enforce her alleged liability as surety upon a promissory note which formed part of an agreement of composition with creditors of an insolvent. Reversed.

Statement by Gray, J.:

The action is brought by the payee of a promissory note against the indorser. The facts were not in dispute, and were stated by the general term as follows: Frederick D. Blake and Charles Waterman were partners engaged in the dry-goods business under the firm name of F. D. Blake & Co. They were indebted to various creditors, including the plaintiff, and becoming insolvent, executed a general assignment of all their property to James H. Thorp on the 24th day of April, 1888. On the 4th of June, 1888, the creditors of F. D. Blake & Co. signed a composi-

NOTE.—Effect of giving one creditor a secret advantage in a composition.

- I. Effect on the composition.
- II. Action on original claims.
- III. Contracts to induce assent to a composition.
- IV. Action for balance.
- V. Reservation of part of the original claim from the composition.
- VI. Liability of creditor on obtaining a fraudulent preference.
- VII. Composition not general.

I. Effect on the composition.
In the case of HANOVER NAT. BANK v. BLAKE the composition agreement was for 40 per cent payable by notes for 10 per cent each, the last two of the four notes to be indorsed by B., but the plaintiff in this case, without the knowledge of the other creditors, obtained an indorsement by B. on the first two also of his notes. The action was brought upon the third note properly indorsed, as the composition agreement provided, and it was claimed that the demand of security on the first two notes as an advantage over other creditors vitiated the composition, to the extent of preventing a recovery on the note sued on, which was executed under the composition and not itself connected with the secret preference. But the court of appeals, reversing the lower court, held that while it did not appear what had become of the earlier notes, the fraud in obtaining such security did not affect the composition notes and allowed a recovery thereon.

As to the question of the effect on the composition and dividend notes the case of HANOVER NAT. BANK v. BLAKE is probably the first case which discusses the subject thoroughly and distinguishes the decisions which heretofore have been regarded as vitiating composition notes. There is some conflict on this question and some cases and dicta on the contrary doctrine. It will be seen from the cases given below that there are not many which are decided squarely upon the question of the direct validity of composition notes but rather turn on the validity of preferential security or indorsement.

The distinguishing feature in each case is given below, from which it will be seen that there are but few cases in which the question of validity of composition notes is directly involved.

A creditor cannot recover dividends, where such creditor paid the assignee a bonus to procure him to join in the release, as the whole should be forfeited. Frost v. Gage, 3 Allen, 500.

Following the decision of the lower court which was afterwards reversed in the above case of HANOVER NAT. BANK v. BLAKE it was held in Bradley & C. Co. v. Lally, 2 Misc. 225, that a creditor taking three composition notes and an additional note as an inducement to enter in the composition, and suing on two composition notes and the last note given to induce him to join, cannot recover as all the notes are void.

And in Gourley v. Tyler (Tex.) Feb. 14, 1891, it was said that a preference in a composition renders the whole void, but the question involved in that case was respecting a contract to consent to a deed of assignment.

In Crandall v. Cochran, 44 Tex., 1891, the question as to whether a fraudulent preference of a creditor would bar him from recovering any dividends is not decided.

Where the creditor insisted that the debtor should indorse a bill drawn by the debtors and accepted by another as an inducement to enter into a composition, and then sued upon the composition notes, he was denied a recovery on the ground of fraud. It was contended that he might negotiate the bill and recover on that also, but the court only decided that the composition was void.

tion agreement by which they agreed to take 40 per cent of their respective claims, to be paid by four notes, made by the members of the firm, each for 10 per cent of the claim; two payable in six and twelve months, and two in eighteen and twenty-four months,—the latter two indorsed by Sarah F. Blake. The Hanover Bank, desiring to have the security of Mrs. Blake upon all the notes, asked that she indorse the first two as well as the last two, which she did. This was not known to the other creditors, and was a security additional to that provided by the terms of the composition agreement. The note in suit is the third of the series, payable in 18 months, and properly indorsed by Mrs. Blake, in accordance with the composition agreement. At the trial both parties moved for judgment, which the court directed for the defendant. At the general term that judgment was affirmed, and the plaintiff has again appealed to this court.

Messrs. Moore & Wallace, for appellant:

The secret agreement rendered void the indorsement by Mrs. Blake on the first two notes, that being a security additional to the terms of the composition agreement, but under the facts in this case, the composition agreement is still binding upon the parties to this action, and the notes given in accordance therewith are enforceable.

White v. Kuntz, 170 N. Y. 518; Breck v. Cole, 4 Sandf. 79.

It is not disputed that Mrs. Blake's indorsement on the first two notes, made in pursuance of the secret agreement, was void and inoperative.

Russell v. Rogers, 10 Wend. 473, 25 Am. Dec. 574; Fellows v. Stevens, 24 Wend. 294; Waite v. Harper, 2 Johns. 286; Payne v. Eden, 3 Cal. 218; Yeomans v. Chatterton, 9 Johns. 295, 6 Am. Dec. 277; Wiggin v. Bush, 12 Johns. 306, 7 Am. Dec. 324; Tusbury v. Miller, 19 Johns. 311; Van Brunt v. Van Brunt, 8 Edw. Ch. 14, 6 L. ed. 553; Pinneo v. Higgins, 12 Abb. Pr. 384; Carroll v. Shields, 4 E. D. Smith, 466; Townsend v. Newell, 22 How. Pr. 164; Gilmour v. Thompson, 49 How. Pr. 198; Hughes v. Alexander, 5 Duer, 488; Williams v. Carrington, 1 Hilt. 515; Beach v. Ollendorf, Id. 41; Eldridge v. Strenz, 2 Jones & S. 491; Crandall v. Cochran, 3 Thomp. & C. 208; Williams v. Schreiber, 14 Hun, 38; Laurence v. Clark, 36 N. Y. 128; Bliss v. Mattoon, 45 N. Y. 22; Harloe v. Foster, 58 N. Y. 389; Baxter v. Bell, 86 N. Y. 195; Chemical Nat. Bank v. Kohner, 85 N. Y. 189; Goldenbergh v. Hoffman, 69 N. Y. 322; Blair v. Wait, Id. 118; Almon v. Hamilton, 100 N. Y. 527; Bean v. Aminck, 10 Blatchf. 361.

Equality, the creditor's right, being enforced, there is no equity appealing to the court to enable the debtor to escape the payment of his entire obligation. The action of the plaintiff may invalidate the composition at the option of the innocent creditors, but carries no such penalty, with it as the extinguishment of all the plaintiff's rights.

Mr. C. Bainbridge Smith, for respondent:

Where a debtor in embarrassed circumstances enters into an agreement with his cred-

Howden v. Haigh, 1 Ad. & EL 1033, 3 Perry & D. 661.

A creditor who signed a composition taking bills for the balance as an inducement for such composition deed, which deed was not to be effectual unless the composition bills were delivered on a certain day, has no claim against the bankrupt sufficient to support suing out a fiat of bankruptcy against the debtor, as he has released his claim and ceased to be a creditor for any sum whatever, and is not a creditor for the original amount, for he released that demand, nor for the composition amount because no right accrued under a fraudulent deed in favor of a fraudulent concocter. Re Cross, in note to 4 De G. & S. 364.

And where a creditor signed a composition for ten shillings on a pound, and was paid the other ten shillings on a fraudulent agreement with the debtor's brother, who paid him in coal, he could not recover on the composition note, as the court said the creditor has had his ten shillings, and cannot have it again. Knight v. Hunt, 5 Bing. 432, 3 Moore & P. 13.

A creditor cannot recover on an indorsement in composition notes where such indorsement was obtained as an inducement to sign, giving him a secret fraudulent preference over other creditors. Pinneo v. Higgins, 12 Abb. Pr. 334.

A creditor in an action upon an indorsement on a composition note could not recover thereon, where he had taken a note in addition to the composition in fraud of other creditors and inflated his claim also in the composition, the court saying that such fraud renders the whole composition note and the notes so taken for the excess void also; but this last statement was not necessary to the question involved. Doughty v. Savage, 28 Conn. 146.

A creditor receiving a guaranty for advancing money for a composition, and securing himself by fraudulent contract outside of the composition should lose all benefit of the guaranty, and the same was set aside at the instance of another creditor. Pendlebury v. Walker, 4 Younge & C. 424.
27 L. R. A.

A creditor who receives a guaranty in composition notes, where he has a secret bargain to be paid in full, should lose the guaranty in the composition, and the court said that what such creditor was to receive in the composition might be forfeited at the instance of other creditors, and that his whole debt might be forfeited, and held that as the debtor though particeps fraudis would be relieved, the guarantor would be also relieved. Clarke v. Ritchey, 11 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 499.

And in Sternburg v. Bowman, 103 Mass. 325, it was held that notes given to a creditor in excess of his claims so as to enlarge the sum in the composition, are void. The case does not show whether they were excessive dividend notes sued upon, or notes in excess of dividend.

Where a debtor made a composition and failed to pay at the precise time and the debtor brought a bill for specific performance and it was shown that some of the creditors had entered into the composition under a fraudulent arrangement for preference, the plaintiff could not obtain any relief or any decree of specific performance and the bill was dismissed. Child v. Danbridge, 2 Vern. 71.

But in Feize v. Randall, 1 Esp. 224, 6 T. R. 146, where a creditor obtained security in his composition note differing from other creditors, it was held that this did not avoid the note, and that recovery could be had thereon. It was said that security only for an overplus in a composition is void, but not for the composition itself as it did not impose a greater burden on the creditor, but this case was subsequently overruled in Leicester v. Ross, and Ex parte Sadler and Jackson, infra.

itors to pay them a composition upon their claims, any private agreement between such debtor and one of the creditors, who professes to join in the general arrangement, that the former or a third party for him, shall pay a further sum of money, or give a better or further security than such as is provided for the other creditors, is void as a fraud on them. Accordingly, if one creditor does make such stipulation, in fraud of the other creditors, the effect thereof will be to destroy any security which may have been given to him, even for the legal amount of the composition.

Chitty, Cont. 9th Am. ed. Perkins, 694; Leicester v. Rose, 4 East, 872; Ex parte Saddler and Jackson, 15 Ves. Jr. 52; Knight v. Hunt, 5 Bing. 429; Howden v. Haigh, 11 Ad. & El. 1033; Higgins v. Pitt, 4 Exch. 812; Pendlebury v. Walker, 4 Younge & C. 424; Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, 9 Mees. & W. 29; Mallalieu v. Hodgson, 16 Q. B. 689; Re Cross, reported in a note to Re Hodgson, 4 DeG. & S. 354; Ex parte Phillips, Re Harvey, 86 Week. Rep. 567; Clarke v. Rulchey, 11 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 499; Doughty v. Savage, 28 Conn. 147; Moses v. Katzenberger, 1 Handy (Ohio) 46; Frost v. Gage, 8 Allen, 560; 2 Addison, Cont. Abbott's Notes, 781; Leake, Cont. 3d ed. 689; Wald's Pollock, Cont. Am. ed. 1885, 233; Chitty, Cont. 12th Eng. ed. 699; Lawson, Cont. § 800; Knight v. Hunt, 5 Bing. 429.

A creditor committing such a fraud lost all benefit he would otherwise have derived under the composition deed.

Howden v. Haigh, and Higgins v. Pitt, supra; White v. Wright, 3 Barn. & C. 273.

In Whittemore v. Obear, 58 Mo. 280, it was held that a surety in a composition note, sued by one creditor, could not claim that he was released on account of other creditors having committed a fraud.

See Leicester v. Rose, infra.

II. Action on original claim.

The weight of authority is clear, that a creditor not guilty of fraud may recover on the original claim and ignore a general composition where another creditor has secretly obtained an undue advantage, and a fraudulent preference in the composition. Cobb v. Tirrell, 137 Mass. 143; Ramsdell v. Edgerton, 8 Met. 297, 41 Am. Dec. 503; Kahn v. Gumberts, 9 Ind. 420; Heffer v. Cahn, 73 Ill. 296; Saul v. Buck, 72 Ga. 254; Woodruff v. Saul, 70 Ga. 271; Kullman v. Greenebaum, 92 Cal. 403; Zell Guam Co. v. Emry, 113 N. C. 85; Daughish v. Tennent, L. R. 2 Q. B. 49, 3 Best & S. L. 36 L. J. Q. B. 10, 15 Week. Rep. 196; Spooner v. Whiston, 8 J. B. Moore, 580; Partridge v. Messer, 14 Gray, 180; Orandall v. Cochran, 3 Thomp. & C. 202.

In Seying v. Gale, 23 Ind. 496, the same was said to be the rule but was not the question involved.

And the creditor may set aside a composition where other creditors have obtained an excess from the debtor's brother. Ex parte Milner, L. R. 15 Q. B. Div. 605, 54 L. J. Q. B. 425, 58 L. T. N. S. 652, 35 Week. Rep. 367.

And one partner may ignore a firm composition and sue a special partner for contribution where such special partner as a firm creditor has obtained an undue advantage over other creditors in signing the composition. Crossley v. Moore, 40 N. J. L. 37.

And so it has been held that a creditor may ignore a composition where another creditor has been secretly preferred, although such preference was 27 L. R. A.

No authoritative case has been produced that controverts the rule laid down in the cases cited.

In Breck v. Cole, 4 Sandf. 79, Judge Duer rendered the opinion of the court, in which he reviewed many authorities.

The learned judge quotes with approval Knight v. Hunt, 5 Bing. 429; Leicester v. Rose, 4 East, 872, and Ex parte Saddler and Jackson, 15 Ves. Jr. 52, and as to them he adds: "No addition can be made to the authority of these cases when we state that in the first the decision was pronounced by Lord Ellenborough and in the second by Lord Eldon." If the learned judge had read those cases with ordinary care he would have discovered that each of those judges had condemned the dictum he expressed, and both had overruled the case of Feige v. Randall, 1 Esp. 226, 6 T. R. 146, where that doctrine was advanced.

In Higgins v. Pitt, supra, decided in 1849, Parke, B., referring to Howden v. Haigh, said: "Some doubt was, it is true, stated by my brother Alderson, as to the propriety of that decision in Davidson v. M'Gregor, 5 Mees. & W. 755, but we do not think that decision was wrong.

In Pendlebury v. Walker, 4 Younge & C. 424, A. D. 1841, Baron Alderson, who expressed an alarm at the extent the decision in Howden v. Haigh goes, cited that case and Knight v. Hunt with approval.

Mr. Charles A. Decker, also for respondent:

The real contract was the agreement to sign without the common debtor's connivance and made by a third person. Luehrmann v. St. Louis Furniture Co. 21 Mo. App. 499.

Or when made by the debtor's attorney. Bank of Commerce v. Hoeber, 11 Mo. App. 475, 88 Mo. 37, 87 Am. Rep. 359, 8 Mo. App. 171.

And in Martin v. Adams, 38 N. Y. S. R. 397, the same was held where the preference had been by the son of one of the insolvent firm. But in Martin v. Adams, 81 Hun, 9, which was a retrial of the same case, where it was proved that the debtor had no knowledge of any secret arrangement, the action to set aside the composition failed.

But in Page v. Carter, 16 N. H. 254, 41 Am. Dec. 726, it was said that while a note given to induce consent to a composition is void, yet in an action on the original debt by a signing creditor it was held that the composition would not be held void, even if other creditors obtained an advantage by secret agreement as the rule for avoiding composition appears to have been made for the benefit of the debtor rather than that of the creditor,—drawing a distinction between the English cases claiming that they are affected by the English bankrupt law.

And in Bartlett v. Blaine, 83 Ill. 25, 25 Am. Rep. 346, it was held that a creditor could not sue on the original claim although the debtor had given a note to another creditor of $500 to induce him to join the composition, where in an action on that note it had been held void, and as it was void, it was therefore equivalent to nothing,—and the acceptance of a void note does not prejudice the creditor or avoid the composition.

And the same was also held in Babcock v. Dill, 43 Barb 577, although the son of the debtor paid the note after the composition.

As to whether a creditor who has made a secret fraudulent contract more beneficial to himself than the other creditors in signing a composition.

the composition deed if the plaintiff received four notes, all of which should be indorsed by the defendant. This agreement was fraudulent and is void. If the superior contract is void, all the notes are void for lack of consideration.

Belding v. Pitkin, 2 Cal. 149.

Even if the condition precedent, the composition deed and the notes may be said to be of equal force in the transaction, they together make one contract, which is indivisible, and no part is complete without the others.

Secor v. Sturgis, 16 N. Y. 548; Verplanck v. Van Buren, 76 N. Y. 255; Tracy v. Talmage, 14 N. Y. 180, 67 Am. Dec. 182; Pelly v. Naylor, 189 N. Y. 598.

The plaintiff sues to recover upon a note which it claims to have received under the composition deed. It never complied with the composition agreement; what it did comply with was an entirely different arrangement, and that was fraudulent.

It cannot cancel the real contract, and eliminate the fraud by relinquishing any claim against the defendant on the fraudulent instruments.

Tracy v. Talmage, supra; Leicester v. Rose, 4 East, 872; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. par. 370; Baldwin v. Short, 125 N. Y. 558.

The acts of the plaintiff preclude it from recovering on the note in suit. They were malum in se. It has no standing in court.

Tracy v. Talmage, supra; White v. Buss, 3 Cush. 448; Solinger v. Earle, 82 N. Y. 898.

The contention of the defendant is supported by direct precedent.

Howden v. Haigh, 3 Perry & D. 661, 11 Ad. & El. 1038; Ex parte Sadler and Jackson, 15 Ves. Jr. 52; Jackson v. Lomas, 4 T. R. 156; Wells v. Girling, 1 Brod. & B. 447; Knight v. Hunt, 5 Bing. 432; Frost v. Gage, 8 Allen, 560; Doughty v. Savage, 28 Conn. 147.

Gray, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In the general term opinion the question of law was stated thus: "Did the secret agreement, by which Mrs. Blake indorsed the first two notes, invalidate the whole composition agreement, so that notes given in pursuance of its terms are not enforceable by the plaintiff?" The learned justices, finding no controlling authority in this state, determined the question adversely to the plaintiff, and upon the ground, in substance, that, as the agreement was fraudulent, the fraud permeated and vitiated the whole composition agreement, and disabled the creditor from recovering anything under it. In this view we are not able to agree with them. It may be true that there was no decision, in the courts of this state, in its features so precisely in point as to compel adherence to its authority, and it is true that the view of the general term has support in decisions of English courts. I think, however, that in our state there are expressions of opinion by eminent judges of this court, and by a former very distinguished judge of the superior court of the city of New York, which rather commit us to a contrary view, and which should commend themselves to us, as fur-may thereafter claim that the composition is void on account of fraudulent preference to other creditors, and demand payment of his whole claim, the weight of authority is against the right of such creditor to ignore such composition. Baldwin v. Rosenman, 49 Conn. 105; O'Brien v. Greenebaum, 92 Cal. 104; Mallallen v. Hodgson, 18 Q. B. 689, 20 L. J. Q. B. 389, 15 Jur. 817.

And he cannot claim that the composition should be avoided on account of the fraudulent preference obtained by his agent in making such a composition. Blair v. Walt, 69 N. Y. 112.

In Watts v. Hyde, 10 Jur. 127, 17 L. J. Ch. 409, in which it developed during the trial in an action to enjoin a judgment where the defendant in the injunction suit had put the same demand in the composition and had been preferred, the plaintiff was allowed to amend his bill to set up the facts.

And the creditor making a fraudulent secret contract for a preference cannot claim that the composition is invalid, by reason of the subsequent condition contained therein, that it should be void in default of payment of any of the composition notes. Ex parte Phillips, Re Harvey, 36 Week. Rep. 567.

In Smith v. Salzmann, 9 Exch. 535, 23 L. J. Exch. 177, where it was claimed that the creditor could not avoid the compromise because such creditor was a party to a fraudulent preference, such plea was not proved.

But in Stewart v. Blum, 28 Pa. 225, it was held that a creditor may recover of the debtor the remainder of his original claim unsatisfied in the composition, where such composition was fraudulent, although such creditor himself committed a fraud on other creditors at the time of the composition in an agreement which he could not enforce.

And in Elfelt v. Snow, 2 Sawy. 94, it was held that a creditor could ignore a composition obtained from him by fraudulent misrepresentations as to the debtor's assets, although such creditor had obtained a fraudulent preference.

And in Davis v. Holding, 11 Ad. & El. 710, 3 Perry & D. 413, in a suit on the original claim, where it was pleaded that the creditor had agreed to take more in the composition than others, and abandon proceedings under a fiat of bankruptcy, the plea was bad as it did not show that the creditor was within the provisions of the bankrupt act, forfeiting the whole debt.

A subsequent creditor after a composition is not prejudiced by fraudulent preference therein. Guggenheimer v. Groeschel, 23 S. C. 274, 55 Am. Rep. 20.

And one creditor cannot ignore a composition on account of a subsequent payment preferring another creditor, as such payment is not a fraud upon other creditors. Re Sturgis, 16 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 804.

III. Contracts to induce assent to a composition.

Contracts, notes, securities, and obligations, obtained by one creditor to induce him to sign the composition as a secret advantage over other creditors are void whether made before or after the composition or whether made by the debtor himself in person or by another for his benefit, or where a note is in the hands of third parties who have taken it subject to equities. Spuriet v. Spiller, 1 Atk. 105; Townsend v. Newell, 22 How. Pr. 164; Geere v. Mare, 33 L. J. Exch. 50, 2 Hurlst. & C. 339, 8 L. T. N. S. 463; Coleman v. Waller, 8 Younge & J. 215; Hagaman v. Burr, 9 Jones & S. 423; Lewis v. Jones, 4 Barn. & C. 503, 8 Dowl. & B. 567; Bastian v. Dreyer, 7 Mo. App. 322; O'Shea v. Collier White Lead & Oil Co. 42 Mo. 397, 97 Am. Dec. 332; Lothrop v. King, 8 Cush. 322; Fay v. Fay, 121 Mass. 551; Harvey v. Hunt, 119 Mass. 279; Howe v. Litchfield, 5 nishing a wise and more politic rule in these cases of composition by an insolvent debtor with his creditors. The general principle has been long settled in England and here that a secret agreement which induces a creditor to agree to a composition by the promise of a preference, or of some undue advantage, over the other creditors, is utterly repugnant to the composition agreement, and, from its fraudulent nature, is avoided by the law. The very essence of a composition agreement is that all creditors come in upon terms of equality, and that equality would be destroyed if the secret agreement were given effect. In Leicester v. Rose, 4 East, 372, at page 381, Lord Ellenborough observed that the principle of all the cases was "that where the creditors, in general, have bargained for an equality of benefit and mutuality of security, it shall not be competent for one of them to secure any partial benefit or security to himself." In Russell v. Rogers, 10 Wend. 474-479, 25 Am. Dec. 574, Justice (afterwards chief justice) Nelson said: "So scrupulous are courts in compelling creditors to the observance of good faith towards one another in cases of this kind, that any security taken for an amount beyond the composition agreed upon, or even for that sum, better than that which is common to all, if unknown to the other creditors, is void and inoperative." It is in the extent of the operation of the principle, which was thus early asserted, that we will find the divergence of judicial opinions between English judges and those of this state. It is curious to observe that, though Leicester v. Rose was relied upon as the basis of authority for their conclusions, the application of the doctrine of that case has been different in each country. Leicester v. Rose was decided in 1803. Its facts were that several creditors of the insolvent refused to sign unless collateral security, which was to be given for the first two installments of the composition payment, should also be given for the last two. The defendant agreed to procure this additional security, and, not having done so, the action was brought to enforce his agreement. Lord Ellenborough stated the question to be whether any legal effect could be given to such an agreement, which gave to some creditors a better security than to others; and he held that it could not, as it was a fraud upon the rest of the creditors. The case of Howden v. Haigh, 11 Ad. & El. 1033, was decided in 1840, and was a suit upon composition notes. By a secret agreement between the plaintiff and defendant that the latter should indorse to him a bill accepted by a third party, in order to give him a preference beyond the other creditors, the former had been induced to sign the composition deed. It was held that he could not recover. Lord Denman, relying upon Leicester v. Rose, supra, and Knight v. Hunt, 5 Bing. 432, held that every part of the transaction was avoided by reason of the deceit upon the other creditors. Littledale, J., while agreeing with him that the fraud extended over the whole, remarked, rather significantly, "It is possible that the plaintiff may be entitled to sue for

Allen, 443; Partridge v. Messer, 14 Gray, 180; Case v. Gerrish, 15 Pick. 48; Goodwin v. Blake, 3 T. B. Mon. 108, 16 Am. Dec. 87; Bryan v. Christie, 1 Stark. 329; McFarland v. Garber, 10 Ind. 151; Re Clement's App. 52 Conn. 464; Fenner v. Dickey, 1 Flipp. 34; Patterson v. Boehm, 4 Pa. 507; Way v. Langley, 15 Ohio St. 392; Bliss v. Matteson, 45 N. Y. 22, affirming 52 Barb. 335; Brown v. Nealley, 161 Mass. 1; Cock-shott v. Bennett, 2 T. R. 763; Ex parte Sadler and Jackson, 15 Ves. Jr. 52; Wood v. Barker, L. R. 1 Eq. 139, 35 L. J. Ch. 276, 11 Jur. N. S. 906, 14 Week. Rep. 47, 13 L. T. N. S. 318; Hughes v. Alexander, 5 Duer. 488; Beach v. Ollendorf, 1 Hilt. 41; Higgins v. Mayer, 10 How. Pr. 368; Williams v. Schreiber, 14 Hun, 28; Breck v. Cole, 4 Sandf. 79; Carroll v. Shields, 4 E. D. Smith, 466; Lawrence v. Clark, 36 N. Y. 128; Huckins v. Hunt, 138 Mass. 366; Constanten v. Diache, 1 Cox. Ch. 297; Clay v. Ray, 17 C. B. N. S. 188; Wells v. Girling, 1 Brod. & B. 453, 4 J. B. Moore, 75, and in Leicester v. Rose, 4 East, 372, 1 Smith, 41, where a creditor required a contract for additional security on the two last installment notes, and sued on a breach of such contract alleging that thereby the first installment note was due, he was consulted on the ground that such a contract was a fraud on other creditors, denying the authority of Pease v. Randall, 1 Rep. 224, 6 T. R. 146.

In Jackson v. Davison, 4 Barn. & Ald. 686; Pidcock v. Bishop, 3 Barn. & C. 605, 5 Dowl. & R. 505; Clarke v. White, 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 173, 9 L. ed. 1046; Williams v. Carrington, 1 Hilt. 515; Mawson v. Stock, 6 Ves. Jr. 300; Jackson v. Lomas, 4 T. R. 160; Feldman v. Gamble, 26 N. J. Eq. 494, and Fellows v. Stevens, 24 Wend. 294,—it was said that contracts made to induce a creditor to enter into a composition are void although this was not directly involved in such cases.

And one creditor may prevent the other creditors from taking possession of all the debtor's property for their benefit and advantage. Bank of Montgomery v. Ohio Buggy Co. (Ala.) July 27, 1893.

So a third party cannot recover on a note given him to induce a creditor to sign. Winn v. Thomas, 55 N. H. 294.

And an agent of the creditor cannot recover on a note given to him as an inducement not to interfere with the composition. Bullene v. Blaine, 6 Biss. 22.

And a contract by one creditor to pay another as an inducement to join a composition is void. Lee v. Sellers, 81* Pa. 473.

So a contract for an extension in aid of an assignment preferring one creditor is void. Gibbon v. Bellas, 2 Phila. 890.

And in White v. Kunta, 107 N. Y. 518, the court refused to enforce a contract to purchase composition notes at a greater amount than their face value.

And in Davidson v. McGregor, 8 Mees. & W. 755, where the debtor claimed that the contract was a fraud on other creditors, it was held that he must plead and prove that this preference was not known to other creditors.

But in Davis v. Benton, 24 Conn. 561, it was held that a creditor could recover upon a note given to induce him to sign a composition deed where such deed never took effect, and the maker of the note was not the debtor, but held funds of the debtor in his hands to pay the note.

In Small v. Breckley, 3 Vern. 602, it was held that a debtor being guilty of fraud in the composition is not entitled to relief in equity against security given to the creditor for the balance of the composition.

In Smith v. Owens, 21 Cal. 11, it was said that notes made in fraud of the composition are void in the original debt." The case of Knight v. Hunt, 5 Bing. 432, referred to by Lord Denman, if we are to regard the language of the opinion, did not expressly decide that the whole transaction was avoided. In that case the plaintiff had refused to accede to a composition of 10 shillings in the pound until a brother of the debtor agreed to supply him with coals to an amount in value equal to half the debt. The coals were furnished; but the notes remained unpaid, and the plaintiff brought this suit upon them. Best, Ch. J., stated the principle that the judgment of the creditors is influenced by the supposition that all are to suffer in the same proportion, and briefly concluded with the remark: "Here the plaintiff has had his ten shillings in the pound in coal, and he cannot have it again in money." In Mallalieu v. Hodgson, 16 Q. B. 689 (decided in 1851), Erle, J., held that "where any creditor, in fraud of the agreement to accept the composition, stipulates for a preference to himself, his stipulation is altogether void. Not only can he take no advantage from it, but he is also to lose the benefit of the composition." In this ruling he relied upon Leicester v. Ross and Howden v. Haigh. The plaintiff there was seeking to recover for the balance of his original debt, after allowing for the amount of the composition and the value of a preference. It was his claim that the composition deed had not released the debt to him, because he had been induced to believe that he alone was preferred, whereas some other creditors had also been secretly preferred. It will be observed that, in Mallalieu v. Hodgson, it was unnecessary to decide whether the plaintiff had lost the benefit of the composition. The question was whether the plaintiff could defeat the effect of the composition agreement by the plea that he had been deceived into supposing that he was the only creditor secretly preferred. As an expression of judicial opinion, it must, however, be accorded its weight as evidencing the continuance of the authority of Howden v. Haigh. That case furnishes the sole basis of authority on which subsequent decisions and text-writers have rested the doctrine that the fraud in the secret agreement with the creditors so vitiates the whole transaction of composition as to disable him from recovering even the amount of the composition. Leake, Cont. 768; Chitty, Cont. 994; Wald's Pollock, Cont. 231. I say the sole authorities, because Leicester v. Ross did not go so far as that, and Howden v. Haigh, was an extension of the principle which was supposed to be justified by Lord Ellenborough's decision in the former case. The doctrine of Howden v. Haigh, it may be observed, did not go wholly unquestioned in England, as may be inferred from the remarks of Littledale, J., in that case, which I have quoted, and of Baron Alderson in Davidson v. M'Gregor, 8 Mees. & W. 763; who said he was "alarmed at the extent to which that decision goes."

In this state, with the case of Leicester v. Ross before him, Judge Duer, in Breck v. Cole, 4 Sandf. 79, formed quite a different conclusion as to the extent of the effect of a secret the hands of creditors, but in this case a recovery was had, because the answer failed to plead the composition and fraud.

IV. Action for balance.

A creditor perpetrating a fraud upon other creditors in obtaining a secret preference cannot recover on the note or contract for the balance. Willis v. Morris, 63 Tex. 458, 51 Am. Rep. 655; Ex parte Oliver, 4 DeG. & S. 354; Callahan v. Ackley, 9 Phila. 99; Crandall v. Cochran, 3 Thomp. & C. 203.

And so it was held in Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, 16 Ves. Jr. 872, that a bond creditor uniting in a composition, could not maintain an action thereafter on a bond beyond the terms of the composition.

But a creditor could recover the balance of his claim where other creditors in the composition had been fraudulently preferred. Cobleigh v. Pierce, 32 Vt. 788; Brownsville Mfg. Co. v. Lockwood, 3 McCrary, 606; Greer v. Shriver, 53 Pa. 259.

See also subhead, "Action on original claim."

The fact that the day before a small claim was set for trial it was paid in full will not justify another creditor in suing for the balance of his claim, where it was not shown but what this was known to all the signers of the composition and besides the payment in such a case was not a voluntary payment. Carey v. Barrett, L. R. 4 Q. P. Div. 879.

A subsequent agreement to pay the balance, made some time after the composition, may be enforced. Trimball v. Tilton, 21 N. H. 129; Tuck v. Tooke, 9 Barn. & C. 437, 4 Mann. & R. 398; Took v. Tuck, 12 J. B. Moore, 435, 4 Bing. 224.

But in Rasmussen v. State Nat. Bank, 11 Colo. 301, it was held that after a composition has been made and carried out a note for the balance would not be enforced as being made without any consideration; but the question of fraud does not seem to have entered in this case.

27 L. R. A.

V. Reservation of part of the original claim from the composition.

A creditor will not be allowed to split his claims and sign the composition for part, reserving to himself the right to pursue the debtor for the remainder, as such reservation is a fraud on the other creditors, and cannot be enforced even where he assigns a part of his claim in order to obtain a preference. Harloe v. Foster, 53 N. Y. 385; Cecil v. Plaistow, 1 Anstr. 202; Robinson v. Striker, 47 Hun, 546; Cowper v. Green, 7 Mees. & W. 633; Britten v. Hughes, 8 Moore & P. 77, 5 Bing. 460; Russell v. Rogers, 10 Wend. 473, 25 Am. Dec. 574; Holmer v. Viner, 1 Esp. 181; Van Brunt v. Van Brunt, 3 Edw. Ch. 14, 6 L. ed. 553; Harry v. Wall, 1 Barn. & Ald. 103; Van Bokkelen v. Taylor, 62 N. Y. 105, reversing, 2 Hun, 138; Perry v. Armstrong, 39 N. H. 583; Huntington v. Clark, 39 Conn. 540.

In Adams v. Outhouse, 45 N. Y. 318, it was said that the debtor could not secretly split his claim and reserve a part which should not enter in the composition.

But an open reservation in a composition reserving all rights against the surety who signed the composition will be sustained. Rockville Nat. Bank v. Holt, 53 Conn. 526.

And a creditor may recover from the debtor who had previously released a judgment, which he had assigned to such creditor, who had no knowledge at the time of making the composition of the release made by the debtor. Russell v. Rogers, 15 Wend. 354.

And a creditor signing a composition may recover from the debtor on a note outstanding which he had indorsed, and which after the composition such creditor had to pay as an indorser, and which was not expressly provided for in the composition. Lipman v. Lowitz, 78 Ill. 252; Hamblen v. Ratigan, 119 Mass. 153.

agreement which attempts to secure to a creditor an advantage over the other creditors. Breck v. Cole was an action upon a promissory note secretly given to the plaintiff in addition to the composition notes, as an inducement to him to agree to the composition. Judge Duer, in his opinion, comments upon the fraudulent nature of the agreement, in its effect upon the other creditors; observing that "it is, in all cases, the concealment of a fact which it was material for them to know, and the knowledge of which might have prevented them from assenting to the composition. . . . Every composition deed is, in its spirit, if not in its terms, an agreement between the creditors themselves, as well as between them and the debtor. It is an agreement that each shall receive the sum or the security which the deed stipulates to be paid and given, and nothing more, and that upon this consideration the debtor shall be wholly discharged from all the debts then owing to the creditors who sign the deed." The learned judge then advertises to the violation of the equality among creditors worked by secretly giving additional security, and states this conclusion: "Hence, either the composition deed itself, . . . or the private agreement, which seeks to evade—and, if valid, would defeat—it, must be set aside; and sound policy and the principles of good faith require that the latter course should be followed. It is perfectly just that every creditor who signs a composition deed should be estopped from setting up any private agreement repugnant to its terms, or inconsistent with its intention and spirit, and . . . every private agreement . . . is of this character, and consequently . . . every security which is the fruit of such an agreement is illegal and void." He reviews the early decisions in the courts of England and of this state, and concludes that "it is the clear and inevitable result of the decisions that, where a composition is made with creditors, every security given to a particular creditor, not

And where a creditor was induced to transfer a note against the debtor to a third party who should sign the composition, this did not release other claims which the creditor held against the firm, where such debtor fraudulently represented that he was only a special partner and not personally liable. Almon v. Hamilton, 100 N. Y. 527.

And where a creditor had a bill indorsed by a third party, and the composition did not provide for giving up security, it was held that he might retain the proceeds of such bill where altogether he did not draw a greater per cent than the other creditors. Thomas v. Courtney, 1 Barn. & Ald. 1.

VI. Liability of creditor on obtaining a fraudulent preference.

Generally a creditor obtaining a greater share than the other creditors by a fraudulent secret preference, as an inducement to join the composition or requiring a note which the debtor has been compelled to pay to a third party, may be required to give the same up to the debtor notwithstanding such debtor is to a certain extent a participant in such fraud. Gilmour v. Thompson, 49 How. Pr. 198; Re Lenzberg's Policy, L. R. 7 Ch. Div. 650, 47 L. J. Ch. 178, 28 Week. Rep. 258; Eastbrook v. Scott, 3 Ves. Jr. 456; Mare v. Earle, 3 Giff. 108, 7 Jur. N. S. 1200, 4 L. T. N. S. 852; Mare v. Warner, 3 Giff. 100, 7 Jur. N. S. 1228, 4 L. T. N. S. 851; Turner v. Hoole, Dowl. & R. N. P. 27; Atkinson v. Denby, 7 Hurlst. & N. 934, 31 L. J. Exch. 382, 8 Jur. N. S. 1012, 7 L. T. N. S. 92, 10 Week. Rep. 389, affirming 6 Hurlst. & N. 778, 20 L. J. Exch. 361, 7 Jur. N. S. 1205, 4 L. T. N. S. 252, 9 Week. Rep. 539; Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, 9 Mees. & W. 29; Smith v. Cuff, 6 Maule & S. 160; Stock v. Mawson, 1 Bas. & P. 286; Horton v. Riley, 11 Mees. & W. 492, 13 L. J. Exch. 81; Jackman v. Mitchell, 13 Ves. Jr. 581.

And the assignee of a creditor may recover payments, which were made to induce such creditor to join the composition. Bean v. Amsinck, 10 Blatchf. 361; Bean v. Brookmire, 2 Dill. 108; Almager v. Spaulding, 6 Scott, 204, 4 Bing. N. C. 407, 1 Arm. 181.

And in Pfleger v. Browne, 28 Beav. 391, where the creditor obtained an insurance policy as an advantage, it was held to belong to the representative of the family of the debtor even though the insurance company issued a new policy payable to the creditor in lieu of the old one.

In Mare v. Sandford, 1 Giff. 288, 5 Jur. N. S. 1230, it was held that a bankrupt may recover a fraudulent preference from a creditor under the Bankrupt Act, section 281, providing that if any creditor obtains any advantage in composition over others he should forfeit the debt together with the composition.

Creditors who obtain from the debtor security for a fraudulent preference as an inducement to enter the composition will be compelled to give them up to the party giving such security. Cullingworth v. Lloyd, 2 Beav. 835, 9 L. J. Ch. N. S. 218, 4 Jur. 284; Middleton v. Onslow, 1 P. Wms. 768.

But in Moses v. Katzenberger, 1 Handy (Ohio), 46, it was held that a debtor who had preferred a creditor in a composition could not maintain a suit to have a satisfaction of the judgment by such creditor entered of record, as the parties being both guilty of fraud, the court leaves them where it finds them.

In Solinger v. Earle, 82 N. Y. 393, 13 Jones & S. 80, and 604, it was held that the payment of a note to a "bona fide" holder executed by a brother-in-law of the debtor, which note was given in fraud of creditors, could not be recovered by such brother-in-law as he was not so near a relative as come within the rule of "duress."

A debtor who paid a greater amount to one creditor than to another cannot recover the same after the matters have all been closed, where he voluntarily paid without objection. Wilson v. Ray, 10 Ad. & El. 82, 3 Perry & D. 253, 3 Jur. 384.

And in Ward v. Bird, 2 Chitty, 582, it was held that he could not recover the difference between the composition and the payment in full, without showing that the composition notes had been paid.

A debtor cannot maintain an action in a composition covenant to indemnify him in the composition where the defendant had been preferred, and he may plead his own fraud as a bar. Higgins v. Pitt, 4 Exch. 312, 18 L. J. Exch. 488.

And where a creditor gave up the composition notes after the composition and obtained security, he was not liable to the other creditors, unless the agreement therefor was prior to or part of the composition. Hagen's App. 11 W. N. C. 86.

VII. Composition not general.

A creditor cannot avoid a composition that is not general because other creditors not parties thereto may have obtained an advantage. Smith v. Stone, 4 Gill & J. 810; Eaton v. Lincoln, 13 Mass. 424; Argall v. Cook, 48 Conn. 160; Cheveront v. Textor, 58 Md. 295.

In the preparation of this note cases in regard to preferential assignments and releases under the assignment or bankruptcy statutes providing for such releases have not been included. L. T.

provided for in the terms of the deed, and not disclosed, is void, as a fraud upon the creditors from whom it is concealed." The importance of this expression of judicial opinion should not, in my judgment, be underestimated. It was delivered by one of the most eminent judges in this state, and was concurred in by his associates, Judges Mason and Campbell. It does not appear from the opinion that Howden v. Haigh was before him, although it had been decided ten years before. But, whether his attention was called to it or not, the learned judge's opinion was formed after considering the same early English cases as were considered by Lord Denman in Howden v. Haigh and by Justice Erie in Mallalieu v. Hodgson. Judge Duer limited the effect of the fraudulent secret agreement to the nullification of any rights or advantages attempted to be gained under it, and regarded it as something quite separable from the composition agreement itself. From all the early cases in England and in this state, the inference from the decisions is, not that the composition agreement is avoided, but, as Justice Nelson stated it in Russell v. Rogers, "the security taken for an amount beyond the composition agreed upon, or even for that sum, better than that which is common to all, . . . is void and inoperative." So in Fellows v. Stevens, 24 Wend. 294, Justice Cowen held that the law would set aside "all secret terms made by the creditors with the debtor, more favorable to the former than is allowed to the other creditors." It is the secret agreement itself which is fraudulent and void. Bliss v. Matteson, 45 N. Y. 23; Harloe v. Foster, 58 N. Y. 385. And that is all that I think Leicester v. Ross decided. White v. Kuntz, 107 N. Y. 518, is one of the latest cases in which this court has considered the effect of composition agreements. In that case the plaintiff had signed a composition agreement by which he agreed with other creditors of the debtors to accept one third of the indebtedness due them in four notes, to be indorsed by the father of the debtors. To induce the plaintiff to sign this agreement, Kuntz, the father of the debtors, secretly agreed to purchase of him the composition notes within a specified time, and to pay $10,000; the composition notes aggregating only about $6,000. This secret agreement Kuntz refused to perform, alleging that it was null and void. Thereupon, plaintiff brought an action, alleging these facts in his complaint, and also that several other creditors had been induced to sign by a secret agreement to pay them a larger percentage than the one third provided for in the composition agreement, and, upon the ground that that agreement was void as to him, demanded its cancellation, and that of the notes delivered under it, and a judgment against the debtors, for the amount of the original indebtedness. Demurrer to the complaint was sustained below, and in this court the judgment was sustained. It was held that the agreement between plaintiff and Kuntz, the debtors' father, was fraudulent, and could not be enforced, and that the composition agreement, as to all the innocent parties, was avoided. As the plaintiff was not an innocent party, but had himself taken a fraudulent advantage, he could not set up the fraud of the creditors. The opinion discusses what were his rights. It was said that he had not forfeited all claims upon his debtors; that "he must have either the composition notes, or his original notes;" that he could not avoid the composition agreement as to himself, and enforce his original notes for their full amount, as that would unjustly result in an advantage over the other creditors, and "he should be held to the composition." "His only remedy," it was said, "against the defendants, is upon the composition notes." Judge Earl, in delivering the opinion in White v. Kuntz, cited the English case of Mallalieu v. Hodgson, supra, as an authority in point; but that he did not adopt the opinion, in all its expressions, is evident, for he held that there was "no ground upon which he [the creditor in the case before him] can be deprived of all remedy." It is very plain from the opinion in White v. Kuntz, that it is the secret agreement, by which the creditor receives an undue advantage, which is deemed to be avoided. It was so considered, again, by Judge Andrews, in Meyer v. Blair, 109 N. Y. 600, who, referring to White v. Kuntz as authority for the statement that a collateral agreement is void in composition cases, which secures to one creditor an advantage over others, said, "The court refuses to enforce the secret bargain, and confines the creditor, who is a party to the fraud, to a remedy to recover the sum which, by the terms of the composition, he agreed to accept." In Solinger v. Earle, 82 N. Y. 398, the facts were that a third party had given his note for a portion of the insolvent's debt to the defendants, to induce them to agree to the composition. Having paid the note to a transferee thereof, he brought an action to recover back from the defendants the money so paid. It was held that the action could not be maintained, for, although the transaction was a fraud upon the other creditors, the parties were in pari delicto. Judge Andrews, remarking that fair dealing condemned such a transaction, said: "If the defendants here were plaintiffs seeking to enforce the note, it is clear that they could not recover." Inasmuch as the note sued upon was for an additional amount beyond the amount of the composition agreement, the remark of the learned judge was in line with all the authorities. He held the secret agreement was void, and could not have been enforced. The case is in no wise in conflict with White v. Kuntz or Meyer v. Blair.

If we should say that the fraud of the secret agreement made by the creditor operated to avoid the whole transaction of composition, the result would be to leave him with the original indebtedness unreleased. If the composition agreement, by which the debt was compromised, is to be deemed nullified by the fraudulent transaction, I do not see why the creditor would not be at liberty to pursue the original debt; a view which Littledale, J., regarded as possible in Howden v. Haigh. It would certainly seem to be the logical outcome of the proposition asserted below that, if the composition agreement has been avoided, it has become inoperative as an agreement for any purpose. We assert a wholesome rule, and one which works a just result, if we hold that the secret and fraudulent agreement itself is illegal, and is inoperative to confer any rights or advantages upon the creditor. Perfect equality is to be maintained among the creditors. It was thought below that the secret agreement and the composition agreement constituted but a single and indivisible transaction or agreement. I am not prepared to accede to that proposition, though it has support in some of the English cases referred to. It seems to me the case falls easily within the rule which permits a severance of the illegal from the legal part of the covenant. Pickering v. Iffracombe R. Co. L. R. 3 C. P. 235, 250; United States v. Bradley, 85 U. S. 10 Pet. 348-360, 9 L. ed. 448, 455. In Malan v. May, 11 Mees. & W. 658, the plaintiffs, who were surgeon dentists, agreed to take the defendant as an assistant, and to instruct him for a term of years, and he agreed, at the expiration of that term, not to practice his profession "in London, or any of the towns in, or places in, England or Scotland, where the plaintiffs might have been practicing." It was held that the covenant as to not practicing in London was valid, and that not to practice elsewhere was illegal, but that the valid part was not affected by the illegality of the other part. Here, the agreement with other creditors for a composition was lawful and valid, unless they should elect to rescind it upon the discovery of the secret agreement,—an element not present. But the agreement for, and the giving of, additional security, was unlawful and void. Is there any reason why the bad may not be rejected, and the good retained? If the alternative is, as it presents itself to my mind, that the composition agreement shall stand as a release of the plaintiff's original demand, or that it shall fall, and leave the plaintiff at liberty to recover the original debt, I am for upholding it, and I fail to see why the legal part of the transaction had with it cannot be severed from the illegal part. We should be careful, in our desire to punish the harsh and unscrupulous creditor, who presses his debtor, and bargains for an advantage over other creditors, by deprivation of legal rights and remedies, that we do not go too far, and lay down a rule which may result unjustly in other ways. It ought not to be possible that through his fraud he may be reinstated in his original position as a creditor for the whole sum due. The operation of a secret agreement is such that the other innocent creditors may, because of the fraud of their debtor, elect to refuse to be bound by their agreement of composition with him. If the secret agreement is execu-tory, they may not so elect, and may rely that the creditor secretly seeking to obtain some promise of advantage over them will be prevented from enforcing it, and from gaining anything by his fraud. Its illegality is a perfect defense in the hands of the promisor. The composition agreement is one thing, as an agreement between all the creditors to release some part of the insolvent's indebtedness to them, upon terms equal as to each; and the secret fraudulent agreement with one or more of them is a stipulation which, from its inception, was unlawful, and which the law annuls. Bliss v. Matteson, 45 N. Y. 22.

27 L. R. A.

It was also suggested in the opinion below, in support of the rule there asserted, that if it did not obtain there would be an inducement to an unscrupulous creditor to commit a fraud, for his only risk would be to lose his additional security, while assured of the amount of his composition. To a certain extent, that may be true; but, on the other hand, it may be suggested that if it were the rule the insolvent debtor would have the inducement to ensnare his creditors into some secret arrangement, and thus, by trick and device, to leave them wholly remediless,—disabled to recover the amount of the composition, and disabled from pursuing the original debt which the composition agreement released. It seems wiser simply to regard the secret agreement as one which the law avoids for its fraud. The creditor makes it with the risk of its worthlessness if repudiated, and the debtor makes it with the peril that its discovery will furnish cause for his other creditors to avoid the composition agreement. The conclusion reached is the result of a careful examination of the authorities and the doctrine they teach, and it is in accord with a wiser policy. It must not be forgotten that the defendant's contract of indorsement is within the terms of the composition agreement with respect to the note in suit. We know nothing of the fate of the earlier notes, the indorsement upon which by defendant was secretly and fraudulently procured to be added. She had a perfect defense to the enforcement of her contract. We are only concerned now with the question of whether the plaintiff shall have the amount of the composition, notwithstanding it may have been agreed secretly that it should have some better security for the payment of some of the composition installments. This question, for the reasons stated, should be answered in the affirmative; and therefore the judgments below should be reversed, and a new trial ordered, with costs to abide the event.

All concur, except Andrews, J., and Peckham, J., dissenting.

CHAS. S. HIGGINS CO., Appl.,

v.

HIGGINS SOAP CO., Resp.

(144 N. Y. 462.)

1. The right of a person to use his own name in business notwithstanding the prior use of the name by others in a similar business, does not extend to a corporation of which he is a promoter and member.
2. The use of the name "Higgins Soap Co." to some extent as that of the "Chas. S. Higgins Co." which is engaged in manufacturing various kinds of soap called by the general name of "Higgins Soap" will prevent the right of a company subsequently incorporated in another state under that name to use it in a rival business in the same city.

(January 2, 1896.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Second Department, affirming a judgment of the Special Term for Kings County in favor of defendant, in an action brought to enjoin defendant from using the name under which it was doing business. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. H. Aplington, for appellant:

The relief asked for in this action is based upon the principles involved in trade-mark cases.

Reeves v. Denicks, 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. 92; McCardel v. Peck, 28 How. Pr. 120; Levy v. Walker, L. R. 10 Ch. Div. 437.

The plaintiff is entitled to an injunction herein.

The name of a corporation will be protected as against another corporation with the same name or a name so similar as to be liable to produce confusion or deceive the public.

Newby v. Oregon Cent. R. Co. 1 Deady, 609; American Grocer Pub. Assn. v. Grocer Pub. Co. 25 Hun, 898; Celluloid Mfg. Co. v. Cellonite Mfg. Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 94.

A name cannot be used to represent that your business is my business.

William Rogers Mfg. Co. v. Rogers & Spurr Mfg. Co. 11 Fed. Rep. 495; Landreth v. Landreth, 22 Fed. Rep. 41; Rogers v. Rogers, 53 Conn. 121, 55 Am. Rep. 78; Massam v. Thorley's Cattle Food Co. L. R. 6 Ch. Div. 574, L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 748; Fullwood v. Fullwood, L. R. 9 Ch. Div. 176; Holloway v. Holloway, 13 Beav. 209; Stonebraker v. Stonebraker, 88 Md. 268; Browne, Trade-Marks, 2d ed. § 420; Munro v. Tousey, 14 L. R. A. 245, 129 N. Y. 88; Waterman v. Shipman, 130 N. Y. 801; International Trust Co. v. International Loan & T. Co. 10 L. R. A. 758, 153 Mass. 271; Holmes, B. & H. v. Holmes, B. & A. Mfg. Co. 87 Conn. 278, 9 Am. Rep. 324; Hendricks v. Montagu, 50 L. J. Ch. 456; Fraser v. Fraser Lubricator Co.

121 Ill. 147; Merchants Detective Assn. v. Detective Mercantile Agency, 25 Ill. App. 259; Taylor v. Carpenter, 2 Sandf. Ch. 604, 613, 7 L. ed. 721, 725; McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 245, 24 L. ed. 828; Seizo v. Provezende, L. R. 1 Ch. 192; Le Page Co. v. Russia Cement Co. 17 L. R. A. 354, 5 U. S. App. 113, 51 Fed. Rep. 941.

As a general rule the purchasers of kitchen soap are domestics who can be easily imposed upon, and this fact should be considered in the case at bar.

Munro v. Smith, 86 N. Y. S. R. 841.

Mr. Jesse Johnson, for respondent:

Every man has the right to use his own proper name to designate the product of his own ingenuity, skill or industry. It is appropriate and proper that he should do so.

Meneely v. Meneely, 62 N. Y. 427, 20 Am. Rep. 489; Devlin v. Devlin, 69 N. Y. 212, 25 Am. Rep. 173; Koehler v. Sanders, 9 L. R. A. 576, 122 N. Y. 65; Caswell v. Hazard, 121 N. Y. 484; James v. James, 41 L. J. Ch. 853; Marcus Ward & Co. v. Ward, 40 N. Y. S. R. 792.

General descriptive words, words which are the names of places or things, cannot be appropriated and made property under the trade-mark law.

Browne, Trade-Marks, §§ 191, 192; Newman v. Alford, 51 N. Y. 189, 10 Am. Rep. 588; Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Clark, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 811, 20 L. ed. 581; Celluloid Mfg. Co. v. Cellonite Mfg. Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 92; Goodyear's India Rubber Glove Mfg. Co. v. Goodyear Rubber Co. 128 U. S. 598, 32 L. ed. 535; Brown Chemical Co. v. Meyer, 139 U. S. 540, 35 L. ed. 247; Leclanche Battery Co. v. Western Electric Co. 23 Fed. Rep. 276.

Whether plaintiff's soap is known in the trade, either generally or sometimes, as "Higgins Soap" does not entitle the plaintiff to an injunction in this case.

An employé in any business requiring skill or ability, when he retires from that business (whether voluntarily or on compulsion), has a right to advertise that he is the person formerly in the other concern, and he has a right to whatever of custom or of trade may come to him from honestly stating the fact.

Van Wyck v. Horowitz, 39 Hun, 237; Colton v. Deane, 7 N. Y. S. R. 78; Marcus Ward & Co. v. Ward, 40 N. Y. S. R. 792.

Mr. Higgins simply uses his own name, and, if some one remembers who and what he was in the soap business, that does not present a case for an injunction.

The fact that the names here in controversy are the names of corporations, and not of persons, makes the rule still stronger in defendant's favor.

Employers Liability Assur. Corp. v. Employers Liability Ins. Co. of the U. S. 24 Abb. N. C. 868, 61 Hun, 552; Farmers Loan & T. Co. v. Farmers Loan & T. Co. of Kansas, 21

NOTE.—While the above case is not expressly made to turn on the effect of a transfer of the right to use a trade-name, it appears that the goodwill and trade-marks of the soap business conducted by Chas. S. Higgins were transferred by him to a corporation which took his name. As to the effect of such a transfer to carry the right to use a trade-name, and as to right of an individual to use his own name in his own business after such a transfer, see note to Vonderbank v. Schmitt (La.) 15 L. R. A. 462, also Fish Bros. Wagon Co. v. Fish (Wis.) 16 L. R. A. 453, and Le Page Co. v. Russia Cement Co. (C. C. App. 1st C.) 17 L. R. A. 354.

Abb. N. C. 104; Re United States Mercantile Reporting & Collecting Agency (Limited), 115 N. Y. 178.

Andrews, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff seeks in this action to restrain the use by the defendant in this state of its corporate name, "Higgins Soap Company," in the business of manufacturing and selling soap, on the ground that such use is an unlawful invasion of the rights of the "Chas. S. Higgins Company," the plaintiff corporation. The corporate names of the respective corporations are not identical, but it is claimed in behalf of the plaintiff that there is a similarity between them which, in connection with other facts, is liable to and has produced confusion, and will enable the defendant to appropriate the trade of the plaintiff. The facts found show that in 1890, prior to the organization of the corporation defendant, under the laws of New Jersey, which took place in 1892, the plaintiff, a domestic corporation, organized by Charles S. Higgins and others, purchased from Charles S. Higgins and his partner, for the sum of $810,000, in stock and bonds, the soap business originally established in Brooklyn by the father of Charles S. Higgins in 1846, to which business Charles S. Higgins succeeded on his father's death in 1860, together with the good-will, labels, trade-marks, and other property employed in the business. The business was very valuable, and the plaintiff and its predecessor expended, subsequent to 1879, in advertising, the sum of $300,000, and the product was extensively sold in New York and other states, and was well known to the trade as "Higgins Soap," and the plaintiff corporation was sometimes known as the "Higgins Soap Company." The plaintiff and its predecessors manufactured a great variety of soaps, which were put up under different names, the leading article being known as "Chas. S. Higgins German Laundry Soap;" but, as we infer from the findings, all the soap so manufactured passed under the general name of "Higgins Soap." On the organization of the plaintiff corporation and the purchase of the business, it continued to carry it on in Brooklyn, where it had been originally established, and where it has ever since been carried on. Charles S. Higgins was a director of the plaintiff, and its first president, and so continued for a year after its incorporation, when he was displaced from his position as president, and ceased to be a director of the company. The ground of his discharge does not appear. Soon afterwards, in the summer of 1892, Charles S. Higgins, with his wife, his son, and two other persons, organized the defendant corporation, under the name of the "Higgins Soap Company," to carry on the soap business, and commenced the manufacture of soap, having its factory, principal office, and place of business outside of New Jersey, in the city of Brooklyn. Charles S. Higgins became the president of the defendant corporation, and, among other products, it manufactured and put up a soap in bars, on the wrappers of which appear the words

27 L. R. A.

"Higgins Soap Company, Original Laundry Soap, Charles S. Higgins, Prest.,"—and the bars were impressed with substantially the same words. It was shown on the trial that letters intended for the plaintiff, containing orders for goods, or relating to other business matters, had been sent addressed to the "Higgins Soap Company," "Chas. S. Higgins Soap Co.," and "Chas. Higgins Co.;" but, in general, the plaintiff's place of business was added to the address, and they were received by the plaintiff. There were produced twenty-eight letters and envelopes of this kind, written within four months after the organization of the defendant and the commencement of this action, and it was stated that these did not comprise all the letters of this description. The main ground upon which the plaintiff has been defeated in the courts below is that Charles S. Higgins or the members of his family, either separately or jointly, had the right to establish the soap business, and to use the name of Higgins in conducting it, and to designate the product as "Higgins Soap," and that no right of the plaintiff was invaded by giving to the corporation formed by them the name of "Higgins Soap Company."

The case of Meneely v. Meneely, 62 N. Y. 427, 20 Am. Rep. 489, following other cases, is an authority upon the proposition that any person may use in his business his family name, provided he uses it honestly and without artifice or deception, although the business he carries on is the same as the business of another person of the same name previously established, which has become known under that name to the public, and although it may appear that the repetition of that name in connection with the new business of the same kind may produce confusion, and subject the other party to pecuniary injury. The right of a person to use his family name in his business is regarded as a natural right, of which he cannot be deprived, by reason simply of priority of use by another of the same name. In the bill of sale from Charles S. Higgins to the plaintiff the former consented that, so long as he should be allowed a salary of $15,000 per year for his services, he would give to the company the full benefit of his receipts, processes, etc., and that, "so long as he may be employed at the salary aforesaid, he, said Higgins, would refrain from making or selling soap in the city of Brooklyn except for said company," thereby, by implication, reserving the right to engage in the business if the plaintiff should terminate his employment. But the question as to the right of the defendant to assume the name of the "Higgins Soap Company," or to do business in that name, is not affected by any contract entered into between Charles S. Higgins and the plaintiff. The defendant is a distinct person in the law from Charles S. Higgins, one of its corporators and officers. It had entered into no contract with the plaintiff, nor does it derive any of its rights from Charles S. Higgins. It stands in respect to the question involved in this litigation in the same situation as if Charles S. Higgins had never been a corporator or stockholder.

It cannot appropriate the name or the trade-marks or the business of the plaintiff by any simulation or deceit, because the law prohibits such appropriation by any person, natural or artificial; but the fact that Charles S. Higgins was active in organizing the defendant, or that he may have been actuated in doing so by feelings hostile to the plaintiff or by a desire to injure its business, is, as we conceive, irrelevant to the case. The sole test of liability is whether the acts done, either in organizing the defendant or in the prosecution of its business subsequently, invaded any right of the prior corporation, or exceeded the boundaries of fair competition. On the other hand, we think it is equally clear that the defendant derives no additional immunity from the fact that the name of "Higgins," in its corporate name, was that of one or more of its corporators, or that Charles S. Higgins, or any one of that name, might engage in the soap business under the family name, or that Charles S. Higgins and the other corporators of the same name had consented to its use. The right of a man to use his own name in his own business, the law protects, even when such use is injurious to another who has established a prior business of the same kind, and gained a reputation which goes with the name. But in such cases the courts require that the name shall be honestly used, and they permit no artifice or deceit, designed or calculated to mislead the public and palm off the business as that of the person who first established it and gave it its reputation. Croft v. Day, 7 Beav. 84; Holloway v. Holloway, 13 Beav. 209; Russia Cement Co. v. Le Page, 147 Mass. 206. It is well settled that an exclusive right may be acquired in the name in which a business has been carried on, whether the name of a partnership or of an individual; and it will be protected against infringement by another who assumes it for the purposes of deception, or even when innocently used, without right, to the detriment of another; and this right, which is in the nature of a right to a trade-mark, may be sold or assigned. Levy v. Walker, L. R. 10 Ch. Div. 436; Hoxie v. Chaney, 143 Mass. 592, 58 Am. Rep. 149; Bassett v. Percival, 5 Allen, 345; Russia Cement Co. v. Le Page, supra; Millington v. Fox, 8 Myl. & C. 338. In respect to corporate names the same rule applies as to the names of firms or individuals, and an injunction lies to restrain the simulation and use by one corporation of the name of a prior corporation which tends to create confusion, and to enable the later corporation to obtain, by reason of the similarity of names, the business of the prior one. The courts interfere in these cases, not on the ground that the state may affix such corporate names as it may elect to the entities it creates, but to prevent fraud, actual or constructive.

The names of corporations organized under general laws, and in most other cases, are chosen by the promoters, and it would be an easy way to escape from the obligations which are enforced as between individuals if a corporation were granted immunity by reason of their corporate character. The principle upon which courts proceed in restraining the simulation of names which have become trade-marks, and have come to designate the business of a particular person or company, is stated in Lee v. Haley, L. R. 5 Ch. 155,—an action to restrain the use by the defendant of the name of the "Guinea Coal Company," in his business. "I quite agree [said Gifford, L. J.] that they [plaintiffs] have no property in the name [Guinea Coal Company], but the principle upon which the cases on the subject proceed is not that there is property in the word, but that it is a fraud on a person who has established a trade, and carries it on under a given name, that some other person should assume the same name, or the same name with a slight alteration, in such a way as to induce persons to deal with him in the belief that they are dealing with the person who has given a reputation to the name." The cases are not infrequent in which the use of corporate names has been restrained on the principle of the trade-mark cases. Holmes, B. & H. v. Holmes, B. & A. Mfg. Co. 37 Conn. 278, 9 Am. Rep. 324; Massam v. Thorley's Cattle Food Co. L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 748; Celluloid Mfg. Co. v. Cellonite Mfg. Co. 33 Fed. Rep. 94; Newby v. Oregon Cent. R. Co. 1 Deady, 609, Fed. Cas. No. 10,144; William Rogers Mfg. Co. v. Rogers & Spurr Mfg. Co. 11 Fed. Rep. 495; Le Page Co. v. Russia Cement Co. 2 C. C. A. 555, 51 Fed. Rep. 942, 17 L. R. A. 354, 5 U. S. App. 112.

Whether the court will interfere in a particular case must depend upon circumstances,—the identity or similarity of the names, the identity of the business of the respective corporations, how far the name is a true description of the kind and quality of the articles manufactured or the business carried on, the extent of the confusion which may be created or apprehended, and other circumstances which might justly influence the judgment of the judge in granting or withholding the remedy. Whether, upon equitable principles, the remedy should have been awarded in this case upon the facts proved and found is the question in this case. If the right of the plaintiff to relief depended exclusively upon the comparison of the corporate names of the parties, and the inferences to be drawn from such comparison alone, and without reference to any extrinsic facts, it might well be doubted whether the names are so similar that the court could find that confusion and injury would be likely to arise. But the case does not rest alone upon the inferences from such comparison. It would naturally be inferred from the names that both parties were corporations. The name of "Higgins" appears in each. The name of the plaintiff does not itself indicate the business of the plaintiff corporation, while the name of the defendant describes its business. But, while the plaintiff's name does not describe its business, its product has come to be known to the trade as "Higgins Soap," and to the public the name of the product identified the plaintiff as the manufacturer of this product, and the company came to be known and called, to some extent, the "Higgins Soap Company." The use of the name "Higgins" in connection with the business was valuable, because of its use for a great number of years by the father of Charles S. Higgins, and subsequently by the son, under which a large business had been built up, and by reason of the large sums which had been expended in advertising the product. The name of the plaintiff in connection with these facts indicated to dealers in soap that the article known as "Higgins Soap" was manufactured by the plaintiff. The manufacture had been established for fifty years, and carried on in the same place. Among the labels which were transferred to the plaintiff was one containing the words "Higgins Soap," and the word "Higgins" was placed upon many of the labels. It cannot be doubted upon the findings that the reputation of "Higgins Soap," when the defendant corporation was organized, applied to, and designated to the trade, the soap manufactured by the plaintiff and its predecessors. The promoters of the defendant, knowing the history of the business established by Higgins, Sr., in 1846, its transfer to the plaintiff, that the product was known to the trade as "Higgins Soap," that the business had become very valuable, and that large sums had been expended in advertising it, proceeded to organize the defendant corporation under the name of the "Higgins Soap Company," and to manufacture soap in the same city where the plaintiff's business was carried on. The inference seems irresistible that the defendant assumed its corporate name so that it should carry the impression that it was the manufacturer of "Higgins Soap," so well known to the public. But if the name was assumed in good faith, and without design to mislead the public and acquire the plaintiff's trade, the defendant, knowing the facts, must be held to the same responsibility as if it acted under the honest impression that no right of the plaintiff was invaded. The names are not identical, but, as said by Bradley, J., in Celluloid Mfg. Co. v. Cellonite Mfg. Co., supra: "Similarity, not identity, is the usual recourse where one party seeks to benefit himself by the good name of another." In that case the learned and experienced judge who sat therein expressed the opinion that the use of the corporate name of the defendant should be restrained, although there was a much greater dissimilarity between the names there in question than exists between the names of the parties here. As between these parties, the case is, we think, the same as if the word "Soap" was written into the plaintiff's name, and its corporate designation was "Chas. S. Higgins Soap Company." The evidence shows that confusion has arisen, and it is a reasonable presumption that, if the defendant is permitted to continue to carry on the business of soap-making under its present name, the public will be misled, and the plaintiff's trade diverted, the extent of such diversion increasing with the increase of the defendant's business.

We think the plaintiff, upon the facts found and proved, was entitled to relief by injunction.

The judgment should be reversed, and a new trial granted.

All concur, except Haight, J., not sitting.

WYOMING SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Wyoming, as rel. Louis MILLER,
v.

Amos W. BARBER, Secretary of State.

(.....Wyo.....)

1. The duty of the secretary of state to countersign and affix the great seal of the state to commissions, official acts, and other instruments issued or done by the governor, under a statute saying, "he shall affix" the seal in such cases, is merely ministerial and may be compelled by mandamus.
2. The right of an officer to a commission, which has been issued to him by the governor, cannot be considered on an application for mandamus to compel the secretary of state to perform his ministerial duty to affix the great seal to such commission, notwithstanding the general rule that a clear legal right to the writ must be shown.

(December 1, 1893.)

NOTE.—For mandamus to secretary of state, see also State v. Crawford (Fla.) 14 L. R. A. 253.

For mandamus to governor, see Greenwood Cemetery Land Co. v. Routt (Colo.) 15 L. R. A. 890; Hovey v. State (Ind.) 11 L. R. A. 763, and note, also note to State v. Whitesides (S. C.) 8 L. R. A. 777.

For mandamus to speaker of house, see State v. Elder (Neb.) 10 L. R. A. 796.

37 L. R. A.

PETITION for a writ of mandamus to compel defendant to countersign and affix the great seal of the state to a commission which had been issued to relator by the governor of the state authorizing him to act as fish commissioner. Granted.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. C. Campbell, for relator:

The duties of secretary of state are ministerial in their nature.

Laws 1890-91, chap. 69, p. 382.

It is his duty to affix the seal of the state and to countersign all commissions issued by the governor.

Laws 1890-91, chap. 69, §§ 7, 8, p. 383.

(a). Mandamus will lie to compel a secretary of state to attest a commission duly issued by the governor.

Mechem, Pub. Off. § 958; Merrill, Mandamus, § 102; State v. Wrotnowski, 17 La. Ann. 156; Hawkins v. The Governor, 1 Ark. 570, 33 Am. Dec. 846.

(b). The secretary of state cannot go behind commissions officially presented to him for authentication.

State v. Wrotnowski, supra.

(c). The governor is presumed, as a sworn officer, to have done his duty and the secretary has no right to presume that grounds did not exist justifying the governor in issuing the commission.

Ibid.

(d). Appointments are intrinsically executive acts.

State v. Barbour, 58 Conn. 83, 55 Am. Rep. 65; Territory v. Cox, 6 Dak. 501.

And as the executive power is by our Constitution, article 4, section 1, vested in the governor, the secretary by refusing to affix the seal and countersign the commission issued by the governor usurps a power not delegated to him and places a veto power upon an executive act.

Const. art. 4, § 2, p. 46.

Messrs. Charles N. Potter, Atty-Gen., and Lacey & Van Devanter for respondent.

Clark, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an original proceeding in mandamus, commenced in this court, under the provisions of article 5, section 8, of the Constitution, conferring original jurisdiction upon this court in cases of mandamus, as to all state officers. The relator, in his petition, substantially sets up the following facts: (1) That he is, and for more than two years last past has been, a resident citizen and a qualified elector of the state of Wyoming. (2) That respondent is the duly qualified secretary of state of the state of Wyoming. (3) That it is the duty of the said secretary of state to affix the great seal of the state and to countersign all commissions and other official acts required by law to be issued or done by the governor of the state. (4) That on the 9th day of February, 1898, the governor of the state duly nominated to the senate of the state the relator to the office of fish commissioner for the state of Wyoming, which nomination was duly received by said senate, and said senate thereafter, on the 18th day of February, 1898, adjourned sine die without either consenting to or disapproving, or in any manner acting upon, said nomination. (5) That thereafter, on the 17th day of March, 1898, the legislature not being in session, the governor of this state did duly appoint and commission relator as fish commissioner of the state of Wyoming, and did transmit said appointment and commission to the said secretary of state, with the request that he countersign the same, and affix thereto the great seal of the state; that the said secretary did refuse to so countersign and affix the said seal, and returned said commission and appointment to the said governor without having affixed thereto said seal, or countersigned the same. (6) That, by reason of such refusal, relator is kept out of the fees and emoluments of the office, etc.; that he is entitled to speedy relief, etc., and is entirely without relief, unless it be afforded by this court. (7) That Gustave Schnitger is now exercising the duties and receiving the emoluments of said office, wherefore, he prays for the writ of mandamus.

To this petition the respondent filed his answer, in which he admits all the statements of the petition, excepting only those stated in the sixth paragraph, as above set forth, which he denies, and further sets forth as a defense herein: (1) That on the 24th day of January, 1891, the governor of this state, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, duly and regularly appointed and commissioned Gustave Schnitger fish commissioner of the state of Wyoming for a period of two years thereafter, and until his successor should have been duly appointed and qualified; that thereafter the said Schnitger duly qualified, and entered upon the duties of said office, and ever since has been, and still is, exercising and discharging the same. (2) That at the time the relator was appointed to said office, to wit, March 17, 1898, Gustave Schnitger was the lawful incumbent thereof; that there was then no vacancy in the office, and hence the governor of the state did not then have power or authority to appoint or commission relator thereto, nor was he then required or authorized by law to make such appointment, or to issue any such commission. (3) That defendant, as secretary of state, is not required by law to affix the great seal of the state or countersign any commission issued by the governor of the state, unless such commission is required or authorized by law to be issued by the governor. (4) That relator has not been appointed to the office by the governor, with the advice or consent of the senate; that he has not been appointed to fill any vacancy occurring or existing in the office, and is not entitled thereto. (5) That should the commission to relator be sealed and countersigned, as prayed for, the same would not authorize him to qualify as such officer, or give him any right or title to the said office.

To this answer relator demurred generally, and upon these pleadings, the petition, answer, and demurrer, the cause was submitted to the court.

The first question which meets us in the consideration of this cause may be thus stated: Is the secretary of state, under the constitution and laws of the state of Wyoming, a mere ministerial officer, as regards the countersigning and sealing by him of the official acts and instruments of the governor of the state, when such acts are presented to him, and he is requested by the governor to countersign the same, and affix the great seal of the state thereto? Or is he, under the constitution and laws of the state, vested with discretionary and supervisory power, which enables him, before executing the functions imposed by law upon him in this particular, to judge for himself whether such official acts or instruments as need his authentication are constitutional or unconstitutional, legal or illegal, and to affix or withhold from such acts or instruments, at his option, according to his discretion, his official signature, and the impress of the great seal of the state?

In our opinion, the duty of the secretary of state with respect to countersigning and affixing the great seal of the state to the commissions, official acts, and other instruments issued or done by the governor are simply and merely ministerial, and he has no power or authority to legally go behind these acts issued or done by the governor in due form, and examine into the facts upon which the executive action was predicated. Laws 1890-91, chapter 95, defines the duties of secretary of state, and section 8 thereof is as follows: "Sec. 8. He shall affix the great seal of the state to and countersign all commissions and other official acts required by law to be issued or done by the governor, his approval or disapproval of the acts of the legislature excepted, and all other instruments when required or authorized by the governor." We have no doubt that the appointment of the relator to the office of fish commissioner, as set forth in the pleadings here, was an official act on the part of the governor, and such an official act as the law required to be evidenced by a written instrument executed by him. People v. Murray, 70 N. Y. 521. We do not think that, by any fair construction, it can be held that the section quoted means that the secretary shall be limited in his duty in this respect to those official acts, only, which are expressly authorized by law to be issued or done by the governor, but, on the contrary, that, in all cases in which the law requires that the official act of the governor shall be evidenced by some written instrument to be subscribed by him, it is then the duty of the secretary of state to countersign and affix the great seal of the state thereto, when requested so to do by the governor. The language of the act is imperative. It does not simply authorize the secretary to countersign and seal the instrument. It positively commands him to do so. "He shall," is the command; not, "He may, if, in his judgment, it is proper." The object of the statute is apparent. The great seal of the state, bearing a device prescribed by law, impressed upon a written instrument bearing the purported signature of the governor of the state, proves, in perhaps the best possible way, that the signature is genuine, and that the instrument is an official act of the governor. This is the only object and purpose of the requirement. After the countersigning and sealing by the secretary, it is still the official act of the governor, and of him alone, and in no degree whatever is it the act of the secretary. It is wholly and entirely immaterial whether the secretary approves or disapproves the act. Whether he assents to it or dissents from it, it is none of his concern. The governor is the responsible party, and he alone is responsible for his official acts in matters of this kind. Being the responsible party, and, by virtue of article 4, section 1, of the Constitution of this state, having the executive power vested in him, and in him alone, and being authorized by the act creating the office of fish commissioner to fill vacancies in that office (Laws 1890-91, chap. 69, § 1), and being expressly authorized by the statute (Laws 1890, chap. 80, § 47), to determine when a vacancy exist in an office which he has the power to fill by appointment, it follows that in all such cases he must determine for himself, at least so far as the executive department is concerned, from information communicated to him, when appointments become necessary, and he is under no legal obligation to communicate, either to the secretary of state or to any one else, upon what information he acts. State v. Wrotnowski, 17 La. Ann. 156, 161; State v. Harrison, 118 Ind. 434; Hill v. State, 1 Ala. 561. In short, he is the governor of the state, placed in his position by the people of the state, and authorized by the constitution and laws of the state to perform certain acts; and acting, as he does, under the sanction of a solemn oath, his official acts are entitled to the respect of every one, because they are the acts of the proper department, and, prima facie, are presumed to be within the power and authority conferred upon him by law. Hill v. State, State v. Harrison, and State v. Wrotnowski, supra.

It does not follow from what has been said that the commission, when countersigned and impressed with the great seal of the state by the secretary of state, will entitle or authorize the relator to oust the incumbent of the office. What the effect of the commission may be upon the respective rights of the relator and the incumbent is a question which can be better determined in a controversy between them; and in this case we express no opinion whatever concerning that question, further than to say this: that in such proceeding between relator and the incumbent the question of the right and authority of the governor to make the appointment will be a judicial question and, as we now think, not concluded by the ex parte determination of the governor, upon which the commission was issued.

But it is urged upon us that inasmuch as the relator is not entitled to a writ of mandamus, unless he shows a clear legal right thereto, the question of his right under the commission is fairly before the court on the facts pleaded, and we must determine the law upon those facts before we can say that the relator has "a clear legal right" to the writ, because, if, upon the facts pleaded in the answer, it is clear that the commission confers no actual right to the office upon the relator, the writ will require the respondent to do a vain and useless act, which the law never requires. The following considerations are, in our opinion, a complete answer to this line of reasoning. Admitting, for the purpose of this question, the claim of counsel for respondent, that, under the facts demurred to, the action of the governor was wholly without authority of law, it does not follow that the secretary was at all justified in withholding his signature and seal from the commission, when presented to him, and request therefor made upon him by the governor. If such a conclusion should follow, it would be tantamount to declaring the law to be that the secretary might exercise his discretion in this case, and as in this case, so in every other case; and in our opinion the strongest possible grounds of public policy demand that such shall not be the rule. As was said by the supreme court of Louisiana in the case of State v. Wrotnowski, supra,—a case almost identical with this: "Were this right of supervision, which is almost equivalent to a veto power, in the secretary of state, as it is seriously contended it is, it would indeed produce startling consequences. The secretary of state could paralyze at will constitutional appointments made by the executive. He, and not the governor, would control appointments, or nullify them." Again, in this case, as in the Wrotnowski Case cited, every fact stated in respondent's answer may be true, as we assume it is, and still there may be conditions existing which would have justified the governor in issuing the commission; and, such being the case, the presumption of legality which flows from the performance of an official act done by the highest executive officer of the state still obtains, and in this proceeding the court will not go behind the commission to inquire into the evidence on which it was issued. State v. Wrotnowski, supra. Nor does it clearly appear that the writ, if issued, would require the respondent to do a vain and useless act, even admitting all the claims of counsel for respondent as to the legal conclusion to be drawn from the facts pleaded by him, for with such admission it will still depend upon the future action of the present incumbent of the office, as to whether or not the commission would give relator a good title to the office. If relator should, with such commission, enter upon the office, and retain possession thereof, without objection on the part of the present incumbent, even under the law as it is claimed to be by respondent, he (the relator) would not only be de facto fish commissioner, but as well the de jure commissioner. State v. Jones, 19 Ind. 856.

Upon the argument and in briefs of counsel, the case of People v. Forquer, 1 Ill. 104, was strongly urged upon us as a case identical with this in principle, and announcing a different conclusion to that which we have reached. We have carefully considered the case, and are not at all inclined to follow it. There are two opinions in that case. In one of the opinions, that of Justice Lockwood, there is a dictum to the effect that the secretary had the right to determine whether or not the governor, in issuing a commission, was acting within the powers conferred upon him by law, and hence might suspend his action on the request of the governor to countersign and seal such commission until that question was determined. We denominate this declaration a dictum for this reason: The facts, as stated in the opinion of Justice Smith, at page 118, show that the reason of the secretary's refusal to countersign and seal the commission was the fact alleged by him, that A. F. Hubbard, who issued the commission, was not the governor of the state of Illinois at the time the commission was issued, but, on the contrary, one Edward Coles was, and for some time prior to the date of the commission had been, the governor of said state, and in the discharge of the duties of his office as such. Under such facts, we have no doubt that the court decided correctly in refusing the mandate; but we have difficulty in finding any necessity for the expression of opinion as to the discretion of the secretary, to be found in Justice Lockwood's opinion, at page 109. The language of the opinion upon the point referred to is: "The secretary of state is a constitutional officer, as well as the governor, and his duties are pointed out by law. I think he may refuse to sanction an unconstitutional or illegal act." Whatever may have been the state of the law of the state of Illinois at the time the case mentioned arose, with respect to the powers and duties of the secretary of state in countersigning and sealing commissions and other official acts issued or done by the governor of that state, we are entirely satisfied that, in the state of Wyoming, the secretary of state, in performing such acts, in no way whatever compromises himself. He does not "sanction," nor is he called on to "sanction," the official acts of the governor, in any way or degree whatever, for the simple reason that he has no "sanction" either to bestow or to withhold.

It is the unanimous opinion of this court that the secretary of state has not shown any valid and legal reason why he should not countersign and affix the great seal of the state to the commission issued by the governor of the state, and appointing Louis Miller fish commissioner of the state of Wyoming, and that mandamus is the proper remedy to oblige him to do his duty in this particular.

It is therefore ordered and adjudged by the court that a peremptory writ of mandamus be issued, directed to the respondent herein, requiring him to do as prayed for in relator's petition, at once, upon the presentation of the said commission to him for that purpose.

Groesbeck, Ch. J., and Conaway, J., concur.

Rehearing denied.

Mary E. McFARLAND

RAILWAY OFFICIALS & EMPLOYEES' ACCIDENT ASSOCIATION of Indianapolis, Indiana.

(.....Wyo.....)

The time of death by accident and not the time when the cause of action accrues on a policy of accident insurance, is the time from which is to be computed the period of "one year from the date of the happening of the alleged injury" within which suit must be brought by the terms of the policy, although the right of action on the policy did not accrue until the expiration of ninety days after proof of the injury.

(November 14, 1894.)

QUESTIONS reserved by the District Court for Laramie County, for the opinion of the Supreme Court in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a policy of fire insurance. Questions answered in defendant's favor.

NOTE.—The conflict of decisions on the question involved in the above case gets very extensive review in the brief and opinion. See on this point Hart v. Citizens Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, Pa. (Wis.) 21 L. R. A. 743, and Travelers Ins. Co. v. California Ins. Co. (N. Dak.) 8 L. R. A. 709, and note.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. A. C. Campbell and R. W. Breckons for plaintiff.

Messrs. Lacey & Van Devanter, for defendant:

Statutes of limitations have been uniformly held to mean exactly what they say, and the time of the running of such statutes is uniformly held to be the time stated in the statute.

The statute limiting actions for death caused by wrongful acts read "two years after the death of such deceased person."

Wyo. Rev. Stat. § 2364.

It is uniformly held that the limitation begins to run, according to its words, "from the death," and not from the time the cause of action accrues.

George v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 51 Wis. 608; Rugland v. Anderson, 80 Minn. 386; The Harrisburg v. Rickards, 119 U. S. 199, 80 L. ed. 368; Cacanagh v. Ocean Steam Nav. Co. Limited, 18 N. Y. Supp. 540; Taylor v. Cranberry Iron & Coal Co. 94 N. C. 525; Best v. Kinton, 106 N. C. 205; Pittsburg, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hine, 25 Ohio St. 629; Hill v. New Haven, 87 Vt. 501, 88 Am. Dec. 618; Benjamin v. Eldridge, 50 Cal. 612.

Such provisions in policies are valid and binding upon the parties.

Riddleberger v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn. 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 386, 19 L. ed. 257; Hart v. Citizens Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, Pa. 21 L. R. A. 748, 86 Wis. 77.

In Hart v. Citizens Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, Pa., supra, the question here at issue between the plaintiff and defendant came squarely before the court.

The court said plain unambiguous words which can have but one meaning are not subject to construction. "Twelve months next after the fire" has one certain meaning and but one. It can have no other.

State Ins. Co. v. Meesman, 2 Wash. 459; McElroy v. Continental Ins. Co. 48 Kan. 200; State Ins. Co. v. Stoffels, Id. 205; Johnson v. Humboldt Ins. Co. 91 Ill. 98, 33 Am. Rep. 47; Semmes v. Hartford Ins. Co. 80 U. S. 18 Wall. 158, 20 L. ed. 490; Travelers Ins. Co. v. California Ins. Co. 8 L. R. A. 769, 1 N. Dak. 151; Allemania Ins. Co. v. Little, 20 Ill. App. 431; Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Wells, 88 Va. 736; Chambers v. Atlas Ins. Co. 51 Conn. 17, 50 Am. Rep. 1; Bowen v. National Life Assn. 68 Conn. 460; King v. Watertown F. Ins. Co. 47 Hun. 1; Fullam v. New York Union Ins. Co. 7 Gray, 61, 66 Am. Dec. 462; Glass v. Walker, 66 Mo. 32; Owen v. Howard Ins. Co. 87 Ky. 571; Blanks v. New Orleans Hibernia Ins. Co. 36 La. Ann. 599; Tasker v. Kenton Ins. Co. 58 N. H. 469; Wilson v. Aetna Ins. Co. 27 Vt. 99; Law v. New England Mut. Acc. Assn. 94 Mich. 266; Lentz v. Teutonia F. Ins. Co. 96 Mich. 445; Farmers Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Barr, 94 Pa. 845; Universal Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Weiss, 106 Pa. 20; Hocking v. Howard Ins. Co. 180 Pa. 170; Schroeder v. Keystone Ins. Co. 2 Phila. 286; Thompson v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 25 Fed. Rep. 296; Steel v. Phantia Ins. Co. of Brooklyn, 47 Fed. Rep. 868.

37 L. R. A.

Conaway, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought on a certificate of membership of the defendant association, in the nature of a policy of accident and life insurance, whereby defendant insured the life of William W. McFarland for twelve months, commencing June 10, 1891, against death by external, violent, and accidental means, in the sum of $2,000, payable to plaintiff, wife of the insured, should death result within ninety days from the time of the injury. On May 1, 1892, the insured received injuries such as he was insured against by virtue of the certificate or policy mentioned, from which injuries he died the same day. Deceased was also insured in the same instrument against injuries not resulting in death, but this branch of the subject it is not necessary to consider. The certificate contains the following provision: "No suit in law or equity shall be maintained on this certificate, on any accidental injury or death, unless such suit be brought within one year from the death of the happening of the alleged injury; and failure to bring suit within one year shall be taken and deemed as conclusive evidence against the validity of such claim, and of forfeiture of all right under this certificate." Suit was not brought on this policy or certificate within one year from the date of the happening of the injury to and the death of the insured, but was brought a little more than thirteen months after. Plaintiff admits that it was competent for the parties to limit the time for bringing suit by a provision inserted in the certificate by the association, and accepted by the insured; but plaintiff insists that under the conditions of the certificate the time of the limitation should not run "from the date of the happening of the alleged injury," but should run from the time the cause of action accrued, or, in other words, from the time when the company might be sued. This could not be done until the expiration of ninety days after the claimant had furnished verified affirmative proof in writing of the injury, which proof was required to be furnished within seven months from the happening of such injury.

It appears that proofs of death were furnished by plaintiff on August 24, 1892,—less than four months after the injury to and death of the insured. It further appears that defendant finally denied its liability, and refused to pay plaintiff's claim, on September 1, 1892,—just four months after such death and injury. By written stipulation of the parties filed in the cause, it is, in effect, agreed that, if the court should be of the opinion that the suit is not barred by the limitation contained in the certificate, judgment shall go in favor of the plaintiff; otherwise, in favor of the defendant. Under these facts and conditions, the district court finds that three difficult and important questions arise, upon which it reserves a decision, and sends the cause to this court for its decision of the question, under the statute authorizing this course of procedure. The questions so reserved are these: "(1) Under the allegations contained in the pleadings herein, was this action commenced in time, or was the claim of the plaintiff barred at the commencement of this action by reason of the provisions of the policy sued upon, as set forth in the pleadings? (3) Under the pleadings herein, did the limitation named in the policy begin to run at the death of the insured, or at the expiration of ninety (90) days after the receipt by defendant of proofs of death, or at the time when the defendant refused to pay the plaintiff's claim? (8) Under the written stipulation of the parties herein, should judgment be rendered for the plaintiff, or for the defendant?"

The district court asks, "Was this action commenced in time?" The answer to this question must determine what the judgment shall be. But, to answer this and the other questions reserved and submitted, we must consider and determine from what date the limitation runs. Three dates to be considered are indicated in the questions of the court and in the briefs and oral arguments of counsel: First, the date of the death of the insured, May 1, 1892; second, the date of the final refusal of defendant to pay the claim of plaintiff, September 1, 1892; and, third, ninety days after proofs of death were furnished, the expiration of the ninety days occurring November 24, 1892. The question of the date from which the limitation runs is an important one, involving, as it does, leading and elementary principles in the construction of contracts, and being a question of first impression in the courts of this state. And it must be considered a difficult question, since eminent courts are in conflict in their views of contracts of insurance similar to the one under consideration. These conditions require a careful consideration of the question, and a careful scrutiny and weighing of the authorities on both sides.

The main contention of plaintiff seems to be that the limitation of the time for bringing suit to "one year from the date of the happening of the alleged injury" shall be held to mean one year from the date when the cause of action accrues. The doctrine upon which the contention is based is stated in Wood on Insurance (second edition), changing the language used in the first edition to these words: "Sec. 469. It is held in some of the cases that when a policy stipulates that no action shall be brought, unless commenced within a certain time after loss or damage shall accrue, and there is a provision in the policy that the company will pay in thirty, sixty, ninety, or any other number of days after proofs of the loss have been served, the limitation does not attach until after the period which the company has in which to pay the loss has expired. The limitation does not apply until the right of action has accrued, and, until the period has expired which the company has to pay the loss in, no right of action exists." Cases from New York, Michigan, and West Virginia are cited in a note to support this view. The note continues, "But a contrary doctrine is held in some of the states," citing cases from New Hampshire, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Vermont, and Illinois. The exhaustive researches of counsel have resulted in the collection of a large number of cases from nearly half of the states in the Union, as bearing more or less directly upon the question under discussion. It is admitted by plaintiff that it is lawful for the parties to a contract of insurance to limit the time within which an action may be brought upon such contract by a provision inserted therein. So cases cited to establish this proposition will not be mentioned in this discussion. It is only necessary to consider cases which hold that provisions for occupying a portion of the time limited in the performance of conditions precedent to the right of action do or do not extend this time beyond the limit specified. It is admitted by the defendant that if the time allowed for, or necessarily occupied by the claimant, under contract of insurance, in performing such conditions precedent, should include all the time specified within which suit must be brought, or should not leave a reasonable time for that purpose, the right of action would not be lost by the lapse of the time specified. Neither if the bringing of the action was delayed beyond the time limited by the conduct of the insurer. So cases cited to these propositions will be eliminated from this discussion. The most of the cases bearing upon the question of extending the time limited for commencing suit by holding the limitation to run from a later date than that specified in the policy are cases of fire insurance which limit the time to a certain number of months after the loss or after the fire, and further require proofs of loss to be furnished, or other conditions precedent to the right of action to be performed, for which time is allowed, or which necessarily consume time. So far as the question has been before the federal courts, the decisions are conflicting. Judges Thayer, Bunn, Hawley, and Gilbert have held, in favor of the position of plaintiff, that the limitation runs only from the time the cause of action accrues, although the policy reads a certain number of months after the loss or after the fire. Judges Deady and McKenna, and the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, hold directly the reverse. See Steel v. Phoenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn, 2 C. C. A. 463, 51 Fed. Rep. 715; Vette v. Clinton F. Ins. Co. 30 Fed. Rep. 668; Friezen v. Germania F. Ins. Co. Id. 852; McElhone v. Massachusetts Ben. Asso. 23 Wash. L. Rep. 157. Coming to the states, we find five states and one territory holding, by their courts of last resort, that a limitation of a certain time for beginning action after the loss or after the fire shall not run from the date of the loss or of the fire, but from the time the cause of action accrues. We find a considerably larger number where the decisions are directly to the contrary effect, and a number where they are somewhat equivocal, and claimed by both parties, and some make a distinction between the meaning of the phrases "after the loss" and "after the fire." So, if we were to decide this case according to the number of the authorities, we should be compelled to decide it in favor of the defendant. But this is not a satisfactory way of determining a question of the construction of the language either of a contract or of a statute. An examination of the decisions, with the reasons assigned for them, is preferable.

27 L. R. A.

The case of Barber v. Fire & Marine Ins. Co. of Wheeling, 16 W. Va. 658, 37 Am. Rep. 800, was an action on a policy of fire insurance, which made the loss payable sixty days "after due notice and proof of the same," but specifying no time within which such notice and proof should be made, and limiting the time for bringing action to "six months next after the loss should occur." The court calls the time which must elapse before suit can be brought an indefinite time, because the claimant was not required to furnish his proofs of loss within a specified time, and holds that in such cases the six-months' limitation runs from the time when the cause of action accrues and not before, and expires in this instance six months and sixty days after proofs of loss were furnished, and finds that this was "the intent of the parties." The later case of Murdoch v. Franklin Ins. Co., 83 W. Va. 407, 7 L. R. A. 572, was an action on a policy of insurance which limited the time for bringing action to six months from the date of the loss, and requiring proofs of the loss within thirty days thereafter, and allowing the insurer sixty days after proof of loss in which to make payment. The court quotes from Barber v. Fire & Marine Ins. Co. of Wheeling, supra, that the "intent of the parties to the contract was that the six-months' limitation should commence to run when the cause of action accrued, and not before." And the court concludes: "So that case is authority for the position (1) that the limitation does not begin until the cause of action accrues; and (2) that it does not begin from the actual loss,—thus departing from the letter of the policy." In Iowa the doctrine is firmly established that under a policy of insurance limiting the time for bringing action upon it, and requiring the performance of conditions precedent which must occupy a portion of that time, the limitation does not commence to run until the right of action accrues. See Matt v. Iowa Mut. Aid Asso. 81 Iowa, 135; McConnell v. Iowa Mut. Aid Asso. 79 Iowa, 757; Ellis v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co. 64 Iowa, 507; Miller v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 70 Iowa, 704; Eggleston v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co. 65 Iowa, 808; Quinn v. Capital Ins. Co. 71 Iowa, 615. Two reasons for this line of decisions are given in the different cases in Iowa: One reason is the assumption, made in the West Virginia cases, that such was the intent of the parties, and a statement of it is found in Ellis v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co., supra,—a case of fire insurance,—in these words: "Now, it is apparent that, if the literal construction of the provision in question contended for by defendant obtains, it might frequently happen that the right of action would be barred by it before such right had accrued to the assured under the other provision. It is very clear that the parties never intended that such a result should be accomplished." The time limited in this case was "six months next after the loss shall occur." The other reason, as held in Iowa, is that there is a rule of construction of limitations, both by statute and by contract, that the limitation runs only from the time when the right of action accrues. It is stated in McConnell v. Iowa Mut. Aid Asso., supra,—a case of life insurance,—in these words: "It is a familiar and just rule, recognized by the courts, that a bar created by statute or by contract to an action for a breach of its conditions, by reason of the lapse of time, will not commence to run until the right of action accrues; that is, the plaintiff must have the full time given by the statute or contract after his right of action arises, in which to commence his suit." The limitation in this case was six months after the death of the assured. As to this case, it is sufficient to say that no case has been cited by counsel, and none has occurred to us, which holds that a period of limitation fixed by statute has ever been changed by a court by construction. And by all the authorities the rule of construction is the same for contracts as for statutes,—that the true meaning and intent of the language is to be sought. The authority of the supreme court of Nebraska is in favor of plaintiff. German Ins. Co. v. Fairbank, 82 Neb. 750, was an action on a policy of fire insurance limiting the time for bringing action to "six months after the loss or damage shall occur," and requiring proofs to be made in thirty days after such loss or damage, and payment to be made within ninety days after proofs furnished. The court says, "The fair and reasonable interpretation of the provisions of the policy, when construed together, is that the limitation did not begin to run from the date of the loss, but from the time the suit could have been brought." This case is followed by the same court in Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. of California v. Buckstaff, 88 Neb. 150. The case of Hong Sing v. Royal Ins. Co., 8 Utah, 185, is in favor of the plaintiff's theory of construction. It is an action on a policy of fire insurance limiting the time for bringing action for loss or damage by fire to "twelve months from the date of said fire," and requiring proofs of loss within thirty days after, and payment within sixty days after, proof, and requiring arbitration before suit. The court holds that the action may be brought within twelve months after the cause of action accrues, and that this is what the parties intended and understood by the words, "within twelve months from the date of said fire," because all that time might be necessarily consumed by plaintiff in performing the conditions precedent to the right of action. The court of appeals of New York holds that the word "loss," in the limitation clause of a policy of fire insurance, has reference to the time when the loss becomes payable by the insurer, and when the right of action accrues. Hay v. Star F. Ins. Co. 77 N. Y. 285. The supreme court of Arkansas also takes this view. Sun Ins. Co. v. Jones, 54 Ark. 376. These are all the states, so far as we are at present advised, that hold unequivocally in favor of plaintiff. There are a few others whose courts have used language claimed by plaintiff to favor this view, but which is at least doubtful, which will be considered presently.

As already stated, the great preponderance in numbers of decisions is against this view. But the courts taking this view are courts of eminence, and they are entitled to respect; and, if their position is sustained by convincing reasons, mere numbers should not be allowed to prevail against them. Their number is sufficient to make a very respectable array. But the weight of these decisions as authority is greatly reduced by the fact that they do not agree as to the basis or reason upon which they rest. All of the courts which we have mentioned cite New York cases as sustaining them; so it is somewhat important to determine just how far the New York cases do sustain them. Hay v. Star F. Ins. Co., supra, was a suit upon a policy of fire insurance requiring proofs of loss to be furnished as soon as possible after the fire, providing that the loss should be paid within sixty days after proof, and limiting the time for commencing action to twelve months. The court (one judge dissenting) says: "The loss should be deemed to occur when the company pays it, or may be lawfully called upon to pay it. The loss then, and not until then, practically occurs to it. These words may in some clauses refer to the destruction of the property, but it does not necessarily follow that they do in this." It is to be remarked that, of the states we have mentioned as citing New York cases as authority in their decisions, none but Arkansas adopts this reason for a decision. The West Virginia court makes a similar decision under a similar policy, but characterizes its decision expressly as "departing from the letter of the policy." If the word "loss," in the limitation clause, meant the loss to the company by its incurring a liability to suit so many days after proofs of "loss, then the decisions followed strictly the letter of the contract. The Iowa supreme court says that, under a literal construction of such provisions, the right of action might be barred before it accrued. This, of course, is inconsistent with the idea that the loss is the accruing of the right of action, as the New York and Arkansas courts hold. The Nebraska court makes the distinction expressly between "the date of the loss" and "the time the suit could have been brought," but holds that the latter is meant when the former is expressed. The case of Hong Sling v. Royal Ins. Co., 8 Utah, 135, was an action on a policy limiting the time for bringing suit to twelve months from the date of the fire, and it cites a number of New York cases as holding to this latitudinarian construction, but the New York courts never held so. When a policy of fire insurance says "next after the fire," the New York courts hold that it means next after the fire. The New York cases which favor plaintiff's position turn upon the meaning of the word "loss." See King v. Watertown F. Ins. Co. 47 Hun, 1. But it must be allowed that when a policy requires proof of loss by fire to be made immediately or within a certain time after the fire which caused the loss, and payment of such loss to be made within a certain time after the submission of the proofs of the same, and that any suit is barred unless brought within a certain longer time after the loss occurs or accrues, the New York and Arkansas courts hold that the word "loss," in each place where it occurs, except the last, means the loss to the insured by fire, which he was insured against, but in the last place it means the loss to the insurer by the accruing of a right of action. So far as we are at present advised, no courts, except those of New York and Arkansas, have taken this view. A large proportion of the courts of the states have held differently. Some, as the courts of West Virginia and Iowa, have confessedly departed from the letter of a literal construction of the contract in order to make the insurers liable.

Cases in favor of the contention of defendant are numerous. Johnson v. Humboldt Ins. Co., 91 Ill. 92, 33 Am. Rep. 47, was an action on a policy of fire insurance which provided that the loss or damage should be estimated according to the actual cash value of the property at the time of the loss, and paid sixty days after proofs of the same made by the assured, unless the property were replaced, or the company had given notice of its intention to repair or rebuild the damaged premises, and that no suit should be brought until after award obtained in a manner specified, nor unless "commenced within twelve months next after the loss shall occur." Few policies are more burdened with conditions to be performed, and requiring time for their performance, before a right of action accrues, than this. The court, after stating the general and universally accepted principle controlling the construction of laws and contracts, that the intention, as expressed, must govern, proceeds: "When did the loss occur? Manifestly, at the time the fire destroyed the property. In what consisted the loss? Obviously, in the destruction of the building by fire. We are wholly unable to perceive that language could have been used that could have rendered the meaning plainer." And the action, not having been commenced within twelve months next after the destruction of the building by fire, was held to be barred by the limitation of the policy requiring it to be "commenced within twelve months next after the loss shall occur." Bradley v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 28 Mo. App. 7, was an action upon a policy of fire insurance which limited the time for bringing action upon it to "six months next after the loss shall occur." The policy also provided that the amount of the loss or damage was to "be estimated according to the actual cash value at the time of the loss, and to be paid sixty days after the proofs of the same shall have been made by the assured," etc. In the opinion appears the following: "When did this loss occur? Certainly, on the day, at the instant, when the property was destroyed by the fire. The term employed in the contract is apt and unambiguous." And the court held that the six-months' limitation ran from the date of the fire. Chambers v. Atlas Ins. Co., 51 Conn. 17, 50 Am. Rep. 1, was an action on a policy making losses payable sixty days after proofs furnished, and limiting the time for bringing action to "twelve months next after any loss or damage shall occur." The court says: "This limitation is lawful and reasonable. In words of common use and plain meaning, an event is referred to as a starting point; that is, the destruction of or injury to the plaintiff's property by fire. It is certain that they intended to surrender a very large portion of the time allowed them by the law; and there is nothing either in the structure or the subject-matter of the contract indicating their unwillingness to make the day of that occurrence the point of departure, and to agree that the period of twelve months therefrom should cover the making of the proofs, the sixty days of grace to the defendant, and the institution of the suit. The contract keeps the day upon which a fire occurs entirely distinct from the day upon which the right to sue for indemnity accrues. Each is described in plain and appropriate language. We find no reason for the assumption that when the first is mentioned the last is intended, and it is not for us, by construction, to give the plaintiffs what they failed to secure by agreement." And "twelve months next after any loss or damage shall occur" was held to mean twelve months next after the destruction of or injury to the insured property by fire. Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Wells, 83 Va. 786, was an action upon a policy making any loss or damage insured against payable sixty days after receipt of proofs of loss, and limiting the time for bringing action to "six months next succeeding the day upon which the loss or damage is alleged to have taken place." The court says: "It is undeniable that a policy must be construed with reference to all its provisions, like any other contract. And it may not be gainsaid that the condition of a policy should be construed, if possible, so as not to defeat the claim of the assured, which, in effecting the insurance, it was his purpose to secure. But there is no sounder rule of construction than that, 'when the terms and stipulations in a contract are plain and clear, we are bound to adhere to the terms, as the only authentic expression of the intention of the parties.' None would be rash enough to claim that there is obscurity or ambiguity in the language in which is expressed the prohibition to institute an action upon this policy after six months next succeeding the time when the loss is alleged to have taken place. The position is that the sixty days during which the company is entitled to delay the payment of the loss incurred by the fire should be eliminated from the six months. Had such been the intention of the parties, how easy it would have been so to have expressed that intention. But there is nothing in the policy, which is clear and unambiguous in its terms, to indicate any such intention." And the court held that the limitation ran from the date of the fire. The case of Travelers' Ins. Co. v. California Ins. Co., 1 N. Dak. 151, 8 L. R. A. 769, required the judicial construction of a policy of fire insurance, which limited the time for bringing action upon it to "twelve months next after the loss shall have occurred." The policy contained the familiar provision requiring proofs of loss before bringing suit. The court says: "It is undoubtedly true that a majority of the adjudications so interpret these limitations as to allow the full time to sue after the right of action has accrued, although more than the limited time has elapsed since the loss has occurred. We cannot assent to the doctrine of these cases. They rest upon the alleged necessity of harmonizing conflicting provisions." In language convincing, and which seems truly unanswerable, the court shows that such provisions are not conflicting, unless they are such as to deprive the insured of a reasonable time in which to sue. But the court is in error in saying that the majority of the adjudications are contrary to its views. In Blanks v. New Orleans Hibernia Ins. Co., 86 La. Ann. 599, negotiations were protracted until the limitation was within two months of its close. This was held to be sufficient time for bringing suit. Pullam v. New York Union Ins. Co., 7 Gray, 61, 66 Am. Dec. 462, was an action upon a policy of fire insurance allowing the claimant one month in which to furnish proofs of loss, and giving the insurer three months after proofs furnished in which to pay the loss, and limiting the time for bringing action to "six months next after any loss or damage shall occur." The action, not having been commenced until after the expiration of six months from the date of the fire, was held to be barred, and judgment was ordered for the defendant. It is somewhat remarkable that the cases which hold to a contrary doctrine—all recent, and evidently tending to a new departure in the construction of contracts—have, it seems, all ignored this earlier case, decided by the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts, without dissent, when the Hon. Lemuel Shaw was chief justice of that tribunal.

The cases which hold that the phrase "next after the fire," in the limitation clause of a policy of fire insurance, means "next after the cause of action accrues," are few. They are Hong Sing v. Royal Ins. Co., Steel v. Phoenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn, Vette v. Clinton F. Ins. Co. and Friezen v. Allemania F. Ins. Co. supra. These decisions reach results more clearly in opposition, if such a thing be possible, to the meaning and intent of the parties, as expressed in the language used, than do the cases which hold the words "after the loss occurs" to mean "after the cause of action accrues." They have not in their favor even the argument of the New York court, that the loss meant is the loss to the insurer by the accruing of a cause of action against him, and not the loss by fire of the property insured. And this argument, such as it is, is thoroughly refuted, if, indeed, it should not be said, utterly overwhelmed, by the foregoing citations. It is incredible that, when the parties say six or twelve months next after the fire, they mean six or twelve months after some other date or event. To this effect are the following additional cases: State Ins. Co. v. Meesman, 2 Wash. 459; McElroy v. Continental Ins. Co. 48 Kan. 200; State Ins. Co. v. Stoffels, Id. 205; Allemania Ins. Co. v. Little, 20 Ill. App. 481; Owen v. Howard Ins. Co. 87 Ky. 571; Hocking v. Howard Ins. Co. 180 Pa. 170.

California cases are cited, but they are not in favor of plaintiff. Garido v. American Cent. Ins. Co. of St. Louis (Cal.) 8 Pac. Rep.

512, was an action on a policy which limited the time for bringing action to "twelve months next after the loss." The property insured was destroyed by fire on February 15, 1880. The action was commenced November 1, 1881. Negotiations for settlement were continued until January 21, 1881. The court says, "This was ample time to commence suit." And the judgment of the lower court in favor of the plaintiff was reversed because the action was not begun within the time limited. It will be observed that the "ample time" was twenty-five days. This case has never been overruled. The later case of Cass v. Sun Ins. Co., 83 Cal. 478, 8 L. R. A. 48, is distinguished from this case by the court; the time having been occupied by the claimant in performing the conditions of the policy, presumably with reasonable diligence, until three months after the twelve-months' limitation had expired.

Lente v. Teutonia F. Ins. Co., 96 Mich. 445, was an action on a policy of fire insurance making any loss payable sixty days after proof of the same, and limiting the time for bringing suit to "six months next after the loss shall occur." An action brought six months and twelve days after the fire which caused the loss, the court held to be barred; following Law v. New England Mut. Acc. Asso., 94 Mich. 266, and distinguishing Voorhees v. People's Mut. Ben. Soc. of Elkhart, 91 Mich. 469.

Chandler v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 21 Minn. 85, 18 Am. Rep. 385, was an action on a policy of fire insurance, loss insured against to be paid within sixty days after proof, and containing a limitation clause in the following words: "It is expressly covenanted by the parties hereto that no suit or action against the company, for the recovery of any claim under or by virtue of this policy shall be sustained in any court of law or chancery, unless commenced within the term of one year next after any claim shall occur; and, in case such suit or action shall be commenced against the company after the end of one year next after such loss or damage shall have occurred, the lapse of time shall be taken and admitted as conclusive evidence against the validity of the claim thereby attempted to be enforced, any statute of limitations to the contrary notwithstanding." The court finds in this language two inconsistent limitations, and, of course, enforces the one most unfavorable to the company, whose language it is. The time "when any claim shall occur" is held to be not earlier than when proofs are furnished, or when the company becomes liable to suit, sixty days thereafter. But the time when the "loss or damage shall have occurred" is considered to be the date of the loss of the insured property by fire. So this is another case in opposition to the doctrine of the New York supreme court, that the word "loss," in the limitation clause of such a policy, does not mean the loss of the insured, by the destruction of his property, but does mean the loss to the insurer, by having to pay to the insured the whole or some portion of his loss. The court says of the limitation clause quoted: "The first branch of this condition clearly sustains the plaintiff's contention. The expression 'claim shall occur' obviously means shall 'arise' or 'accrue.' No claim occurs or arises to the assured upon the mere happening of the loss. The giving of notice and the furnishing of satisfactory proofs are conditions precedent to be performed by the assured before they are entitled to claim the stipulated indemnity, and not until sixty days after the performance of the last of these conditions can their claim be enforced by suit. It is unnecessary to determine in this case whether, by the first branch of the condition, the time of limitation begins to run from the furnishing of proofs, or sixty days thereafter. It would seem, however, that the claim exists when notice has been given and proofs furnished, although it is not payable until the expiration of sixty days." With all due respect, we must suggest that if the assured had no claim he had no occasion to give any notice or proof. To do so would put him in the attitude of saying, "I claim nothing, and here is my notice and proof of the fact." To make a claim is one thing; to establish it by proof is quite another. The claim may be a thousand dollars; the recovery, a hundred. The claim may never be realized at all, as a crop of wheat standing in the field will be lost unless harvested. He would be a rash man who would decline to file a claim against the estate of a decedent until after the time limited for filing claims because the debt of the decedent to him would not sooner become due and ready to bring suit upon. And it would be inaccurate, at least, for a court to say that the wheat lost for want of harvesting was not wheat at all, because lost and never measured. The court proceeds: "The second branch of the condition as clearly provides that, unless suit is brought within one year after the occurrence of the loss, the lapse of time shall be conclusive evidence against the validity of the claim. These two limitations cannot stand together." We have quoted at some length from this case, as it differs from all of the others, in having the words "next after any claim shall occur" to construe, whereas others had the words "next after the loss," or "next after the fire." Were it necessary to the decision of the case at bar, we should hesitate long before concurring in the view that the claim does not arise from the loss of the property insured, and at the time of the loss. It would seem that, if the assured has no just and valid claim, then he never can have, and that the notice and proof required is to fix the amount he should receive in satisfaction of such claim, and to give the insurance company an opportunity to ascertain such amount, and to pay it without suit. All this work is to be done upon a claim arising from the destruction by fire of the property insured, though the claim is not yet due, and the amount not settled. All authorities agree that the object to be attained in construing a contract is to ascertain the meaning and intent of the parties, as expressed in the language used; and we should again hesitate long before holding that the parties intended to introduce two inconsistent limitations in the single sentence constituting the limitation clause of this contract of insurance. Such an improbable conclusion should not be tolerated, if it can be avoided by any reasonable construction of the language employed. And it seems to be clear enough that by the two expressions, "in one year next after any claim shall occur," and "one year next after such loss or damage shall have occurred," the parties intended to indicate one and the same identical period of time. The weight of authority is not, as some courts have said, in favor of the proposition that the date from which the limitation of the time for bringing action on a contract of insurance is to run may be changed by construction. Neither is the weight of authority in favor of the proposition that such a period next after the loss or next after the fire shall mean next after the cause of action accrues. The authorities to sustain either of these propositions are comparatively few in number, and conflicting and unsatisfactory in the reasons assigned. In no kind of contracts, except contracts of insurance, have such constructions been given to similar language, or such departures from the meaning of words been tolerated. No such construction of statutes has been made. The decisions to the contrary effect are numerous, and they are consistent and convincing in their reasoning, because they merely adhere to the obvious meaning of plain and unambiguous language.

But could we hold that "next after the fire," or "next after the loss," means next after a cause of action accrues, it would not be decisive of the case at bar. The cases of fire insurance have been discussed merely as showing how far courts have gone, or refused to go, in construing the limitation clauses in policies of fire insurance. But such cases are only remotely related to the case at bar. The insurance in this case was against physical injury resulting in disability or death. The limitation clause requires that any action shall be brought "within one year from the date of the happening of the alleged injury." Even the New York courts do not hold that the injury meant is an injury to the company by the accruing of the cause of action. The case of Cooper v. United States Mut. Ben. Assn., 132 N. Y. 834, 16 L. R. A. 188, was an action on a certificate containing a limitation similar to that in the case at bar. The court says: "The accident received by Cooper did not injure the plaintiff, or give her a right of action, until death ensued. So far as he is concerned, the infliction of the wound is but the beginning, and the death is the completion, of the injury. Her suit must be commenced within one year from the date of the alleged accidental injury; in other words, within one year from the time of the injury to her, which was the death of her husband, as the result of the accident." It is admitted that it is competent for the parties to a contract of insurance to reduce the time within which an action may be brought on such contract. It seems immaterial whether such reduction is made by cutting off some years of the end of the term, or some months from the beginning, or both; neither whether such reduction of time is made directly, in express words, or by appropriating a portion of the time to other purposes, provided a reasonable time remains for bringing the suit. In the case at bar, plaintiff had more than five months in which to commence suit within the time limited after the cause of action had matured, and just eight months after the defendant company had denied its liability.

To the questions of the trial court, we answer:

1. This action was not commenced in time, and the claim of plaintiff was barred before the commencement of the action.

2. The limitation began to run at the death of the insured.

3. Judgment should be rendered for the defendant.

Grossbeck, Ch. J., concurs. Corn, J., did not sit in this case.

A petition for rehearing was subsequently filed in response to which on December 28, 1894, Conaway, J., delivered the following opinion:

No decision of the supreme court of the United States is cited in the brief of plaintiff as to the date from which the limitation of the time for bringing action runs under a policy of insurance such as the certificate sued on in this case; but, in the oral argument on the petition for a rehearing, much stress is laid by plaintiff's counsel upon the case of Steel v. Phenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn. This case has been twice before the Supreme Court of the United States,—first under the title of Thompson v. Phenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn, N. Y. 136 U. S. 287, 34 L. ed. 408. Thompson was a receiver who brought the action, and Steel, after one or two changes, succeeded to the receivership and was substituted as plaintiff in the action. The Supreme Court of the United States on this hearing declined to express any opinion upon the limitation clause of the policy, but held that the limitation was waived by the company by accepting the premium after the fire, by assuring plaintiff that no question could be made as to the loss or its payment, and that payment would be made as soon as action could be taken. On the second appeal it appears, from an unofficial report, that a judgment of the circuit court of appeals in favor of plaintiff was affirmed by an equally divided court. 88 L. ed. 1064. The effect of such an affirmation has long been settled by the Supreme Court of the United States. In such case the court hands down no opinion, and the decision is not to be considered as settling any principle. Benton v. Woolsey, 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 27, 9 L. ed. 987; Etting v. Bank of United States, 24 U. S. 11 Wheat. 59, 6 L. ed. 419. This court cannot be expected to give to such affirmation by the Supreme Court of the United States greater weight as authority than that court gives it, and that court has not yet given an opinion upon the limitation clause of the policy. But we are disposed to render to the decision of the circuit court of appeals all due respect. The case went up to the Supreme Court of the United States the last time from the circuit court of appeals, ninth circuit, McKenna and Gilbert, circuit judges, and Hawley district judge, sitting. The action was on a policy of fire insurance limiting the time for bringing action to twelve months "next after the date of the fire," and making the amount of loss or damage payable sixty days after proofs of the same made by the assured and received by the company at the office in Chicago. The majority of the court, opinion by Hawley, hold that the twelve months' limitation does not run from "the date of the fire," but from "the expiration of sixty days after the proofs of loss were furnished." 2 C. C. A. 463, 51 Fed. Rep. 719. McKenna, circuit judge, in a dissenting opinion, says: "The provision of the policy is as follows: 'It is expressly provided and mutually agreed that no suit or action . . . shall be sustainable . . . unless such suit or action shall be commenced within twelve months next after such loss shall occur.' This provision would seem to need no interpretation in other words than its own. It is so clear and direct as to baffle attempts to make it more so." It would seem that these few words more than answer all that is said in the majority opinion upon the question of limitation, and that they are, in themselves, unanswerable. In the case at bar the limitation is "one year from the happening of the alleged injury." This court is asked to say that this means one year and ninety days from the furnishing of proofs of such injury. It seems clear that this far transcends the bounds of construction. It is making a contract for the parties different from the contract which they made for themselves. The petition for a rehearing is denied.

Groesbeck, Ch. J., and Corn, J., concur.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Annie ENDERS, Appt.,

v.

William J. ENDERS et al., Exrs., etc., of William Enders, Deceased.

(164 Pa. 206.)

A contract by a grandfather to pay a certain sum to his son's wife, living apart from her husband, and a further sum to his grandson on his coming of age, if she will allow him to take the boy into his family until he is of age, and educate him, giving her the privilege of visiting the child and having him at her home whenever convenient, is not against public policy as an attempt to shift the burden of parental obligation by mere sale of the child.

(October 1, 1894.)

NOTE.—Validity of contract for transfer of parental responsibility or authority.

ENDERS v. ENDERS is decided by the court in favor of the person seeking to uphold the contract, upon the ground that the contract was not in fact one for the severance of the parental relation or the extinguishment of parental obligation. Contracts merely for a change of the child's residence have been upheld in other cases, as will be seen from the cases cited infra. But no other case has been found in which an attempt has been made to collect pecuniary consideration for consenting to such change.

Parent cannot relieve himself of his obligations.

Public policy forbids a parent to attempt to shirk his responsibility for the support, education, and training of his children, and declares void any contract having such an object. The result of declaring the contract void was formerly to permit the parent to assert his corresponding right to the custody of the child, and to regain possession of it at any time. The tendency of later cases has been, however, while giving no more countenance to the parent's efforts to divest himself of responsibility, to refuse to permit him to assert his rights, if he has tried to avoid his responsibilities, if such assertion would not comport to the best interests of the child.

A covenant by a father that he will abstain from taking and exercising any control over his children is bad, because it is against the policy of the law which holds that it is desirable that a father should exercise superintendence over his children, and that he cannot by contract deprive himself of the inherent right and duty imposed on him by nature. Swift v. Swift, 84 Beav. 266, 34 L. J. Ch. 209, 11 Jur. N. S. 148, 11 L. T. N. S. 697, 18 Week. Rep. 378, affirmed on appeal, 34 L. J. Ch. 304, 11 Jur. N. S. 458, 12 L. T. N. S. 435, 18 Week. Rep. 781; Van Sittart v. Van Sittart, 4 Kay & J. 62, 27 L. J. Ch. 222, 4 Jur. N. S. 270, affirmed in 2 De G. & J. 249, 27 L. J. Ch. 290, 4 Jur. 27 L. R. A.

N. S. 519; Walrond v. Walrond, 1 Johns. 27, 28 L. J. Ch. 97, 4 Jur. N. S. 1099.

In Hamilton v. Hector, L. R. 13 Eq. Cas. 511, 2 Moak's Notes, 308, an executed agreement between husband and wife as to the custody of the children was allowed to stand. But that case was reversed on appeal on the ground that the law of England regards a father as a person who has duties which he cannot renounce—the duties of caring for and looking to the due education of his children; although the court says that the agreement in that case, which was simply as to where the vacations of the children should be spent, was not an infringement of the rule. Hamilton v. Hector, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 705, 40 L. J. Ch. 692, 19 Week. Rep. 990.

In Westmeath's Case, Jac. 251, note, the children were returned to the possession of the father, although he had entered into a deed providing that they should remain with their mother.

The father cannot make a valid antenuptial agreement as to the religious training of his children. Re Agar-Ellis, L. R. 10 Ch. Div. 49, 48 L. J. Ch. 1, 39 L. T. N. S. 880, 27 Week. Rep. 117.

In People v. Mercen, 8 Hill, 410, 38 Am. Dec. 644, the court in considering the validity of an agreement by the father to transfer the custody of the child to its mother, says: "These [children] he holds under a duty of personal trust inalienable even to another who is sui juris a fortiori to his wife with whom he can make no contract whatever."

The care and custody of minor children is a personal trust in the father and he has no general power to dispose of them to another. State v. Baldwin, 5 N. J. Eq. 454, 45 Am. Dec. 897.

A mother is not bound by her consent that a child should live with another. State v. Clover, 16 V. J. L. 412.

A father cannot by contract other than such as are provided for by statute confer upon another irrevocably and absolutely as against himself a right to the custody of his minor child. Weir v. Marley, 6 L. R. A. 672, 99 Mo. 484.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Dauphin County in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover the amount due on a contract by which plaintiff permitted her child to reside during his minority with his grandfather for a stipulated price. Reversed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Messrs. S. J. McCarrell, Robert Snodgrass, and Ermentrout & Ruhl, for appellant:

By public policy is intended that principle of the law which holds that no subject can lawfully do that which has a tendency to be injurious to the public or against the public good, which may be termed the policy of the law, or public policy in relation to the administration of the law.

Greenhood, Public Policy.

Tested by this rule there is nothing in the contract under consideration here, which is in violation of it.

The true test to determine the validity of this contract is, whether, having regard to the parties, their relations to each other, and the circumstances attending the making as well as the terms of the contract itself, the welfare of the child was the object sought to be attained thereby, and if so, no rule of public policy is violated and it cannot, therefore, be void on that account.

When the contract was made the plaintiff was entitled to the benefits of the Act of May 4, 1855, and therefore had the right to exercise sole control over the child, receive his earnings, etc. She could have indentured him as an apprentice.

Brotzman v. Bunnell, 5 Whart. 128, 34 Am. Dec. 537.

If there were any question of consideration to support the contract involved here, the authorities to sustain the affirmative of the issue are clear and explicit.

Neal v. Gilmore, 79 Pa. 427; Burkholder's App. 105 Pa. 81.

All that the plaintiff was to do, she has done; all that she was to give she has given. So far as her agreement is concerned, it has been fully performed, and it remains but for the representatives of William Enders, who are mere volunteers, to do what on his part he covenanted to do.

The claim that contracts like this are void as against public policy, because looking to a future separation tend to encourage domestic feuds and broils, was not well taken.

Wyant v. Leshner, 28 Pa. 838; Van Dyne v. Vreeland, 11 N. J. Eq. 371; Van Dyne v. Vreeland.

A father owes a duty to nurture, support, educate, and protect his child, and the child has the right to call upon him for the discharge of this duty. These obligations and rights are imposed and conferred by the laws of nature; and public policy for the good of society will not permit or allow the father to irrevocably divest himself of or to abandon them at his mere will or pleasure. Re Scarritt, 76 Mo. 565, 43 Am. Rep. 768.

A child is not in any sense subject-matter for an irrevocable gift. The father cannot by merely giving away the child release himself from the obligation to support it, nor be deprived of the right to its custody. Chapeky v. Wood, 26 Kan. 650, 40 Am. Rep. 32.

A mere agreement to leave the child in the custody of another is void for the want of mutuality. Foulke v. People, 4 Colo. App. 519.

The custody of a child is not the subject of gift or barter. A father cannot by mere gift of his child release himself from his obligation to support it or deprive himself of the right to its custody. Such agreements are against public policy and not strictly enforceable. Washaw v. Gimble, 50 Ark. 351.

In Re Andrews, L. R. 8 Q. B. 158, 28 L. T. N. S. 353, 21 Week. Rep. 430, 4 Moak's Notes, 261, sub nom. Re Edwards, 42 L. J. Q. B. 99, it is said: "In dealing with questions of this nature, courts of chancery exercising the prerogative of the sovereign as parens patriæ, have assumed a more extensive authority than that exercised by the common-law courts, and although the court in making an order as to the custody or education of an infant, pays in general the utmost regard to the rights and wishes of the father, still in carrying out what is conceded have been the true interests of the child, an agreement which has been made by the father has been upheld. The courts of common law, however, have always declined to give effect to any mere agreement or consent on the part of the father disposing of the custody of the infant child, and have felt bound notwithstanding to enforce the right of the father when asserted.

The controversy in that case subsequently came before the chancery court and it was held that although the father can make no agreement as to the education of his child, yet his course of conduct may be such as to abandon his right, when the course will be pursued which will be most to the advantage of the child. Andrews v. Salt, L. R. 8 Ch. 622, 28 L. T. N. S. 686, 21 Week. Rep. 431.

And the same principle is recognized in Hill v. Hill, 10 Week. Rep. 400, 31 L. J. Ch. 505, 8 Jur. N. S. 609, 6 L. T. N. S. 99.

The custody cannot be irrevocably transferred. Albert v. Perry, 14 N. J. Eq. 540; People v. Lorman, 17 Abb. Pr. 395, note; Kennedy v. May, 7 L. T. N. S. 819, 11 Week. Rep. 358.

The lack of power to transfer the custody of the child was recognized in Johnson v. Terry, 34 Conn. 259; Rust v. Van Vacter, 9 W. Va. 600.

The mother's right of guardianship cannot be assigned. Cook v. Bybee, 24 Tex. 278.

The father cannot assign his guardianship. Byrne v. Love, 14 Tex. 81.

The mother cannot transfer her right of guardianship, but may be estopped by her deed to claim relief from the court, but the relief may be granted on petition of the children. Villareal v. Mellish, 2 Swanst. 537.

In State v. Richardson, 40 N. H. 272, the court expressly refused to express an opinion upon the subject.

Exceptions.

Some courts in looking at the rights of the parent rather than at his obligations have, in analogy to cases in other jurisdictions which guard the interests of the child, held that the parents' rights may be transferred.

In Ellis v. Jesup, 11 Bush, 403, it is said if the authority of the parent over his child arises from the duty he is under to maintain, protect, and educate it, it would seem that when the father had surrendered his child to a third person to discharge these natural duties for it, and such third person had actually performed them, that the authority of the father over the child would cease, and pass to the person standing in loco parentis.

In Coffee v. Black, 82 Va. 567, the court says: "A parent may emancipate his minor child or may forfeit his right by improper conduct. Why, then, may he not transfer to another this right of cusland, 13 N. J. Eq. 142; Farnum v. Bartlett, 53 Me. 570; Bently v. Terry, 59 Ga. 555, 27 Am. Rep. 899.

Messrs. Casper S. Bigler and Frederick M. Ott, for appellee:

The decisions of the English courts and those of our various state courts as well as those of the United States courts, are all in harmony in declaring the invalidity of contracts by parents seeking to exercise a chattel ownership over their offspring.

The contract alleged by the appellant is void because it is against public policy. Courts will not lend their aid to enforce the terms of transactions in which parents seek to evade the obligation of care and nurture of their offspring.

Greenhood, Pub. Pol. 806; Chapsky v. Wood, 26 Kan. 650, 40 Am. Rep. 321; State v. Baldwin, 5 N. J. Eq. 454, 45 Am. Dec. 389; State v. Clorer, 16 N. J. L. 419; People v. Mercier, 3 Hill, 408, 38 Am. Dec. 644; Westmeath's Case, in note to Lyons v. Blenkin, 1 Jac. 251; Hamilton v. Hector, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 705; Re Lewis, 88 N. C. 31; Vansittart v. Vansittart, 2 De G. & J. 249; Re Scarritt, 76 Mo. 565, 43 Am. Rep. 768; Roberts v. Hall, 1 Ont. 388; Chambers, Infants, 59; Schouler, Dom. Rel. 343; 1 Addison, Cont. 258; 17 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 873; Pollock, Contracts, 804; Johnson v. Terry, 84 Conn. 259; Torrington v. Norwich, 21 Conn. 543.

tody, which he may thus abandon or forfeit, especially when the interests of the child are not prejudiced by the assignment; and how can the court pronounce that custody which is held by a fair agreement with the parent and not injurious to the child an illegal restraint? We think that no consideration should be allowed whatever which relates to the rights of the father to the services of the child under such circumstances. The main consideration should be as to the best interests of the child."

In People v. Brown, 35 Hun, 324, the court in considering the question of returning the child to its father said: "If the subject were anything but a child it would not be averred to be the correct and legal thing to avoid the engagement because it was against public policy and against the paternal right. I do not think these cases call for such a rule." It is then decided that the interests of the child are paramount upon the question and that evidence upon that question must be admitted.

In Bonnett v. Bonnett, 61 Iowa, 199, 47 Am. Rep. 810, the court states that the weight of authority sustains the position that a parent can by agreement surrender the custody of his child so as to make the custody of him to whom he surrenders it legal. And when the parent has by contract surrendered his present legal right to the custody of the child in all controversies subsequently arising respecting its custody, the matter of primary importance is the interest and welfare of the child. To this the right of the parent must yield.

In Marshall v. Reams, 33 Fla. 499, the court says that the mother of an illegitimate child has a legal right to transfer the custody of it to another. But in that case the transfer was made just prior to the mother's death, so that it was not necessary to make the statement as broadly as it was made.

Some cases have, moreover, made a distinction between parol contracts and specialties. Thus in one New Hampshire case it is stated that the rights and duties of a father cannot be transferred permanently to another except by deed. State v. Libbey, 44 N. H. 321, 33 Am. Dec. 223.
27 L. R. A.

The question of the validity of the contract does not depend upon the circumstances whether it can be shown that the public has, in fact, suffered any detriment, but whether the contract is, in its nature, such as might have been injurious to the public.

Holladay v. Patterson, 5 Or. 177; Richardson v. Crandall, 48 N. Y. 348; Webb v. Dietrich, 7 Watts & S. 401; Chorpenning's App. 83 Pa. 815, 72 Am. Dec. 789.

The contract in question in this case is not aided by the fact that the policy of the law of Pennsylvania is favorable to the transfer of the custody of infants to strangers in certain cases, as evidenced by the statutes regulating adoption and apprenticeship. Such statutes are in derogation of the common law, and their provisions must be strictly complied with.

Com. v. Moore, 1 Ashm. 123; Respublica v. Keppels, 2 U. S. 2 Dall. 197, 1 L. ed. 347; Brown v. Barry, 3 U. S. 3 Dall. 365, 1 L. ed. 638.

The law does not recognize the rights, so called, of a parent to his offspring, as a right of property.

Com. v. Addicks, 5 Binn. 520, 2 Serg. & R. 174; Com. v. Gilkeson, 5 Clark, 80; Com. v. Nutt, 1 Browne, 143; Dumain v. Gwynne, 10 Allen, 270.

If a child is not property, there is no consideration for the sale of the child.

In State v. Barrett, 45 N. H. 118, the court held that the father could bind himself by a deed assigning the custody of his minor child, placing the decision upon the analogy of the case to those in which he is permitted to apprentice his child or place him in the custody of a tutor for education.

In Curtis v. Curtis, 5 Gray, 535, it was held that an indenture made by the mother after the death of her husband committing the custody of her child to a third person was binding on her either as a contract or as an estoppel, whether it was sufficient according to the laws of the state where made or not to legally transfer the custody of the child; but the court further remarks that if the child should object it should be obliged to regard the provisions of the indenture with greater care and ascertain its legal force and effect in the state where it was made.

In Dumain v. Gwynne, 10 Allen, 270, the court states that it is the present policy of the law of Massachusetts to regard any reasonable arrangement of a mother left in such circumstances as not to be able to care for her children, by which they will be cared for, as valid, and they refused to permit her to recover possession of children whom she had by written contract placed with a public institution for adoption. The court says: "Without holding that the rights of the parent in respect to the children are absolutely lost, we must nevertheless hold that they are subject to the rights of that other party to the contract, it having been freely and favorably made. But the rights of the corporation under it depend upon their fulfillment in good faith on their part and on the part of the person to whom they have transferred the custody of the child.

But in Re Lewis, 88 N. C. 31, it is questioned whether or not a transfer may be made in North Carolina, which would be valid, even by deed.

Right to revoke.

The effect of holding the agreement void was to give the parent the right to revoke.

An agreement as to the custody may be revoked at any time. Queen v. Barnardo, L. R. 24 Q. B. Div.

Whatever right a father has to the custody of his infant child depends upon, and grows out of the duties which he owes to that child; and the law only recognizes such right as a means of enforcing such obligation.

Com. v. Gilkeson and Dumas v. Gwynne, supra; Heinemann's App. 96 Pa. 112, 42 Am. Rep. 532.

A mother is not bound at law to maintain her minor child and is therefore not entitled to the correlative right of service.

Fairmount & A. Street Pass. R. Co. v. Stutler, 54 Pa. 375, 93 Am. Dec. 714; Burrell Twp. v. Pittsburg Guardians of the Poor, 62 Pa. 472, 1 Am. Rep. 441.

Where a claim is made against the estate of a dead man the testimony in support of the claim must be clear, distinct, positive and specific.

Heffner's Estate, 184 Pa. 436; Thompson's App. (Pa.) May 7, 1888; Graham v. Graham, 84 Pa. 475; Harbold v. Kuntz, 16 Pa. 210.

Dean, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

About the year 1868, Annie Enders, the plaintiff, was married to Emanuel Enders, son of William Enders. Two years after their marriage, a son, William J. Enders, was born to them. At that time they lived at Cornwall, Lebanon county. Two years after the birth of the son, on account of her husband's ill treatment and neglect to support her, the wife left him, and, with her child, took up her home with her father, at Berkley, in Berks county. Some months after leaving her husband, and while living with her father, on 7th November, 1872, William Enders, the father of her husband, visited her. Her boy was his only grandson, and he was desirous that he should have a better education than his mother could afford him. The subject of the boy's future was discussed between her and both grandfathers and others of the wife's family, at this visit. The grandfather Enders proposed to her, if she would permit him to take her son and educate him, the boy to make his home with him until he was of age, she to have the privilege of visiting her child when she desired, and to have him at her home whenever convenient, he would give the mother $20,000, and the boy $10,000, when he came of age. The mother consented, and thereafter the home of the boy was with his grandfather, the mother and son visiting each other frequently. About the 25th November, 1891, soon after the boy came of age, the grand-228; Reg. v. Smith, 16 Eng. L. & Eq. 221, 17 Jur. 24, 23 L. J. Q. B. 116; State v. Banks, 25 Ind. 406; Child v. Dodd, 51 Ind. 434; McGlennan v. Margowski, 90 Ind. 180; Hunt v. Hunt, 4 G. Greene, 218.

The gift of a child will not deprive a parent of the right to re-take it at any time. Dalton v. State, 6 Blackf. 357.

The mere surrender of a child to a public institution will not prevent the revocation of it at any time. Wishard v. Medaris, 34 Ind. 168.

The rule that the parent may revoke his transfer was recognized in State v. Reuff, 20 W. Va. 751; DeJarnett v. Harper, 45 Mo. App. 418.

Contract not enforced.

A mere oral gift of a child cannot be enforced. Burger v. Frakes, 67 Iowa, 460.

A contract by which a man agrees to part with his children will not be enforced in equity and it may be rescinded if the other party to the contract has not shown a disposition to comply with his contract in good faith. Beller v. Jones, 22 Ark. 92.

Children restored.

In Barlow v. Kennedy, 17 Lower Can. Jur. 268, the custody of the child was restored to the father, who being a Catholic had upon the death of his wife given the child to a Protestant, because of his own inability to support it, although the father during the four years that the child was out of his possession paid nothing for its support and was in no better circumstances at the time of making application for its return, while the other person was amply able to support it.

In Bustamento v. Analla, 1 N. M. 255, the child was at the petition of its mother discharged out of the custody of one to whom it had been given by a third person, to whom the mother had contracted to give it in consideration of the release of a debt, and of his promise to bring it up and educate it as his own, but the decision is placed more upon the ground of the breach of contract than on the invalidity of the contract.

When the time for which the agreement was to extend expires the child will be restored to its parents if its best interests so dictate. Shaw v. Nachtwey, 43 Iowa, 652.

27 L. R. A.

Right under statute.

Under the Maine statute the right of the parent could be transferred. State v. Smith, 6 Me. 462.

The New York Act of 1871 declares that every father may by deed or last will duly executed dispose of the custody and tuition of any living child or one likely to be born, during its minority, or for any less time, to any person or persons in possession or remainder. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 24 Hun, 370.

In Thomson v. Thomson, 55 How. Pr. 494, the court in considering the statute permitting the father to appoint a guardian, says the power of the father to dispose of the custody and tuition of his children during their minority is derived from the statute.

In Re Murphy, 12 How. Pr. 513, it is said the statute of guardianship declares that every father of a child may dispose of its custody and tuition during its minority or for a less time to any person; that ordinarily a deed or will is necessary for that purpose; but it is asked, Do not nine years of undisputed possession on the one part and of uninterrupted acquiescence on the other constitute as good evidence of the understanding of the parties as a written instrument?—and the agreement was held to be binding.

In Miller v. Wallace, 76 Ga. 479, it is said that it is indisputable that the father has the control of his minor child and that this can be relinquished or forfeited only in one of the modes recognized by law. But the Georgia Code, § 1793, expressly states that the control of the child may be lost by voluntary contract releasing the right to a third person. And the court says that where it is insisted that the father has relinquished his right to the custody of the child to a third person by contract the terms of the contract to have the effect of depriving him of its control should be "clear, definite, and certain."

An agreement to care for the child and the fact that it is taken when sick and nursed into health and supported properly for five years are sufficient considerations to support the contract. Bentley v. Terry, 59 Ga. 555, 27 Am. Rep. 399.

If the father releases his right, such release can-father died, but he had not paid, nor had he made any provision by will or otherwise for payment of, the $20,000 to the mother, Annie Enders. Thereupon, she brought suit against his executors. At the trial the defendants contended: (1) That the contract, even if proven, was void, because against public policy; (2) there was no sufficient consideration to support the alleged promise. The court submitted the testimony as to whether the contract was made as averred by the plaintiff to the jury, who found for the plaintiff: at the same time reserved the questions of law raised by defendants, and afterwards entered judgment in favor of defendants non obstante veredicto. From that judgment, plaintiff brings her appeal.

The court having decided the consideration was sufficient, the sole question here is whether the contract was against public policy, and therefore void. The learned judge of the court below was of opinion that it was, and refers to many cases holding that the parent cannot divest himself of the custody of his child by any agreement or contract; that, notwithstanding such agreement, his obligation as a parent remains, as well as the right of custody and guardianship. It is admitted in the opinion that none of the cases cited raise the precise question on which this case, because of its peculiar facts, turns. Public policy in the administration of the law by the court is essentially different from what may be public policy in the view of the legislature. With the legislature it may be, and often is, nothing more than expediency. The public policy which dictates the enactment of a law is determined by the wisdom of the legislature. If the legislature declared by statute that it was injurious to public interests, under any circumstances, for a parent to surrender the custody of a not be revoked without some adequate consideration. Jones v. Cleghorn, 54 Ga. 2.

Rights of third person.

As against a stranger a parent may make a third person custodian of her child. Jones v. Harmon, 27 Fla. 238.

Where a father and mother living apart have agreed to transfer the care and custody of their infant children to the grandfather of the children, in consideration that he will receive, care and provide for them, and he acts in pursuance of such agreement, the custody of the grandfather is lawful, and he may maintain an action against one who wrongfully takes them from his custody. Clark v. Bayer, 32 Ohio St. 229, 30 Am. Rep. 563.

Estoppel of parent.

Although the parent will not be permitted to relieve himself of his obligations to care for the child, yet he may estop himself from claiming its custody.

The father may permit such a state of things to arise in respect to the relation between the child and its foster parents, that he will not be permitted to reclaim the child. Pool v. Gott, 14 Law Rep. 289.

If the father has permitted a condition of things to grow up so that the child cannot be remanded to his custody without harm to her, he will not be permitted to obtain possession of her. Verver v. Ford, 37 Ark. 27.

A father who upon the death of his wife, gave his three-year-old child to its aunt, where it remained for six years, and he visited it but once a year and contributed nothing to its support, is not entitled to reclaim the child. Com. v. Dougherty, 1 Pa. Legal Gaz. 63.

A parent who agrees that his child may be brought up by another cannot, after the agreement has been acted upon for several years, rescind the agreement and recover possession of the child. Com. v. Gilkeson, 1 Phila. 194, 5 Clark, 30.

If the agreement of transfer has been acted upon to the manifest interest and welfare of the child the custody will not be restored to the father, unless he can show that a change of custody will materially promote the child's welfare. Green v. Campbell, 35 W. Va. 698; Cunningham v. Barnes, 37 W. Va. 748.

The parent by transplanting his off-spring into another family and surrendering all care of it for so long a time that its interests and affections all attach to the adopted home, may thereby seriously impair his right to have back his custody by judicial decree. In a controversy over its possession, its welfare will be the prominent consideration in 27 L. R. A.

controlling the discretion of the court. Richards v. Collins, 45 N. J. Eq. 233.

In Re Gates, 95 Cal. 461, the court says that under the circumstances of that case it would be nothing less than an act of extreme cruelty to tear the child from the only home she has ever known, even for the purpose of placing her under the care of her own mother, and it decides that since the material interests of the child will be promoted by leaving her where she is and chooses to remain, the only order that will be made is one that the child be freed from all legal restraint and left free to go to the home of her choice.

When the gift of a child has once been made and the child has been left for years in the care and custody of others, who have discharged all the obligations of support and care which naturally rest upon the parent, then whether the court will enforce the father's right to the custody of the child will depend mainly upon the question whether such custody will promote the welfare and interest of the child. If immediately after the gift reclamation is sought and the father is not what may be called an unfit person the courts will pay little attention to any mere speculations as to the probability of benefit to the child by leaving or returning it. But on the other hand when reclamation is not sought until a lapse of years when new ties have been formed and a certain current given to the child's life and thought, much attention should be paid to the probabilities of a benefit to the child from the change. Chapeky v. Wood, 26 Kan. 650, 40 Am. Rep. 321.

There may be cases when the father's contract is such as by permitting tacitly or by express agreement another to assume and discharge for many years the duties of parent to his child with the understanding that the relation was to be permanent, he cannot afterwards attempt to reclaim his child in good faith, nor without subjecting to serious hazards its interest and happiness. In such case the award of custody of the child will not be consistent with the exercise of a sound judicial discretion; but at the same time the court will not be justified in withholding from him that custody upon the ground merely that there had been a parol gift of the child, or an agreement for its adoption by another but without subsequent formation of ties under it or change of condition that would cause the resumption of the paternal authority to jeopardize the interests and happiness of the child. State v. Libbey, 44 N. H. 321, 32 Am. Dec. 223.

A verbal agreement by the father that another may have the care and custody of the child during its minority will not estop him thereafter from child during minority to a grandfather, that would be the end of discussion on that question. It has declared the parent can apprentice his child; can, by certain proceedings in court, permit its adoption by another; and that it can take away, for misconduct, the right of testamentary guardianship. But, in the absence of any statute forbidding such a contract as the jury have here found, we must find as a fact that such contracts have a tendency to injure the public, or are against the public good; or, as is said in Burke v. Child, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 448, 22 L. ed. 624, a contract, to be void on this ground, "must be inconsistent with sound policy and good morals as to the consideration or thing to be done." If by well-settled judicial precedent the law has determined that such a contract as this tends to the injury of the public, or is inconsistent with sound morality, we would feel bound to follow the law thus declared, without regard to our own notions of the tendency of the contract. As to what the contract was here, that has been definitely settled by the verdict on a full and impartial submission of the evidence. It is precisely the contract averred by plaintiff. Many of the cases cited by appellee bear on some features of evidence adduced in denial of this contract, which the jury found as a fact to have been made. It does not help us, in the determination of the question, to allege the wife maliciously deserted her husband and child, and had no marital right, as against her husband, to its custody. Whatever may be the law applicable to such a state of facts, they are not the facts here. She had the custody when the grandfather made the promise, and he conceded her right to and authority over it. This is a necessary inference from the verdict.

We cannot find in the cases cited that a contract such as this one has ever been declared void as against public policy, nor is the claiming that custody. Brooke v. Logan, 119 Ind. 183.

The rule that the custody of the child will not be restored to a parent who has given it away, when the affections of the child have become fixed in its new home, does not apply when the child has been placed in the custody of a public charitable corporation. Lovell v. House of Good Shepherd, 9 Wash. 419.

Child's welfare will be regarded.

In Lyons v. Blenkin, 1 Jac. 287, it is said: "If when a child is young I give her a considerable maintenance during her infancy, which you could not have supplied and a large fortune afterwards, and you the father permit her to derive advantage of that education which could not have been afforded but through my gift, could you afterwards stop short and say that she could no longer have the advantage? Under such circumstances, the court would inquire what was most for her benefit."

In McKenzie v. State, 80 Ind. 547, the court says that upon the question whether or not the parent is a proper person to resume the control of the infant, inquiries may properly be made as to what apparently is for the best interests of the child.

In Sturtevant v. State, 15 Neb. 459, 8 Am. Rep. 249, in which there appeared to be nothing more than mere acquiescence of the father to the taking of the child by its grandparents, the court ruled that the best interests of the child alone will be considered in determining the question of its custody.

If the father has placed his children or permitted them to be placed in the custody of another, they will not be restored to him unless he shows that he is a fit person to care for them. People v. Erbert, 17 Abb. Pr. 306; Re Leeshier, 17 Abb. Pr. 395, note.

The cardinal point is to regard the welfare of the infant. Jones v. Darnall, 103 Ind. 569, 58 Am. Rep. 545.

Although the agreement of the father surrendering the custody of his child to another is not absolute and irrevocable, yet if a contest arises over it in the courts all considerations will be subordinated to the interest and welfare of the child viewed in the light of the character and habits of the contending parties, the facts whether the reclamation is sought within a short time or after the lapse of years, and the other circumstances of the particular case. People v. Porter, 29 Ill. App. 190.

The courts will not always aid the father in revoking his consent and retaking the custody of the child. In such cases the child's welfare is the cardinal point of inquiry. Washaw v. Gimble, 50 Ark. 351.

The interests of the child will be consulted. Merritt v. Swimley, 83 Va. 438; Sheers v. Stein, 5 L. R. A. 781, 75 Wis. 44; Drumb v. Keen, 47 Iowa, 435; Com. v. Barney, 4 Brewst. (Pa.) 408; Com. v. Ashton, 8 W. N. C. 563, 22 Alb. L. J. 183.

The interests of the child may control the rights of the parent. Hoxzie v. Potter, 16 R. L. 374.

Effects of child's choice.

The choice of the infant, if of sufficient age, should control the question. Ellis v. Jesup, 11 Bush, 408.

Child may enforce contract.

After the child has been permitted to grow up in a family of a third person as his son, such person cannot raise the objection that the agreement was not binding because he could not have enforced it against the child's father for the purpose of avoiding his liability under the contract to provide for the child as his son. Van Dyne v. Vreeland, 11 N. J. Eq. 370, affirmed, Van Dyne v. Vreeland, 12 N. J. Eq. 142.

A sealed contract by which a mother agrees to relinquish her child to a third person, who on his part agrees to adopt her, is after the mother and child have performed their part of the contract enforceable by the child or its heirs against such third person. Healey v. Simpson, 113 Mo. 340. In that case the court says, the surrender by the mother of all control of the child and the services and companionship of the latter constitute valuable considerations for the promise of adoption.

Agreement as to residence of child.

In Allen v. Affleck, 64 How. Pr. 380, upon an agreement for a separation between the father and mother, the child was placed in her custody at the expense of the father, with permission to him to visit it at stated times. The court said: "I see nothing in this agreement that is against public policy. So far from indicating an intention on the part of the husband to abandon his paternal duties, its provisions are carefully drawn to secure, so far as was compatible under the unhappy circumstances of a separation like this, that intercourse between parent and child which is essential to the paternal influence; and also the exercise on his part of that care and watchfulness in the event of sickness which grows out of paternal anxiety and his duty as a parent."

H. P. P.

principle announced in any case holding the contract void applicable to these somewhat peculiar facts.

At the time the contract was made the child was about two years old. The mother was living with it at her father's, apart from her husband. She and the child were dependent on the bounty of her father, who was in moderate circumstances. Obviously, whether this situation was brought about by marital discord or the father's viciousness, the future welfare of the helpless child was in peril. A deserted or deserting wife, without means, cannot give much of advantage in the way of education and comfort to the child. The grandfather, conscious of this, and being of ample fortune, with a view to his grandson's future and the gratification of his own family pride and affection, proposed to take the boy, give him a home, and educate him. While no severance of the maternal relation was contemplated, a personal separation was involved. By the arrangement, the grandfather secured the constant companionship of the boy, and the mother relinquished it. No parental duty or obligation on the part of the mother was cast off, nor was there any such intention. Nor was the arrangement prompted by self-seeking on the part of the mother. The proposition was made by the grandfather, and she, out of regard for the advantage accruing to the child, reluctantly consented. The grandfather did all he agreed to do. The grandson received all the advantages expected by the mother. She suffered the deprivation of his constant society for 19 years. The grandfather enjoyed the presence of his grandson. Without alienation in affection, the mother relinquished the benefit of his personal service and the comfort derived from a son's personal attention. For this she was to receive $20,000 when the son came of age. She has a right to recover it, unless the contract was against public policy. We concede the authorities establish that the contract of a parent, by which he bargains away for a consideration the custody of his child to a stranger, he attempting to relieve himself from all paternal obligation and place the burden on another, who is to shoulder it, without natural affection or moral obligation to prompt to the performance of parental duty, but only because of a bargain, is void as against public policy. Such a contract would be the mere sale of the child for money. But this was a family compact. The pride of the grandfather centered on the child as his only living male descendant, in whose future there was promise. He was called by his name, and without question, both in blood and affection, he stood near to him. Nor was his relation to the child wholly without legal responsibility. In the case of poverty on the part of one and ability on the part of the other, by the Act of 1886 there was a legal liability on the part of each to support the other. These are the circumstances under which this contract was made. We concede that because the event showed this contract did promote the child's welfare, that is not sufficient to warrant us in saying the contract was not against public policy. The particular instance does not determine public policy, but only the probable or natural tendency of such contracts. But we are clearly of the opinion that the tendency of such contracts between grandparents of good character and ample estate and parents in reduced circumstances, where parental solicitude and affection are not to be extinguished, and where the welfare of the child is intended to be promoted, is neither to the injury of the public nor to good morals. In Van Dyne v. Vreeland, 11 N. J. Eq. 871, and Hill v. Gomme, 1 Beav. 541, the contract of the parents was decided not to be against public policy, although made with strangers to the blood, because of the special facts, and on the ground that the contract was for the welfare of the child. In Neal v. Gilmore, 79 Pa. 427, the contract was made by the father, who was intemperate, he relinquishing the custody of his two boys, respectively two and six years of age, to a childless couple, relatives of his, until the children were of age. It was held that, if the contract had been proven, there was sufficient consideration to support and enforce it, but that the proof was not sufficient to establish the contract. The point was not even made that such a contract was against public policy. The payment to be made the mother was, by the contract, fixed at the majority of the child, but there never was a time during its existence that the law would have declared it void as against public policy, because it contemplated no severance of the parental relation, no extinguishment of parental solicitude, and was wholly for the welfare of the child. Such custody as was necessary to gratify the pride and affection of the grandfather, and further the boy's education, was relinquished; a custody not unlike that which she would have surrendered had she placed him in a boarding school for several years.

27 L. R. A.

As we see nothing in this contract which should prevent its enforcement, the judgment of the court below is reversed, and judgment is now entered on the verdict for plaintiff.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

CENTRAL R. CO., App't.,

v.

ELIAS BREWER.

(.....Md.....)

1. A corporation is not responsible for unauthorized and unlawful acts of its officers, though done colore officii.
2. The superintendent of a street railway company has no implied authority to cause the arrest of a passenger for placing in the fare box a counterfeit coin in payment of fare, so as to make the company liable for false imprisonment in case of such arrest without proof of precedent authority or subsequent ratification of his act.
3. Ratification of the act of a street railway superintendent in arresting a passenger for putting counterfeit coin in the box for his fare is not shown by the fact that the president of the company, the superintendent and the driver of the street-car gave evidence against the person arrested.
4. A person acting upon appearances in making a criminal charge is justified, if the apparent facts are such as to lead a discreet and prudent person to believe that a crime has been committed by the party charged, although it turns out that he was innocent.

(January 12, 1894.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Baltimore City Court in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for alleged malicious prosecution and false imprisonment. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. T. Wallis Blackistone and George Blackistone, for appellant:

Before the plaintiff could recover, he was bound to prove affirmatively that there was both malice and want of probable cause for the arrest.

Even if there had been the most express malice, want of probable cause could not be inferred from it.

Boyd v. Cross, 35 Md. 196; Thelin v. Dorsey, 69 Md. 544.

It must be affirmatively proved.

Wheeler v. Nesbitt, 65 U. S. 24 How. 550, 16 L. ed. 769.

It is wholly immaterial whether the party was guilty or not, if the facts known to the defendant were such as would warrant a cautious man in believing him guilty. It is a question of bona fides, and reasonableness of suspicion or belief and not one of guilt or innocence.

Thelin v. Dorsey, supra.

Before putting the criminal law in motion a party has a right to judge for himself from appearances, whether there is probable cause.

Newell, Malicious Prosecution, p. 268.

NOTE.—In connection with the above case as to false imprisonment by act of a servant or agent, see note to Mulligan v. New York & E. R. Co. (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 791, also Gillingham v. Ohio River R. Co. (W. Va.) 14 L. R. A. 798, and Palmer v. Manhattan R. Co. (N. Y.) 16 L. R. A. 128, 27 L. R. A.

It is the duty of the court where the facts are disputed to submit the evidence to the jury with instructions to determine its credibility and that the facts amount to probable cause or that they do not.

Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Watson, 87 Kan. 778; Bell v. Matthews, Id. 686.

It is error to leave to the jury to determine whether the facts do or do not establish want of probable cause.

Emerson v. Skaggs, 53 Cal. 246.

If there be not affirmative proof of both malice and want of probable cause, it is the duty of the court to take the case away from the jury.

Wheeler v. Nesbitt, supra; Hooper v. Vernon, 74 Md. 188; Thelin v. Dorsey, supra; Johns v. Marsh, 52 Md. 825.

Even, although Hopps acted without probable cause, still the corporation is not liable, because there is no evidence in the record that the company ever ratified or adopted his acts in reference to the arrest.

Vanderbilt v. Richmond Turnp. Co. 2 N. Y. 480, 51 Am. Dec. 315; Boyd v. Cross, 35 Md. 196; Carter v. House Mach. Co. 51 Md. 297, 34 Am. Rep. 811; Allen v. London & S. W. R. Co. L. R. 6 Q. B. 65.

Messrs. Alfred S. Niles and Oscar Wolff, for appellees:

A corporation may be liable for malicious prosecution.

Carter v. House Mach. Co. 51 Md. 290, 34 Am. Rep. 811; Newell, Malicious Prosecution, p. 381.

Nor is it necessary, in order to make a corporation liable in an action of this kind, to prove that the act was strictly within its corporate powers.

2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. § 726.

To hold that a corporation cannot be held liable for a wrongful act, unless it be authorized or ratified by the stockholders or directors in meeting assembled, would be practically absolving a corporation from all liability, and thus nullifying the law, which says that such liability may exist.

Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Richmond, 4 L. R. A. 280, 78 Tex. 568; Fogg v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 148 Mass. 518.

The officers were acting in the line of their duties, as officers of the company, with sole regard for the interests of the company and without any private end of their own. This is the test which fixes upon a corporation liability for acts done even by its meanest and most subordinate employé.

Lynch v. Metropolitan Eleo. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 77, 43 Am. Rep. 141; 2 Spelling, Priv. Corp. § 941, note; Newell, Malicious Prosecution, p. 388, § 20; Ricord v. Central Pac. R. Co. 15 Nev. 167; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. James, 78 Tex. 12, 28; Birmingham Water Works Co. v. Hubbard, 85 Ala. 179; Potulni v. Saunders, 87 Minn. 517; Garretzen v. Duencel, 50 Mo. 104, 11 Am. Rep. 405.

A ratification need not be in words, but may be implied from conduct or acquiescence.

Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. § 481.

Probable cause is defined as "circumstances connected with the transaction out of which the prosecution arose, known to the defendant, which would induce a reasonable, dispassionate man to believe the plaintiff guilty of the crime with which he was charged, and to induce such a man to have undertaken such a prosecution from public motives."

Cooper v. Uitterbach, 87 Md. 285; McWilliams v. Hoban, 42 Md. 60; Thelin v. Dorsey, 59 Md. 540.

The man must be a cautious one; and the conclusion such as "a discreet, careful man would readily adopt."

Johns v. Marsh, 52 Md. 396.

Mere belief is not sufficient.

Ibid.

When the prosecution is for a crime there must be probable cause for belief in the felonious intent.

McWilliams v. Hoban, 42 Md. 64; Flickinger v. Wagner, 46 Md. 601.

Malice may be inferred from a want of probable cause.

Johns v. Marsh, supra; Straus v. Young, 86 Md. 255.

Malice can be inferred by the conduct, zeal, and activity of a party.

Straus v. Young, supra; Turner v. Walker, 3 Gill & J. 887, 22 Am. Dec. 329.

Roberts, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for malicious prosecution and for false arrest, whereby the plaintiff seeks the recovery of damages of the defendant company, a body corporate of the state of Maryland.

The declaration alleges that the defendant falsely, maliciously, and without probable cause whatsoever caused the plaintiff to be arrested upon a writ issued by a commissioner of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Maryland, upon the charge of passing counterfeit money, knowing the same to be false and counterfeit, and with intent to defraud, whereupon the commissioner required the plaintiff to give bail for his appearance before him the day following for a hearing, when said charge was dismissed and the appellee discharged. In the second count it is alleged that the defendant assaulted the plaintiff and gave him into custody of a police officer upon a false charge, and required him to go before the said commissioner and give bail for his appearance, etc.

To this declaration the defendant pleaded that it did not commit the wrongs alleged.

The facts are, that the defendant was engaged in running cars upon certain streets of the city of Baltimore for the conveyance of passengers.

The plaintiff boarded one of the cars of the defendant at the corner of Druid Hill avenue and Biddle street, and before taking his seat dropped into the fare box, which was of the Slawson patent, a coin resembling a five cent piece or nickel. When the car had proceeded nearly the distance of a short block the driver of the car called the plaintiff to him and told him that he dropped a lead nickel in the box, and requested him to redeem it. The driver pointed out to the plaintiff the particular coin, which was lying on the glass shelf of the box, which is an inclined glass plate held in such position that the coins which are dropped into the box fall upon the upper surface of the inclined plane of the glass shelf. This glass shelf is intended to give to the driver a careful scrutiny of the coins deposited for fares before the same are dropped into the lower part of the box. The testimony conclusively shows that the nickel in question was deposited in the box by the plaintiff. It is equally clear that the coin so deposited was a leaden nickel or counterfeit coin of the United States. And notwithstanding the driver told the plaintiff that he must redeem the counterfeit coin, and that he could not deliver the same to him, as a driver had no right to open the box, but that he could obtain the same at any time by calling at the office of the company, the plaintiff continued in the car and passed the office of the company without paying further attention to the matter.

Immediately thereafter three of the employees of the defendant, the driver of the car in question, the treasurer, and also the superintendent, followed the car in which the plaintiff was a short distance and after the plaintiff had left it, the superintendent approached him and said, "You put a piece of counterfeit money in the box, and I would like you to make it good," but the plaintiff declined doing so, and said there was nothing the matter with the nickel, only a piece out of the corner of it. The plaintiff was then taken before the United States commissioner, where the charge of passing a counterfeit coin was made, the superintendent making the affidavit. The commissioner held the plaintiff under bail for his appearance on the day following, and detained him for about two hours, until bail was furnished. On the day following the making of the charge, the case was heard by the commissioner, and the plaintiff discharged.

At the trial below there were two exceptions taken. One, relating to the court's action on the prayers, and the other to the admissibility of certain testimony. The liability of corporations aggregate for torts committed by them, through their agents, has, in recent years, received a good deal of attention from the courts. It may indeed be said that the question of corporate liability for torts has been in a progressive stage but, step by step, have the limits of such liability been enlarged and extended, until now there is but little difference between corporate liability and individual liability with respect to torts.

In consequence, however, of the fact that a corporation must of necessity act through its agents, courts have almost invariably held that to hold a corporation liable for a tortious act committed by its agents the act must be done by its express precedent authority, or ratified and adopted by the corporation. Nor is a corporation responsible for unauthorized and unlawful acts, even of its officers, though done colore officii. To fix the liability it must either appear that the officers were expressly authorized to do the act or that it was done bona fide, in pursuance of a general authority in relation to the subject of it, or that the act was adopted or ratified by the corporation. Ang. & A. Priv. Corp. 10th. ed. 811; Carter v. Howe Mach. Co. 51 Md. 296, 34 Am. Rep. 811.

When the plaintiff was arrested and held to bail in the manner already stated, the affidavit was made by the superintendent of the defendant. It is asserted in the brief of the appellee that the president of the defendant was also present at that time; we fail, however, to discover the fact in the record. But in our view of the case it is immaterial whether he was or was not. The president was but the agent of the defendant, as were the other officers and employes. There is nothing in the record which directly or indirectly tends to show that the superintendent was acting in pursuance of express authority from the defendant (51 Md. 298) in causing the arrest of the plaintiff, nor had he any implied authority for so doing, arising out of the scope of his employment, so far at least as the testimony in the record discloses. The fact that he had general authority to look after and manage the affairs of the defendant in running its cars on the streets of Baltimore city for the carriage of passengers in no manner suggests that he had, unless expressly authorized so to do by his principal, any authority to arrest a passenger for placing in the fare box a leaden nickel in payment of his fare. He may have a general authority to look after and protect the property of the defendant, and he may possess all the powers properly pertaining to such employment, and yet he would not be empowered to invoke the aid of the criminal law on behalf of his company, unless he had express precedent authority. And if this be true of the superintendent, it is equally true of the other agents and employes of the defendant. As to the subsequent ratification or adoption by the defendant, the testimony is very meagre and inconclusive. At the hearing of the charge the president, the superintendent, and the driver testified, and the impression made upon the mind of the commissioner is described by him in his testimony, when he says, "there was nothing in the conduct or manner of the officers or employes of the railway company before him to indicate that they wanted to do anything more than tell the facts which were within their knowledge, and which appertained to their examination."

The fact that the president, superintendent, and driver testified before the commissioner afford no legally sufficient evidence of ratification or adoption, for if they were without authority in causing the arrest, the subsequent testimony given for the government by them, or the manner in which they demeaned themselves in delivering their testimony in no way supports the theory of adoption or ratification. Tolchester Beach Imp. Co. v. Steinmeier, 72 Md. 820, 8 L. R. A. 846. There was not we think any legally sufficient evidence given at the trial below from which the jury could have properly inferred either express precedent authority to justify the agents of the defendant in causing the arrest of the plaintiff, nor was there any legal evidence which establishes the adoption or ratification by the defendant of the acts of its agents.

It was certainly not within any of the usual objects or powers of the defendant company to prosecute offenders against the criminal laws of the United States, and it has not been contended that any such powers ever were specially conferred on the defendant.

While courts of some of the states have held corporations to a strict liability in actions of like character with the one now under consideration, we are following the doctrine which we think this court has correctly announced in the case of Carter v. Howe Mach. Co. 51 Md. 290, 34 Am. Rep. 811.

To hold differently would, we think, be opening wide the door to a class of cases which courts do not look upon with favor. Public justice has its claims, as well as the individual citizen, and it is no part of the privilege of the latter, that he can, with impunity, ignore the reasonable demands of the former.

We do not, however, sanction the idea that the rights and liberties of the citizen can be trifled with, and unfounded charges preferred, without holding the accuser to a just responsibility. And when corporations authorize their agents to maliciously commit wrongs against the citizen, or ratify or adopt such acts when done, they should be held responsible therefor. The right and the duty of the citizen are reciprocal. He should conduct himself in such manner as not to excite a well-founded suspicion that he is a wrong-doer; if he does not, he has no just cause to complain of the consequences. Carl v. Ayers, 53 N. Y. 14. This case now under consideration illustrates our meaning. If the plaintiff, when charged with passing a counterfeit coin with intent to defraud, had exercised a reasonable degree of prudence, which he could have done by dropping a good coin into the box for the bad one, or by going a few steps to the office of defendant, which he was then nearing, and about to pass, and redeemed the bad coin, there could have been no possible cause for trouble, but he declined to do either. Having paid no fare for the ride which he took, he quietly walks off, ignoring the obligation he was under to the defendant to pay his fare, and paying no attention to the complaint of the driver, that he had dropped a leaden nickel in the fare box. We take it to be very clear from the testimony as already stated in this opinion, that the plaintiff did deposit the leaden nickel in the box, and that it was a counterfeit coin. The plaintiff himself has not sought to disprove either fact. Under these circumstances he should have pursued a different course, if he desired to relieve himself from the consequences which reasonably followed. He had ample time to consider and determine upon the course which he thought proper to pursue, and we think he acted in such a manner to, at least, justify the agents of the defendant in believing that, even though he may have unintentionally deposited a bad coin in the box, he was afterwards willing to avail himself of his position, and apply the counterfeit nickel to the payment of his fare. He failed to better his position when he subsequently, at the instance of the commissioner, gave a good nickel to the president of the defendant. The agents of the defendant were unskilled in the refinements of the law, and we think in what they did they acted bona fide, and with reasonable and probable cause for their conduct. The plaintiff by his course excited suspicion, and invited the charge, and thus brought upon himself the unpleasant consequences that followed, which, we think, could have been averted, by a reasonable regard for the duty incumbent upon him, under the circumstances. Wilmarth v. Mountford, 4 Wash. C. C. 79.

In this case we have failed to discover by implication or otherwise the slightest degree of malice. None could be inferred from the want of probable cause, because its absence has not been shown. The plaintiff in his testimony, speaking of the agents of the defendant, said, "that he knew of no reason why they should have had any feeling against him and he really had no right to think that they had." The question of the presence or absence of probable cause for a criminal prosecution does not depend upon the guilt or innocence of the accused, or upon the fact whether or not a crime has been committed. Baldwin v. Weed, 17 Wend. 224; Bacon v. Towne, 4 Cush. 218. And if a person act upon appearances in making a criminal charge, and the apparent facts are such as to lead a discreet and prudent person to believe that a crime has been committed by the party charged, although it turns out that he was deceived, and the party accused was innocent, yet he will be justified. Carl v. Ayers, supra.

The well-settled doctrine is, that an agent has implied authority to do only such acts as relate to his own particular duties. This theoretical principle is easily enough expressed and comprehended, but it is just here that the greatest difficulties arise in defining the extent of the principal's liability. The decided cases which illustrate this view are numerous and we will refer to some of them as explanatory of the doctrines maintained in this opinion, and which we think correctly state the law. In the case of Roe v. Birkenhead, L. & C. Junction R. Co., 7 Exch. 86, it appears, "that a passenger being desirous of going by an excursion train from Monks Ferry (the defendant's station) to Bangor and back, inquired of the clerk at the former station by what train he could return. The clerk informed him that his ticket would be available by evening train from Bangor; the plaintiff accordingly obtained an excursion ticket and returned by the train mentioned by the clerk. On arriving at the platform near to the Chester Station, a railway servant, who had charge of the train, upon receiving the plaintiff's ticket, told him that he had come by the wrong train, and that he must pay 2s. 6d. more. This the plaintiff refused to pay, and he was therefore taken into custody by a railway servant, under the direction of a superintendent, but, after having been a short time in custody, he paid the money under protest and was released. It appeared that the Chester Station was occupied by the defendant company and by several other railway companies; but one of the witnesses stated that he believed the person who took the plaintiff into custody to be one of the servants of the defendant's company. The plaintiff's attorney having written to the secretary of the defendant's company for compensation received a written answer from him requesting that he might be furnished with the date of the transaction and promising to make the necessary inquiries. The secretary also stated that it was an awkward business, and that the blame would fall upon the clerk at the station who had given the false information, and he also offered to repay to the plaintiff the sum of 2s. 6d. he had been compelled to pay. Held in an action against the defendants for the arrest, that the circumstances of the case did not afford any evidence that the arrest had been made by the authority, either express or implied, given by the company, or that they had ratified the act." In the case of Eastern Counties R. Co. v. Broom, 6 Exch. 814, it appeared that the plaintiff, a passenger on the cars of the company, when demanded to deliver up his ticket to the collector refused so to do; he was requested to quit the carriage which he also refused to do, whereupon he was, with necessary force only, removed. A servant of the company then took the plaintiff before a magistrate for an alleged breach of one of the company's by-laws. The attorney for the company attended before the magistrate to conduct the charge, which the court held was no evidence that the company ratified the act of their servant. In the case of Mait v. Lord, 39 N. Y. 881, 100 Am. Dec. 448, the question was, whether a merchant, by employing a clerk to sell goods for him in his absence, or a superintendent to take the general charge and management of his business at a particular store, thereby confers authority upon such clerk or superintendent to arrest, detain, and search any one suspected of having stolen and secreted about his person any of the goods kept in such store? The court says: "In examining this question, it must be assumed that, by the employment, the master confers upon the servant the right to do all necessary and proper acts for the protection and preservation of his property, to protect it from thieves and marauders; and that the servant owes the duty so to protect it, to his employer. But this does not include the power in question. It cannot be presumed that a master, by entrusting his servant with his property and conferring power upon him to transact his business, thereby authorizes him to do any act for its protection, that he could not lawfully do himself if present. The master would not, if present, be justified in arresting, detaining and searching a person upon suspicion, however strong, of having stolen his goods and secreted them upon his person. The authority of the defendants to the superintendent could not, therefore, be implied from his employment. The act was not done in the business of the defendants, and they were not, as masters, responsible therefor."

27 L. R. A.

We do not think it necessary to pursue the inquiry further. There are many other cases closely analogous to those quoted, among which are Pressley v. Mobile & G. R. Co. 15 Fed. Rep. 199; Bank of New South Wales v. Ouston, 48 L. J. P. C. 25; Danby v. Beardsley, 43 L. T. N. S. 603; Edwards v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 5 C. P. 445; Allen v. London & S. W. R. Co. L. R. 6 Q. B. 65; Brokaw v. New Jersey R. & Transp. Co. 82 N. J. L. 328, 90 Am. Dec. 659; Vanderbilt v. Richmond Turnp. Co. 2 N. Y. 479, 51 Am. Dec. 815.

It follows from the views expressed that we are of opinion that there was no legally sufficient evidence in this cause to justify submitting the same to the jury. When all the facts, which the plaintiff's evidence conduces to prove do not show a want of probable cause, it becomes a mere question of law, which the court must decide, and it will be useless and improper to take the opinion of the jury upon it.

The defendant's first and second prayers announced the law of the case, and should have been granted. The plaintiff's first, second and third prayers ought to have been rejected.

There is no objection to the law of the fourth prayer in a proper case. We think the court below was in error in allowing the question to be asked which is contained in the first exception, for the reason that if the agents of the defendant had no authority to make the arrest, they could not by their demurrer at the hearing make the company liable when there had been no precedent authority or subsequent ratification.

The judgment below must be reversed without a new trial.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, FOURTH CIRCUIT.

Robert B. DASHIELL, Appt.,

v.

James B. M. GROSVENOR et al.

(.....U. S. App.....)

1. An injunction will not be granted against the manufacture of cannon in a navy yard of the United States for use on war vessels, on the ground of infringement of a patent, even if the United States is not made a party to the action.

2. A bill in equity charging actual fraud as the ground of relief will not justify a decree on another ground if the fraud is not proven.

(February 5, 1895.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Maryland, in favor of complainants in a suit brought to enjoin the infringement of a patent and for an account of profits. Reversed.

Statement by Goff, Circuit Judge:

This is an appeal from a decree rendered in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Maryland, in the chancery cause of James B. M. Grosvenor and others against Robert B. Dashiell, by which it was adjudged that letters-patent No. 425,584, granted to Samuel Seabury, dated April 15, 1890, for improvement in breech-loading cannon, are valid, and that the same have been infringed by Robert B. Dashiell; also that said Seabury and his assigns recover from said defendant certain profits and damages, and that a perpetual injunction be issued.

NOTE.—The above case is an illustration of the rule to deny an injunction on grounds of public policy where it would interfere with public interests. See note to Williams v. Citizens R. Co. (Ind.) 51 L. R. A. 64.

27 L. R. A.

It is claimed in the bill, which was filed on the 25th of July, 1892, that Seabury was the inventor and patentee, and that he assigned certain interests in the letters-patent to his co complainants who with him then owned the entire right and title to the invention; that the defendant, well knowing the premises, has wrongfully, unlawfully, and injuriously, with intent to derive profits therefrom and to deprive complainants of the royalties to which they were entitled, conspired, combined, and confederated with William M. Folger and other persons, and infringed upon the rights of the owners of said patent, by making and using and causing and authorizing others to make and use a large number of breech-loading cannon, embodying the inventions described and claimed in and secured by said letters-patent, without any authority from said owners so to do, whereby defendant has realized large profits to the loss and injury of the patentee and his assignees; that at the time of the infringement charged the defendant was an officer of the United States navy holding the rank of ensign and was connected with the bureau of ordnance of the navy department, of which Commodore William M. Folger was then and still is in charge, having control and supervision of the manufacture thereat—under the direction of said bureau—of cannon for the use of the navy of the United States, particularly at the United States navy yard, at Washington, in the District of Columbia; that shortly after said letters-patent were issued to Seabury, he exhibited a model of the invention together with drawings relating to the same, to said Commodore Folger, at his office in the navy department at Washington, his purpose being to procure a trial of the device mentioned, and in case it proved successful, its adoption by the navy department, and that the said Folger requested him to furnish his said bureau with working drawings by which the department would be able to construct a breech-loading cannon, embodying such invention, which Seabury proceeded to do, and delivered the same to Folger; that afterwards the defendant, making use of the information and drawings so provided, which it is charged were given him by Folger for that express purpose, undertook to construct and devise a design substantially the same as that so invented by Seabury, changing the form of certain parts so as to evade the charge of infringement; that defendant, in pursuance of this purpose, did contrive a design and make drawings of the same, which he furnished to Folger, who thereupon, with the consent, co-operation and aid of defendant, proceeded to construct and make trial of a breech-loading cannon in conformity with the design of the defendant, embodying substantially the Seabury invention with immaterial changes in the detail thereof, purposely designed to evade the charge of infringement, and intended to defraud Seabury and his assigns of their rights under the said letters-patent; that a test of the same proving successful by reason of the great merit of the Seabury invention embodied therein, a large number of breech-loading cannon were constructed at said Washington navy yard, according to such design, under the procurement of defendant, and with his consent as the pretended inventor of the design as well as in pursuance of the conspiracy, combination and confederacy of said Folger, with the defendant; that a large number of such cannon are now in process of construction at said navy yard under such consent and authority and in pursuance of such conspiracy and confederacy; that such infringement was conducted by defendant and Folger in a secret manner, and was intentionally kept from the knowledge of complainants until it reached such dimensions that concealment was no longer possible; that such acts worked a great fraud on Seabury and his assigns, as they were intended to do; and that defendant will continue to make and use, and cause others to make and use breech-loading cannon under the invention secured by said letters-patent, and thereby cause irreparable injury to plaintiffs unless restrained by writ of injunction.

The prayer of the bill is that defendant may be compelled to account for and pay to plaintiffs the income and profits so unlawfully obtained, together with damages and costs, and that he be perpetually enjoined and restrained, as also his clerks, servants, employes, agents, attorneys, and all persons acting under his authority, from making and using, or causing to be made and used, breech-loading cannon embodying the Seabury invention, and for such further relief as may in the premises be just and proper.

The defendant answered denying all the charges of fraud, and particularly the allegations to the conspiracy and confederation with the chief of the bureau of ordinance of the navy department. He also denied that Seabury was the true, original and first inventor of the improvement set forth in his letters-patent. The answer admits that the defendant is a naval officer, connected with the bureau of ordnance, and that Commodore Folger is the chief of said bureau; that the defendant has been under the orders of such chief while he was engaged in the manufacture of the cannon alluded to in the bill; that in December, 1889, the defendant told Folger that he was designing a rapid-fire gun, and that he completed his plans and drawings for a model of the same in April, 1890; that in September, 1890, he was placed in charge of the "Proving Grounds," at Indian Head, in Maryland, where he has since been, but that he has had nothing to do with the manufacture or sale of the cannon alluded to, except to test them as to structural weakness, facility of operation, rapidity and precision of fire, and their efficiency and safety; that in August, 1890, he exhibited a model of his invention to Commodore Folger, who asked him to prepare working drawings for a four-inch rapid fire gun, which he did, sending them to the bureau in September, 1890; that breech loading cannon have been constructed at the navy yard at Washington, embodying an invention patented to him on the 9th day of February, 1892, but that they were manufactured under the orders, supervision and authority of Commodore Folger and the officers of said navy yard.

Other matters are set forth in the answer, but will not be referred to, as from our view of the case they are immaterial.

A great number of witnesses were examined, relative to the patents in controversy, to the state of the art to which they belong, and to the manufacturing of breech-loading cannon at the Washington navy yard, the contract relating to the use of defendant's invention, and the royalty to be paid him by the navy department for the right to use the same.

The case came on to be heard, and on the 19th day of July, 1894, a decree was entered in the court below, adjudging the Seabury patent to be valid in law; that the defendant had infringed upon the same; that complainants recover of him the profits made by him on account of such infringement; that an account be stated showing the number of breech-loading cannon made and caused by defendant to be made, embodying the invention described in the Seabury patent, and the gains and profits defendant had received from his infringement of the same, together with the damages complainants have sustained thereby; and that a perpetual injunction be issued against the defendant restraining him, his agents, clerks, servants and all persons claiming or holding under him, from making, using or selling, or in any manner disposing of, or authorizing others to make, use and sell breech-loading cannon embracing the invention or improvements described in the Seabury patent. From this decree an appeal was prayed for and allowed, the petition for the appeal and the assignments of error being filed and prosecuted by counsel acting under an order of appointment and instructions from the attorney-general of the United States, as well as by counsel for defendant below.

Mr. W. H. Stayton, with Messrs. S. F. Phillips and F. D. McKenney, for appellant:

If one inventor precede all the rest and strike out something which includes and underlies all that they produce he acquires a monopoly and subjects them to tribute; but if the advance toward the thing desired be gradual, and proceeds step by step, each is entitled to the specific form which he produces, and every other inventor is entitled to his own, so long as it differs from those of the others, and does not include theirs.

Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Sayles, 97 U. S. 554, 24 L. ed. 1053; Glacier Mountain Silver Min. Co. v. Willis, 127 U. S. 478, 32 L. ed. 174.

The government can no more be prevented from appropriating the qualities of such inventions in order to serve its necessities than the owners can be prevented from obtaining their money value as estimated upon a fair quantum valebat. Appropriation of such things by the government implies a willingness upon its part to compensate. And the court of claims is open to an ascertainment of the value and a judgment accordingly.

See United States v. Great Falls Mfg. Co. 112 U. S. 645, 28 L. ed. 846.

The question is, Can the government be practically enjoined from making and using a patented weapon of war useful within the sphere of the operation of such patent only to themselves, and valuable to the patentee only so far as he may be compensated for such use?

If Dashiell had been guilty of the fraud charged in the bill he might have been liable in equity. And whether guilty of fraud or not, the facts there charged might have been justified against him at law. But, inasmuch as fraud is out of the way, and the "making" or "use" complained of, is by the government alone, this court is without jurisdiction.

James v. Campbell, 104 U. S. 856, 26 L. ed. 786; Hollister v. Benedict & B. Mfg. Co. 113 U. S. 59, 28 L. ed. 901; United States v. Palmer, 128 U. S. 262, 32 L. ed. 443; Berdan Fire-Arms Mfg. Co. v. United States, 26 Ct. Cl. 48; Gill v. United States, 25 Ct. Cl. 415; United States v. Great Falls Mfg. Co. supra; Johnson Railroad Signal Co. v. Union Switch & Signal Co. 55 Fed. Rep. 487; Schilling v. United States, 24 Ct. Cl. 278.

Inasmuch as no case is stated in the bill except that to which the charge of fraud relates, and inasmuch further as the latter charge has failed, the bill must be dismissed.

Tillinghast v. Champlin, 4 R. I. 178, 87 Am. Dec. 510; Eyre v. Potter, 56 U. S. 15 How. 42, 14 L. ed. 592; French v. Shoemaker, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 314, 20 L. ed. 852; Ferraby v. Hobson, 2 Phill. Ch. 255; Hilliard v. Eiffe, L. R. 7 H. L. 39; Baldwin v. Franks, 120 U. S. 678, 30 L. ed. 766; Allen v. Louisiana, 108 U. S. 80, 26 L. ed. 318.

Messrs. William A. Jenner and William G. Wilson, for appellees:

There would be no bar, but for the injunction in this suit, to prevent the defendant from manufacturing guns containing the invention or licensing others to manufacture for state militia or private parties for use, either in this 27 L. R. A.

country or abroad. The defendant stands on a claim of right. He asserts property in the invention, and has exercised ownership over it, in respect of selling the invention, by licensing others and causing others to make and use it, and this he claims the right to do, not merely by virtue of his own grant, but because of the alleged weakness of our own title.

The acts shown make out a clear case of infringement.

8 Robinson, Patents, § 897; Vaughn v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 2 Bann. & Ard. 537, 11 Pat. Off. Gaz. 789; Wells v. Jacurs, 1 Bann. & Ard. 60; Jennings v. Dolan, 29 Fed. Rep. 861; Nichols v. Pearce, 7 Blatchf. 5; American Cotton Tie Supply Co. v. McCready, 17 Pat. Off. Gaz. 565, 4 Bann. & Ard. 588.

That a defendant who contrives an infringement device, secures a patent for any improvement that there may be in it, and makes use of his improvement with the infringement in it by licensing others to make it and use it, and derives a profit therefrom by way of royalty on each infringing device made, is not liable to the patentee, would seem absurd.

8 Robinson, Patents, §§ 897, 910; James v. Campbell, 104 U. S. 857, 26 L. ed. 787.

The right of a patentee to sue an infringer, though the infringer may be in the service of the government, and the infringement used in such service, has never been denied.

Campbell v. James, 104 U. S. 856, 26 L. ed. 786; Hollister v. Benedict & B. Mfg. Co. 113 U. S. 59, 28 L. ed. 901; Forehand v. Porter, 15 Fed. Rep. 256; United States v. Palmer, 128 U. S. 262, 32 L. ed. 442; Solomons v. United States, 187 U. S. 842, 34 L. ed. 687; Head v. Porter, 48 Fed. Rep. 481.

Goetz, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

We think that the pleadings and proofs of this cause clearly demonstrate that this is, in substance, if not in form, a proceeding the object of which is to prevent the making of breech-loading cannon of a certain character, and by a particular device, at the navy yard of the United States, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, by those officially in charge thereof, representing the government of the United States; and also, it is clearly shown that the injunction granted by the court below will in effect prohibit the officers so in charge of said navy yard from manufacturing such cannon for use on the vessels of war of the United States, as provided for under the provisions of existing legislation, the reason for such prohibition being that, in so making breech-loading cannon, said officers are infringing on the rights granted to Samuel Seabury by letters-patent No. 435,584, dated April 15, 1890.

Should a suit instituted under such circumstances and with such intention be sustained? Do not public policy and the rights of the government in its sovereign capacity require that parties feeling themselves aggrieved on account of matters relating to such transactions as we have alluded to—to such circumstances as are set forth by the evidence taken and filed in this case should be compelled to seek relief and compensation, if so entitled, by proceeding in another manner and before another tribunal, and that the courts should not use their writs of injunction so as to retard and embarrass the government in the prosecution of work, the product of which is absolutely essential to the public welfare and the national defense? We think that the consent of the owner of a patented device, while it is desirable and should be obtained, if it conveniently and reasonably can, is not positively necessary, in order to enable the United States to use the invention described in the letters-patent, particularly in cases where it relates to the mode of construction of implements of warfare required by the government and indispensable to the armament of its vessels of war. Such right to take and use the property of the citizen for government purposes is indisputable, an inborn element of sovereign power essential to the independence and perpetuity of the nation.

The Constitution of the United States provides that congress shall have the power to raise and support armies, and to provide and maintain a navy. By virtue thereof congress has appropriated and caused to be expended large sums of money for such purposes, and for the manufacture of arms, the construction of ships of war, and the establishment of navy yards, including the one at Washington, where the breech-loading cannon mentioned in complainant's bill have been and are now being manufactured. Under recent acts of congress, millions of dollars have been expended through the navy department, in the purchase and manufacture of the armor plate and armament required for the ships of war lately constructed and now in process of building, and in the procurement and installation of the improved machinery for use in the breech-mechanism shop at said Washington navy yard, for the purpose of constructing cannon of the character referred to in the bill. It is evident from the legislation by congress on this subject, and the action of the officials of the government thereunder, that it was and is the intention of the United States to cause to be manufactured for national purposes, breech-loading cannon of the most approved and scientific design, utilizing such plans and inventions as would best secure the result desired, and making in those cases where the right to use a patented device had not been secured, just compensation to the owner thereof, in the manner usual under such circumstances. After careful investigation, involving the examination of many designs, drawings and innovations, with the aid of models and experiments, the chief of the bureau of ordnance formulated his plans, selected and adopted the devices and inventions he deemed best, and commenced the making of the breech-loading cannon, as he was authorized and directed by the congress to do, employing in connection with such work the defendant in this case. If the invention claimed by complainants is being used and infringed by those so representing the United States, then the owners of the same can recover just compensation for such use and infringement, from the government, by suit in the court of claims, or by means of an appropriation for that purpose made by congress, on application made to that body.

37 L. R. A.

The fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States contains the provision that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation, and this we must consider as an implied assertion that on making such compensation it may be so taken. It will be noted that this is not a restriction of the power to take private property for public use, but that it is a requirement that when such property is so taken just compensation shall be made therefor to the owner. That incident of sovereignty—the right to take—belonging to every independent government, is not disturbed, nor is the manner in which such right is to be exercised, or the mode by which the proper compensation is to be ascertained and paid set forth. And because congress has provided by statutes a procedure for the condemnation of private property required for public purposes in certain instances and not in others, we are not therefore to infer that the power to take does not exist as to the other matters, nor should we construe such legislation as a limitation of that power relative to other cases of like character not embraced in such enactments. In other words the non-user of a power is not to be used to disprove its existence.

The title the individual citizen has to his property is good as against all other citizens, but it must yield to the necessity of the government, and submit to the social requirements and rights of the general public—and this right of the government to protect itself and defend its own, is not to be controlled by any other power, nor is it to depend on the consent of any person, company, or corporation. The only restriction, as we have already remarked, is the constitutional requirement that just compensation shall be made to the owner for property so taken. The proper mode of proceeding in order to secure compensation for private property taken for public use without the consent of the owner, and in the absence of legal action for condemnation, has received judicial consideration, the Supreme Court of the United States having at different times plainly indicated the same, particularly in cases where the government has used an invention without the permission of the owners of the letters-patent protecting the same. Kohl v. United States, 91 U. S. 367, 374, 23 L. ed. 449, 452; James v. Campbell, 104 U. S. 365, 26 L. ed. 786; United States v. Great Falls Mfg. Co. 112 U. S. 645, 656, 28 L. ed. 846, 850; Hollister v. Benedict & B. Mfg. Co. 113 U. S. 59, 28 L. ed. 901; United States v. Palmer, 128 U. S. 262, 32 L. ed. 442. Also the following cases in the court of claims: Schillinger's Case, 24 Ct. Cl. 278, 298; Gill's Case, 25 Ct. Cl. 415; Berdan Fire-Arms Mfg. Co's Case, 26 Ct. Cl. 48.

We do not think that contending patentees, striving between themselves and those interested with them, as to the validity of their respective letters-patent, should be permitted to close the arsenals, ordnance shops and navy yards of the United States, by injunctions issuing out of their litigation, thereby frustrating the designs of the government, rendering inoperative the legislation of congress germane thereto and causing great loss of the public funds appropriated by congress in execution of the same. It is true that the United States is not made a party to this action, but it is also true that it is disclosed by the pleadings and evidence that the cannon, the further making of which it is the object of this suit to enjoin, are now being manufactured at the navy yard of the United States, at Washington, by the employees of that establishment, under the direction of the chief of ordnance of the navy department; and it is apparent that such an observance of the injunction granted by the court below, as should be shown by those to whom it is directed, and as must necessarily be required by the courts while it is of force and effect, will close said navy yard so far at least as the manufacture of breech-loading cannon is concerned and thereby prevent the enforcement of certain laws of the United States, the consummation of which is of national importance.

Independent of the questions we have been considering, there is another reason why, on the case as made in the record before us, the plaintiffs below are not entitled to a decree in their favor. Their bill of complaint as drawn, rests upon the allegations of fraud contained therein, and it must stand or fall, as the testimony establishes or fails to sustain such charges. The positive assertion of fraud permeates the entire bill—it is the warp and woof of its structure—depending on the combination, conspiracy and confederation of the defendant and William M. Folger, as chief of the bureau of ordnance, to use the invention of Seabury and deprive the patentee and his assignees of the benefits and royalties claimed to be secured to them by the letters-patent referred to. A court of equity will not grant a decree on another ground where the bill charges actual fraud as the ground of relief, and the fraud is not proven. We find that there is an utter failure to sustain the allegations of fraudulent conspiracy and confederation charged in the bill. It is shown that Commodore Folger, in his endeavor to secure the most useful and scientific plans and devices by which to construct breech-loading cannon directed by the congress to be made, the manufacture of which was committed to him—did advise with the plaintiff Seabury and did request of him his plans and drawings, and also that he did the same with the defendant, as well as with others; and also it is shown that Folger believed that the plans of the defendant were best adapted to the object desired to be secured by the government, and that he agreed to pay a certain sum for the use of the same, under the impression that the defendant was the inventor and patentee of the design so selected. But there was no intention to deprive the true owner of his right to demand and recover just compensation for the said taking and using, and it would not have availed had such intent existed, for the legal owner could have recovered even though another had by mistake or fraud been paid.

The charges of fraud have been made either under an entire misconception of the facts, or with a recklessness that at least is not commendable, and should not be encouraged by an endeavor on the part of this court to relieve the complainants of the embarrassment caused thereby, by holding that they are entitled to a decree founded on some general ground of equity jurisdiction, not specially pleaded, but supposed to be included in the prayer for general relief. While equity will always relieve those who suffer from acts of fraud, it has also always required that those who seek its jurisdiction on that account shall, after having carefully scrutinized the cause of complaint, most clearly formulate the allegations of the same, and then that they shall fully prove that which they have so alleged. We do not deem it essential to discuss this matter, elementary as it is in character, but we refer to the following cases, in which the subject is fully considered: Montesquieu v. Sandys, 18 Ves. Jr. 302; Price v. Berrington, 7 Eng. L. & Eq. 260, in which case Lord Truro says: "When the bill sets up a case of actual fraud, and makes that the ground of the prayer for relief, the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree by establishing some one or more of the facts quite independent of fraud, but which might of themselves create a case under a totally distinct head of equity, from that which would be applicable to the case of fraud originally stated." Wilde v. Gibson, 1 Clark & F. N. S. 620; Glascott v. Lang, 2 Phill. Ch. 810; Curson v. Belworthy, 22 Eng. L. & Eq. 1; Tillinghast v. Champlin, 4 R. I. 173, 67 Am. Dec. 510, in which case the court uses the following language: "In almost all these cases it will be found that the objection to relief was not that the bill did not contain allegations sufficient to afford a basis for the inferior or secondary relief upon which the plaintiff wished to fall back, but that having mingled with those allegations imputations of personal corruption or actual fraud, he had pointed his bill only to relief upon this higher ground, and must therefore succeed upon that ground or not at all." Fisher v. Boody, 1 Curt. C. C. 206 Fed. Cas. 4814; Eyre v. Potter, 56 U. S. 15 How. 43, 14 L. ed. 543, in which the Supreme Court of the United States cites with approval the case of Price v. Berrington, supra.

The decree complained of will be reversed and the case will be remanded with instructions to dismiss the bill.

Affirmed in 162 U. S. 425, 40 L. ed. 1025.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

BALTIMORE & EASTERN SHORE R.
CO., Appt.,
e.

Preston B. SPRING.

(.....Md. ....)

An unconstitutional attempt to tax the citizens of a county for the benefit of certain residents thereof is made by a statute authorizing the issue of county bonds for the benefit of an insolvent railroad company in the hands of a receiver with a provision that from the proceeds thereof proper and legal claims held by bona fide residents of the county should be first paid.

(February 23, 1895.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the Circuit Court for Talbot County, overruling a motion to dissolve an injunction which had been granted to restrain the issuance of certain county bonds. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion. Messrs. John Prentiss Poe and Joseph B. Seth, for appellant:

The subscription and the mode of paying for it are valid.

1 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 12, 154, 164, 507 A. 786; Baltimore & D. P. R. Co. v. Pumphrey, 74 Md. 86.

Messrs. Thomas B. Mackall and William H. Adkins, for appellee:

The Act of 1892, chapter 295, approved by the Act of 1894, chapter 152, is unconstitutional and void.

It is an attempt to authorize the county commissioners of Talbot county to issue bonds involving the taxation of all the taxable property of the county, in order to raise money to pay certain favored creditors of the Baltimore & Eastern Shore Railroad Company—in other words to authorize taxation for private purposes.

Courts in construing a statute look to all the terms to find the true meaning and intent of the legislature, and if the real and controlling purpose of an act is found in a proviso, and that purpose is illegal, the whole act will be declared void.

Brooks v. Hydorn, 76 Mich. 273; Baltimore v. Gill, 81 Md. 387.

The right to tax depends on the ultimate use, purpose, and object for which the fund is raised, and not on the nature or character of the person or corporation whose intermediate agency is to be used in applying it.

Coates v. Campbell, 37 Minn. 498.

The constitution of Maryland provides for two classes of taxation: (1) for the support of the government; (2) with a political view for the good government and benefit of the community.

Declaration of Rights, art. 15. See Moale v. Baltimore, 5 Md. 314, 61 Am. Dec. 276;

NOTE.—The above decision strikingly illustrates the doctrine that taxation must be for public purposes only. On this subject, see note to Daggett v. Colgan (Cal.) 14 L. R. A. 474.

27 L. R. A.

Gould v. Baltimore, 59 Md. 378; O'Neal v. Virginia & M. Bridge Co. 18 Md. 1, 79 Am. Dec. 669; Baltimore v. Green Mount Cemetery Proprs. 7 Md. 517.

To tax a citizen for private purposes is to take his property without due process of law and is, therefore, a violation of the Federal as well as of the state Constitution.

Declaration of Rights, art. 23; U. S. Const. 14th Amend.

In Van Witsen v. Gutman (Md.) 24 L. R. A. 408, the court says it is believed that no one will contend that private property can be taken for private use on any terms whatever.

Wilkinson v. Leland, 27 U. S. 2 Pet. 657, 7 L. ed. 553; New Central Coal Co. v. George's Creek Coal & Iron Co. 37 Md. 560; Cole v. La-Grange, 118 U. S. 1, 28 L. ed. 896; Citizens Sav. & Loan Assn. of Cleveland, Ohio, v. Topleka, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 455; Parkersburg v. Brown, 106 U. S. 489, 27 L. ed. 240; Talbot County Comrs. v. Queen Anne County Comrs. 50 Md. 258; Lovell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 454, 15 Am. Rep. 45; Mead v. Aclon, 189 Mass. 841; Clee v. Sanders, 74 Mich. 692; Allen v. Jay, 60 Me. 124, 11 Am. Rep. 185; Feldman v. Charleston, 23 S. C. 57, 55 Am. Rep. 6; State v. Osawakee Twp. 14 Kan. 419, 19 Am. Rep. 99; Thorndike v. Camden, 7 L. R. A. 463, 82 Me. 39; Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 159, 508, 786; Kingman v. Brockton, 11 L. R. A. 123, 153 Mass. 255.

The power conferred upon a municipal corporation to impose a burden upon taxpayers in aid of a railroad company is in derogation of the common law, and when granted must be clearly conferred, and strictly pursued. No presumptions are made in favor of such legislation.

Baltimore v. Gill, 81 Md. 395; St. Mary's Industrial School v. Brown, 45 Md. 332; Baltimore & D. P. R. Co. v. Pumphrey, 74 Md. 93.

Page, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from an order of the circuit court for Talbot county, directing a writ of injunction to be issued restraining the county commissioners of that county from issuing the bonds, mentioned in chapter 295 of the Acts of the General Assembly of 1892, and in chapter 152 of the Acts of 1894.

The bill was filed by a tax-payer and citizen of Talbot county, on behalf of himself and other citizens and tax-payers of that county. It is alleged that these "acts are unconstitutional and for other reasons invalid, null and void."

Such of the facts appearing by the record, as are requisite to be stated for the purposes of this opinion, may be thus briefly set forth.

The Baltimore & Eastern Shore Railroad Company was incorporated by the general assembly in the year 1886, for the purpose of constructing and operating a railroad through Talbot and other counties of the state of Maryland. At the same session by chapter 509, the commissioners of Talbot county were authorized to indorse the bonds of the railroad company to an amount not exceeding $50,000, after it had been sanctioned by the voters of Talbot county. Such bonds were to be secured by a mortgage which should be second to a mortgage to the city of Baltimore. This act, which authorized only an indorsement of the bonds, and not a subscription to the stock of the railroad, though voted upon favorably by the voters of Talbot county at the general election of 1887, it is conceded, became inoperative, for the purpose of authorizing the proposed indorsement, for reasons not necessary to be now stated. By the Act of 1890, chapter 158, the county commissioners of Talbot county were authorized to subscribe to the capital stock of the company to the amount of $25,000. This act, however, was not published as required by article 3, section 4, of the Constitution, and for that reason became invalid.

Soon after its incorporation in 1886, the railroad company proceeded to construct its road, and having fully completed it, operated it until the 21st of April, 1891, when having become totally insolvent, its property rights and franchises passed into the hands of a receiver, appointed by the circuit court of the United States for the district of Maryland; and since that date, under the decree of that court, all of its property and franchises have been sold to other parties. So that in 1892, when the Act of 1892, chapter 295, which will be the subject of our examination, was passed, the road was entirely constructed, and after having been operated for a short time, had experienced all the results of insolvency, up to the point of having its affairs administered by a receiver for the benefit of its creditors. From this recital it is clear that prior to 1892 there had never been any valid power conferred upon the county commissioners either to indorse the bonds of the company or subscribe to its stock; nor is it pretended that they ever undertook to exercise such power. In the agreement of parties, found in the record, it is stated that the commissioners "never passed any resolution to indorse the bonds . . . or to subscribe to the stock." The statement, therefore, contained in the preamble of the Act of 1892, chapter 295, also in the body of the act and also in the Act of 1894, chapter 152, to the effect that the authority to issue bonds was conferred for the purpose of raising money to "pay the county's subscription" to the capital stock of the railroad company, was wholly unfounded in fact. The county commissioners never did and never had the power to make such subscription. There is no question in this case, therefore, of good faith on the part of the county; no contractual element to embarrass the court in determining the strictly legal effect of the Act of 1892, chapter 295, and the confirmatory Act of 1894, chapter 152.

What, then, are the provisions of these acts? By the first section of the Act of 1892 the commissioners are authorized to issue the bonds of the county to the amount of $25,000; by the second, it is provided that they "shall sell said bonds," and, with the proceeds thereof, pay said subscription of said county to said railroad company, provided, however, that before any bonds shall be issued under this act the said railroad company . . . shall file, in the office of the county commissioners of Talbot county, an agreement in writing, authorizing the said county commissioners of Talbot county to first pay and satisfy all proper and legal claims and demands held by bona fide residents of Talbot county on the 20th day of April, in the year 1891, against said railroad company, out of the proceeds arising from the sale of said bonds, and the balance, if any, to apply under the order and direction of Joseph B. Seth, the president of said railroad company." If the claims thus provided for should prove to be in excess of $25,000 it is enacted by the third section that they shall be paid pro rata; and the receipt of persons holding such claims and of the president of the company, in the event of any balance remaining after the payment of the claims, shall be good against the railroad and all others claiming under it, and by the fourth section a "committee" of three are appointed with "full power and authority" to determine the amount of each claim and who are entitled to be paid, and their decision is to be final and without appeal.

To comprehend these provisions thoroughly it must be borne in mind that the railroad company at the date of the passage of the act had fully constructed its road. It had also become insolvent, and on the day after the date mentioned in the act, that is on the 21st of April, 1891, it had passed into the hands of a receiver. No doubt it had many creditors. In Talbot county there were claims exceeding in the aggregate the entire amount of the proposed subscription, and the record shows, there was a bonded debt of $1,600,000, secured by a mortgage upon all the property of the company. Subsequent events have shown that its insolvency was hopeless; such as could only terminate as it did, in a sale for the benefit of its mortgage creditors. Under these circumstances, it was plain, there was little probability that these creditors in Talbot county, unsecured as they were, could ever hope to have their claims paid in the ordinary way. Now, as was said by this court in Baltimore v. Gill, 81 Md. 387: "We must not forget that we are dealing with the substance, not with form. It is the thing done or sought to be accomplished which must determine the question of the power."

The purpose of this act was not to aid in the construction of the road, because the road was then completed; nor even to pay debts incurred in the construction, for the beneficiaries of the act were all those who being residents of Talbot county held "proper and legal claims" against the company, and this included all claims whether incurred by the company in constructing the road or otherwise. That the subscription was to be made to enable the county to discharge an obligation imposed upon it by the requirements of good faith, was, as we have seen, founded upon an assumption, and absolutely false. The conclusion seems to be inevitable that the effect and scope of the act is simply to levy a tax upon the property of the citizens of Talbot county, to pay to certain residents of that county the claims due to them by an insolvent railway company. This is a private purpose, and not one of the objects of taxation. By the Declaration of Rights, article 15, as well as by the fundamental maxims of a free government, taxes can only be imposed to raise money for public purposes. "Taxes are burdens or charges imposed by the legislature upon persons or property to raise money for public purposes." Cooley, Const. Lim. § 479. If it be necessary to cite authorities to maintain this thoroughly established principle, the following may be mentioned: Citizens Sav. & Loan Assn. of Cleveland, Ohio v. Topeka, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 655, 23 L. ed. 455; Cole v. LaGrange, 118 U. S. 1, 28 L. ed. 896; Cooley, Const. Lim. § 488, and authorities there cited; Lowell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 454, 15 Am. Rep. 39; Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 168, 69 Am. Dec. 759; Brodhead v. Milwaukee, 19 Wis. 652, 88 Am. Dec. 711; St. Mary's Industrial School v. Brown, 45 Md. 335.

Nor can this Act be supported under the 54th section of article 8. The object of this section was not to extend the power of taxation. It is in fact, "a limitation of power, not only of the local authority, but of legislative power itself." Pumphrey's Case, 74 Md. 111. Counties have "no inherent power of taxation." What power of taxation they exercise must be delegated to them by the legislature. The legislature, however, cannot delegate a power prohibited by the constitution. Therefore the taxing power, when exercised by the county authorities, as was said by this court in the case of Duly v. Morgan, 69 Md. 468, 1 L. R. A. 757, "is but the exercising of the taxing power of the legislature delegated to them and is subject to every constitutional limitation to which the taxing power of the legislature is subject."

St. Mary's Industrial School v. Brown, supra. Being of the opinion that the object and effect of this act, are not to subserve a public purpose but to pay certain individuals by taxing the property of the people of Talbot county for their benefit, we must pronounce the act itself unconstitutional and void.

Inasmuch as what we have said disposes of the case, we deem it unnecessary to consider the other questions raised at the argument.

Order affirmed.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Minnesota

v.
Marion F. HIGGINS.

(..... Minn. ....)

- *1. The rule that the middle name or initial is not a material part of a person's name does not apply when the first name is not given, but only its initial.
2. The second initial, "F." in the name "M. F. Higgins," is a material part of the name.
3. Where a contract is made and signed by "M. F. Higgins,"—Held, forgery may be committed by changing, with intent to defraud, the second initial, "F.," to the letter "J." in the name in the contract and in the signature to the contract, so that it reads "M. J. Higgins."

(Buck, J., dissents.)

(January 8, 1895.)

CERTIFICATION by the District Court for Faribault County for the opinion of the Supreme Court of the question as to how far altering the middle letter of a name signed to a contract would constitute forgery, after an order overruling a demurrer to the indictment. Order affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

* Headnotes by CANTY, J.

NOTE.—The above case makes a modification of the ordinary rule relating to the use of a middle initial in a name. See note to Lafin & R. Powder Co. v. Steytler (Pa.) 14 L. R. A. 690.

For the effect or necessity of a middle initial in 27 L. R. A.

See also 43 L. R. A. 654.

Messrs. H. W. Childs, Atty-Gen., George B. Edgerton, Asst. Atty-Gen., J. H. Quinn, and F. E. Putnam, for the State:

This court says "that the law does not except in special circumstances recognize a middle initial as a necessary part of a person's legal name," thereby recognizing that each case must be considered by itself.

Stewart v. Colter, 31 Minn. 345.

In questions involving title to land this court has held squarely that the middle initial is a material part of a person's name.

Ambs v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 44 Minn. 260. See also Crouse v. Murphy, 12 L. R. A. 53, 140 Pa. 335.

A great many persons transact all their business by the use of the initials of their Christian or middle name, and by such usage adopt those initials as part of their business name.

Oakley v. Pegler, 30 Neb. 628.

There are sufficient circumstances appearing on the face of this indictment to show this change to be material.

Stewart v. Colter and Ambs v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. supra.

Any change in an instrument that alters its legal effect or makes it speak in a substantial matter a different legal language, and wherein any obligation is increased, diminished, or discharged, is a forgery.

Penal Code, § 398; State v. Riels, 27 Minn. 315.

Mr. John A. Lovely for defendant.

a docket entry or index of a judgment, see note to Dewey v. Sugg (N. C.) 14 L. R. A. 393, also Davis v. Steeps (Wis.) 23 L. R. A. 318.

As to name in records generally, see note to Fincher v. Hanegan (Ark.) 24 L. R. A. 532.

Canty, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The indictment charges Marion F. Higgins with the crime of forgery. It states that on September 1, 1892, he entered into, and by the name of M. F. Higgins executed, with a certain church corporation, a contract, and sets out the contract in full, by the terms of which he agreed to build a church for a certain price, which the corporation agreed to pay him. It is further stated that on December 3, 1894, with intent to defraud, he did alter, forge, and change the contract, by removing therefrom the second initial letter, "F.," where it appears in his name in the body of the contract, and also where it appears in his signature to the contract, and substituting therefor in each place the letter "J.," "with the intent then and there to change and alter the identity of the said Marion F. Higgins, the person who signed said contract, and make the same the contract and obligation of another person, to wit, Martha Jane Higgins, who was then and there the wife of him, the said Marion F. Higgins, and whose name was intended by the said Marion F. Higgins to be indicated and made to appear upon said contract, at the time of said change and alteration, in the place and instead of that of said Marion F. Higgins." The defendant demurred to the indictment on the ground that the facts stated therein do not constitute a public offense. The demurrer was overruled, and the court below certifies to this court the question or proposition, which he states was the only one raised and argued, viz., "that to change the middle letter of the name in question did not constitute any crime, as the same was not a material part of the name, and hence could not defraud any one."

The middle name or initial is material where it appears to be material. Thus, it is material when it appears, that with the exception of the middle name or initial, two persons have each the same name, and can only be distinguished by the middle name or initial of each. It seems to us that it appears on its face that the middle letter or initial is material when only the initial of the first name is given. In the present case the first name is not given; only its initial. The name was written "M. F. Higgins" in the body of the contract and in the signature. No one would understand "M. J. Higgins" to mean the same person. In speaking of a man it is often customary, among his friends and acquaintances, to call him by his first and last name, omitting his middle name or initial. Thus "Marion F. Higgins" might well be known as "Marion Higgins." But there is no such well-understood custom when the first name is not given, but merely its initial. Thus "M. F. Higgins" would not be known as "M. Higgins." When the initials alone are given, it is not customary to drop the second initial, but it is almost invariably the custom to give both initials.

This disposes of the question certified to this court. Counsel for defendant raises other questions not thus certified, but we cannot pass upon any question not certified to us by the court below. The sufficiency of this indictment is not before us, except so far as it is affected by the question thus certified and answered.

The order overruling the demurrer is affirmed.

Buck, J., dissenting:

The defendant was indicted for forgery in the second degree. On the 1st day of December, 1892, the defendant entered into a written contract with the Salem Congregation of the Evangelic Association, a church corporation of the village of Wells, in the county of Faribault and state of Minnesota, and by the terms of the contract the defendant was to construct a church house, and complete the same for said church association, on or before the 1st day of November, 1892, time being the essence of the contract, and for which the defendant was to be paid the sum of $1,790. The contract was signed on behalf of the church corporation by the president and secretary of its building committee and by the defendant as "M. F. Higgins." The forgery charged in the indictment is that the defendant did "fraudulently and feloniously alter, forge, and change the said contract, by then and there removing the letter 'F.' where it first appears in said contract, immediately before the word 'Higgins,' and substituting therefor the letter 'J.,' with the intent then and there to change and alter the identity of the said Marion F. Higgins, the person who signed said contract, and make the same the contract and obligation of another person, to wit, Martha Jane Higgins, who was then and there the wife of him, the said Marion F. Higgins, and whose name was intended by the said Marion F. Higgins to be indicated and made to appear upon said contract at the time of said change and alteration in the place and instead of that of Marion F. Higgins." In the indictment preceding the foregoing quotation the defendant is referred to as Marion F. Higgins, although there is no allegation that Marion F. Higgins is his true name. Upon being arraigned in open court at a general term thereof held in and for the county of Faribault, in the month of January, 1894, the defendant interposed a demurrer to the indictment, upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense. The court overruled the demurrer, and, deeming the question raised by the demurrer to be so important and doubtful as to require the decision of the supreme court upon it, did, at the request of the defendant, certify and make report to the supreme court of the question raised by the demurrer, for the purpose of obtaining such decision of this court upon the question raised by the demurrer. In the certificate of the court below it is stated that the principal and only objection made to the indictment on the hearing of the demurrer was "that to change the middle letter of the name in question did not constitute any crime, as the same was not a material part of the name, and hence could not defraud any one." It is claimed on the part of the state that the alteration and substitution of the initials set forth in the indictment materially altered the legal effect of the contract, and made the contract the obligation of another and different person from the one who originally signed it. Whether this is true or not depends upon the sufficiency of the allegations as to whose name was intended to be substituted in the place of "M. F. Higgins." If the initial letter "M.," preceding the name "F. Higgins," signed to the contract, represented and stood for "Marion F. Higgins," or, rather if the letter "M." stood for "Marion," it stood for the same after the change of the middle letter, "F.," to "J.," for there was no change of the meaning of the letter "M.," because no other letters were added to it. Substituting "J." in place of "F." could not possibly have changed "M." to "Marion," and it would still be a greater feat of substitution to make "M." stand for "Martha Jane," whether it was intended for "Marion" or not. It is claimed that it stood for "Marion" as originally written, and then, by changing "F." to "J." it stood for "Martha Jane." But it is not anywhere alleged that the letter "M.," standing alone, was an abbreviation of the name "Martha Jane," nor is it anywhere alleged that the wife of M. F. Higgins was ever known by the name of "M. J. Higgins," or that she went by that name, or that she ever signed or used the name of "M. J. Higgins" as her signature. Such was not her name in fact, and it so appears from the indictment itself. This allegation in the indictment negatives the allegation that the defendant, by changing "F." to "J.," intended to substitute "J." in the place of "F." so as to represent his wife's name, "Martha Jane Higgins," because it did not represent her name even after the change. If "M. F. Higgins" represented "Marion F. Higgins" before the change, it represented "Marion J. Higgins" after the change, and it seems to me illogical to hold otherwise, and especially to hold that it meant "Martha Jane Higgins." Under the allegations in the indictment, it cannot possibly mean or represent anybody but the wife, "Martha J. Higgins," and, as I contend, it did not ever represent her by any well-known rules of interpretation. It is a weakness in the indictment which is fatal to its validity. No one could be deceived or misled or defrauded into believing that it was the wife's signature, because it was not her true name, nor any name by which she was known or went or signed her name, and it is not claimed that such was the fact. The vice in the indictment is that it states too much in some matters, and not enough in other respects. When a person is indicted for having committed a public offense, there should be a reasonable certainty as to the offense charged, and the material allegations in the indictment should not be contradictory or uncertain. Referring again to the letter "M.," I am unable to find, either in the dictionaries or law books, where the letter "M." is designated as an abbreviation of the name "Marion" or "Martha Jane." There are names for which I can find that the letter "M." stands as an abbreviation, but neither of the above. The grand jury, by its accusations, imports into the act of the defendant the charge of changing the letter "M." to the name "Martha Jane," and I think such accusation an unwarranted and unreasonable construction. I concur in the opinion 27 L. R. A.

of the court that forgery may be committed in some instances by changing the initial letter of the middle name of a person, but the indictment should show upon its face by proper averment how such alteration becomes material. I think that the demurrer to the indictment should have been sustained.

STATE of Minnesota

v.

Joseph MROZINSKI et al.

(.....Minn.....)

*Section 15, chapter 124, Laws 1893, prohibiting the taking of fish (with certain specified exceptions) in any other manner than by angling for them with hook and line, is valid.

(December 21, 1894.)

QUESTIONS certified by the District Court for Dakota County, for the opinion of the Supreme Court, after an order overruling a demurrer to an indictment charging defendant with catching fish with a net, contrary to the provisions of the statute. Order affirmed.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion.

Messrs. McDonald & Barnard, with Mr. M. F. Propping, for appellant:

To justify the state in thus interposing its authority in behalf of the public, it must appear: First, that the interests of the public generally, as distinguished from those of a particular class, require such interference; second, that the means are reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of the purpose, and not unduly oppressive upon individuals. The legislature may not, under the guise of protecting public interests, arbitrarily interfere with private business, or impose unusual or unnecessary restrictions upon lawful occupations; in other words its determination as to what is a proper exercise of its police powers is not final or conclusive, but is subject to the supervision of the courts.

Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 885; Smith v. Maryland, 59 U. S. 18 How. 71, 15 L. ed. 265; State v. Lewis, 20 L. R. A. 52, 184 Ind. 250.

Mr. H. W. Childs, Atty-Gen., with Mr. William Ely Bramhall, for respondent:

The ownership of all animals fera natura, found within the limits of this state, is in the state.

State v. Rodman (Minn.) July 25, 1894; Gentile v. State, 29 Ind. 415; Organ v. State, 56 Ark. 267; Magner v. People, 97 Ill. 820; American Exp. Co. v. People, 9 L. R. A. 133, 133 Ill. 649; State v. Geer, 18 L. R. A. 804, 8 Inters. Com. Rep. 732, 61 Conn. 144.

*Headnote by MITCHELL, J.

NOTE.—The above decision holding it to be within the province of the legislature to regulate modes of fishing is in harmony with the prior authorities. See, Lawton v. Steele (N. Y.) 7 L. R. A. 134, and note; also State v. Lewis (Ind.) 20 L. R. A. 52.

That this extends even to private premises, see People v. Bridges (Ill.) 16 L. R. A. 664.

The people in their sovereign capacity therefore, being the owners of the fish, have a right to say whether they will use them or not, and if so when, where, and how and by what means they shall be caught.

The right of the state to prohibit the netting of fish has been sustained.

Lawton v. Steele, 7 L. R. A. 134, 119 N. Y. 235; Gould, Waters, 2d ed. § 189, p. 363; Drew v. Hilliker, 56 Vt. 641; State v. Snover, 42 N. J. L. 841; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 183, 38 L. ed. 385; State v. Lewis, 20 L. R. A. 52, 134 Ind. 250.

As the people in passing laws of this character are dealing with property which belongs to them in their sovereign capacity and not with the private property of the individual, it is held that the reasonableness of these statutes is a question for the legislature to pass upon and not the courts.

Lawton v. Steele, 7 L. R. A. 134, 119 N. Y. 235; Phelps v. Racey, 60 N. Y. 14, 19 Am. Rep. 140; Magner v. People, 97 Ill. 820; American Exp. Co. v. People, 9 L. R. A. 138, 133 Ill. 649; State v. Norton, 45 Vt. 258; Drew v. Hilliker, supra.

Mitchell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The trial court certified several questions for the opinion of this court; but as counsel have argued only one viz., the constitutionality of section 15, chapter 124, Laws 1893, we will not consider the others. The section reads as follows: "No person at any time shall catch, take, or kill any fish in any other manner than by angling for them with a hook and line held in the hand or attached to a rod or pole (except that suckers and buffalo fish may be taken with a spear during the months of April and May) or have in possession or under control any fish caught, taken, or killed by any other manner except that a net may be used for catching white fish, lake trout, and sturgeon in international waters and minnows for bait in ponds, lakes, and rivers not inhabited by trout, provided that the meshes in the net used for catching such white fish and lake trout, sturgeon, pike and pickerel shall not be less than three and one half inches in size of mesh when the same is extended, provided that lake herring may be taken with a net the meshes of which are at least two and one half inches when extended." The only objection urged to the provisions of this section is that they are unreasonably restrictive. The line of argument is substantially as follows: First. The limit of the police power of the state in the premises is the adoption of such measures as are reasonably necessary to prevent the extermination or undue depletion of food fishes. Second. That it is wholly unnecessary for any such purpose to prohibit the catching of fish, at least of certain kinds not named in the act, except by hook and line; that there are other ways of catching fish that are no more calculated to exterminate fish than by hook and line; that there are some kinds that cannot be taken at all by hook and line; and that an adequate supply of fish for food cannot be caught in that way. Assuming, without deciding, that the police power of the state over the taking or killing of wild animals (which belongs to the state itself, in its sovereign capacity) is subject to the limitation contended for, still we could not hold the provisions of this law invalid. In enacting any police regulation, even one regulating the use of private property or the conduct of a lawful private business, a very large discretion is reposed in the legislature. The courts will never set up their judgment against that of the legislature, and hold a police law invalid, unless it is clearly so, as having no reasonable tendency to accomplish the desired end. The legislature had to deal with the time and manner of taking fish as a practical question. It is a matter of common knowledge that different species of fish, good and bad, those that take the hook readily, and those that do not, inhabit the same waters; that the two usual methods of taking fish are by hook and line, and by nets and seines; and that the latter method usually results in the rapid and undue depletion of most kinds of valuable food fishes. Hence, if the legislature, in its discretion, deems it expedient to prohibit the latter method, no court can say that they had not the power to do so. Such laws are very common, and, so far as we know, their validity has never been successfully assailed. If experience proves that this act is unnecessarily restrictive, the remedy is with the legislature.

Order affirmed.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

BOARD OF EDUCATION OF NEW CONCORD VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT,
Pff. in Err.,

Jennie BEST.

(61 Ohio St. —.)

*1. The clause in section 3982 of the Revised Statutes, to wit: "Upon a motion

*Headnotes by the COURT.

... to employ a ... teacher ... the clerk of the board shall call, publicly, the roll of all the members composing the board, and enter on the record required to be kept, the names of those voting aye, and the names of those voting no." —is a mandatory provision and must be strictly pursued.

2. Where the minute book containing a record of the proceedings of a board of education shows that all the members of the board were present; that a motion to pro-

NOTE.—The mandatory character of a provision for recording the yeas and nays, as a requisite of a valid vote is a question of much interest and comparatively few precedents. As to majority and quorum, see Lawrence v. Ingersoll (Tenn.) 6 L. R. A. 308, and note; Magenau v. Fremont (Neb.) 9 L.

27 L. R. A.

ceeded to the election of teachers was carried by a unanimous vote; and that an applicant for the position of teacher was declared elected by a unanimous vote, but that the clerk did not call the roll of the members, and the names of those voting aye were not entered upon the record, — the requirement of the statute was not sufficiently complied with, and the election was invalid.

(December 11, 1894.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Muskingum County to review a judgment reversing a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for alleged breach of contract to employ plaintiff as teacher in defendant's school. Reversed.

Statement by Dickman, Ch. J.:

The defendant in error, Jennie Beat, filed her amended petition in the court of common pleas of said county, against the board of education of New Concord village school district, the plaintiff in error alleging as follows:

"Plaintiff says that some time prior to May 17, 1887, she made a proposal by written application to the said board of education to teach the intermediate or primary department of the school of said district, for the customary time of nine months and at the customary salary of thirty dollars a month, said term to begin on or about the 5th day of September, 1887; that said board of education of the said 17th day of May, 1887, accepted plaintiff's proposal and entered into a contract with her by electing her as teacher of said intermediate department of said school, and giving her a written notice of said election; that plaintiff, relying on said contract, held herself in readiness from the receipt of said notice until the school opened September 5, 1887, to perform her part of said contract, and on said last-named date presented herself at the school-house of said district, having a teachers' certificate duly issued to her by the board of school examiners of said county, as provided and required by law, ready and willing to take charge of said department according to said contract; and that the said board of education then and there broke said contract by utterly refusing to allow plaintiff further to perform her part of said contract, and without cause dismissed her to her damage in the sum of three hundred dollars ($300). Wherefore plaintiff prays judgment against the defendant for said sum of three hundred dollars, with interest from said 5th day of September, 1887."

To this petition there was filed an answer in which five defenses were set up. In the first defense, as amended, the defendant said:

"That it denies each and every allegation in plaintiff's amended petition." The second and third defenses were struck out on motion of the plaintiff. To the fourth defense a general demurrer was sustained.

The fifth defense reads as follows:

"Fifth Defense:

"That, in pursuance of the provisions of section 3985, Revised Statutes of Ohio, this defendant, the board of education of the New Concord village school district, adopted for its government and the government of its employes, a set of rules and regulations, which said rules and regulations were known to the plaintiff. Section 1 of article 8 of said rules and regulations reads as follows:

"The teachers shall be elected by the board of education annually, and shall hold their position for one year unless sooner removed by the board. The nominations for teachers shall be made at the June regular meeting and not be acted on for two weeks."

"Said rules and regulations including said section, were in full force at the time named in the plaintiff's amended petition, May 17, 1887. At the meeting of the board May 17, 1887, no action was taken suspending any of the rules governing the board.

On the 27th of May, at a legal meeting of the board, action was taken declaring the proceedings of May 17 illegal; said action on the 27th was taken before the adoption of the minutes of the meeting of May 17; said plaintiff was duly notified of the action of the board at the meeting of May 27.

At the regular June meeting of the board, nominations for teachers were made and the plaintiff's application, at her request, was considered among others, as teacher for the intermediate department of the schools. Two weeks later at the July meeting the plaintiff's application was rejected."

To this fifth defense there was a general demurrer, which was overruled, upon the overruling of which the plaintiff for a first reply thereto alleged:

"That it is not true and she denies that she had any knowledge whatever of any 'rules and regulations' that defendant had 'adopted for its government and the government of its employes,' or of any other rules whatever which said defendant had at the time she made her contract with it. Denies that said defendant ever had any such rules and regulations as those stated in defendant's answer, or were in force at the time named in her amended petition, May 17, 1887. Denies that no action was taken by said defendant at its meeting May 17, 1887, by which any of its rules were suspended if it ever had any rules."

The defendant moved the court to strike from the plaintiff's said first reply the following words, to wit:

"That it is not true and she denies that she had any knowledge whatever of any rules and regulations, that defendant had adopted for its government and the government of its employes, or of any other rules whatever which said defendant had at the time she made her contract with it.

This motion was sustained, and the plaintiff excepted.

At the trial the minute book of the board identified by plaintiff's witness as the record of the proceedings of the board, showed that, on May 10, 1887, the board met, and without any suspension of the rules, balloted five times for an intermediate teacher without result. Then, without any suspension of rules, it adopted a motion that: "We adjourn to meet Tuesday, May 17, for the purpose of electing teachers for intermediate and primary departments."

R. A. 78: Atkins v. Phillips (Fla.) 10 L. R. A. 158; State v. Vanoedal (Ind.) 15 L. R. A. 832.

As to casting vote, see note to Lawrence v. Phillips, 27 L. R. A.

lips, supra; also State v. Pinkerman (Conn.) 23 L. R. A. 653; Wooster v. Mullins (Conn.) 25 L. R. A. 694.

Said record of proceedings also showed that, on May 17, 1887, the board, without any suspension of the rules, adopted a motion to proceed to elect teachers for the intermediate and primary departments; that said motion was carried by unanimous vote and that Miss Jennie Best was declared elected by unanimous vote, for the intermediate department.

On May 18, 1887, the clerk sent to her a notice of her election, which she received. She made no reply to the notice, and sent no acceptance to any member of the board.

On May 27, 1887, at a legal meeting of the board, before approving the minutes of May 17, action was duly taken declaring the election proceedings of that day illegal. The clerk was ordered to mail to Miss Best a notice that her election had been declared illegal, and on May 28, he duly mailed to her said notice.

At the regular June meeting nominations for teachers were made, and Miss Best's application, at her request was considered among others as teachers for the intermediate department. Two weeks later, at the July meeting, her application was rejected and another teacher duly elected.

None of the evidence introduced at the trial discloses that at the meeting of May 17, 1887, the clerk of the board called publicly the roll of all the members comprising the board, and entered on the record required to be kept the names of those voting "aye," and the names of those voting "no," on the question of the election of the defendant in error.

The evidence for the plaintiff having been heard, the defendant moved the court to arrest the testimony from the jury, and for judgment, which motion was sustained, and the jury was discharged from the further consideration of the case.

The circuit court reversed the judgment of the court of common pleas for error:

In overruling the demurrer to the fifth defense; in striking out the plaintiff's denial that she had any knowledge of the rules and regulations of the board of education; and in taking the case from the jury.

To reverse the judgment of the circuit court, this proceeding in error is instituted.

Messrs. M. M. Granger and W. J. Massey, for plaintiff in error:

The proceedings of May 17 were illegal.

(1) For disregard of the rules of the board. Bloom v. Xenia, 32 Ohio St. 463; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. 455, and cases cited.

(2) For disregard of the statutory mode of election.

Glaucque's, Rev. Stat. § 8982.

This section is mandatory.

Campbell v. Cincinnati, 49 Ohio St. 468; Clark v. Crane, 6 Mich. 151, 71 Am. Dec. 776; Steckert v. East Saginaw, 22 Mich. 104; Spangler v. Jacoby, 14 Ill. 297, 58 Am. Dec. 571; 27 L. R. A.

Schuyler County Supra. v. People, 25 Ill. 181. See also McCormick v. Bay City, 28 Mich. 457; Delphi v. Evans, 36 Ind. 90, 10 Am. Rep. 12; Cuiler v. Russellville, 40 Ark. 105; Olin v. Meyers, 55 Iowa, 209; Tracey v. People, 6 Colo. 151; Rich v. Chicago, 59 Ill. 286; Indianola v. Jones, 29 Iowa, 282.

The mode of election prescribed by section 8982 was exclusive.

Dill. Mun. Corp. 465; State v. Treasurer of Liberty Twp., Delaware County, 22 Ohio St. 144.

Messrs. J. A. Troette and S. A. Dickson, for defendant in error:

Plaintiff below was elected unanimously by a  viva voce  vote, taken in the usual way, which is by a call for all those who are in favor to say "aye;" those opposed to say "no." This is certainly a substantial compliance with the statute.

Section 8982, Rev. Stat., is directory only, and a substantial compliance is all that is necessary:

(a) If no legal sanction is provided by which a compliance can be enforced, they (provisions of statutes) are plainly directory.

Sedgw. Stat. Constr. p. 817.

(b) An affirmative command, unless accompanied by negative words, is directory.

Sedgw. Stat. Constr. pp. 819-824; Upington v. Oviatt, 24 Ohio St. 241.

(c) When the provision of a statute is the essence of the thing to be done, it is mandatory; otherwise when it relates to form and manner.

Davis v. Smith, 58 N. H. 17; Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 436, and cases cited.

(d) When nullification of proceedings had in disregard of certain forms prescribed by statute would work injustice to innocent persons, or advantage to those guilty of the neglect, without promoting the real aim and object of the enactment, the statute will be held directory.

Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 433.

(e) Statutory requirements intended for the guide of officers in the conduct of business devolved upon them and designed to secure order, system, and dispatch in proceedings, and by a disregard of which the rights of parties interested cannot be injuriously affected, are not usually regarded as mandatory unless accompanied by negative words.

French v. Edwards, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 506, 20 L. ed. 702.

Where a statute is directory, a departure from the strict observance of it does not invalidate a contract, where it appears that no fraud has been practiced and no substantial right violated.

Athens County Comrs. v. Baltimore Short Line R. Co. 37 Ohio St. 205; School Dist. No. 2, Oxford Twp., Butler County v. Dilman, 23 Ohio St. 194; Duke v. State, 20 Ohio St. 225; Fry v. Booth, 19 Ohio St. 25; Lehman v. McBride, 15 Ohio St. 578; Blanchard v. Russell, 11 Ohio St. 96; Pim v. Nicholson, 6 Ohio St. 176; Miller v. State, 3 Ohio St. 475; Hubble v. Renick, 1 Ohio St. 175.

The general principle of estoppel applies to this case.

See 2 Parsons, Cont. 7th ed. p. 935, and cases cited; Beardsley v. Foot, 14 Ohio St. 414, 84 Am. Dec. 405; Dixon v. Sub-Dist. No. 6,

Liberty Twp., Ross County, Ohio, 8 Ohio C. C. Rep. 517.

Dickman, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

As shown by the record, the defendant in error, Miss Jennie Best, some time prior to May 17, 1887, made a proposal by written application to the plaintiff in error, the board of education of New Concord village school district, to teach the intermediate or primary department of the school of that district. At the regular June meeting of the board she was nominated for teacher, and her application, at her request, was considered among others, for appointment as a teacher in the intermediate department. At the meeting of the board, two weeks later, in July, 1887, her application was rejected, and another teacher duly elected. Notwithstanding the rejection of her application, she presented herself at the school-house on the 5th day of September, 1887, when the scholastic year began, prepared to take charge of the school and teach it, but was not permitted to do so.

It is contended in behalf of the defendant in error, that though not elected a teacher at the regular June meeting, she was duly and legally elected at the meeting of May 17, 1887, whereby a right of action accrued to her against the board when she was refused charge of the school.

Among the provisions applying to boards of education, it is provided by section 3985 of the Revised Statutes: "The board of each district shall make such rules and regulations as it may deem expedient and necessary for its government, and the government of its appointees and pupils." In pursuance of this section of the statutes, the board adopted a set of rules and regulations, among which, section 1 of article 3 reads as follows: "The teachers shall be elected by the board of education annually, and shall hold their position for one year, unless sooner removed by the board. The nominations for teachers shall be made at the June regular meeting, and not be acted on for two weeks." The wisdom of such a rule is obvious, designed and effective as it is to give an opportunity to become acquainted with the qualifications and fitness of the applicant. The board met on May 10, 1887, and without any suspension of rules, balloted without result for an intermediate teacher, and adjourned to May 17, for the purpose of electing teachers for the intermediate and primary departments. On May 17, 1887, without any suspension of rules, a motion to proceed to an election was carried by unanimous vote, and the board then proceeding to an election, Miss Best was declared elected by unanimous vote for the intermediate department. On May 27, 1887, at a legal meeting of the board, this election was declared illegal.

It is contended in behalf of the plaintiff in error, that the election was illegal for non-compliance with the rules of the board and for disregard of the statutory mode of election as prescribed by section 3982 of the Revised Statutes.

It is urged, however, on the part of the defendant in error, that the power of the board to make rules and regulations carries with it the power to suspend a rule; and that when, on May 17, the motion to then proceed to elect teachers was carried by unanimous vote, it worked a suspension of the rule that nominations for teachers should not be acted on for two weeks.

We deem it unnecessary to consider whether the election of the defendant in error was void by reason of a failure to comply with the rule requiring such nominations to be made at the regular June meeting, and not to be acted on for two weeks. In our judgment, the election was without the sanction of law, because in disregard of the above-mentioned section 3982. That section contains the following provision: "Upon a motion to adopt a resolution authorizing the purchase or sale of property, either real or personal, or to employ a superintendent, teacher, janitor, or other employé, or to elect or appoint an officer, or to pay any debt or claim, or to adopt any text-book, the clerk of the board shall call, publicly, the roll of all the members composing the board, and enter on the record required to be kept the names of those voting 'aye,' and the names of those voting 'no.'"

The clerk is made the recording officer of the board, and it is incumbent upon him to call the roll on taking a vote. The statutory provision that he shall publicly call the roll, and enter on the record the names of those voting aye and the names of those voting no, is tantamount to a provision, that the vote shall be taken by yeas and nays and entered on the journal. It is not claimed, nor is it a fact, that at the election of the defendant in error as teacher, the clerk of the board called the roll and entered the ayes and noes as required by the statute.

But, it is urged that such requirement is not mandatory but directory merely. Mandatory statutes are imperative, and must be strictly pursued, otherwise the proceeding which is taken ostensibly by virtue thereof will be void. Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 454. It will be observed that a motion to employ a teacher is placed on the same footing with a motion to adopt a resolution for the purchase or sale of real or personal property, or to pay any debt or claim—matters of such interest and importance as involving the expenditure of the school fund, that the statute should be strictly followed when a vote is to be taken on the adoption of such a motion.

By section 1694 of the Revised Statutes, "ordinances of a general and permanent nature, shall be fully and distinctly read on three different days, unless three-fourths of the members elected dispense with the rule; and the vote on such suspension shall be taken by yeas and nays and entered on the journal." In Bloom v. Xenia, 32 Ohio St. 461, it was held that the section is imperative in its injunction that ordinances shall be read on three different days, unless the rule is dispensed with by a three-fourths vote; and the remaining language of the clause is, we conceive, no less imperative or mandatory, that the vote of such suspension shall be taken by yeas and nays, and entered on the journal.

The principles announced in the last cited case were approved in Campbell v. Cincinnati, 49 Ohio St. 463, and we see no good reason why the most important duties enjoined upon boards of education should be held less imperative than those of no greater importance that are made mandatory upon municipal council. The authority of boards of education, like that of municipal councils, is strictly limited. They both have only such power as is expressly granted or clearly implied, and doubtful claims as to the mode of exercising the powers vested in them are resolved against them. Clearly, these organizations that derive their existence as bodies politic and corporate from the legislature, cannot be allowed the same latitude in the observance of their statutory duties as is permitted to the general assembly. Such subordinate bodies corporate are not privileged to treat express and explicit provisions of the statute as only directory, discretionary, because there are provisions in the constitution that are held directory in their character for the reason that their observance by the general assembly is secured by their sense of duty and official oaths, and not by any supervisory power of the courts.

It is said, however, that the primary object of the law in providing that the roll of members of the board shall be called publicly, and the names of those voting aye or no recorded, is to determine whether a teacher has been elected by the requisite majority; and that such object is fully sustained when such is evidence produced, as appears in the minute book of the plaintiff in error, which contains the record: "Board met; members all present. Miss Jennie Best was declared elected by unanimous vote for intermediate department." Where there is a visa voce vote, taken in the usual way, which is by a call for all those who are in favor to say aye, and those opposed to say no, without entering at large on the minutes the names of those voting, the presiding officer judges by his ear which side has the more voices. But, if the vote of a quorum is in favor of a motion or resolution and no vote is cast against it, the record may still be, that it was acted unanimously, though some of the members present in fact abstained from voting. Steckert v. East Saginaw, 22 Mich. 104. To avoid uncertainty, therefore, in determining the conduct of boards of education in transacting such important official business as concerns the purchase or sale of property, the payment of debts or claims, and the selection of teachers who are to stand somewhat in loco parentis in training the minds, and shaping the moral character of their pupils, the general assembly has carefully guarded against ambiguity by prescribing a method of voting which should not be departed from, and in that regard, the rule expressio unius, should, we think, be strictly applied.

Steckert v. East Saginaw, supra, was a bill to restrain the collection of an assessment for paving a street. The first ground of alleged invalidity in the proceedings was, that the several votes in the common council ordering the improvement made, were not taken by ayes and noes as required by the city charter.

The provision of the charter was: "Whenever required by two members, the votes of all the members of the common council, in relation to any act, proceeding, or proposition had at any meeting, shall be entered at large on the minutes." The record of the meeting of the council gives the names of all the aldermen present. After stating the resolutions ordering the improvement, there was this minute, "adopted unanimously on call." The argument was that the record shows, first, the names of the several aldermen who were present when the action was had; second, that the roll was called on the vote; and third, that each of them, when the roll was called, voted for the adoption of the resolutions. This being so, the vote, it was contended, was in effect entered at large on the minutes, and that the repetition of the names of the aldermen in the minutes would have been only an idle ceremony, accomplishing no useful purpose.

It was said by Cooley, J., in pronouncing the opinion of the court: "We have found ourselves unable to take the same view of this record that is taken by the counsel for defendants. There can be no doubt that the provision of the statute which requires these votes to be entered at large on the minutes, was designed to accomplish an important public purpose, and that it cannot be regarded as immaterial, nor its observance be dispensed with. The purpose, among other things, is to make the members of the common council feel the responsibility of their action when these important measures are upon their passage, and to compel each member to bear his share in the responsibility, by a record of his action which should not afterwards be open to dispute." See also Spangler v. Jacoby, 14 Ill. 297, 58 Am. Dec. 571. The same views are similarly expressed in Judge Cooley's treatise on Constitutional Limitations, as follows: "It is provided in the constitutions of some of the states that, on the final passage of every bill, the yeas and nays shall be entered on the journal. Such a provision is designed to serve an important purpose in compelling each member present to assume as well as to feel his due share of responsibility in legislation; and also in furnishing definite and conclusive evidence whether the bill has been passed by the requisite majority or not." 6th ed. 168.

The same doctrine is unqualifiedly approved by Judge Dillon in his work on Municipal Corporations, after an examination of the authorities supporting the opposite view. Sec. 291 (229).

In Rich v. Chicago, 59 Ill. 286, the street improvement was not asked for by the petition of the owners of a majority of the property to be assessed; and, in such case, the city charter declares that the improvement "shall be ordered only by the votes of at least three fourths of all the aldermen present, such vote to be entered by ayes and noes on the record of the common council." It was objected that there was no valid ordinance commanding the improvement, or the assessment to be made. The court says: "It does not appear, from the record introduced, or otherwise, that this improvement was ordered by the votes of three fourths of all the aldermen present, and it appears, affirmatively, that the vote was not entered by ayes and noes on the record. We must, therefore, regard the objection as well taken."

In Cutler v. Russellville, 40 Ark. 105, it was held that the weight of authority and the better opinion seems to be, that a requirement that the yeas and nays shall be called and recorded on the passage by a municipal council of an order or resolution to enter into a contract, is designed to accomplish an important public purpose; and hence cannot be regarded as immaterial, nor its observance dispensed with. To the same effect are the decisions in Olin v. Meyers, 55 Iowa, 289; Morrison v. Lawrence, 98 Mass. 219, and in numerous other cases involving the same question.

For the foregoing reasons, the election of the defendant in error by the board of education of the New Concord Village school district was, in our opinion, illegal and void. And being so, the court of common pleas did not err in taking the case from the jury, and rendering judgment for the defendant below—the board of education.

The judgment of the circuit court should therefore be reversed, and that of the court of common pleas affirmed.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

Re William H. CASWELL.

(.....R. L.....)

The clerk of a court may refuse to furnish to a newspaper a copy of the proceedings in a divorce case for publication, in the absence of any statutory provision on the subject.

(December 20, 1886.)

APPPLICATION by the Clerk of the Court in Washington County for advice as to his

NORM. Right to inspect public records.

I. Abstracters.

II. Suits.

III. Record making or copying.

IV. Account books of public officers.

a. In general.

b. Toll books.

c. As to boundaries and titles.

V. As to title to office.

VI. Liquor records.

VII. Patent records.

I. Abstracters.

In regard to the privileges of abstracters to the use of records for speculative purposes in matters not relating to a personal interest in the special record, the tendency of the decisions was that such abstracters were not entitled to the general use of the office, desks, and books for the purpose of making abstracts to be used in the future in their business, but of late years there has been legislation strongly in their favor, which has been more or less strictly or liberally construed.

So under statutory or charter provisions authorizing any person or abstractor to have inspection of the records they are entitled to a reasonable use of the same, and under such provisions it is also held that other persons though not abstracters are entitled to the same privileges. Stockman v. Brooks, 17 Colo. 248; State v. Rachao, 37 Minn. 372; People v. Bellly, 38 Hun, 429; Hanson v. Eichstaedt, 60 Wis. 538; Johnson v. Wakulla County, 28 Fla. 720; State v. Long, 37 W. Va. 206; Re Chambers, 44 Fed. Rep. 783.

And the same was held in Burton v. Tuite, 7 L. R. A. 73, 78 Mich. 368; Burton v. Tuite, 7 L. R. A. 824, 80 Mich. 218; Day v. Button, 96 Mich. 600; Aitcheson v. Wayne County Treasurer, 90 Mich. 643.

These Michigan cases in effect overrule Webber v. Townley, 43 Mich. 534, 38 Am. Rep. 213, which required the abstractor to have a special interest in the records to be searched, before he was entitled to the privilege of inspection, but these cases were under a statute which was particular in granting the right to abstracters.

And the same was held in West Jersey Title & Guaranty Co. v. Barber, 49 N. J. Eq. 474.

This case and Lum v. McCarty, infra, in effect overruled Flemming v. Clerk of Hudson County, 30 37 L. R. A.

N. J. L. 280, which held that every person had access to the records only on payment of a fee for the privilege of search.

And a note or fee given for inspection of records to which the public were entitled is without consideration and against public policy. Parsons v. Randolph, 21 Mo. App. 858; Lum v. McCarty, 39 N. J. L. 287.

While under the foregoing statutory provisions and decisions a reasonable use of the records is allowed, six hours a day when not used by the commissioners and two hours on such days is a reasonable regulation. Upton v. Catlin, 17 L. R. A. 282, 17 Colo. 546.

So a restriction in the use of the office to three employees of an abstract company was held to be a reasonable regulation. People v. Richards, 69 N. Y. 620.

So a surveyor has no right to desk room in the recorder's office to copy all the field notes of all the surveys in the county. Phelan v. State, 76 Ala. 49.

And in Burton v. Reynolds (Mich.) Sept. 25, 1894, it was held that while a general use is a matter of public privilege, the claimant must take his turn with the public, and it was said that if he refused to pay for special privileges for which others pay, he will not be entitled to such special privileges by mandamus.

On the other hand, where statutes have not been particular for the benefit of abstracters, they have been refused the privilege of the use of the office, when they had no special interest in the record at that time. Bean v. People, 7 Colo. 200; Buck v. Collins, 51 Ga. 391, 21 Am. Rep. 236; Randolph v. State, 32 Ala. 527, 60 Am. Rep. 781; Cormaack v. Wolcott, 37 Kan. 391.

But they are entitled to use the same if they have a present interest. Boylan v. Warren, 39 Kan. 301.

Under Md. Code, art. 17, § 1, providing that every clerk shall have the custody and carefully keep the books and papers of his office and give copies on payment of fee,—an abstract company cannot compel the clerks of courts to furnish copies or abstracts, and to make searches without payment of fees, or search the records of the office through its own employees, although the charter of the comduty to comply with the request of a newspaper reporter to furnish copies of proceedings in a divorce case for publication. Refusal to furnish copy advised.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion. No counsel appeared in the case.

Tillinghast, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

At the November session of this court in Washington county the petition for divorce of Eva M. Lee v. Thomas Z. Lee was heard and granted. Shortly thereafter, as repre-pany provides for examination of title. Belt v. Prince George's County Abstract Co. 10 L. R. A. 212, 73 Md. 289.

And the same was held to be the rule in regard to abstracters generally in Illinois prior to the Illinois Acts May 31 and June 16, 1897. Scribner v. Chase, 27 Ill. App. 38.

And in Laughlin v. Hawley, 9 Colo. 174, it was said that the refusal by the county clerk of the opportunity to examine the files sought by a land purchaser, who was affected by a judgment lien, was a personal matter between him and the clerk.

A foreign corporation owning land was refused the privilege of making abstracts of the whole county where the charter of the company was not shown. Diamond Match Co. v. Powers, 51 Mich. 145.

And in Newton v. Fisher, 98 N. C. 20, an examination was refused an attorney to inspect all chattel mortgages of a certain year to ascertain the financial condition of all the debtors of his clients. There appears to have been no statute involved in this case.

II. Suits.

In regard to the right of a party to an inspection of the documents, records, or proceedings in which he is interested, in an action pending, the general rule is that he has such a right and will be allowed the privilege of inspecting such records. Wilson v. Rogers, 2 Strange, 1242; Welch v. Richards, Barnes Notes, 468; Daly v. Dimocks, 55 Conn. 579.

But he will not be entitled to the inspection of records where no satisfactory reason is given. Rex v. Maidstone, 6 Dowl. & R. 384.

And inspection has been refused of documents in possession of the adverse party, which would compel such party to incriminate himself. Rex v. Sheriff of Chester, 1 Chitty, 479; Fox v. Jones, 7 Barn. & C. 732; 1 Mann. & R. 570. See also King v. Buckingham, Rex v. Cornelius, Rex v. Cadogan, and May v. Gwynne, infra.

Persons who were not parties in interest have been refused an inspection of records where pleadings have not been filed by the defendant, and are still ex parte records. Schmedding v. May, 85 Mich. 1; Cowley v. Pulsifer, 127 Mass. 302, 50 Am. Rep. 318.

An inspection of the justice's files and memoranda was refused before he had made up his record although Vermont Rev. Laws, 828, provided that the justice shall keep a record, and his "books" of records shall be at all times subject to inspection of persons interested. Perkins v. Cummings, 66 Vt. 435.

And where objection was sustained to the use and copy of a stenographic report of evidence in another trial, because the party using the same had refused to allow inspection, it was error, under Neb. Comp. Stat., chap. 19, §§ 47-49, and Neb. Code, § 403, which provided for stenographic reports, and copies and evidence, and the party could have obtained a copy of the same. Spielman v. Flynn, 19 Neb. 242.

In Nash v. Lathrop, 142 Mass. 22, it was held that any person, though not a citizen, had a right to access to the opinions of the supreme court of Massachusetts.

And in Re McLean, 18 Rep. 512, while the right of the public to inspect the records of a federal court made on an application of a newspaper was denied, yet the same was granted "ex gratia."

37 L. R. A.

These cases fully sustain Re CASWELL, which holds that the common-law rule to the effect that a person must have some interest therein to maintain or defend an action in order to have an inspection of documents of records to be used as evidence, in so far as it is applicable, is in force in Rhode Island and justifies refusing access by a newspaper reporter to the records in divorce proceedings, to be used by him for sensational purposes.

III. Record making or copying.

It is generally held that superior officers may have access to records by their employes for the purpose of transcribing the same or indexing them. Silver v. People, 45 Ill. 225; State v. Meadows, 1 Kan. 80; Hawes v. White, 66 Me. 305.

But 1 N. Y. Rev. Stat., 303, providing that the board of supervisors may make such orders concerning the property of the county as they deem expedient, and the Act of 1869 giving the board, subject to the legal rights of the officers using the same, the general charge of the books and records of the county with a provision for having copies made by the officer having custody and control of the records when a judge certifies that it is necessary, do not authorize them to have new volumes of indices made, by some persons independent of the county clerk and not authorized by law to make them, and in a manner not provided for by law. People v. Nash, 3 Hun, 535.

IV. Account books of public officers.

a. In general.

Where the claimant has a personal interest in the matter of the officer's accounts or there is a controversy in dealings between the officer and the applicant, an inspection of the books in the custody of the officer is generally allowed. Moody v. Thurston, 1 Strange, 304; Brewer v. Watson, 65 Ala. 83; Brewer v. Watson, 61 Ala. 510; Keokuk v. Merriman, 44 Iowa, 422; Brewer v. Watson, 71 Ala. 200, 46 Am. Rep. 312.

Generally a tax-payer is entitled to access to the public books as far as concerns himself. London v. Swinland, 1 Barnard. & C. 455; Newell v. Simpkin, 6 Bing. 565, 4 Moore & P. 305; Anonymous, 3 Chitty, 206.

Tax-payers have been accorded the privilege of inspecting records of public officers relating to the street department and books of health department, and books of overseers of the poor. People v. Cornell, 47 Barb. 329; Neville v. New York Board of Health, 20 Abb. N. C. 59; Rex v. Clapham, 1 Wils. 305.

But where no beneficial interest is shown by the applicant an inspection of the account books of public officers has been refused. Coinon v. Orr, 71 Cal. 43; Ex parte Briggs, 1 El. & El. 861, 28 L. J. Q. B. 272; Rex v. Clear, 7 Dowl. & R. 303, 4 Barn. & C. 399.

In Rex v. Great Faringdon, 9 Barn. & C. 541, an inspection of the accounts of the parish money kept by the guardian of the poor under 22 George III., chap. 63, was allowed to a rated parishioner.

And in King v. Leicester, 4 Barn. & C. 501, a county rate-payer was allowed inspection of the rates made by justice and expenditure and order of sessions required to be kept by 55 George III., chap. 51.

But these latter cases may be considered as overruled in King v. Staffordshire Justices, 6 Ad. & El. 34, 1 Nev. & P. 200, which held that where the sented by William H. Caswell, clerk of the court in that county, a reporter for a Woonsocket newspaper requested him to furnish a copy of all the proceedings in said case, "for publication or otherwise;" and he now asks the advice of the court as to his duty in the premises. At common law, every person is entitled to the inspection, either personally or by his agent, of public records (this term including legislative, executive and judicial records, etc.), provided he has an interest therein which is such as would enable him to maintain or defend an action for which the document or record sought can furnish evidence or necessary information. It is not essential, however, "that the interest be private, capable of sustaining a suit or defense on his own personal behalf, but it will be sufficient that he act in such suit as the representative of the common or public right." 20 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 522, 523, and cases cited. By statutes of the United States (see Act of August 12, 1848,—9 U. S. Stat. at L. chap. 166, p. 292), and also of several of the states, the necessity of interest has been done away with, and any person may examine public records, and take memoranda therefrom. Re Chambers, 44 Fed. Rep. 786; State v. Rachae, 87 Minn. 372; Hanson v. Eichstaedt, 69 Wis. 538; Lum v. McCarty, 89 N. J. L. 287; Newton v. Fisher, 98 N. C. 20. As there is no statute in this publication had been made under 12 Geo. II., chap. 51, of the accounts of treasurer and constable a rate-payer had no right of inspection, and this was on the ground that the action in the court in regard to the transaction was open to the public and the accounts publicly considered and the applicant had no interest in past accounts.

And in 35 Geo. III., chap. 73, providing for entry of poor rates in vestry books, and 1 & 2 Wm. IV., chap. 60, requiring account books for parochial purposes to be open for inspection, the books under the first act were not included in the second act and an inspection of the former was refused to the tax-payer. King v. St. Mary-Le-Bone, 5 Ad. & El. 268.

In Browne v. Cumming, 10 Barn. & C. 70, 5 Mann. & R. 118, it was said, quoting from the preface of Coke: "The records of the king's court, they contain secret and hidden treasures and are faithfully and well kept, as they well deserve, in the king's treasury, and yet not so kept but that any subject may for his necessary use and benefit have access thereunto, which was the ancient law of England by Act of Parliament, 46 E. III. A. etc."

In O'Hara v. King, 52 Ill. 303, it was held that a person conducting himself properly entering a public office from motives of curiosity during business hours who is forcibly ejected may recover damages. In this case, he said he was there to while away his time.

b. Toll books.

Every person has not the privilege of inspecting the toll books under 24 Geo. II., chap. 23, providing that all persons shall be at liberty to inspect books as 1 Geo. IV., chap. 100, providing that inspection shall be "to trustees" or any "creditor in tolls" limits the first act. Rex v. Northleach & Witney Roads Trustees, 5 Barn. & Ad. 978.

And a stranger is not entitled to inspection although he is a defendant in an action by the corporation for tolls. Southampton v. Graves, 8 T. R. 560.

And inspection was refused where issue had not been joined in a suit for trespass in distress for toll; in this case no previous demand was shown. Hodges v. Atkins, 3 Wils. 398, 3 W. Bl. 877.

And where the county had been indicted for not repairing a bridge, inspection of the parish books was refused on the ground that it would compel the parish to furnish evidence that would criminate itself. King v. Buckingham, 8 Barn. & C. 375, 3 Mann. & R. 412. See Rex v. Sheriff of Chester, 1 Chitty, 479; Rex v. Cadogan, May v. Gwynne, and Rex v. Cornelius, infra.

c. As to boundaries and titles.

A rate-payer was refused inspection of the parish books in order to prove that his premises were not in the parish, as he was not entitled to an inspection. 37 L. R. A.

tion if he was not in the parish. Burrell v. Nicholson, 8 Barn. & Ad. 649.

And a parishoner could not have inspection of the parish books touching the ratability of certain property in order to use the information to support his claim to an estate. Rex v. Smallpiece, 3 Chitty, 238.

An inspection of the parish book was denied in an action of ejectment by the proprietor against the church wardens as the parish will not be compelled to discover their titles by showing a book kept only for their own use. Cox v. Copping, 1 Ld. Raym. 387.

But where the question was whether park lands were within a corporation, and inspection of the books of the session of the corporation was claimed, it was said that every person has a right to see public books. Herbert v. Ashburner, 1 Wils. 297. See also Warriner v. Giles, infra.

It is generally held that in order to establish a right a freeholder is entitled to inspection of court rolls of the manor. Addington v. Clode, 2 W. Bl. 1060; Hobson v. Parker, Barnes Notes, 247; Rogers v. Jones, 5 Dowl. & R. 484.

The same was held in regard to a copy-holder. Folkard v. Hemet, 2 W. Bl. 1061; Rex v. Lucas, 10 East, 236; Rex v. Tower, 4 Maule & S. 162; Slade v. Walter, Pasch. 6 Ann. B. R., 10 Vin. Abr. title, Evidence, F. b. p. 146.

And in Atty-Gen. v. Coventry, Bunn. 290; Ex parte Briggs, 1 El. & El. 881, 28 L. J. Q. B. 272; Groenvelt v. Burrell, 1 Ld. Raym. 263, 1 Salk. 200,—the same was said to be the rule, but was not necessarily passed on in these cases.

An inspection of the court rolls by a tenant of the manor was granted. Rex v. Shelley, 8 T. R. 141.

Where in an action of ejectment by a lessee of the public market where the boundary was in question an inspection of the public market books was allowed. Warriner v. Giles, 3 Strange, 954. See also subhead "Boundary."

In Rex v. Merchant Tailors' Co., 2 Barn. & Ad. 115, it was held that the tenant had no right to inspect all the rolls.

And it was held that a freehold tenant of a manor has no right to inspect the court rolls unless there is a cause involving his case pending. Rex v. Allgood, 7 T. R. 748.

Where the claimant failed to show that he was a tenant and had made a prior demand, an inspection of the court rolls was refused. Roe v. Aylmaer, Barnes Notes, 236.

In an action by a bishop against the Duke of Bridgewater and several tenants for tithes, the plaintiff was denied an inspection of the court rolls of the manor to see what proportion they paid of the modus insisted upon. Bishop of Hereford v. Bridgewater, Bunn. 289.

And in Smith v. Davies, 1 Wils. 104, in an ejectment where the defendant claimed a freehold, he was refused an inspection of the court rolls in the pos-state, however, regulating this matter, the common-law rule above stated, in so far as it is applicable here, is doubtless in force. Whether or not we should be willing to go to the full extent thereof, we are not now called upon to decide. But it is clearly within the rule to hold that no one has a right to examine or obtain copies of public records from mere curiosity, or for the purpose of creating public scandal. To publish broadcast the painful, and sometimes disgusting, details of a divorce case, not only fails to serve any useful purpose in the community, but, on the other hand, directly tends to the demoralization and corruption thereof, by catering to a morbid craving for that which is sensational and impure. The judicial records of the state should always be accessible to the people for all proper purposes, under reasonable restrictions as to the time and mode of examining the same; but they should not be used to gratify private spite or promote public scandal. And, in the absence of any statute regulating this matter, there can be no doubt as to the power of the court to prevent such improper use of its records.

We advise the clerk that he should not furnish a copy of the case referred to for the purposes named.

All the Judges concur in this opinion.

cession of the plaintiff on the ground that the plaintiff was not required to assist the defendant to make out his title.

An inspection of the court rolls in possession of the lord of the manor will not be granted where he was indicted for not repairing the highway as a party is not bound to criminate himself. Rex v. Cadogan, 1 Dowl. & R. 550, 5 Barn. & Ald. 902. See also King v. Buckingham, 8 Barn. & C. 375, 2 Mann. & R. 412; Rex v. Sheriff of Chester, 1 Chitty, 479; May v. Gwynne, and Rex v. Cornelius, infra, as to criminating evidence.

V. As to title to office.

Generally an inspection of election books or public records will be granted, where the purpose is to vindicate some public or private right and is to be made under reasonable regulations. State v. Hobbsville, 35 Mo. 620; State v. Williams, 36 Mo. 2; Richards v. Pattinson, Barnes Notes, 226; King v. Babb, 8 T. R. 579.

But will not be made if the demand is premature as where the return has not yet been made in a mandamus to fill up the corporation. King v. Nottingham, 1 W. Bl. 60; Rex v. Justice of Surry, Sayer, 145.

Or where the evidence has not all been taken in an election contest, an inspection of the ballot box was refused. Re McCullough, 12 Phila. 570.

Or where an inspection of vestry books controlled by defendant would require the defendant to furnish evidence against himself, it was refused in an action for libel for publishing a report to the vestry. May v. Gwynne, 4 Barn. & Ald. 301. See also Rex v. Sheriff of Chester, 1 Chitty, 479; Rex v. Cadogan, and Rex v. Cornelius, infra; King v. Buckingham, 8 Barn. & C. 375, 2 Mann. & R. 412.

So an inspection of the appointment of the overseers of the poor in order to see if they were fit persons, was refused. Reg. v. Harrison, 9 Q. B. 794, 3 New. Sea. Cas. 490, 16 L. J. M. C. 83, 10 Jur. 381.

In an action against a postmaster for intermeddling in an election, an inspection of the postoffice book to prove his deputation was denied. Crew v. Saunders, 2 Strange, 1005.

Where a motion was made to inspect rejected ballots of the election in proceedings of attachment against the publisher of a newspaper for contempt in deterring witnesses, it was held that the judges at chambers could not commit for contempt and no rule was granted. MacCartney v. Oorry, 7 Ir. C. L. Reg. 242.

But a bishop's books of registry of presentations were allowed to be inspected where both the plaintiff and the defendant claimed a living within the diocese. Finch v. Bishop of Ely, 3 Mann. & R. 127; Rex v. Ely, 8 Barn. & C. 112.
37 L. R. A.

VI. Liquor records.

Some cases hold that a mandamus will be granted to compel an inspection of liquor records as bonds filed in the office of the county treasury. Brown v. Knapp, 54 Mich. 132, 53 Am. Rep. 800.

Or letters filed with an application for the issuing of the saloon license. State v. Williams, 41 N. J. L. 332.

But under Michigan Laws 1887, chap. 313, requiring that druggists' books recording the sales of liquor shall be open to the inspection of the public, a private person is not entitled to a mandamus for such inspection where he does not show any peculiar interest in such inspection. Thomas v. Hamilton (Mich.) July 5, 1894.

An inspection of the books of the corporation in a prosecution for granting a license to ale-house keepers was refused as a defendant could not be compelled to criminate himself. Rex v. Cornelius, 2 Strange, 1210. See also May v. Gwynne, 4 Barn. & Ald. 301; Rex v. Cadogan, 1 Dowl. & R. 550, 5 Barn. & Ald. 902; King v. Buckingham, 8 Barn. & C. 375, 2 Mann. & R. 412; Rex v. Sheriff of Chester, 1 Chitty, 479.

VII. Patent records.

A commissioner of patents will not be required by mandamus to furnish copies of pending application for patents or papers connected therewith. United States v. Commissioner of Patents, 8 Mackey, 223.

And search through the files of the secret archives of the patent office for abandoned cases was refused. United States v. Commissioners of Patents, 62 Pat. Off. Gaz. 1968.

But in United States v. Hall, 1 L. R. A. 733, 7 Mackey, 14, it was held that the commissioner was required to furnish certified copies of rejected applications after patents had been abandoned.

In Boyden v. Burke, 55 U. S. 14 How. 575, 14 L. ed. 543, it was held that every person who makes a demand of the commissioner in a respectful manner is entitled to copies of patents.

Cases in regard to the right to obtain copies by paying for the same have not been included, except in the case of patents, neither have cases as to the right to copy records to be used in an action for malicious prosecution.

I. T.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

George E. HART, Respt.,

v.

NIAGARA FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY et al., Appls.

(.....Wash.....)

1. An insurance company cannot deny that one sent out by it to solicit business for it is its agent, although the policy subsequently issued provides that no person "unless authorized in writing" shall be deemed its agent.
2. A provision on a slip of paper pasted on the face of an insurance policy and having no connection with the warranties expressed therein, that a watchman shall be employed by the insured to be constantly on the premises while the mill is not in operation, does not release the company from liability for a loss which is not due to a failure to keep the watchman.
3. An instruction in an action on an insurance policy that the jury should be satisfied by a "clear" preponderance of proof that plaintiff burned the buildings before finding the fact is not misleading in connection with an instruction that the action is a civil one and it is not required to establish the facts beyond a reasonable doubt, but only by a fair preponderance of proof.

(October 23, 1894.)

APPEAL by defendant Niagara Fire Insurance Company from a judgment of the Superior Court for Pierce County, in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a policy of fire insurance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mezars, Crowley, Sullivan & Grosscup, for appellants:

Even in cases where the party procuring the insurance was the local agent of the company issuing the policy, the courts have, under the provisions of a policy like the one in question, considerably limited the general rule as laid down in the case of Mesterman v. Home Mut. Ins. Co. 5 Wash. 524.

New York L. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519, 528, 29 L. ed. 984, 987; Rohrbach v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 62 N. Y. 47, 20 Am. Rep. 451; Richardson v. Maine Ins. Co. 46 Me. 894, 74 Am. Dec. 459; Ryan v. World Mut. L. Ins. Co. 41 Conn. 168, 19 Am. Rep. 490; Cox v. Aetna Ins. Co. 29 Ind. 586; Atlantic Ins. Co. v. Carlin, 58 Md. 886; Wood v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 816; Jeffries v. Economical Mut. L. Ins. Co. 89 U. S. 22 Wall. 47, 23 L. ed. 833; Abbott v. Shawmut Mut. F. Ins. Co. 8 Allen, 215.

The policy is a unilateral contract and its acceptance by plaintiff operates as an assent to the conditions intended to bind him.

McWilliams v. Cascade Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 7 Wash. 48; Moore v. State Ins. Co. 73 Iowa,

NOTE.—On the question when an insurance agent is the agent of the insured, see note to Michigan Pipe Co. v. Michigan Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (Mich.) 20 L. R. A. 277.
27 L. R. A.

414; Reeve v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 23 La. Ann. 219; Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. v. Petty, 31 Fla. 399; Swan v. Watertown F. Ins. Co. 96 Pa. 87; McFetridge v. Phœnix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn, 84 Wis 200; Richardson v. Maine Ins. Co. supra; American Ins. Co. v. Neiberger, 74 Mo. 163; Beck v. Hibernia Ins. Co. of Ohio, 44 Md. 95; Baltimore F. Ins. Co. v. Loney, 20 Md. 87; American Ins. Co. v. Barnett, 73 Mo. 364; Catron v. Tennessee Ins. Co. 6 Humph. 176; Fuller v. Madison Mut. Ins. Co. 36 Wis. 599; Bonneville v. Western Assur. Co. 68 Wis. 298; Quinlan v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 133 N. Y. 856; Wineland v. New Haven Security Ins. Co. 53 Md. 277; Crescent Ins. Co. v. Camp, 64 Tex. 521; 2 Wood, Fire Ins. § 532.

The language of the policy, that the assured should keep a watchman constantly, night and day, when the mill was idle and not in operation, is plain and unambiguous. The insured, at the time he takes the risk, has a right to fix the conditions upon which he assumes the risk, and when the insured accepts his policy he is bound by all the conditions which are required to be performed by him during the continuance of the risk.

Blumer v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 45 Wis. 622, 49 Wis. 585, 83 Am. Rep. 880; Rankin v. Amazon Ins. Co. 89 Cal. 203; Glendale Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Protection Ins. Co. 21 Conn. 19, 54 Am. Dec. 309; Sheldon v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 22 Conn. 235, 58 Am. Dec. 420; Wilson v. Hampden F. Ins. Co. 4 R. I. 159; Ripley v. Aetna Ins. Co. 80 N. Y. 136, 86 Am. Dec. 362; First Nat. Bank of Ballston Spa v. Insurance Co. of North America, 50 N. Y. 45.

The rule is applied not only to provisions relating to watchmen, but to every sort of promissory conditions.

Commercial Ins. Co. v. Mehlman, 48 Ill. 313, 95 Am. Dec. 543; Security Ins. Co. v. Fay, 23 Mich. 467, 7 Am. Rep. 670; Dewees v. Manhattan Ins. Co. 84 N. J. L. 247; Lamburg v. German F. Ins. Co. of Peoria (Iowa) 23 L. R. A. 99; Galveston Ins. Co. v. Long, 51 Tex. 89; Wustum v. City F. Ins. Co. 15 Wis. 182; Cerf v. Home Ins. Co. 44 Cal. 320, 18 Am. Rep. 165; Stout v. City F. Ins. Co. 12 Iowa, 371, 79 Am. Dec. 539; Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Morgan (Va.) Nov. 9, 1893; Havens v. Home Ins. Co. 111 Ind. 90, 60 Am. Rep. 686; Poor v. Humboldt Ins. Co. 125 Mass. 274, 28 Am. Rep. 228; Western Assur. Co. v. McPike, 62 Miss. 740; Cook v. Continental Ins. Co. 70 Mo. 610, 35 Am. Rep. 438; Bennett v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 50 Conn. 420, 51 Conn. 504; Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Jacobs, 56 Tex. 866; Cedar Rapids Ins. Co. v. Shump, 16 Ill. App. 248; Thomas v. Fame Ins. Co. 108 Ill. 91; Mead v. Northwestern Ins. Co. 7 N. Y. 580; Westfall v. Hudson River F. Ins. Co. 13 N. Y. 290; Ferree v. Oxford Fire & Life Ins. Annuity & Trust Co. 87 Pa. 373, 5 Am. Rep. 496; Frost's Detroit Lumber & Wooden Ware Works v. Millers & Mfrs. Mut. Ins. Co. 87 Minn. 800; Mack v. Rochester German Ins. Co. of Rochester, N. Y. 106 N. Y. 560; Kyte v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. 3 L. R. A. 508, 149 Mass. 116; Thomson v. Weems, 9 App. Cas. 671; Imperial F. Ins. Co. of London,

Eng. v. Coos County, 151 U. S. 452, 38 L. ed. 281; May, Ins. § 156; Fabyan v. Union Mut. Ins. Co. 38 N. H. 208; Moore v. Phenix Ins. Co. 63 N. H. 240.

A similar rule is applied in life insurance cases.

Müller v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 81 Iowa, 216, 7 Am. Rep. 122; Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Müller, 39 Ind. 475; Co-Operative L. Assn. v. Leflore, 53 Miss. 1; Baumgart v. Modern Woodmen of America, 85 Wis. 546.

The same rule applies in marine insurance. Goicocoea v. Louisiana State Ins. Co. 6 Mart. (N. S.) 51, 17 Am. Dec. 175; McLoon v. Commercial Mut. Ins. Co. 100 Mass. 472, 1 Am. Rep. 129; Imperial F. Ins. Co. of London, Eng. v. Coos County, supra.

The courts do not hold that where the language is plain and unambiguous and the condition is violated that the insured can recover notwithstanding the breach.

1 Wood, Fire Ins. § 179.

Messrs. Snell & Johnson for respondent.

Messrs. Parsons, Correll & Parsons for Pacific National Bank.

Dunbar, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought in the superior court of Pierce county by the plaintiffs to recover from the defendant the Niagara Fire Insurance Company the sum of $940, plaintiffs claiming that amount due them upon a policy of insurance issued by the defendant company to George E. Hart, and assigned by him to the copartnership of Hart & Jewell, the property covered by the insurance being certain mill property situated near the city of Tacoma. The interest of the Pacific National Bank as plaintiff in the suit arises by virtue of the chattel mortgage made by the copartnership firm of Hart & Jewell to secure the payment of $4,000 to the bank, the policy of insurance providing that the loss should be paid to the plaintiff bank. There was also other insurance upon the property, placed in other companies, making the total insurance of the company $10,000. The policy of insurance was issued on the 17th day of October, 1892. On the 18th day of October, the interest of Hart was transferred to the copartnership firm of Hart & Jewell. The mill was burned on the 30th day of November, 1892, while the policy of insurance was in full force, if it had not been forfeited. Plaintiffs alleged their loss, $10,500; alleged due notice of the fire, and loss thereby, to the defendant company, in conformity with all the terms and conditions of the policy; alleged that they performed and carried out all the terms and conditions required of them in said policy of insurance; that proof of loss was furnished and received by the corporation and that sixty days had elapsed since said proof was furnished, etc. Subsequent to the commencement of the action, Hiram Jewell, whose name appeared in the original action, upon motion, was dismissed as one of the plaintiffs; whereupon plaintiff Hart and the plaintiff Pacific National Bank filed a supplemental complaint, making said Jewell a defendant. As this action of the court does not seem to affect the questions in controversy, we will not further notice it.

37 L. R. A.

The policy was an ordinary insurance policy, and contained the usual terms and conditions of such policies. The particular provisions of the policy which the defendant claimed in its answer and on the trial of the cause to have been violated are as follows: "(1) This entire policy, unless otherwise provided by agreement, indorsed hereon or added hereto, shall be void if the hazard be increased by any means within the knowledge of the insured . . . or if the interest of the insured be other than unconditional and sole ownership, or if the subject of insurance be a building on ground not owned by the insured in fee simple. (2) It is understood and agreed that, during such time said mill is idle or not in operation, a watchman shall be employed by the insured to be in and upon the premises constantly, day and night." It eventuated that the mill insured was built on leased land, the same being school land, which was not subject to sale, but which had been leased by the respondents from the county commissioners of Pierce county. It is denied that the policy was issued by the company with knowledge of the location and situation of the property, except as the same was shown in the description in the policy itself; denied that they had any knowledge or information as to whether the plaintiffs, at the time of the fire, had an interest in the property described in the policy to an amount exceeding the aggregate of the amount of all sums mentioned in the complaint, or any other amount; denied that they had ever made a contract of insurance with the plaintiffs, or either of them, except upon the conditions and rules of the policy annexed to the complaint; denied that the mill was burned without any fault of the plaintiffs; that any sum whatever was due from them to the plaintiffs; and denied that the plaintiffs had performed all the conditions and requirements of the policy; affirmatively averred the conditions of the policy mentioned above; and further averred that the fire by which the property mentioned in the complaint was destroyed was kindled, or caused to be kindled, by the plaintiff Hart, intentionally, for the unlawful purpose of thereby procuring from the defendant and his other insurers the indemnity by them stipulated to be paid under the terms and conditions of the several policies; alleged that one Joseph F. Smith was, at the time the policy was issued, the owner of an undivided one half of the property insured, and continued to be such owner until November, 1892. The reply averred that the person who received the application for the policy was, before said policy was issued, specifically and fully told, informed, and apprised of the fact, and fully knew that the property stood on ground owned and held by the state of Washington as school land, etc., and that the policy was issued with the knowledge of such facts; and alleged that it was the fault, neglect, and wrongdoing of said defendant in drawing the said policy of insurance that he did not state that the interest of said Hart was a leasehold interest. The other affirmative matters in the answer were denied by the reply. Upon this state of pleadings the case went to trial. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs for the sum of $940.79, with interest and costs.

There are three main propositions of law discussed in this case:

First. Did the court err in instructing the jury that the defendant company was estopped from denying the ownership of Hart in the ground on which the mill property insured was located, if, prior to the issuance of the policy, no questions were asked of Hart relating to the title of the ground, and no references were made by him as to the title? It is conceded by the appellant that, under the undisputed testimony in this case, this instruction would be sustained by the rule announced by this court, in Mesterman v. Home Mut. Ins. Co., 5 Wash. 524, and that Hansen would be considered the agent of the defendant company were it not for the fact that the policy contained a provision that, "in any matter relating to this insurance, no person, unless authorized in writing, shall be deemed the agent of this company;" but that, by reason of the incorporation of this provision in the policy, Hansen became the agent of the insured, instead of the insurer. If, as was said by the court in Mesterman v. Home Mut. Ins. Co., supra, the better reason is in favor of the rule that an insurance company is estopped from asserting the invalidity of its policy at the time it was issued for the violation of any of the conditions of said policy, or the application thereof, if, at the time it was so insured, the fact of such violation was known to the company or its duly authorized agent, the respective rights of the parties ought not to be changed by any mere form of words which is placed in the policy, when the facts and the relations of the parties remain exactly the same. If, under the legal, well-established, and universally understood definition of "agency," the solicitor is in law and in fact the agent of the company, it should not be allowed to escape its responsibilities by a simple device of words which flatly contradict the true meaning of the contract. It is true enough that it is in no sense the duty of the courts to make contracts for parties, but it is equally true that it is their duty to prevent the evasion of honest responsibilities by the interjection into one-sided contracts of statements which, in a hidden manner, when technically construed, serve only to destroy the honestly intended and mutually understood conditions of the contract. If, in other words, the solicitor is actually the agent of the company, sent out by it to solicit business for it, receiving his instructions from the company, receiving his pay from the company, using blank forms prescribed by the company, and liable to discharge by the company, it would be a travesty on the administration of justice, which would shock the sense of every right-thinking person, to allow a company to escape a just responsibility by interjecting a provision in a policy denying this patent fact; especially in a case of this kind, where there was no written application, which is the document to which the attention of the assured is especially called, the one which he signs, and the one for which he ought to be held most strictly accountable. Even when a written application is made, the courts have almost universally held that where the assured gave proper answers to the questions, and the agent who acted as the scrivener wrote them down falsely, the company could not on that account escape its liability in case of damage. See 2 Wood, Fire Ins. p. 837, and cases cited. What difference would it make in principle, in a case of that kind, to state in the policy that the agent should be considered the agent of the insured instead of the insurer,—a technical statement, of which only a lawyer knows the meaning, and which is incorporated after all the negotiations are completed? This position is not only sound in reason and in morals, but is also well sustained by authority, although it must be regretfully admitted that there is some conflict of authority on this question. In discussing the question, the court, in Kausal v. Minnesota Farmers Mut. F. Ins. Assn., 81 Minn. 17, 47 Am. Rep. 776, after stating the rule that the agents of insurance companies authorized to procure applications for insurance, and to forward them to the companies, must be deemed the agents of the companies, among other things, says: "After the courts had generally established this doctrine, many of the insurance companies, in order to obviate it, adopted the ingenious device of inserting a provision in the policy that the application, by whomsoever made, whether by the agent of the company or any other person, shall be deemed the act of the insured, and not of the insurer. But, as has been well remarked by another court, 'there is no magic in mere words to change the real into the unreal. A device of words cannot be imposed upon a court in place of an actuality of facts.' If corporations are astute in contriving such provisions, courts will take care that they shall not be used as instruments of fraud or injustice. It would be a stretch of legal principles to hold that a person dealing with an agent, apparently clothed with authority to act for his principal in the matter in hand, could be affected by notice, given after the negotiations were completed, that the party with whom he had dealt should be deemed transformed from the agent of one party into the agent of the other. To be efficacious, such notice should be given before the negotiations are completed. The application precedes the policy, and the insured cannot be presumed to know that any such provision will be inserted in the latter. To hold that, by a stipulation unknown to the insured at the time he made the application, and when he relied upon the fact that the agent was acting for the company, he could be held responsible for the mistakes of such agent, would be to impose burdens upon the insured which he never anticipated. Hence we think that, if the agent was the agent of the company in the matter by making out and receiving the application, he cannot be converted into the agent of the insured by merely calling him such in the policy subsequently issued. Neither can any mere form of words wipe out the fact that the insured truthfully informed the insurer, through its agent, of all matters pertaining to the application at the time it was made. We are aware that in so holding we are placing ourselves in conflict with the views of some eminent courts. But the conclusion we have reached is not without authority to sustain it, and is, as we believe, sound in principle, and in accordance with public policy,"—citing Wood, Fire Ins. § 139; May, Ins. § 140; Commercial Ins. Co. v. Ives, 56 Ill. 403; Gans v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 43 Wis. 108, 28 Am. Rep. 535; Columbia Ins. Co. v. Cooper, 50 Pa. 331. This case is cited by Wood on Insurance (vol. 2, p. 538), and the same principle is announced in many other cases.

Appellant's second objection is, we think, also untenable. The instruction of the court on that head was as follows: "And if you further find from the evidence that, at the time of the loss, the interest of the plaintiff Hart and Hiram Jewell in the property insured was sole and unconditional ownership, excepting as to the interest of the Pacific National Bank, then the defendant company is estopped from urging that defense, and the conditions of the policy with reference thereto would be immaterial." It will be seen that, under the instruction of the court, the company could only be estopped in case the jury found that Hart and Jewell were the sole and unconditional owners of the property insured, excepting the interest of the Pacific National Bank. If that were true, of course the company would be estopped from urging the defense of nonownership; and the jury, under this instruction, could, and doubtless did, determine the controversy between Hart and Smith in relation to the ownership of the property insured, and evidently found on that proposition in favor of Hart.

The third contention is that the court erred in modifying the request of the defendant to charge the jury that if they believed from the evidence that if, at any time during the existence of the policy, the insured failed to keep a watchman when the mill was not in operation, plaintiffs could not recover, by adding, "unless you further find from the evidence that said fire was not due to or the result of their failure to keep such watchman," the provision in the policy being: "It is understood and agreed that, during such time as said mill is idle or not in operation, a watchman shall be employed by the insured to be in and upon the premises constantly, day and night." The contention of the appellant is that the terms of the policy constitute the measure of the insurer's liability, and, in order to recover, the insured must show himself within these terms; in other words, that compliance of the insured with the terms of the contract is a condition precedent to the right to recover. The respondents seek to draw a distinction between a contract with an accompanying provision that, if a certain agreement is broken, it shall work a forfeiture of the contract, and an agreement without such provision, urging that in this instance, if it had been the intention of the parties to the contract that a breach of the agreement should work a forfeiture, they would have expressly said so in the contract. The investigation of this question has been somewhat perplexing, owing to the fact that the authorities cited are not exactly in point; and the adjudicated cases which we have been able to investigate on our own motion in but very few instances decide this identical point. Most of the cases cited by appellant are cases where representations have been made in the surveys or applications, and the question is discussed whether such representations are continuing representations or promissory representations or warranties; but in most of them it appears that there was an express stipulation, either in the application or the policy, that the violation of the agreement should work a forfeiture. Thus, in Blumer v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 45 Wis. 623, in the written application for insurance of the mill against fire, the applicant, in answering the question whether the mill was ever left alone, and whether there was a watchman in it during the night, said: "Not a regular watchman, but one or two hands sleep in the mill." By a stipulation in the same instrument, it was held that the statements were a full, true, and just exposition of all the facts and circumstances, and were offered as a basis of the insurance requested, and were made a special warranty; and the court held that, "in view of these stipulations, the answer above recited was an express warranty by the assured that one or two of his employes lodged in the mill each night, and was also a promissory and continuing undertaking which bound him to a substantial compliance with its terms during the life of the policy." The case of Blumer v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 48 Wis. 535, 38 Am. Rep. 580, was on the same state of facts. The question does not seem to be discussed at all in appellant's third citation,—Rankan v. Amazon Ins. Co. 39 Cal. 208. In that case the court simply held that, under the undisputed testimony concerning the breach, it was error for the court to submit the question to the jury. In Glendale Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Protection Ins. Co., 21 Conn. 19, 54 Am. Dec. 309, one of the conditions of the policy was that the survey and description of the property should be deemed a part of the policy and a warranty, thus stipulating the existence of the fact under discussion in this case. In Sheldon v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 23 Conn. 235, 58 Am. Dec. 420, the main point decided was that the reference to the survey in the policy conceded it to be an entire contract; but the court decided in that case that where one of the interrogatories was, "Is there a watchman in the mill during the night?" to which the answer was, "There is a watchman nights," the answer was not a warranty, but a representation material to the risk, to be substantially kept and performed. In Wilson v. Hampden F. Ins. Co., 4 R. I. 159, the court was only construing what the parties themselves had stipulated to be a warranty. This plainly appears from the language of the opinion, on page 170, where the court says: "Considering every answer in this application, as the parties have expressly made it, a warranty, we have not asked ourselves how material the answers in question may be to the risk, since that has been already determined by the parties for themselves. They have made the truth of each and all of the answers in this application a condition precedent to the right of the assured to recover on this policy; and we have therefore confined ourselves to the humbler office of construing their language, instead of rising to the consideration of the materiality of the facts about which they have chosen to employ it." Thus, it will be seen that the question at issue here was there confessed, and the argument of the court was based on that confession. And so with most of the cases cited by appellant. While it does not always directly appear, in most of the cases it can be plainly inferred, that, either in the application or policy, there has been a positive assertion of a warranty. The citations made by appellant, in its reply brief, from Wood on Insurance, seem to be in point so far as many of the statements made by the author are concerned; but, when the cases upon which the author bases the statement made in the text are traced out, they are nearly all found to contain a stipulation that the policy should be void if the conditions stipulated are not true, or are not maintained, as the case may be. It must be admitted, however, that some few of the cases seem to maintain appellant's position, notably Ripley v. Aina Ins. Co. 80 N. Y. 186, 86 Am. Dec. 362, and Firat Nat. Bank of Ballston Spa v. Insurance Co. of North America, 50 N. Y. 45. It does not appear from an investigation of those cases that any substantial warranties were made, and the definition by Wood of a "promissory warranty," cited in appellant's reply brief, is based upon these two cases, which are cited by that authority. There are also some cases which sustain respondents' contention, although, as we have said before, this identical question has been seldom adjudicated.

It will be observed that in the main body of the policy in the case at bar there is no agreement concerning a watchman. That provision appears on a small slip of paper pasted on the face of the policy. It does not appear with, and has no logical connection with, or relation to, the warranties expressed in the policy. It is especially stipulated that, if any of the conditions provided for between lines 7 and 30 are violated, the policy shall be deemed void. With line 31 the policy begins to recite regulations and conditions innumerable, closing with line 112; but in none of the conditions mentioned after line 30 is there a provision for a forfeiture, although some of them are probably as important as the condition concerning the watchman. Where, then, in the body of the policy, does this detached condition regarding the watchman logically belong? What more ground have we to conclude that it was the intention that it should be located above line 30 than that it should be located after line 30, or than after line 112, which is the last line of the policy? If it had been regularly incorporated in the policy anywhere after line 30, it could not possibly be construed that it was intended to be one of the things warranted, for the things warranted have been classified and specially mentioned; and, under the rule of "expressio unius est exclusio alterius," it could not be construed to be a warranty. It is a stronger case than if it stood alone for construction, for the presumption is in harmony with the maxim above expressed. If it had been the intention to make it a warranty, it would have been mentioned with the other warranties.

Again, the rule is universal that statements contained in the application will not be construed to be warranties if elsewhere in the contract there can be found reason to suppose that such was not the clear understanding of the parties. Forfeitures are not favored by the law, and constructive warranties which warrant a forfeiture are most strongly construed against the party for whose interest they are inserted in a contract. This rule is laid down by May on Insurance, and in fact by all other authorities. The court will hold a stipulation, whether contained in the policy or the application, to be a representation, rather than a warranty, when there is room for doubt or ambiguity of language or otherwise. It is true there is no ambiguity of language here, so far as the condition to be performed is concerned; but there is ambiguity of arrangement, which leads to grave doubts whether it was the intention to make the performance of the condition a condition precedent to the right of recovery; and, whenever such a doubt is raised, it must, according to all authority, be resolved in favor of the assured, and the existence of a provision for a forfeiture cannot be established by inference or conjecture. And this is right, and in perfect consonance with the construction of the contract generally. In an ordinary contract no damages can be recovered by reason of a breach if the breach does not result in damage. In this case, if the rule contended for by appellant should prevail, if the respondents had failed or neglected to keep a watchman for one day, and the mill had not burned for a month afterwards, and it positively appeared that the fire was in no way attributable to such neglect or breach, the company could escape its liability by reason of a breach which was entirely immaterial, and which in no way contributed to the damage. This would be a hard and unjust condition; and while it may be true that the insurance company would have a right to make a contract to this effect, and, if such contract were made, that it would be the duty of the court to enforce it, regardless of its hard conditions, yet, as we have before said, it is the duty of the court to see that such contract has actually been made, and it must be established by clear and convincing testimony. In other words, it must appear from the whole contract, considering both the language and its arrangement, that such was the intention. As is said by May on Insurance (vol. 1, § 164): "They are not necessarily warranties because they appear on the face of the policy. In order to have the force of a warranty, the statement must, indeed, constitute a part of the contract; but it by no means follows that every statement which constitutes a part of the contract is therefore a warranty. Whether they are so or not will depend upon the form of expression used, the apparent purpose of the insertion, and sometimes upon the connection or relation to other parts of the instrument." In Goddard v. East Texas F. Ins. Co., 67 Tex. 69, 60 Am. Rep. 1, the following clause appeared on a piece of paper different from that on which the policy of insurance to which it was attached was printed, and was attached by mutilage to a blank space on the face of the policy: "It is understood and agreed that the assured shall keep a set of books, showing a record of his or their business, including all purchases and sales, both for cash and on credit, as well as a copy of his or their last inventory, warranted to be kept in an iron safe at night." The court in that case said that "the place on the policy where the clause was thus pasted was in the midst of a sentence on the face of the policy, with which it had no proper connection, and which purported to contain the promises entered into by the insurance company, and not those made by the insured. The existence of the clause was not known to the insured. In a suit upon the policy, in which it appeared that the stipulations regarding the iron safe were not observed, there being no evidence of fraud committed by the insured, or of resulting injury to the insurer from a failure to keep the safe, it was held: (1) That the clause could, at most, be regarded as a representation, and not as a clause of warranty. (2) The method of attaching the clause to the policy precluded it from being invested with any higher dignity than a mere representation. (3) Words purporting to be a condition on which a policy is issued must be set forth in such a place and in such a manner in the policy as to leave no doubt that they were so intended, and words inserted promiscuously therein, having no connection with the other conditions of the policy, although the word 'condition' is used, will not be treated as a condition of the policy,—citing Kingsley v. New England Mut. F. Ins. Co. 8 Cush. 398." It will thus be seen that the case above cited was identical with the case at bar. The case of Au Sable Lumber Co. v. Detroit Mfrs. Mut. F. Ins. Co., 89 Mich. 407, also sustains the contention of respondents.

The appellant insists that the argument that a party who makes a contract containing a continuing promise to do a particular thing can with impunity violate the promise because the contract does not contain a clause expressly stating that a failure to keep the promise shall render the contract void is too absurd to merit discussion. This would be true if any such an argument were made, but the criticism made by appellant would apply to the breach of any contract. Of course, if a party violates his contract, he does it at his peril, and is liable for any damages which may flow from it; but the contention of the respondents simply is that he should not be liable for damages which did not flow from it. As this is a new question in this state, we feel justified, under the authorities, in deciding it in consonance with our views of right, and therefore hold that no error was committed by the court in the instruction complained of, as the instruction placed the burden upon the plaintiff to show that the breach did not contribute to the loss.

Appellant also urges that the court erred in instructing the jury as asked by plaintiffs' request No. 1, the error of the court consisting in the use of the word "clear." The court instructed the jury as follows: "The burden of proof is on the defendant, but before you can so find, you should be satisfied by a clear preponderance of proof that he did so burn said buildings." Had this instruction been all the instruction given to the jury on this subject, there might be some ground for the apprehension of the appellant that the jury would conclude that the court was invoking the rule in a criminal case that this fact would have to be established beyond a reasonable doubt. Even if we consider that the court had erred in this instruction, the instructions asked for by the defendants which were given by the court, it seems to us, place the question of the sufficiency of the proof in as strong a light before the jury as the instruction given by the court which is complained of by the defendants. The seventh instruction asked by the defendants was as follows: "In order to show fraud, or show a fraudulent act by proof, the proof of the facts and circumstances must be such as will convince the mind of an ordinarily prudent person that the party charged is guilty of such charge; and the facts and circumstances must be such as not to be susceptible of any natural or reasonable explanation consistently with the honesty and integrity of the person charged therewith in respect to the matters in issue." Instruction No. 8, asked by the defendants, was as follows: "This is a civil action, and it is not required in a civil action to establish the facts beyond a reasonable doubt, as in a criminal case, but a fair preponderance of proof is all that is required on the part of the one who attempts to establish any given condition of affairs." Thus, as we have said above, putting the construction on instruction No. 8 as qualified by No. 7 asked by the defendants, there is certainly no room for them to raise objections to the instruction actually given by the court. But without considering the action of the defendants and the instructions asked by them, when we take into consideration the whole of the instruction on this point, which was as follows: "This is a civil action, and it is not required in a civil action to establish the facts beyond a reasonable doubt, as in a criminal case, but a fair preponderance of proof is all that is required on the part of one who attempts to establish any given condition of affairs,"—and the further charge that, "as to the defense that George E. Hart burned, or caused to be burned, the buildings in question, that the burden of proof is upon the defendant, and that, before you can so find, you should be satisfied by a clear preponderance of the evidence that he burned his buildings, or caused them to be burned," we think the idea is removed that the jury in any way got the impression that any greater amount of proof should be required than that required in a civil action. The court had already told them that it was not required in a civil action that the facts should be established beyond a reasonable doubt, as in a criminal case, and had also informed them that the burden of proof was upon the defendant. It seems to us that, in connection with the instruction given above, the phrase "clear preponderance of the evidence" amounts to nothing more than a preponderance of evidence, or a distinct preponderance of evidence, which would, of course, be necessary to a verdict, as it must be a distinct preponderance before the preponderance can be ascertained. Construing the instructions together, we think the jury was not misled by the instruction.

The claims that errors were committed on the part of the court in the admission of certain testimony we do not think are substantiated by the record. So far as the further contention is concerned,—that the verdict of the jury was contrary to the evidence,—we think there was sufficient testimony on all the points controverted, including the question of the watchman, to sustain the verdict.

The judgment will therefore be affirmed.

Anders and Stiles, JJ., concur.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

E. B. THOMPSON

v.

T. H. JACKSON et al., Appts.

(.....Iowa.....)

1. The jurisdictional amount for an appeal exists where a judgment for the necessary amount can be rendered consistently with the pleadings, although it includes exemplary damages.
2. Jurisdiction can be collaterally attacked in an action for wrongful acts in executing a judgment.
3. Jurisdiction of a justice of the peace in Iowa over a nonresident is not obtained with- out any service in the township where the suit was brought.

4. A justice of the peace, like judges of the superior courts, is protected from personal liability for judicial acts in excess of his jurisdiction, if he acted in good faith believing he had jurisdiction.
5. A constable is not liable for executing a justice's judgment merely because it was in excess of jurisdiction, if the justice was not liable.

(January 22, 1895.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Palo Alto County, in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to re-

NOTE.—The above case is in line with the trend of judicial thought in its disposition to break down the distinction as to the liability of superior and inferior judges for acts done in excess of jurisdiction (see Austin v. Vrooman (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 188, and note). But there is grave doubt as to the correctness of the decision. Judges whether of superior or inferior jurisdiction are not exempt from liability for their acts if they act entirely without jurisdiction.

In Bradley v. Fisher, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 335, 20 L. ed. 646, the court says: "Where there is clearly no jurisdiction over the subject-matter any authority exercised is a usurped authority, and for the exercise of such authority when the want of jurisdiction is known to the judge no excuse is permissible."

In Calder v. Halket, 3 Moore, P. C. C. 75, Parke, B., says, in effect English judges when they act wholly without jurisdiction have no privilege.

In Houlden v. Smith, 14 Q. B. 841, 19 L. J. Q. B. 170, it is decided that a judge of a court of record is answerable for an act done by his command when he has no jurisdiction and is not misinformed as to the facts on which jurisdiction depends; thus where a person living out of the territorial jurisdiction of a county court was committed for contempt in not obeying a summons from such court, the judge was held liable.

In Lange v. Benedict, 78 N. Y. 87, 29 Am. Rep. 80, one of the grounds of deciding in favor of the judge was that "his act was not without the inception of jurisdiction."

In Gwynn v. Poole, Lutw. fol. 1566, it is said: "Other inferior jurisdictions are limited in respect 27 L. R. A.

to place, as the jurisdiction of justices of peace in relation to the poor is limited to making rates for the relief of them in their several parishes, but if they tax the parish of S. to the relief of the poor of the parish of D. that is an apparent excess of their jurisdiction and the justice and the officer are liable to an action." "And of that sort also are inferior courts in corporations where the judge and officer are liable or not with this difference: where it appears or may reasonably appear to them that the cause arose out of their jurisdiction [territorially] and yet notwithstanding they proceed they are both liable to an action; but it is otherwise where it doth not appear or cannot reasonably appear whether the cause arose out of their jurisdiction or not; for there no action will lie against them unless they proceed after they are informed or know that the cause of action arose out of their jurisdiction."

In THOMPSON v. JACKSON the court says that "no jurisdiction was acquired by the service." Why? Not, it would seem, because the service was defective in an action of which the subject-matter was within the jurisdiction of the justice, but because the statute gave the justice no jurisdiction of the subject-matter in this particular case unless defendant was served in the township where suit was brought. If this is true then the justice usurped jurisdiction and within the authorities above cited is not protected. It is to be regretted that the court did not discuss this phase of the question and decide whether the justice was acting without jurisdiction of the subject-matter or simply without jurisdiction of defendant.

H. F. F.

cover damages for alleged trespass in assuming jurisdiction of a cause of action, entering judgment and proceeding to levy upon and sell some of plaintiff's property, in satisfaction thereof, when there was no jurisdiction in the cause. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. C. E. Cohoon and B. E. Kelly, for appellants:

The justice had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action.

See Auspach v. Ferguson, 71 Iowa, 144.

But having judicially determined that he had jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, though such judicial determination was by him made erroneously, before he entered judgment, the question is, Can he be held to respond in damages to Thompson for such erroneous holding on a question of law while acting in his judicial capacity?

It was not a case of no service, but of insufficient service. He had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and his jurisdiction was co-extensive with his county, and he was therefore not acting without any jurisdiction whatever.

Bonsall v. Isett, 14 Iowa, 312; Cooper v. Sunderland, 3 Iowa, 114, 66 Am. Dec. 52; Ballinger v. Tarbell, 16 Iowa, 492, 85 Am. Dec. 527; Morrow v. Weed, 4 Iowa, 77, 66 Am. Dec. 122; Boker v. Chapline, 12 Iowa, 204; Pratt v. Western Stage Co. 27 Iowa, 364; Rogers v. Loop, 51 Iowa, 48.

The defendant T. H. Jackson is not liable herein, having had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, whether he had or had not jurisdiction of the person of the defendant Thompson or not.

Bradley v. Fisher, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 835, 20 L. ed. 646; Alleo v. Reece, 39 Fed. Rep. 341; Cooley, Torts, 420; Scott v. Stansfield, L. R. 8 Exch. 220.

No action will lie against a judge for any acts done or words spoken in his judicial capacity in a court of justice.

Scott v. Stansfield, L. R. 8 Exch. 220; Henke v. McCord, 55 Iowa, 878.

A judicial officer acting within his jurisdiction enjoys absolute immunity from liability in a civil action for a mistake of law or error in judgment.

3 Hilliard, Torts, 101; Cooley, Torts, 408.

In note to page 409, Cooley on Torts, it is said: "There are dicta in some cases, that a justice is civilly responsible when he acts maliciously or corruptly, but they are not well founded, and the express decisions are against them."

Jones v. Brown, 54 Iowa, 74; Green v. Talbot, 36 Iowa, 499; Hove v. Mason, 14 Iowa, 510; Gouging v. Gougill, 12 Iowa, 495; Wasson v. Mitchell, 18 Iowa, 153; Lancaster v. Lane, 19 Ill. 242; Adkins v. Brewer, 5 Cow. 206, 15 Am. Dec. 364; Pratt v. Garäner, 2 Cush. 63, 48 Am. Dec. 852; Yates v. Lansing, 5 Johns. 282, 9 Johns. 395, 6 Am. Dec. 290.

When an officer receives from any court a warrant or execution regular upon its face commanding him to execute it by doing certain acts, no matter what any outsider or interested persons say to him as to whether the court had or had not the legal right to issue the same, it is such ministerial officer's business to execute it.

Bishop, Non-Cont. L. 1889 ed. § 211, p. 85; Henke v. McCord, 55 Iowa, 886; 3 Hilliard, Torts, 125; Clarke v. May, 2 Gray, 410, 61 Am. Dec. 470; Cooley, Torts, pp. 465-467.

There is no showing that either of the defendants acted maliciously or vindictively, but simply did what any man under like circumstances would do in a like case.

Throop, Pub. Off. § 759, p. 720; Baker v. Sheehan, 29 Minn. 235; Chase v. Ingalls, 97 Mass. 524.

Messrs. Soper, Allen & Morling, for appellee:

The official acts of a justice of the peace depend for their validity on their accordance with the statute from which his powers are derived.

Cook v. United States, 1 G. Greene, 42.

That the justice had no jurisdiction in the suit in question is settled by Meunch v. Breitenbach, 41 Iowa, 527, and Auspach v. Ferguson, 71 Iowa, 144.

The defect in the justice's proceedings was not in the manner of service but in the justice's jurisdiction.

The judgment having been rendered without jurisdiction was a nullity and subject to collateral attack.

Reed v. Wright, 2 G. Greene, 84; Freem. Judgm. 2d ed. §§ 117 et seq.; Risley v. Phenix Bank, 88 N.Y. 887, 88 Am. Rep. 421.

Plaintiff was not bound to appear and raise the question of jurisdiction.

Dunlap v. Cody, 31 Iowa, 268, 7 Am. Rep. 129; Hamilton v. Milhous, 46 Iowa, 74; Freem. Judgm. 2d ed. § 117.

The justice had no jurisdiction to make any determination in the case. He is therefore liable as a trespasser.

Lanpher v. Dewell, 56 Iowa, 153; Horns v. Pudil (Iowa) May 24, 1893; 1 Cooley, Torts, 416, 420; 12 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 868, 400.

If a court acts without jurisdiction its judgments are nullities. They are not voidable but void. They are justification and all persons concerned in executing such judgments or sentences are trespassers.

12 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 400, and authorities cited; Cooley, Torts, 1st ed. § 469; Freem. Judgm. 2d ed. § 117; Freem. Executions, §§ 20, 102. See Merritt v. Reed, 5 Denio, 352; Horns v. Pudil, supra.

An officer making an excessive levy is a trespasser ab initio and liable accordingly.

Cooley, Torts, 1st ed. § 462.

Rothrock, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. The defendant T. H. Jackson was a justice of the peace, and C. B. Jackson was a special constable. A judgment for $2.75 and costs was entered on the docket of said justice against E. B. Thompson, plaintiff herein, and in favor of one Nolan. Execution was issued on the judgment, and it was served by C. B. Jackson, as special constable, by levying upon and selling certain hay in stack, the property of the defendant in execution. This action was brought to recover damages of the defendants, on the ground that the judgment was void for want of jurisdiction to render the same. It is averred in the petition that the hay levied upon was of the value of $44, and that the "levy and sale were excessive." It is also charged in the petition "that said defendants acted in the premises in willful excess and abuse of their authority and of the process of the law, and fraudulently and maliciously and with oppression, and they conspired together in the premises to oppress this plaintiff, and defraud him, and to do damage aforesaid; that the defendants have in their possession the documents, papers, and judgment entry hereinbefore referred to, and the plaintiff is unable to set out copies thereof; wherefore the plaintiff demands judgment against the defendants for $44, actual damages, and $50, exemplary damages, and costs." The judgment on the verdict against T. H. Jackson was for $46.52, and against C. B. Jackson for $10.

The first question presented goes to the jurisdiction of this court to entertain the appeal. It is claimed by appellee that the amount in controversy, as shown by the pleadings, does not exceed $100, and that, as the trial judge did not certify questions for the determination of this court, the appeal should be dismissed. We have set forth part of the petition to show that the plaintiff claimed exemplary damages under proper averments, and demanded $44 actual damages, and $50 exemplary damages. And the petition was afterwards amended by striking from the demand for judgment the sums of $44 and $50, and inserting in lieu thereof the sum of $49 and $150, respectively. So that when the case was tried the plaintiff demanded judgment for $199. The petition was not at any time before or after verdict amended by reducing the amount claimed. The thought of counsel for appellee is that the amount in controversy did not exceed $100 because the recovery of exemplary damages is not a matter of right, but that the amount thereof is left to the discretion of the jury. The defendants denied the averments of the petition charging them with malice and oppression, and the cause was submitted upon pleadings which authorize a judgment for plaintiff for more than $100. It is true it is not the amount named in the prayer of a petition that determines the amount in controversy; that question is settled by the body or charging part of the pleading. Cooper v. Dillon, 56 Iowa, 868. If by the pleadings, and consistently therewith, a judgment might have been recovered for more than $100, the case is appealable, with the certificate required by section 8173 of the Code. Ormsby Bros. v. Nolan, 69 Iowa, 180; Madison v. Spitsnogle, 58 Iowa, 369. There is no doubt that the defendants had the right to appeal the case.

2. It appears from the record that the defendant T. H. Jackson was a country justice of the peace in Lost Island township, Palo Alto county. S. J. Nolan formerly lived in that vicinity, and removed to the state of Montana. He left some verified accounts with said justice of the peace for collection, among which was an account against E. B. Thompson, who resided in said township. He removed across the line of said township into Highland township, in the same county, in November, 1892. Shortly after his removal, Jackson issued an original notice on said account, and delivered it to a constable, and it was served on Thompson in Highland township. The justice made up his docket in proper form, and it shows affirmatively that the original notice was served in Highland township. Thompson made no appearance on the return day, and, as appears by the docket entry, the justice found that he was served with the notice "in the manner required by law in Highland township," and entered a judgment against him on the 10th day of December, 1892. Thompson gave no attention to the matter; and, on the 24th day of the same month, execution was issued, a levy was made, and the property was afterwards sold.

The principal question arises upon the claim that Jackson had no jurisdiction to enter the judgment, and, because of the want of jurisdiction, he and the special constable are liable in damages for executing the judgment. Counsel for appellants contend that the justice had jurisdiction, or, rather, that the question of jurisdiction cannot be raised in a collateral proceeding. We think this position is not well taken. The statute defining the territorial jurisdiction of justices of the peace is not as explicit as it might be made. Section 3507 of the Code provides, in a general way, that the jurisdiction is coextensive with the county unless specially restricted. Section 3509 is as follows: "Suits may in all cases be brought in the township where the plaintiff or defendant, or one of several defendants, resides." Section 3510 provides that suits "may also be brought in any other township of the same county if actual service on one or more of the defendants is made in such township." The plaintiff in the action was a nonresident of the county, and Thompson was not served with the original notice in the township where the suit was brought, and no jurisdiction was acquired by the service. Auspach v. Ferguson, 71 Iowa, 144. This question was determined by the justice, and he decided that he had jurisdiction of Thompson.

The district court instructed the jury upon this question as follows: "As to the defendant T. H. Jackson, you are told that, in the judgment of the court, it appears from the undisputed facts that the said Jackson had no jurisdiction of the person of the defendant in the action wherein P. J. Nolan was plaintiff, and the plaintiff, E. B. Thompson, was defendant; and that he had no jurisdiction to render the judgment of December 10, 1892, against the plaintiff in this case; and that in rendering the said judgment, and in issuing an execution thereon, and in delivering the same to the officer, with instruction to levy the same, the said defendant acted without warrant or authority of law, and is liable to the plaintiff herein for such damages as he has sustained. It appears from the uncontroverted testimony that, under the execution in question, a certain quantity of hay belonging to the plaintiff was levied upon and sold and converted by the purchaser, and the measure of the plaintiff's recovery would be the fair, reasonable market value of the said hay, as it was at the time and place levied upon, w. t. interest on such sum at six per cent per annum to date; and this will be the limit of plaintiff's recovery, unless you find that the defendant acted maliciously. As to the defendant T. H. Jackson, therefore, your verdict will be for the plaintiff, and against him, in such sum, at least, as will compensate the plaintiff for the loss of the hay levied upon under the rule hereinbefore given you; and, if you find that the defendant T. H. Jackson acted maliciously, then, in addition, you may allow the plaintiff exemplary damages in such amount as, in your best judgment, he ought to recover, not to exceed the amount claimed in the petition. As to the defendant C. B. Jackson, you are told that the execution delivered to him, and under which he made levy upon the property of the plaintiff, is regular in form, and upon its face appears to be a valid writ. The defendant C. B. Jackson was therefore justified in proceeding to execute the said writ, and in levying upon and selling the hay in controversy, unless he knew or had knowledge of such facts as would put him upon inquiry, which inquiry, if prosecuted with reasonable diligence, would have disclosed the fact that the judgment upon which the said execution was issued was void for want of jurisdiction of the justice rendering the same." Under these instructions, the jury were required to find a verdict against the defendant T. H. Jackson in some amount; and the right of recovery for actual damages is founded upon the theory that he is absolutely liable in damages even if he acted in good faith, believing that he had jurisdiction.

It is a well-established general rule that judges of superior courts and courts of general jurisdiction, when acting within the scope of their jurisdiction, are not liable, however erroneous or wrongful their acts may be. Bradley v. Fisher, 80 U. S. 18 Wall. 335, 20 L. ed. 646; Cooley, Torts, pp. 472-474; Bishop, Non-Cont. L. §§ 781-784. And, if a judge of such court should mistakenly decide that the service or writ by which the defendant is sought to be brought into court was such as to give jurisdiction of the defendant, there is no reason why he should not be protected from an action for damages, as well as when he decides any other question in a case erroneously. To illustrate: Suppose a judge of one of our district courts should have the question presented whether an original notice was properly served, and should decide that the service was good, and it should afterwards be adjudged that it was so defective that it was no service; under all the decisions and views of text-writers, an action for damages would not lie against him. We have probably discussed these fundamental rules sufficiently for the purpose of this case.

3. A distinction is sought to be made between the liability of a judge of a court of general jurisdiction and a justice of the peace. It is stated thus in Cooley on Torts (section 419): "It is universally conceded 27 L. R. A.

that, when inferior courts or judicial officers act without their jurisdiction, the law can give them no protection. The rule has been held otherwise, however, in cases of judges of superior courts where the error has consisted in exceeding their authority." In section 420 the reason of the distinction is stated thus: "Why the law should protect the one judge, and not the other, and why, if it protects one only, it should be the very one who, from his higher position and presumed superior learning and ability, ought to be most free from error, are questions of which the following may be suggested as the solution: The inferior judicial officer is not excused for exceeding his jurisdiction because, a limited authority only having been conferred upon him, he best observes the spirit of the law by solving all questions of doubt against his jurisdiction. If he errs in this direction, no harm is done, because he can always be set right by the court having appellate authority over him, and he can have no occasion to take hazards so long as his decision is subject to review. The rule of law which compels him to keep within his jurisdiction at his peril cannot be unjust to him, because, by declining to exercise any questionable authority, he can always keep within safe bounds, and will violate no duty in doing so. Moreover, in doing so he keeps within the presumptions of law, for these are always against the rightfulness of any authority in an inferior court which, under the law, appears doubtful. On the other hand, when a grant of general jurisdiction is made, a presumption accompanies it that it is to be exercised generally, until an exception appears which is clearly beyond its intent. Its very nature is such as to confer upon the officer intrusted with it more liberty of action in deciding upon his powers than could arise from a grant expressly confined within narrow limits, and the law would be inconsistent with itself if it were not to protect him in the exercise of this judgment. Moreover, for him to decline to exercise an authority because of the existence of a question when his own judgment favored it, would be to that extent to decline the performance of duty, and measurably to defeat the purpose of the law creating his office; for it cannot be supposed that this contemplated that the judge should act officially as though all presumptions opposed his authority, when the fact was directly the contrary." We have set out this extended extract because it embodies all of the reasons given by the various courts which have promulgated the doctrine. It will be observed that the distinguished author, by his opening statement in the quotation, makes a most pertinent suggestion as to why the rule should have been adopted. After an exhaustive examination of the cases which make this distinction, we have to say that we do not think that they are founded upon grounds which can be sustained by any logical or reasonable argument. In the case of Henke v. McCord, 55 Iowa, 878, it was held that a justice of the peace who enforced an ordinance which is void for want of power in the city to enact it cannot be held liable therefor in a civil action. The general rule as stated in Cooley on Torta is referred to, and the following language was used in reference thereto: "Whether a rule is just which affords immunity to the judge of a superior court, who, from his position and presumed learning, ought to be most free from error, whilst it holds an inferior judicial officer liable, we need not now determine." The case of Brooks v. Mangan, 86 Mich. 576, involves the same question as to the liability of a justice of the peace for enforcing a void city ordinance. The court said: "It is conceded that circuit judges cannot be held liable in a civil action for any judicial determination although such determination results in depriving the citizen temporarily of his liberty. Circuit judges are usually men of experience and education in the law, while justices of the peace seldom have any legal education or training. Upon what reason should the former be held exempt from liability for their errors, while the latter must be severely punished for honest errors of judgment? I can find no reason in such a distinction." In Bishop, Non-Contract Law, § 788, it is said: "Most of the cases exhibit an inclination to be specially severe on justices of the peace and other inferior magistrates, compelling them, in distinction from the rule as to the superior judges, to respond in damages whenever their judicial act was without jurisdiction. But, in reason, if judges properly expected to be the most learned can plead official exemption for their blunderings in the law, a fortiori those from whom less is to be expected, and who receive less pay, should not be compelled to respond in damages to their mistakes honestly made, after due carefulness." We might cite many other protests and criticisms by courts and text-writers condemning the rule, but it is not necessary to do so. The current of legal thought is that the distinction is unreasonable, unjust, illogical, and ought not to obtain.

It is to be remembered that this case is founded on the want of jurisdiction in the justice of the peace, and an excessive levy on property by the constable. There are averments in the petition in aggravation of the alleged wrong, as that the acts were malicious and without cause, and vindictive damages are claimed. The instructions we have set out above ignore all these considerations, and hold the justice of the peace liable because his judgment was void; and the jury were further instructed that the constable was liable if he knew or had knowledge of such facts as would put him on inquiry, which inquiry, if prosecuted with reasonable diligence, would have disclosed the fact that the judgment was void for want of jurisdiction, and that he was also liable if he made an excessive levy on property. It must be remembered that we are discussing the question of liability for judicial acts only. A justice of the peace is both a judicial and ministerial officer. For his wrongful ministerial acts he is liable the same as any other ministerial officer. This is the effect of the decisions in the cases of Lanpher v. Dewell, 56 Iowa, 153, and Horns v. Puddil (Iowa) 55 N. W. Rep. 485.

Some question is made as to whether any of the assignments of error apply to both of the defendants. We discover no ground for this objection. If, as we have found, the justice of the peace was not liable for rendering the judgment, the constable was also protected by the judgment for all his acts, unless for a willfully excessive levy and sale of property, with intent to oppress the defendant in execution. Henke v. McCord and Brooks v. Mangan, supra.

For the error in the instructions above discussed, the judgment of the District Court is reversed.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

TALBOT PAVING CO., Plff. in Err.,
v.

Charles A. GORMAN.

(.....Mich.....)

1. Receiving and using goods after opportunity to ascertain whether they conform to the description in the contract or not, constitutes an acceptance which cuts off all right to recover for defects in them, unless there was a warranty.
2. A contract for paving stone according to certain specifications does not imply any warranty.

(December 23, 1894.)

NOTE.—The above case is an interesting illustration of the law as to implied warranty in sales by description, as to which see note to Murchie v. Cornell (Mass.) 14 L. R. A. 492.

27 L. R. A.

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wayne County, to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought for compensation for the value of labor which plaintiff had been compelled to expend upon material furnished by defendant to plaintiff and for shortages, in which defendant set up a claim for unpaid purchase money upon which he recovered. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Brennan, Donnelly & Van De Mark for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Walter Barlow, for defendant in error:

Where a contract is made for an article of a particular quality, and it is sent in pursuance of such contract, where the party has an opportunity to examine the article, and where an opportunity is given, and the party takes the article that is delivered in pursuance of the contract, it is accepted in fulfillment of the contract and he may not thereafter object to the fact that the article was not up to the particular quality which was contemplated.

Comstock v. Sanger, 51 Mich. 497; Parker v. Palmer, 4 Barn. & Ald. 887; Chapman v. Morton, 11 Mees. & W. 584; Reed v. Randall, 29 N. Y. 858, 86 Am. Dec. 805; Gaylord Mfg. Co. v. Allen, 53 N. Y. 515; Barton v. Kane, 17 Wis. 88, 84 Am. Dec. 728, 18 Wis. 262; Watkins v. Paine, 57 Ga. 50; Roebeling's Sons Co. v. Winthrop Hematite Co. 70 Mich. 846.

Where the defect in the goods is open and obvious on inspection, an acceptance of the goods is a bar to a suit for breach of the warranty.

Comstock v. Sanger, and Gaylord Mfg. Co. v. Allen, supra; Parks v. Morris Ax & Tool Co. 54 N. Y. 590; Day v. Pool, 53 N. Y. 420, 11 Am. Rep. 719; Gurney v. Atlantic & G. W. R. Co. 58 N. Y. 358.

Hooker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff contracted with the defendant for the delivery f. o. b., Detroit, of a quantity of Medina paving stone, the same to answer the requirements of Detroit specifications, of which defendant had a copy. The contract was made by correspondence. At request of defendant, the plaintiff advanced $2,500 upon the contract, and afterwards made other payments, leaving a balance of $1,338.47. The requisite amount of stone was shipped to Detroit, where it was unloaded, and used by the plaintiff upon its paving jobs, upon which it was at work. It is claimed upon its behalf that the stone did not conform to the specifications rendering it necessary to put work upon them, of which it seasonably informed the defendant, with the suggestion that he might send men to do such work if he chose, and that he did send men who did some such work. This action was brought by the purchaser, who claimed a balance his due of $684.49 for such work done by it and for some broken stone. The defendant claimed the amount of $1,338.47. The defendant recovered $1,432, which probably included some interest. The court instructed the jury that: "There can be no question, with reference to this executory contract, that the acceptance by the Talbots in the first instance precluded their recouping, as we may say, for the character of the stone, because it did not come up to the Detroit specifications. In other words, they had the opportunity to examine the stone as it was delivered on the cars in this city, and, unless there was something further than that,—unless there was some other promise on the part of the defendant,—then the defendant would be entitled to a verdict for the amount claimed, viz., one thousand three hundred and thirty-eight dollars and forty-seven cents, with interest from November 5, 1892." The court instructed the jury further that if they should find that the defendant came to Detroit, and agreed with the plaintiff to pay for the work mentioned, there was a moral consideration that would support the promise, and the amount should be allowed to the plaintiff.

The principal question in this case is whether the plaintiff, by receiving and using the stone, accepted them as a full compliance with the contract, or whether he had a right to take them, and recover his damages by way of recoupment or action growing out of their failure to equal the specifications. There are cases which hold that an acceptance of goods precludes such recovery, and there are others which hold the contrary. On principle, the distinguishing feature seems to be a warranty. If the sale is without a warranty, and affords an opportunity for ascertaining whether the goods conform to the description, the doctrine of caveat emptor applies, and an acceptance cuts off all rights of recovery. The vendee should decline to receive the goods, and sue for a breach of the contract. If, on the other hand, the sale is with a warranty, the vendee may lawfully receive the goods, and recover or recoup damages upon the warranty, which is held to be a collateral undertaking. It is believed that the principle is generally recognized. In addition to cases cited by counsel, see Pierson v. Crooks, 115 N. Y. 539. It seems to be in the present case; counsel for appellant insisting that an implied warranty exists, while, upon the other hand, it is said that the provision in relation to the specifications is a condition precedent merely. The contract was an executory contract, and may fairly be said to have contemplated the manufacture of the curbing from a specified stone, in accordance with specified dimensions and workmanship. If the agreement to furnish such stone of the specified dimensions was a warranty at all, it is difficult to understand why it was not an express warranty, and, if it was such, there can be no implied warranty that the stone should conform to the specifications. Indeed, this does not seem to be claimed. These things were a necessary part of the description of the commodity, and nothing more, unless the face of the contract justifies the conclusion that it was intended as a warranty. Neither party asserts this, and so we turn to the question of implied warranty. The exact point made by plaintiff appears to be that, inasmuch as the defendant knew what the specifications were, the law implied a warranty of fitness. A pertinent inquiry is, "A fitness for what?" Was it fitness for the paving jobs that the plaintiff had on hand? If this be claimed, it is a sufficient answer to say that the evidence fails to disclose that the defendant knew what jobs he had. Moreover, if the law is to imply that the stone was to be fit for the job, it must be, because defendant knew what the job actually required, and had undertaken to provide that, and his liability would be tested by that. But this was not so. He only knew what the specifications required. They might be right or wrong. He had no means of determining, and it was not left to defendant's judgment to make suitable stone for the jobs. He had simply undertaken to deliver certain stone of given dimensions. If he should deliver such he would be entitled to pay. If he did not, it could hardly be claimed that he could require acceptance on the ground that the stone was suitable, or better adapted, to the purpose of the plaintiff than as though made according to direction. Clearly, if plaintiff had furnished specifications, and had a right to insist on the stone being in conformity thereto, regardless of defendant's judgment, it could not sustain the proposition that the law should imply a warranty to make them conform to some other test; and manifestly it cannot be said that knowledge of the use intended should require defendant to vary from his contract as to dimensions. The conclusion appears to us irresistible that no such warranty as this can be implied. Breen v. Moran, 51 Minn. 525, is cited as a case "upon all fours" with this, but we infer from a perusal of that case that the contractor there undertook to furnish stone for a particular purpose which he understood. And in that case the court based the right to recover upon a warranty, and not the failure to perform a condition precedent; thus recognizing the rule of law stated. The distinction between conditions precedent and warranty is clearly recognized in the Minnesota cases cited in Breen v. Moran. See Marwell v. Lee, 84 Minn. 511; Thompson v. Libby, 85 Minn. 448.

An examination of the brief of the plaintiff's counsel will show that all of the cases cited are based on the existence of a warranty. In this respect they are in harmony with the cases cited by opposing counsel. See Potter v. Lee, 94 Mich. 140. We notice one or two that seem to rest upon facts leading to the inference that a warranty may have been found from a bare promise to deliver goods of a given description. Such is perhaps the rule in South Carolina, and possibly other states. But if such can be called a warranty, it is an express warranty, and in this case would be a warranty to deliver stone according to specification, and not a warranty to deliver those fit for the purpose that plaintiff had in hand, whatever that may have been. The correctness of these decisions may be questioned in view of the English and American cases in opposition to them. They seem to be based upon language of Mr. Starkie in his work on Evidence, and a discussion to be found in notes to the case of Cutter v. Powell in 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 1, substantially implying that when the vendee uses the goods to prevent loss or injury the rule should not apply. See Cox v. Long, 69 N. C. 7; 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 8th Am. ed. p. 86. But as counsel has not discussed the point, or planted their case upon any such claim, we do not feel called upon or at liberty to discuss or decide the question.

It was claimed by the plaintiff that the defendant came to Detroit, and agreed to pay for the work in question. The court instructed the jury that plaintiff should recover if they found such to be the fact, which was as favorable a charge as the plaintiff was entitled to. This view of the case renders it unnecessary to discuss the question in relation to the admission of evidence of the meaning of the term "f. o. b." as the plaintiff was not injured by the evidence.

The judgment must be affirmed.

The other Justices concur.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

M. GRANT et al., Appts.,
v.

LOOKOUT MOUNTAIN COMPANY et al.

(88 Tenn. 691.)

1. Minority stockholders may compel the corporation to pay actual and necessary expenses, including reasonable attorney's fees, of a successful suit by them to recover corporate property which had been wrongfully conveyed by the corporate officers according to the wishes of the majority stockholders.
2. A lien for counsel fees attaches to the property recovered in a suit by minority stockholders to recover corporate property wrongfully conveyed by the corporate officers at the instance of the majority stockholders.

(October 25, 1894.)

APPPEAL by complainants from a decree of the Chancery Court for Hamilton County, denying a motion for reference by plaintiff to determine the counsel fees to be allowed in a proceeding which had been instituted by complainants to recover land which was alleged to have been wrongfully transferred by the corporation. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Cooke, Frazier & Swaney for appellants.

Messrs. Watkins & Bogle, for appellees:

A claim for professional services, resting as it does upon contract, cannot be made a charge against persons other than the client by the simple fact that the services have inured to their benefit; and the attorneys of a minority of the stockholders of an insolvent corporation, who have filed a bill for injunction, receiver, and sale, charging fraud and confederacy on the part of the defendants, are not entitled to have their fees allowed out of the proceeds of sale made by the receiver appointed under the bill.

NOTE.—The above case touches a question of considerable importance on which there is a conflict of authority as shown by the citations in the brief and opinion. These include most if not all the cases similar to the present one in which is decided the question of allowing costs including counsel fees 27 L. R. A.

out of corporate funds to minority stockholders where they preserve property for the corporation generally and not merely their own shares therein.

For many cases on remedies of minority stockholders in general, see Mack v. De Bardeleben Coal & Iron Co. (Ala.) 9 L. R. A. 650, and nota.

Hubbard v. Camperdown Mills, 25 S. C. 496; Hand v. Savannah & C. R. Co. 21 S. C. 162.

In partition suits the defendant may be more benefited than the complainant, yet this court has held that the defendant's property was not liable for complainant's fees.

See also Keith v. Fitzhugh, 15 Lea, 49.

The court cannot allow fees as a lien even against a client, for a mere preservation of an existing right.

Garner v. Garner, 1 Lea, 29.

Even though the fund preserved is a trust fund.

Stanford v. Andrews, 12 Heisk. 664; Sharp v. Fields, 5 Lea, 836; Winchester v. Heiskell, 16 Lea, 564.

Nothing whatever was brought in for administration—nothing was recovered, but the deeds and transfers were canceled, and the company placed just where it was before the suit was brought.

Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 748. Also see State v. Edgefield & K. R. Co. 4 Bart. 93.

The trend of decisions in this state is strongly against the allowance of solicitor's fees to be taxed on an adversary.

Williams v. Burg, 9 Lea, 455; Keith v. Fitzhugh, 15 Lea, 49.

McAlister, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The single question presented for determination in this cause is whether complainants below are entitled to have counsel fees allowed and declared a lien on the property recovered. The proceedings in which the professional services were rendered were commenced by M. Grant et al., minority stockholders in the Lookout Mountain Company, against said corporation and certain officers and directors therein, to enjoin a sale of all the real and personal property of the corporation to a Boston syndicate, to be paid for in bonds covering the property of defendant corporation, and two other corporations, known as the Lookout Mountain Hotel Company and the Chattanooga & Lookout Mountain Railroad Company. The bill charged—First, that the proposed sale of the entire property of the corporation was ultra vires; and, second, that the proposed transaction was fraudulent, in this: that the majority stockholders in the Lookout Mountain Land Company were also the owners of a majority of the stock in the hotel and railroad companies, that the last two corporations were insolvent, and that these majority stockholders were using their power to sacrifice the land company for the benefit of their interest in the two insolvent corporations. Answers were filed by all the defendants, and upon motion the injunction was dissolved. It appears that the original contract was not attempted to be carried out, but a second contract was made, by which a deed was executed of all the real estate to Baxter, and the personality sold him, in consideration of his promissory note for $200,000, due in ten years. No security was given upon the note, and the bill charged that Baxter was insolvent. An amended and supplemental bill was then filed by said minority stockholders, to cancel the deed to Baxter and recover the property, and to prevent the consolidation of said Lookout Mountain Land Company with the other two corporations. Answers were filed by the defendants, proof was taken, and a decree pronounced by Chancellor McConnell in favor of complainants, in accordance with the prayer of their bill. The deed was canceled, and the possession of all the realty and personality described in the bills was decreed to be restored to the Lookout Mountain Company, and, if necessary, a writ of possession was ordered to issue. It should be remarked that the deed executed to Baxter conveyed real estate on Lookout Mountain valued at $500,000, and also real-estate notes, belonging to the company, amounting to about $50,000, and that all of this property was recovered by the principal decree, and restored to the corporation. The minority stockholders, who had thus conducted the litigation to a successful determination, thereupon moved the court for a reference to cover their necessary expenses and solicitors' fees incurred in the prosecution of the suit, and prayed that it be declared a lien upon the property recovered. The solicitors themselves also made a similar motion. The chancellor was of opinion that the litigation was a controversy between warring stockholders, and that complainants were not entitled to an allowance for counsel fees against the company, and the motions were accordingly refused. The defendants below abandoned their appeal on the main question, and there is now no controversy in respect to the correctness of the decree rendered in favor of complainants.

Complainants appealed from the decree of the chancellor, refusing a reference on the motion for an allowance of reasonable counsel fees. The first error assigned is that the chancellor erred in refusing said motion, for the reason that, no question having been made as to the necessity of the suit to recover and preserve the valuable real and personal property belonging to the Lookout Mountain Company, and the necessity for employing counsel to prosecute the cause, and the recovery having inured to the company, it was a proper case for the allowance of counsel fees. The second assignment is that the chancellor should have decreed that the counsel fees be paid out of the recovery, inasmuch as the suit was brought for the purpose of protecting the property in the first instance, and was prosecuted in good faith to a successful termination; that the recovery inured to the benefit of the corporation, the Lookout Mountain Company, and all of its property was restored to it, and no especial benefits reaped by the complainants.

The only answer to the claim of complainants for an allowance of their reasonable counsel fees, as we see it in this record, is that the judicial machinery by which these transactions were canceled, and the property restored to the corporation, was set in motion by minority stockholders. It may be conceded at the outset that if this is the case of an intestine war between discordant stockholders to promote their individual emolument, and not for the immediate benefit of the corporation, it would not be a proper case for the allowance of counsel fees. Ordinarily, the directors and other officers of a corporation institute all suits in the name of the corporation, when it is necessary to protect its property rights, and it is only when the officers have breached their trust, and refused to take action, that suits can be instituted by minority stockholders. It is insisted that this suit was in reality the suit of the Lookout Mountain Company, and, the regular trustee having breached his official duty, that the minority stockholders had a right to put the machinery of the law in motion on behalf of the corporation, and employ counsel to represent it. The insistence is that the recovery in such a case as this belongs to the corporation, and the suit is in all respects the same as if the corporation had prosecuted it, except that the stockholders may commence such a case. 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1095. The reasons adduced by Prof. Pomeroy for the rule allowing minority stockholders to institute such a suit appear to us conclusive on this question. We quote his language, as follows: "Although the corporation holds all the title, legal or equitable, to the corporate property, and is the immediate cestus que trust under the directors with respect to such property, and is theoretically the only proper party to sue for wrongful dealings with that property, yet courts of equity recognize the truth that the stockholders are ultimately the only beneficiaries; that their rights are really, though indirectly, protected by remedies given to the corporation; and that the final object of suits by the corporation is to maintain the interests of the stockholders.

"While, in general, actions to obtain relief against wrongful dealings with the corporate property by directors and officers must be brought by and in the name of the corporation, yet if, in any such case, the corporation should refuse to bring suit, the courts have seen that the stockholders would be without any immediate and certain remedy, unless a modification of the general rule were admitted.

"To that end the following modification of the general rule stated in the last preceding paragraph has been established as firmly and surely as the rule itself: Wherever a cause of action exists primarily in behalf of the corporation against directors, officers, and others for wrongful dealing with corporate property, or wrongful exercise of corporate franchises, so that the remedy should regularly be obtained through a suit by and in the name of the corporation, and the corporation either actually or virtually refuses to institute or prosecute such a suit, then, in order to prevent a failure of justice, an action may be brought and maintained by a stockholder or stockholders, either individually or suing on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, against the wrongdoing directors, officers, and other persons; but it is absolutely indispensable that the corporation itself should be joined as a party, — usually as codefendant.

"The rationale of this rule should not be misapprehended. The stockholder does not bring such a suit because his rights have been directly violated, or because the cause of action is his, or because he is entitled to the relief sought. He is permitted to sue in this manner simply in order to set in motion the judicial machinery of the court. The stockholder, either individually or as the representative of the class, may commence the suit, and may prosecute it to judgment; but in every other respect the action is the ordinary one brought by the corporation. It is maintained directly for the benefit of the corporation; and the final relief, when obtained, belongs to the corporation, and not to the stockholder plaintiff. The corporation is therefore an indispensably necessary party, not simply on the general principles of equity pleading, in order that it may be bound by the decree, but in order that the relief, when granted, may be awarded to it, as a party to the record, by the decree. This view completely answers the objections which are sometimes raised in suits of this class, — that the plaintiff has no interest in the subject-matter of the controversy nor in the relief. In fact, the plaintiff has no direct interest. The defendant corporation alone has any direct interest. The plaintiff is permitted, notwithstanding his want of interest, to maintain the action solely to prevent an otherwise complete failure of justice." 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1095.

In the case at bar, if the corporation had instituted the suit, it would undoubtedly have been liable for the fees. We think it was such a suit as the corporation ought to have commenced; but the directors and officers having assumed an antagonistic position to the rights of the stockholders, and illegally conveyed away all the corporate property, threatening the entire destruction and dissolution of the corporation, the minority stockholders had a right to intervene, and, by bill in equity, protect the corporate interests. The company was an indispensable party to the suit, and for this reason the decree was not recovered for Grant and the other minority stockholders, but for the corporation. 2 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 2d ed. § 748; Howe v. Barney, 45 Fed. Rep. 668; Wallace v. Lincoln Sav. Bank, 89 Tenn. 635; Denderick v. Wilson, 8 Baxt. 181.

In the case of Meeker v. Winthrop Iron Co., 17 Fed. Rep. 48 et seq., Baxter, Circuit Judge, allowed counsel fees and other necessary expenditures in the prosecution of a suit by minority stockholders, where they succeeded in having a lease of real estate forfeited, and recovered the property for the corporation. In that case the iron company owned an iron ore mine. In 1877 the company leased its mine to a partnership composed of four brothers known as the St. Clair Brothers. These brothers, after effecting the lease, organized the Winthrop Hematite Company to work the mine. In 1881, before the expiration of the lease, an effort was made, but without success, to renew the lease for the hematite company. Thereupon the St. Clair Brothers bought a majority of the stock of the iron company. They organized and manipulated the iron company so as to have a resolution passed by its directors, directing an 18-year lease to be made to the hematite company at lower rates and royalties than the old lease, then about to expire. This lease was accordingly executed. Meeker and other stockholders in the iron company filed their bill to rescind the renewal lease to the hematite company, and for an account of rents and profits. The court rescinded the lease, and appointed a receiver to take charge of the mines for the iron company. It was held that as the suit was prosecuted for the benefit of all the parties interested, to protect and preserve a trust fund, they were entitled to be reimbursed from the fund for all proper expenditures made or liabilities incurred. A reference was ordered to ascertain what would be a proper allowance for counsel fees and other necessary expenditures. Upon the authority of this case, Spelling, in his treatise on Corporations, lays down the following rule viz.: "The owner of stock in a corporation who sues for himself and all other shareholders successfully, for a wrong done to the corporation, is entitled to be reimbursed his actual and necessary expenses, including attorney's fees, out of the corporate fund." 2 Spelling, Priv. Corp. § 643; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 8d ed. § 748, p. 1158. An English case very much in point is that of Kernaghan v. Williams, L. R. 6 Eq. 228, opinion by Lord Romilly, M. R. See also Internal Imp. Fund Trustees v. Greenough, 105 U. S. 527, 26 L. ed. 1157; Contract R. & Bkg. Co. v. Pettus, 118 U. S. 116, 28 L. ed. 915; Maddaugh v. Wilson, 151 U. S. 848, 38 L. ed. 186. We are therefore of opinion that this record shows that through the intervention of these minority stockholders the property of the corporation has been preserved, protected, and indeed recovered, after it had been illegally conveyed away, and that, such recovery inuring to the benefit of the corporation, the suit was, to all intents and purposes, the suit of the corporation itself. The Lookout Mountain Company is therefore responsible for proper and reasonable counsel fees, incurred by complainants in the prosecution of the suit.

The remaining question is, whether these fees are liens upon the land conveyed by the deeds which complainants procured to be canceled. The record shows that this land had been conveyed away, and that by the decree it was restored to the company, and, if necessary, a writ of possession was ordered to issue. This was not the case merely of canceling a deed or removing a cloud, but of absolute recovery. The case comes within the rule laid down by this court, that counsel are entitled to a lien upon the fund recovered by their clients for reasonable fees, and this lien attaches to real estate, when the subject of litigation. Perkins v. Perkins, 9 Heisk. 95; Keith v. Fitzhugh, 15 Lea, 50; Garner v. Garner, 1 Lea, 29. We are therefore of opinion that these fees must be paid by the Lookout Mountain Company, and that they are liens on the land recovered.

The decree of the chancellor is reversed, and the case remanded for a reference in accordance with the motions submitted by complainants and their counsel in the court below.

MONTANA SUPREME COURT.

William BRAITHWAITE, Appt.,
v.

Phillip F. HARVEY, Admr., etc., of Joseph Leighton, Deceased, Reest.

(.....Mont.....)

1. A judgment against an administrator in one state has no binding force or effect against another administrator of the same estate in another state.

NOTE.—Judgments of another state or country rendered against an executor or administrator.

I. The general rule.

II. In proceedings commenced in decedent's lifetime.

III. Reasons for the rule.

IV. The effect of the United States Constitution and act of congress.

V. How affected by state statute.

VI. As evidence of indebtedness.

VII. Exceptions to the general rule.

VIII. English decisions.

The subject of this note is confined to the questions of a judgment of another state rendered against an executor or administrator, considered purely as such, and does not include the question of the right to sue, which will form a separate note.

As to the conclusiveness of probate as res adjudicata, see note to Sly v. Hunt (Mass.) 21 L. R. A. 690.

I. The general rule.

The decisions of the courts upon the question of the right of an executor or administrator to defend an action, brought in a foreign jurisdiction, 37 L. R. A.

feet against another administrator of the same estate in another state.

2. A judgment against an administrator in one state need not be pleaded in a suit on the same account against another administrator in another state in order to show that the demand sued on had been given credit for the amount realized under the foreign judgment.

wherein letters testamentary or of administration have not been taken out, in his representative capacity, establish the doctrine that he has no power to defend, and that a judgment thus rendered against him in such capacity, being wholly unauthorized, cannot be enforced against the estate of the decedent, and that such executor or administrator must be sued in the courts of the state or country granting administration, to which alone he is accountable; his authority being limited, and when exceeded not binding upon the estate of the deceased.

This doctrine is established by the following cases: Turner v. Blair, 54 Ark. 53; Clark v. Holt, 15 Ark. 257; Greer v. Ferguson, 56 Ark. 324; Clopton v. Booker, 27 Ark. 432; Holcomb v. Phelps, 16 Conn. 127; Hobart v. Connecticut Turnp. Co. 15 Conn. 145; Riley v. Riley, 8 Day, 74, 3 Am. Dec. 280; Hedenberg v. Hedenberg, 46 Conn. 30, 38 Am. Rep. 10; Gordon v. Clarke, 10 Fla. 179, decided under the Florida statutes; Gordon v. Simonton, 10 Fla. 196; Sloan v. Sloan, 21 Fla. 560; Jackson v. Johnson, 34 Ga. 511, 39 Am. Dec. 233; Burtis v. Duncan, 35 Ga. 580; Davis v. Smith, 5 Ga. 374, 43 Am. Dec. 279, 286; Judy v. Kelley, 11 Ill. 213, 50 Am. Dec. 425; McGar-

3. An administrator will not become bound by the judgment by assisting in the defense of a suit against another administrator of the same estate in another state.
4. A statement in a letter that "whatever is due is ready whenever I can safely pay you or" a third person named is not a sufficient new promise to take the claim out of the statute of limitations.
5. Striking a paragraph from a complaint on motion is not reversible error, if it was not sufficient to authorize a recovery.

(March 19, 1894.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Custer County in an action brought to recover the amount remaining due on a contract for the transportation of certain freight. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. George W. Newton and Middleton & Light, for appellant:

The facts alleged in the complaint estopped the defendant from interposing the technical defense of pleading the statute of limitations. The defendant has had his day in court upon the claim in question. Neither the benefit of judgment on one side, nor the obligation on the other are limited exclusively to the parties and their privies.

Freem. Judgm. 8d ed. §§ 174, 175.

A party who actually appears and defends

vey v. Darnall, 10 L. R. A. 861, 134 Ill. 387, 32 Ill. App. 223; Slaughter v. Chenoweth, 7 Ind. 211; Naylor v. Moody, 2 Blackf. 247; Creswell v. Slack, 68 Iowa, 110; Curle v. Moor, 1 Dana, 445; Baker v. Smith, 3 Met. (Ky.) 284; Hopkins v. Towns, 4 B. Mon. 124, 39 Am. Dec. 497; Fletcher v. Sanders, 7 Dana, 345, 32 Am. Dec. 98; Burbank v. Payne, 17 La. Ann. 15, 37 Am. Dec. 513; Mason v. Nutt, 19 La. Ann. 41; Kraft v. Wickey, 4 Gill & J. 383, 23 Am. Dec. 569; Norton v. Palmer, 7 Cush. 523; Goodwin v. Jones, 3 Mass. 514, 3 Am. Dec. 173, decided under the Massachusetts Statutes of March 4, 1874, Chapter 38, and denying the ability to prosecute or defend the action being a personal one founded on a contract made by the deceased and therefore not within the terms of the statute; Ploquet v. Swan, 4 Mason, 460; Fay v. Haven, 3 Met. 100; Cutter v. Davenport, 1 Pick. 81, 11 Am. Dec. 149; Pond v. Makepeace, 2 Met. 114; Goodwin v. Jones, supra; Woodworth v. Spring, 4 Allen, 325; Low v. Bartlett, 3 Allen, 259; Dawes v. Boylston, 9 Mass. 387, 6 Am. Dec. 72; Stevens v. Gaylord, 11 Mass. 256; Davis v. Estey, 8 Pick. 475; Campbell v. Sheldon, 13 Pick. 23; Selectmen of Boston v. Boylston, 2 Mass. 384; Morrill v. Morrill, 1 Allen, 132; Langdon v. Potter, 11 Mass. 313; Ela v. Edwards, 13 Allen, 43, 90 Am. Dec. 174; Borden v. Borden, 5 Mass. 67, 4 Am. Dec. 32; Dawes v. Head, 3 Pick. 123; McSwan v. Zimmer, 38 Mich. 765, 31 Am. Rep. 332; Commercial Bank of Kentucky v. Slater, 21 Minn. 173, 174; Winter v. Winter, 1 Walk. (Miss.) 311; Boyd v. Lambeth, 24 Miss. 433; Riley v. Moseley, 44 Miss. 37; Bentschler v. Jamison, 6 Mo. App. 125; Cabanne v. Skinner, 56 Mo. 367; Goodall v. Marshall, 11 N. H. 83, 35 Am. Dec. 472; Thompson v. Wilson, 2 N. H. 391; Taylor v. Barron, 35 N. H. 454, 496; Sabin v. Gilman, 1 N. H. 198; Leonard v. Putnam, 51 N. H. 247, 12 Am. Rep. 106; Brownlee v. Lookwood, 20 N. J. Eq. 239; Durie v. Blauvelt, 49 N. J. L. 114; Hutton v. Hutton, 40 N. J. Eq. 461; Warren v. Eddy, 13 Abb. Pr. 23; Chapman v. Fish, 6 Hill, 555; Doolittle v. Lewis, 7 Johns. Ch. 45, 2 L. ed. 215, 11 Am. Dec. 389; Brown v. Brown, 4 Edw. Ch. 345, 6 L. ed. 399; Lyman v. Parsons, 23 Barb. 572; Field v. Gibson, 20 Hun, 274, 56 How. Pr. 223; Re Webb, 11 Hun. 126; Hopper v. Hopper, 13 L. R. A. 237, 125 N. Y. 400; Petersen v. Chemical Bank, 38 N. Y. 21, 38 Am. Dec. 236; Lyon v. Park, 111 N. Y. 350; Johnston v. Wallis, 2 L. R. A. 823, 112 N. Y. 230; Morrell v. Dickey, 1 Johns. Ch. 153, 1 L. ed. 97; Black v. Woodman, 5 Redf. 364; Williams v. Storrs, 6 Johns. Ch. 353, 2 L. ed. 143, 10 Am. Dec. 340; Brown v. Brown, 1 Barb. Ch. 189, 5 L. ed. 349; Vermilya v. Beatty, 6 Barb. 429; Metcalf v. Clark, 41 Barb. 45; Campbell v. Tousey, 7 Cow. 64; Smith v. Webb, 1 Barb. 230; Brookshire v. Dubose, 55 N. C. 276; Swearingen v. Morris, 14 Ohio St. 424; Mithland v. Wireman, 3 Penn. & W. 185, 33 Am. Dec. 71; Magraw v. Irwin, 37 Pa. 139; Bomberger v. Raymond, 2 Pa. Dist. Rep. 230; Moore v. Fields, 42 Pa. 467; Brodie v. Bickley, 2 Bawle, 431; Conover v. Chapman, 2 Bail. L. 434; Tillman v. Walkup, 7 S. C. 60; Sparks v. White, 37 L. R. A.

7 Humph. 36; White v. Archbill, 2 Sneed, 588; Patton v. Overton, 8 Humph. 132; Keaton v. Campbell, 2 Humph. 224; Lee v. George, 6 Humph. 61; George v. Lee, Id. 61; Allsup v. Allsup, 10 Yerg. 238; Beeler v. Dunn, 3 Head, 87, 75 Am. Dec. 761; Jones v. Jones, 15 Tex. 463, 65 Am. Dec. 174; Cherry v. Speight, 23 Tex. 503; Jones v. Boulware, 39 Tex. 367; Dodge v. Wetmore, Brayton (Vt.) 32; Fugate v. Moore, 36 Va. 1045; Pugh v. Jones, 6 Leigh, 299; Andrews v. Avory, 14 Gratt. 229, 73 Am. Dec. 355; Jarvis v. Barrett, 14 Wis. 591; Price v. Mace, 47 Wis. 23; Smith v. Grady, 68 Wis. 215; Warren Mfg. Co. v. Superior Gas Co., 3 Paige, C. C. 514; Caldwell v. Harding, 3 Blatchf. 501; Harvey v. Richards, 1 Mason, 381; United States v. Union Pac. R. Co. 11 Blatchf. 390; Fenwick v. Sears, 5 U. S. 1 Cranch, 259, 2 L. ed. 101; Mellus v. Thompson, 1 Cliff. 125, 131; Dixon v. Ramsay, 7 U. S. 3 Cranch, 319, 2 L. ed. 453; Newberry v. Robinson, 36 Fed. Rep. 341; Security Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 2 Biss. 443; Dent v. Ashley, Hemp. C. C. 54; Kerr v. Moon, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 563, 571, 6 L. ed. 132, 163; Peale v. Phipps, 55 U. S. 14 How. 363, 14 L. ed. 459; Aspen v. Nixon, 45 U. S. 4 How. 467, 11 L. ed. 1059; Stacy v. Thrasher, 47 U. S. 6 How. 44, 12 L. ed. 337; Hill v. Tucker, 54 U. S. 13 How. 453, 14 L. ed. 223; McLean v. Meek, 59 U. S. 13 How. 16, 15 L. ed. 277; Armstrong v. Lear, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 169, 6 L. ed. 539; Doe v. M'Farland, 13 U. S. 9 Cranch, 151, 3 L. ed. 637; Vaughan v. Northup, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 1, 10 L. ed. 639; Bischoff v. Wethered, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 812, 19 L. ed. 829; United States v. Cox, 59 U. S. 13 How. 100, 15 L. ed. 299; Graeme v. Harris, 1 U. S. 1 Dall. 456, 1 L. ed. 221; Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 273, 35 L. ed. 464, 470.

So if a person dies intestate domiciled in a foreign country, indebted, administration being granted in such country and an ancillary grant being issued in the United States, the debt, although contracted in the states, must be enforced and referred for settlement to the jurisdiction granting the original administration. Dawes v. Head, 3 Pick. 123.

In the above case of Magraw v. Irwin, 37 Pa. 139, the court conceded that the above doctrine was in conflict with Swearingen v. Pendleton, 4 Ferg. & R. 380, and Evans v. Tatem, 9 Serg. & R. 253, 11 Am. Dec. 717.

The prior case, Swearingen v. Pendleton, was one wherein an executor in Virginia was held liable at law for a devisavit in Pennsylvania, and the latter, Evans v. Tatem, a case in which an action at law in Tennessee was held sustainable against an administrator of a decedent's estate in Pennsylvania.

Whatever orders, judgments, or decrees may be rendered by the courts of another state against an executor or administrator in respect of so much of the estate as is within its limits, must be accepted as conclusive in the courts of primary administration; and whatever matters are by the courts of in the name of another is bound by the judgment.

Montgomery v. Vicery, 110 Ind. 211; Valentine v. Mahoney, 37 Cal. 389.

One who, though not a party, defends or prosecutes an action by employing counsel, paying costs, and by doing those things which are usually done by a party, is bound by the judgment rendered therein.

Stoddard v. Thompson, 31 Iowa, 81; Elliott v. Hayden, 104 Mass. 180; Train v. Gold, 5 Pick. 330; Jackson v. Griswold, 4 Hill, 522; Palmer v. Hayes, 112 Ind. 289; Burns v. Garcia, 118 Ind. 320; Roby v. Eggers, 180 Ind. 415; DeMetton v. DeMello, 12 East, 234; Cromwell v. Sac County, 94 U. S. 351, 24 L. ed. 195.

primary administration permitted to be litigated in the courts of another state come within the rule of conclusiveness; but beyond this the proceedings of the courts of the state in which ancillary administration is held are not conclusive upon the administration in the courts of the state in which primary administration is due, and the rule is not changed even though a party whose estate is being administered by the courts of one state permits himself or itself to be made a party to the litigation in the other. Raynolds v. Stockton, supra.

Especially where the claimants are not creditors but stand in the character of legatees or distributees of the decedent. Brown v. Brown, 1 Barb. Ch. 189, 5 L. ed. 349.

And the fact that part of the assets have been recovered by a foreign administrator appointed in another state, upon promises made by the defendant, which judgment the defendant sought to enjoin, does not vary the doctrine. Brookshire v. Dubose, 55 N. C. 273.

Any action which would go to subject the defendant's person or estate to just liability might be maintained, but where he is sued in his representative capacity only, no devastavit being charged so as to make him liable out of his own state, he cannot be made subject to such action. Winter v. Winter, 1 Walk. (Miss.) 211.

And if sued in his representative capacity the fact of his appearing and pleading will not alter the rule, his authority being limited, and when exceeded his actions have no binding effect. Judy v. Kelley, 11 Ill. 211, 50 Am. Dec. 455.

He cannot therefore be sued elsewhere, even on a judgment rendered against him in the state where he was appointed. Pond v. Makepeace, 3 Met. 114; Goodwin v. Jones, 3 Mass. 514, 3 Am. Dec. 173; Cutter v. Davenport, 1 Pick. 317, 11 Am. Dec. 149.

It has been stated that even the provisions of the Florida attachment laws (section 5 of McClellan's Dig. p. 112), as to executors or administrators who have removed from or reside beyond the limits of the state, is no exception to the above rule. Sloan v. Sloan, 21 Fla. 539.

And the consent of an executor or administrator to be made a party to a suit in order to represent the deceased's interest, cannot, by virtue of his authority as such, give him any right to defend the suit. Gordon v. Simonton, 10 Fla. 190.

So he cannot be permitted to come in under a notice and defend a suit there. Davis v. Smith, 5 Ga. 274, 43 Am. Dec. 279, 285.

Neither can such administrator appear in a foreign jurisdiction in his official capacity, and consent to the issuing of execution against the decedent's estate upon a judgment obtained in the deceased's lifetime, and especially is this so when there is an administrator appointed within the jurisdiction refusing his assent and asking that the 27 L. R. A.

An administrator, wherever appointed, is in privity with the intestate, but there is ordinarily no privity in law or estate between administrators appointed in different sovereignties and a judgment against one is not a bar against the other.

Hill v. Tucker, 54 U. S. 13 How, 466, 467, 14 L. ed. 226.

That rule is wanting in comity and the courts have seemed to yield to it with reluctance. Like all general rules it admits of exceptions.

The case at bar is, clearly, not within the general rule.

The principle laid down in Freeman on Judgments, section 174, and the decisions cited therewith, supra, are controlling.

execution be set aside. Bomberger v. Raymond, 2 Pa. Dist. Rep. 230.

The appearance of an administrator to a suit brought against him in his representative capacity in a foreign jurisdiction, being wholly unauthorized, the judgment resulting therefrom will have no binding effect on the estate. Judy v. Kelley, supra.

The very silence of the Arkansas act as to any liability of the personal representative to be sued in the courts of the district for assets received would seem equivalent to a declaration that he was not to be subjected to any such liability. Greer v. Ferguson, 55 Ark. 324; Vaughan v. Northup, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 3, 10 L. ed. 641.

It not being a subject of presumption that when the statute was passed the legislature knew that a foreign executor or administrator had no power to sue or be sued in the courts, there being no reason therefor which would warrant the assumption that the legislature expressly changing the law in one particular intended thereby to change it in the other. Greer v. Ferguson, supra.

The appointment by a testatrix of different executors to manage her property in different jurisdictions is legal and such executors are only chargeable for property within their own jurisdiction. Sherman v. Page, 21 Hun, 65.

If a creditor wishes a suit to be brought in any foreign country in order to reach the effects of a deceased testator or intestate situated therein, letters of administration must be taken out in due form according to the local law, as the executor or administrator appointed in another country is not suable there and has no positive right to or authority over those assets, neither is he responsible therefor. Baker v. Smith, 3 Met. (Ky.) 264.

Until such act is done, it cannot be made the subject of a suit for a legacy in the courts of this country. Armstrong v. Lear, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 160, 6 L. ed. 539.

The fact that executors appointed in another state have the right to receive money deposited by the testator in another state and to apply it in due course of administration at the place where they were appointed, and the receipt of the money by such executors is not sufficient to authorize the filing of a bill against them in such state, on the ground that the cause or right of action arose within the jurisdiction. Brown v. Brown, 1 Barb. Ch. 189, 5 L. ed. 349.

The remedy in such a case, of the residuary legatee wishing to obtain the proceeds of such stocks and the accrued dividend, is to cite the executors to prove the will and to take out letters testamentary in the state, and in case of neglect to have an administrator with the will annexed appointed. Ibid.

He cannot therefore be liable as for a devastavit where he does not in pursuance of the notice of

The ancillary administration is subsidiary and supplemental to the domiciliary administration.

Schouler, Executors & Administrators, § 175.

After the payment of the home creditors, the residuum is to be transmitted to and distributed at the place of domicile, unless for some special reason, as to charge the security for faithful administration in the ancillary administration, equity would require its retention there.

Wilkins v. Ellett, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 740, 19 L. ed. 586; Porter v. Heydock, 6 Vt. 374; Jennison v. Haggood, 10 Pick. 77; Parsons v. Lyman, 20 N. Y. 103; Stokely's Estate, 19 Pa. 476.

suit respecting land in a foreign jurisdiction defend that suit, as he is not to be personally responsible for not doing that which the law of the land will not permit him to do. Davis v. Smith, 5 Ga. 295, 48 Am. Dec. 274.

The mere fact that one of several executors comes within the jurisdiction of the court upon other business does not make him amenable to the process of that court in his representative capacity. Security Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 2 Biss. 446.

Process by attachment will not lie against an absent executor or administrator. Weyman v. Murdock, Harp. L. 126; Young v. Young, 2 Hill, L. 425; Regenstein v. Pearlstein, 30 S. C. 194; Stevenson v. Dunlap, 33 S. C. 360.

A judgment rendered in a foreign state against an administrator is not a ground of an action against the personal representatives of a decedent in Texas, in the absence of facts showing assets in the hands of the administrator and in his possession in the state. Cherry v. Speight, 23 Tex. 503.

The reasons assigned in the adjudged cases, to show that an executor or administrator cannot be made an original defendant in a state other than the one from which he derives his authority, apply with equal force against making him a respondent to a suit in equity, abated by the death of his testator or intestate. Mellus v. Thompson, 1 Cliff. 125, 131.

To a judgment rendered against an administrator appointed by a proper foreign court, sought to be enforced against a different administrator in another state, the latter may plead res inter alios acta, there being no privity between them as they derive their commissions from different political sovereignties. Turley v. Dreyfus, 33 La. Ann. 886.

And if a judgment be recovered against an administrator in a federal court, the real estate of the intestate cannot be sold contrary to the laws of the state upon that subject. Yonley v. Laven-der, 38 U. S. 21 Wall. 276, 22 L. ed. 536.

In Field v. Gibson, 20 Hun, 274, 56 How. Pr. 232, the action was denied against an executrix sued in her representative capacity to recover specific sums of money as therein due under a lease executed by the testator, founded either upon the lease itself or upon the use and occupation of the premises.

A cestui que trust appealing from an order decreed by the judge of probate allowing an account of the administration of the deceased's estate rendered by the surviving executor, was denied a right to charge such executor with rents and profits received by him from real estate in New Hampshire under a will which was also proved in the latter state. Morrill v. Morrill, 1 Allen, 132.

A foreign administrator has no right to the possession of land and is not liable in his fiduciary capacity for taking exclusive possession of and occupying the same, neither is he, individually or as administrator, liable for rents and profits which

An acknowledgment of indebtedness made by a debtor to a stranger with the intent that it shall be communicated to, and influence the creditor, is as effectual to defeat the statute of limitations as if made to the creditor or his authorized agent.

DeForest v. Warner, 98 N. Y. 217, 50 Am. Rep. 657.

In this case the promise and acknowledgment were made in relation to the claim in question in this action. It was made to J. D. Biggart, who is alleged to have been acting on behalf of persons interested in the said claim, viz., the intervenors. Braithwaite was also interested in the claim; he could maintain the action in his own name for the benefit of himself and accrue on account of such occupancy, and a judgment of the court against him therefor as administrator is erroneous. Fairchild v. Hagel, 54 Ark. 61.

In Pearson v. Darrington, 32 Ala. 227, a decree was rendered by an orphan's court in Alabama against the domestic personal representatives of a foreign administrator in favor of the legatee of a foreign intestate; the court held it void for want of jurisdiction.

Where administration was granted and still pending in another state, it was held that, therefore, equity would not, even though it might entertain a bill quia timet to prevent destruction of the assets within the jurisdiction, proceed to a final settlement, but remitted the parties to the proper tribunal. Worthy v. Lyon, 18 Ala. 784.

In Turner v. Risor, 54 Ark. 33, a creditors' judgment, recovered against the Louisiana administrator sought to be enforced against the property in the hands of the administrator in Arkansas, was barred, not being presented till two years after the time provided for the filing of claims, distribution having been made among the heirs the Louisiana judgment not binding the administrator in Arkansas.

An administrator appointed in Alabama and residing there cannot in equity be charged, at the instance of distributees in Georgia, with waste and mal-administration, the administrator being solvent with sufficient bond for the performance of the trust. Jackson v. Johnson, 34 Ga. 511, 39 Am. Dec. 263.

The laws of Georgia do not recognize foreign executors as such at all, or rather they did not prior to the Act of 1850. Caruthers v. Corbin, 30 Ga. 75.

In Davis v. Estey, 8 Pick. 475, original administration was granted in another state, and a commission in insolvency issued in that state, notice being given to the creditors but none to those in Massachusetts until after the claims of the commission, ancillary administration being granted in Massachusetts without such commission being issued; it was held in an action by a creditor against the latter administrator that the creditor was entitled to judgment for a pro rata dividend, but that execution could not issue thereon.

A foreign administrator is not accountable in the New Jersey courts for assets coming to his hands in such foreign jurisdiction, neither are his personal representatives nor his heir-at-law accountable, nor an administrator de bonis non of the original intestate's estate under letters granted in that jurisdiction. Brownlee v. Lookwood, 20 N. J. Eq. 239.

Where administration was granted at the place of the decedent's domicile subsidiary administration being granted in New York the latter relates exclusively to the assets within that jurisdiction and the jurisdiction of the New York courts is limited to such assets and does not extend to assets collected the intervenors as the party with whom and in whose name the contract was made for the benefit of another, the trustee of an express trust.

Braithwaite v. Power, 1 N. Dak. 455; Code Civ. Proc. § 6.

Whether new promises related to the debt in question is for the jury, and no evidence is to be rejected on that issue.

Cook v. Martin, 29 Conn. 68; Buckingham v. Smith, 23 Conn. 453; Shipley v. Shilling, 68 Md. 558; McCormick v. Brown, 86 Cal. 180, 85 Am. Dec. 170; Farrell v. Palmer, 86 Cal. 187; Schmidt v. Pfau, 114 Ill. 494; Porter v. Eham, 25 Cal. 292, 85 Am. Dec. 182.

under the original letters and brought into the state of New York, and therefore the administrator appointed in Massachusetts cannot be made accountable in the New York courts for the assets collected under the Massachusetts grant and brought into the state, but he may be required to submit to an examination respecting the assets of the deceased in the state of New York, liable to be administered under the letters granted in that state. Black v. Woodman, 5 Redf. 384.

An administrator is not to be charged with assets of the intestate received by a co-administrator in another state of which he may have obtained possession. Mothland v. Wireman, 3 Penn. & W. 185, 33 Am. Dec. 71.

Where letters of administration were taken out in New York, the domicile of the deceased, the administrators subsequently removing to Pennsylvania without settling the account, and an account was afterwards stated against them in proceedings before the surrogate having jurisdiction (New York), a decree being made against them to hand over the estate in their hands to a new administrator who subsequently brought actions and recovered judgment for want of defense, it was held that the decree was conclusive against them and that the fund was not liable to administration in Pennsylvania under the Act of 1832, and therefore the act did not apply, the fund in controversy being the product of assets and the estate being administered in another jurisdiction. Moore v. Fields, 43 Pa. 437.

Where an administrator cum testamento annexo in Maryland received assets (stocks and bonds) of Pennsylvania companies, the same subsequently forming part of her share as legatee, upon her death an action against an administrator de bonis non appointed in the Maryland court who took no administration in Pennsylvania and was only temporarily within the state, was denied. Magraw v. Irwin, 87 Pa. 129.

In Gray's App., 116 Pa. 366, a foreign debtor had made a voluntary payment of his debt to his foreign executor, and afterwards upon the executor's removing into the state of Pennsylvania, sought to charge him as a creditor under ancillary letters of administration. It was held that it was a good answer to such creditor's claim, that the executor had already accounted for it in the proper courts of the domicile of the deceased, and had been ordered to pay it as set forth in the decree.

And in Smith v. Grady, 68 Wis. 215, the question was whether the service of process in that state upon the defendant's testator gave the Ontario (Canada) court jurisdiction of his person so as to make valid its personal judgment against him based upon such service. The court held that a claim against the testator's estate being based upon a void judgment was properly disallowed, inasmuch as a personal judgment founded alone upon service of process in another state or foreign country was void. McSwan v. Zimmer, 33 Mich. 706, 31 Am. Rep. 37 L. R. A.

Messrs. Strevell & Porter, for respondent:

A judgment rendered in a foreign state or jurisdiction against an administrator in such foreign state or jurisdiction is utterly without validity or effect as a claim against an administrator of the estate of the same deceased person in this state. In such case there is neither privity of law nor estate.

Stacy v. Thrasher, 47 U. S. 6 How. 44, 12 L. ed. 337; Aspden v. Nixon, 45 U. S. 4 How. 467, 11 L. ed. 1059; Freem. Judgm. 3d ed. § 163; McLean v. Meek, 59 U. S. 18 How. 16, 15 L. ed. 277; Brodie v. Bickley, 2 Rawle, 431; Story, Conf. L. p. 739.

322; Bischoff v. Wethered, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 512, 19 L. ed. 329; Jarvis v. Barrett, 14 Wis. 591, followed.

Where a person domiciled in England died leaving property in that country, and in the state of Pennsylvania, the executor taking out letters testamentary in both countries, in a suit in the former country against the executor by the administrator of a deceased claimant, the parties were restricted to the limits of the country to which their letters extended. Aspden v. Nixon, 45 U. S. 4 How. 467, 11 L. ed. 1059.

In United States v. Cox, 59 U. S. 18 How. 100, 15 L. ed. 290, it was held that a surety upon an administration bond could not be held liable for moneys in the hands of his principal as agent of other administrators.

II. In proceedings commenced in deceased's lifetime.

Whatever may be the rule, if jurisdiction is acquired by a court before administration proceedings are commenced, the moment they are commenced and the estate is taken possession of by a tribunal of a state, that moment the party whose estate is thus taken possession of ceases to have power to bind the estate in a court of another state, either voluntarily or by submitting himself to the jurisdiction of the latter court. Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 273, 35 L. ed. 464, 470; Jones v. Jones, 15 Tex. 463, 65 Am. Dec. 174.

It makes no difference that service was obtained upon the intestate in his lifetime, for the reason that the suit is not prosecuted to judgment against him, but the judgment is recovered against an ancillary administrator who represents the intestate only as to the assets within the jurisdiction where the appointment is conferred; the effect of the personal service upon the intestate dying with him. Jones v. Jones, supra.

Such a judgment recovered against the administrator has no other or greater effect than if it had been recovered in a suit originally instituted against him. Ibid.

The fact that the executors appear and defend an action brought against the testator in his lifetime and appeal from the judgment, confers no jurisdiction as they cannot invest themselves with authority to represent the deceased's estate which is denied to them by the laws of the state, nor acquire such authority by merely assuming it. Greer v. Ferguson, 56 Ark. 324.

By death jurisdiction of his person ceases, and such action can only be proceeded to a judgment upon a substitution for him of some person lawfully empowered to defend. Ibid., following Judy v. Kelley, 11 Ill. 211, 50 Am. Dec. 455; McGarvey v. Darnall, 33 Ill. App. 223; Rentschler v. Jamison, 6 Mo. App. 136.

The circuit court loses jurisdiction over the person of the deceased by his death, and acquires no jurisdiction over his administrator by any service had upon him while he was out of the territorial limits of the sovereignty under which the court

A judgment in rem binds only the property within the control of the court which rendered it; a judgment in personam binds only the parties to that judgment and those in privity with them.

Johnson v. Powers, 189 U. S. 156, 35 L. ed. 112; Stacy v. Thrasher, supra; Woerner, Administration, p. 860.

A new premise may arise out of such facts as identify the debt, the subject of the promise, with such certainty as will clearly determine its character, fix the amount due and show a present unqualified willingness and intention to pay it, at the time acted upon and acceded to by the creditor.

Wachter v. Albes, 80 Ill. 47.

acts, as the state of Illinois cannot by notice to a citizen of Missouri draw him to its forum. Rentschler v. Jamison, supra, following Warren Mfg. Co. v. Etna Ins. Co. 3 Paine, C. C. 614.

Where the bank brought suit against the administrator, alleging that there were no assets in Pennsylvania where action had been commenced against deceased in his lifetime, seeking to enforce the judgment upon the Minnesota estate, the court held they could not recover, the remedy being controlled by the lex fori: section 50 of chapter 53 of the Minnesota General Statutes, providing that in no other cases, except such as are expressly provided for in that chapter, shall any action be commenced or prosecuted against an executor or administrator; the plaintiff not bringing himself within the cases provided. Commercial Bank of Kentucky v. Slater, 21 Minn. 174.

III. Reasons for the rule.

Where a receiver or administrator, or other custodian of an estate, is appointed by the courts of one state, the courts of that state reserve to themselves full and exclusive jurisdiction over the assets of the estate within the limits of the state. Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 273, 35 L. ed. 464, 470.

The power of an executor is given by the will of the testator, but his right to appear in any court and the validity of his acts in that capacity depend wholly upon the probate of the will by the prerogative court, within the limits of that local jurisdiction in which he claims the power to act. Riley v. Riley, 3 Day, 74, 3 Am. Dec. 230.

The liability of an administrator to account is commensurate with the jurisdiction of him from whom they have received his authority, and that he can act officially only in things committed to him is a common principle of general jurisprudence. Mothland v. Wireman, 3 Penn. & W. 185, 33 Am. Dec. 71.

The right or the liability is purely representative and exists only by force of the official character, and so cannot pass beyond the jurisdiction which gave it. Hopper v. Hopper, 12 L. R. A. 237, 125 N. Y. 400; Jonston v. Wallis, 2 L. R. A. 323, 113 N. Y. 230.

His official character being derived from the letters granted to him in the court of the domicile of the testator. Davis v. Smith, 5 Ga. 274, 48 Am. Dec. 270.

And he has no power by his acts or omissions to affect the assets elsewhere. Taylor v. Barron, 35 N. H. 484.

His representation of the intestate being a qualified one, not extending beyond the assets of which the ordinary has jurisdiction. Stacy v. Thrasher, 47 U. S. 6 How. 44, 12 L. ed. 337.

Inasmuch as naked admissions of a foreign administrator might, upon a foreign judgment, be competent to bind the assets, the law limits the power of an administrator to assets for the ad-

The acknowledgment must be a direct, distinct, unqualified admission of the debt which the party is liable and willing to pay.

McCormick v. Brown, 36 Cal. 185, 95 Am. Dec. 170; Biddell v. Brizzolara, 64 Cal. 355; Bell v. Morrison, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 351, 7 L. ed. 175.

Pemberton, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Through this action plaintiff seeks to recover judgment against Phillip Harvey, administrator of Joseph Leighton, deceased, on demand for the payment of $5,535.93, and interest, arising on a contract hereinafter referred to. The claim was presented to and administration of which he and his sureties are responsible. Brodie v. Bickley, 2 Rawle, 431.

He cannot invest himself with authority to represent the deceased's estate, which is denied to him by the laws of the state, nor acquire such authority by merely assuming it. Greer v. Ferguson, 54 Ark. 341.

He is accountable only to the authority from which he derives his power. Low v. Bartlett, 8 Allen, 259; Vaughan v. Northup, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 1, 10 L. ed. 639; Fay v. Haven, 3 Met. 109; Boyd v. Lambeth, 24 Miss. 433; Greer v. Ferguson, supra; Fletcher v. Sanders, 7 Dana, 345, 33 Am. Dec. 93.

And where administration was granted. Lyon v. Park, 111 N. Y. 350; Petersen v. Chemical Bank, 32 N. Y. 21, 38 Am. Dec. 298; Hedenberg v. Hedenberg, 46 Conn. 30, 33 Am. Rep. 10.

So he is entitled to the benefits and protection of the laws which such local jurisdictions give. United States v. Union Pac. R. Co. 11 Blatchf. 390; Kerr v. Moon, 23 U. S. 9 Wheat. 555, 6 L. ed. 161; Armstrong v. Lear, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 159, 6 L. ed. 589; Vaughan v. Northup, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 1, 10 L. ed. 639.

He has no official existence in any such other state, and possesses no power there which he can exercise in his official capacity. Mellus v. Thompson, 1 Cliff. 125, 131.

The letters conferring the office or trust only in the state where granted. Riley v. Moseley, 44 Miss. 37.

They must comply with the statutory provisions made by comity in such exterior jurisdiction. Security Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 2 Bias. 446.

The laws and courts of a state can only affect persons and things within their jurisdiction, and therefore both as to the administrator and the property confided to him a judgment in another state is res inter alios acta. Stacy v. Thrasher, 47 U. S. 6 How. 44, 12 L. ed. 337; Turley v. Dreyfus, 33 La. Ann. 885.

And the tribunals of other states have no right to interfere with or control the application of those assets according to the lex loci. Vaughan v. Northup, supra; Boyd v. Lambeth, 24 Miss. 433; Greer v. Ferguson, 54 Ark. 341; Fletcher v. Sanders, 7 Dana, 345, 33 Am. Dec. 93.

It being an established principle of international law that assets shall be administered under the authority of the local sovereign. Fletcher v. Sanders, supra.

A judgment in rem binds only the property within the control of the court which renders it, and a judgment in personam binds only the parties to that judgment and those in privity with them. Johnson v. Powers, 189 U. S. 156, 35 L. ed. 112.

No one can be bound by the verdict or judgment, unless he be a party to the suit, or be in privity with the party, or possesses the power of making himself a party. Dent v. Ashley, Hemp. C. C. 54.

The parties against whom a judgment is sought disallowed by the administrator of the decedent. This action was then brought in the district court thereon. The questions involved in this appeal arise on the action of the trial court in striking from the complaint portions thereof, on motion of defendant, and thereafter sustaining demurrer interposed to the complaint, on the ground that it shows no sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action, because it appears on the face thereof that the cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations. It appears that in 1880 a contract for the transportation of certain freight from Bismarck, Dak., via the Missouri river by boat to Ft. Buford, was made between plaintiff, as transporter, and decedent and several others, as consignors. The contract was made and evidenced by the following letter: "Bismarck, D. T., Nov. 3d, 1880. Capt. Wm. Braithwaite, Steamer Eclipse—Dear Sir: On your accepting this proposition, will agree to give you one dollar and seventy-five cents ($1.75) per one hundred pounds, from Bismarck to Ft. Buford, on freight up to the amount of one hundred tons, and on all over and above one hundred tons, one dollar and fifty cents ($1.50) per one hundred pounds. Receipts to be equal to 100 tons to Buford. Freight to be paid on receipt of bills of lading by draft at ten days' sight on Jos. Leighton, St. Paul. Yours, etc., J. O. Barr, Agt. for to be enforced, should be the same or be in privity with those against whom it was given. Slauter v. Chenoweth, 7 Ind. 211.

The assets in the hands of an administrator cannot be affected by a judgment to which he is a personal stranger. Stacy v. Thrasher, 47 U. S. 6 How. 44, 13 L. ed. 337.

Foreign administrators are independent of each other, no connection exists between them, each represents the intestate by an authority coextensive only with the state in which his appointment is made. McLean v. Meek, 59 U. S. 18 How. 14, 15 L. ed. 377. Stacy v. Thrasher, supra, and Hill v. Tucker, 54 U. S. 13 How. 458, 14 L. ed. 223, followed.

An administrator appointed in one state, is as much a stranger to an administrator in another state in respect of their appointment, powers, estates, duties, and liabilities, as are strangers or administrators of the estates of different decedents. McGarvey v. Darnall, 10 L. R. A. 361, 134 Ill. 397, affirming 83 Ill. App. 228; Judy v. Kelley, 11 Ill. 211, 50 Am. Dec. 455; Rosenthal v. Benick, 44 Ill. 302; Ela v. Edwards, 13 Allen, 48, 90 Am. Dec. 174; Stacy v. Thrasher and McLean v. Meek, supra.

They derive their authority from different sovereignties and over different property, the authority of each being paramount to the other, and each is accountable to the ordinary from whom he receives his authority. Stacy v. Thrasher, supra.

An administrator under a grant of administration in one state is not in privity with an administrator appointed in another state. Ibid.; Judy v. Kelley, supra; Slauter v. Chenoweth, 7 Ind. 211; Turkey v. Dreyfus, 33 La. Ann. 885; Ela v. Edwards, supra; Low v. Bartlett, 8 Allen, 259; Selectmen of Boston v. Boylston, 2 Mass. 364; Goodwin v. Jones, 3 Mass. 514, 3 Am. Dec. 173; Grout v. Chamberlin, 4 Mass. 511; Borden v. Borden, 5 Mass. 77, 4 Am. Dec. 32; Langdon v. Potter, 11 Mass. 513; Talmage v. Chapel, 16 Mass. 71; Fay v. Haven, 3 Met. 109; Wheelock v. Pierce, 6 Cush. 238; Norton v. Palmer, 7 Cush. 522; Taylor v. Barron, 35 N. H. 454; Leonard v. Putnam, 51 N. H. 247, 12 Am. Rep. 106; Clark v. Clement, 83 N. H. 568; King v. Clarke, 2 Hill, Eq. 611; Brodie v. Bickley, 2 Rawle, 431; Aspden v. Nixon, 45 U. S. 4 How. 467, 11 L. ed. 1059; Stacy v. Thrasher and Hill v. Tucker, supra; Dent v. Ashley, Hemp. C. C. 54.

They are, as to creditors, executors in privity bearing the same responsibilities as if there were only one executor. Hill v. Tucker, 54 U. S. 13 How. 458, 14 L. ed. 223.

The relations or privity between executors and their testators in Louisiana do not differ from those which exist at common law. Ibid.

If persons have claims against the decedent's estate which they wish to pursue in their own state against a foreign administrator, they must either take out letters of administration against the estate in their jurisdiction, or procure the executors to probate the will within the state before the 37 L. R. A.

courts of the state, either state or federal, can obtain jurisdiction in personam of the executors or of the property of the decedent. Security Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 3 Bism. 446; Davis v. Smith, 5 Ga. 295, 45 Am. Dec. 279; Caldwell v. Harding, 5 Blatchf. 501; Vaughan v. Northup, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 1, 10 L. ed. 630; Williams v. Storrs, 6 Johns. Ch. 383, 3 L. ed. 143, 10 Am. Dec. 340; Kerr v. Moon, 33 U. S. 9 Wheat. 565, 6 L. ed. 161; Paie v. Phipps, 55 U. S. 14 How. 363, 14 L. ed. 459; Mellus v. Thompson, 1 Cliff. 125, 181; Clark v. Holt, 16 Ark. 259; Brookshire v. Dubose, 55 N. C. 276; Allsup v. Allsup, 10 Yerg. 233.

He must be clothed with authority derived from the law of such state. Gordon v. Clarke, 10 Fla. 179; Doolittle v. Lewis, 7 Johns. Ch. 45, 3 L. ed. 215, 11 Am. Dec. 389; Taylor v. Barron, 35 N. H. 456; Sabin v. Gilman, 1 N. H. 198; Leonard v. Putnam, 51 N. H. 247, 12 Am. Rep. 106; Gordon v. Simonton, 10 Fla. 196; Morrell v. Dickey, 1 Johns. Ch. 156, 1 L. ed. 97; Smith v. Webb, 1 Barb. 230; Hobart v. Connecticut Turnp. Co. 15 Conn. 145; Chapman v. Fish, 6 Hill, 555; Fenwick v. Sears, 5 U. S. 1 Cranch, 269, 3 L. ed. 101; Dixon v. Bameay, 7 U. S. 8 Cranch, 319, 3 L. ed. 453; Graeme v. Harris, 1 U. S. 1 Dall. 456, 1 L. ed. 221; Picquet v. Swan, 4 Mason, 460; Kerr v. Moon, 33 U. S. 9 Wheat. 565, 6 L. ed. 162; Vaughan v. Northup, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 1, 10 L. ed. 630; Vermilya v. Beatty, 6 Barb. 431; Naylor v. Moody, 2 Blatchf. 247; Cutter v. Davenport, 1 Pick. 81, 11 Am. Dec. 149; Dodge v. Wetmore, Bray. (Vt.) 92; Langdon v. Potter, 11 Mass. 513.

The Mississippi courts do not recognize an administrator appointed in another state, and before the personal representative of a decedent will be considered as clothed with that character, he must be invested with it by the courts of that state according to the state law. Riley v. Moseley, 44 Miss. 37.

The rule is founded in the convenience and necessity of independent administrations in every state where there is property belonging to the estate and the independence of such administrations upon each other. Leonard v. Putnam, 51 N. H. 247, 12 Am. Rep. 106; Clark v. Clement, 83 N. H. 568; Stacy v. Thrasher, 47 U. S. 6 How. 467, 11 L. ed. 1059.

Such administrations are by reason of such want of privity so far deemed independent of each other that a judgment obtained against one will furnish no right of action against the other or affect assets received by the latter in virtue of his own administration. King v. Clarke, 3 Hill, Eq. 611; Stacy v. Thrasher, 47 U. S. 6 How. 44, 12 L. ed. 337; Aspden v. Nixon, 45 U. S. 4 How. 467, 11 L. ed. 1059; Brodie v. Bickley, 2 Rawle, 431.

The commission of an administrator extends only to assets of which the ordinary has jurisdiction, and it constitutes him a representative of the intestate no further than as regards the administration of those particular assets, the power being but co-extensive with that of him from whom it is de-

H. C. Akin, Jos. Leighton, & Benton Line." The freight mentioned was transported, as appears, with some delays and other incidents in relation to the fulfillment of the contract, which are not necessary to recite in this determination, and thereby the claim for the enforcement of which this suit is prosecuted accrued in said year. The complaint not only pleads this contract, but alleges that on the 12th day of November, 1887, this plaintiff instituted a suit in the district court of the then territory of Dakota, in and for the county of Burleigh, now in the state of North Dakota, against Joseph Leighton, and several other parties alleged to be interested with him, to recover the amount alleged to be due plaintiff thereon. This suit was by attachment, and the property of Joseph Leighton in said territory at the time was seized thereunder. All the proceedings in said suit, and the history thereof, are set out in the complaint, or referred to as exhibits, and made part thereof, including the judgment of the district court, and the appeal therefrom to the supreme court of said territory, and the judgment of said supreme court. In these allegations the death of Joseph Leighton is shown to have occurred on the 2d day of September, 1888, at Custer county, in the state of Montana, where he resided. Joseph Leighton was never personally served with process in the Dakota suit.

rived, and it is consequently incompetent directly or indirectly to affect assets which belong to another jurisdiction. Brodie v. Bickley, supra.

He is only accountable to the legal tribunals of the state where appointed. Fay v. Haven, 8 Met. 109; Vermilya v. Beatty, 6 Barb. 489; Sparks v. White, 7 Humph. 86; Brodie v. Bickley, supra.

Every grant of administration is strictly confined in its authority and operation to the limits of the territory of the government which grants it, and does not de jure extend to other countries. Vaughan v. Northup, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 1, 10 L. ed. 689; Greer v. Ferguson, 56 Ark. 324; Taylor v. Barron, 85 N. H. 495; Leonard v. Putnam, 61 N. H. 247, 12 Am. Rep. 106.

Therefore his authority cannot be more extensive than that of the government from which he receives it. Stacy v. Thrasher, supra.

Whatever operation is allowed to it beyond the original territory of its grant, is a mere matter of comity which every nation is at liberty to yield to or withhold, according to its own policy and pleasure with reference to its institutions and the interests of its own citizens. Greer v. Ferguson, 56 Ark. 324, following Vaughan v. Northup, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 5, 10 L. ed. 640.

And a judgment or order rendered against him is without force beyond its jurisdiction. Tillman v. Walkup, 7 S. C. 60.

The courts of the state of New York will not take notice of letters testamentary or of administration granted by a neighboring state, for the purpose of the persons appointed under them being made parties to actions in the state. Campbell v. Touzey, 7 Cow. 64.

If it were otherwise the assets might be drawn out of the estate to the great inconvenience of domestic creditors, and be distributed on very different terms according to the laws of another jurisdiction. Doolittle v. Lewis, 7 Johns. Ch. 45, 2 L. ed. 215, 11 Am. Dec. 389; Morrell v. Dickey, 1 Johns. Ch. 153, 1 L. ed. 96; Riley v. Moseley, 44 Miss. 37.

Letters of administration granted in a foreign state have no extraterritorial effect. Barcliff v. Treese, 7 Ala. 523; Naylor v. Moffatt, 29 Mo. 126; Fugate v. Moore, 86 Va. 1045.

The court of the domicile of the testator or intestate is the forum to which the legatees under a will, or the parties entitled to the distribution of the estate of an intestate, are required to resort. Hutton v. Hutton, 40 N. J. Eq. 461.

The objection must be raised by way of defense and cannot be urged on motion to set aside the summons. Metcalf v. Clark, 41 Barb. 43.

IV. The effect of the United States Constitution and act of congress.

In Stacy v. Thrasher, 47 U. S. 6 How. 44, 13 L. ed. 337, it was contended that, although the general principles might apply to judgments against administrators acting under powers received from states wholly foreign to each other, yet they could not apply to judgments against administrators in different states of the Union, by reason of the provision of the constitution ordaining that full faith and credit should be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state, and the court held that in order to give effect to the provision of the constitution the judgment must be against the same parties, who must be privies, and on the same subject-matter, where the proceeding is in rem, and that the parties to such judgments were not the same, neither were they privies and therefore not bound by the judgments.

A judgment may have the effect of a lien upon all the defendant's lands in the state where it is rendered, yet it cannot have that effect on lands in another state by virtue of the faith and credit given to it by the constitution, and by the Act of Congress of May 26, 1790, which prescribes the mode of authenticating records and defines their effect, and enacts that they shall have faith and credit given to them in every court within the United States, as they have by law or usage in the courts of the state from whence the said records are or shall be taken. Stacy v. Thrasher, supra.

The United States Constitution, in declaring that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the judicial proceedings of the other states, means only that credit shall be given to them as against parties bound by the record or their privies, not as against strangers. King v. Clarke, 2 Hill, Eq. 611.

The provisions of the Constitution of the United States do not of themselves, in respect to a question of administration, give any greater force or efficacy to a judgment recovered in another state than belongs to a foreign judgment, and that for all purposes of administration such judgments are to be considered as foreign judgments. Brown v. Public Administrator, 2 Bradf. 103.

So the provisions of the United States Statutes at Large (1 Stat. at L., p. 79) enabling civil suits to be brought against persons in their individual capacity, either in the district whereof they are inhabitants, or in which they are found at the time of serving the writ, do not apply to executors and administrators, for the reason that their authority is limited to the territory of the state from which it is derived. Mellus v. Thompson, 1 Cliff. 125, 181 following Fenwick v. Sears, 5 U. S. 1 Cranch, 250, 2 L. ed. 101; Dixon v. Ramsay, 7 U. S. 3 Cranch, 319, 2 L. ed. 458; Kerr v. Moon, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 566, 5 L. ed. 162; Aspden v. Nixon, 45 U. S. 4 How. 467, 11 L. ed. 1059; Stacy v. Thrasher, 47 U. S. 64 How. 44, 13 L. ed. 337; Hill v. Tucker, 54 U. S. 13 How. 453, 14 L. ed. 223.

The Act of Congress of June, 1822, authorizing any person to whom letters testamentary or of administration are granted in the states of the United States to prosecute claims by suits in the courts of

After his death one Harvey Harris was appointed administrator of his estate in Dakota territory, and appeared as such, and defended such suit. It seems, too, that, pending said suit in Dakota, certain other parties were permitted to intervene therein. These matters are particularly set out in paragraphs 17, 19, 20, 21, 22, and 23 of the complaint, and are as follows:

"(17) That thereafter, on or about the 11th day of February, 1889, one Harvey Harris, of said Burleigh county, was duly appointed administrator of the estate of said Joseph Leighton, deceased, by the then probate court of said Burleigh county, territory of Dakota, the same being a court of general jurisdiction in probate matters, and having and possessing jurisdiction for the appointment of the said Harris, as hereinbefore shown; that, after qualifying under said appointment, in accordance with the laws of the then territory of Dakota, now state of North Dakota, the said Harris entered upon the discharge of his duties as such administrator of the estate of said Joseph Leighton, deceased, in said Burleigh county and territory, and continued in the discharge of said duties as such administrator, until the said estate in said Burleigh county, then territory of Dakota, now state of North Dakota, was fully administered."

"(19) That thereafter, on or about the 15th

the District of Columbia, in the same manner as if the same had been granted to such persons by the proper authority in the District of Columbia, limits by its terms the power to institute suits and does not authorize suits against an executor or administrator. Vaughan v. Northrup, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 1-10 L. ed. 639.

The effect of the Act of Congress of June, 1822, was to make all debts due by persons in the district, not local assets for which the administrator was bound to account in the courts of the district, but general assets which he had full authority to receive and for which he was bound to account in the courts of the state from which he derived his letters of administration. Ibid. Kane v. Paul, 39 U. S. 14 Pet. 23, 10 L. ed. 841, followed.

But under the provisions of the Act of March 3, 1873, section 4 (17 U. S. Stat. at L. 509), which directs a suit in equity to be brought in the name of the United States against the Union Pacific Railroad Company and others, different rules for the conduct of the suit from those by which ordinary suits were governed, were created, the act providing that such writs might, inter alia, be served upon representatives of deceased parties, who were not residents of the district in which the suit was commenced, and whose testators were not such residents, the statute overruling the general principles governing such actions. United States v. Union Pac. R. Co., 11 Blatchf. 390.

V. How affected by state statute.

The general equity jurisdiction of the circuit court of the United States, to administer as between citizens of different states the assets of a deceased person within its jurisdiction, cannot be defeated or impaired by laws of a state undertaking to give exclusive jurisdiction to its own courts. Lawrence v. Nelson, 143 U. S. 215, 36 L. ed. 120.

The Florida statute clothes foreign executors and administrators with authority to bring suits, but does not authorize them to defend suits, and therefore a foreign executor is not a proper party defendant. Gordon v. Clarke, 10 Fla. 179.

Under section 8416 of the Georgia Code a citizen of another state passing through that state might be sued in any county thereof in which he might happen to be at the time when sued, and it was held that the provisions of the law were general and included executors and administrators as well as all other persons, there being no exception in their favor and that therefore if they came within the jurisdiction of the court they were liable to be sued in any county. Johnson v. Jackson, 56 Ga. 326, 21 Am. Rep. 235.

Under the constitution and laws of Georgia, the superior courts of that state have jurisdiction of all civil cases, except as therein provided, and the sovereignty and jurisdiction of the state and the laws thereof, extend to all persons while within its 27 L. R. A.

limits, whether as citizens, denizens, or temporary sojourners, under section 21 of the Code. Ibid.

The above provisions are general and include executors and administrators as well as other persons, and there is no exception made in favor of executors and administrators or securities on their bonds, and if they come within the jurisdiction, they are suable in any county in the state in which they may happen to be at the time sued. Ibid.; Mohyneux v. Seymour, 30 Ga. 440, 78 Am. Dec. 662.

In Turner v. Linam, 55 Ga. 253, the question was whether an administrator appointed in Alabama could be made a party to a suit brought in Georgia by his intestate, by filing in the office of the clerk of the superior court an exemplified copy of the order of his appointment from the probate court of Alabama. The court held that under section 2315 of the Code, a properly authenticated exemplification of the letters testamentary or of administration must be filed with the clerk of the court to become a part of the record, and that the terms of such section must be complied with before the executor or the administrator could be made a party to any action.

Section 43 of the Illinois statute in relation to the administration of estates, gives express authority to executors appointed in other states to prosecute suits in that state, to enforce claims of the estate of the deceased in the same manner as if letters testamentary had been granted them under the provisions of the laws of that state, and in Decker v. Patton, 20 Ill. App. 210, a mortgage redemption suit, the court stated that it saw no reason for holding that a foreign executor might not under the statute appear in court in any form in which it might become necessary for him to appear, in order to properly prosecute or enforce any of the claims of the estate of his testator, and that in such cases he might even appear as a defendant.

The Iowa Code provides, section 2303, that when administration has been granted in another state or country a foreign administrator may, upon his application and upon qualification as is required of other administrators, be appointed to administer upon the property of the deceased in that state, unless another administrator has been previously appointed in the state.

In Creswell v. Slack, 68 Iowa, 110, the court held that the above section simply provided for the appointment in that state of one who had been previously appointed to administer upon the property of the estate in a foreign jurisdiction, and did not apply to an administrator who was not appointed under that provision, and that his powers and relations were in no manner limited or defined by it and therefore such an action will not lie.

Under the Compiled Laws of Kansas, ed. 1873, § 2491, p. 436, an executor or administrator appointed in any other state or county may sue or be day of March, 1889, by stipulation, a copy of which is hereto attached and referred to, and found upon page 46 of 'Exhibit one,' and by an order of said district court, in which said action was pending, a copy of which order is hereto attached and referred to, and found upon pages 47 and 48 of 'Exhibit one,' hereto attached, said Harvey Harris, as administrator of the estate of Joseph Leighton, deceased, came into said court, and entered his appearance in said action, and as a party defendant therein, and as the administrator and successor of the said Joseph Leighton, deceased, and that said action was revived and continued against said Harris, as said administrator, and thereafter proceeded with said Harris as said administrator of said Joseph Leighton, deceased, as a party defendant.

"(20) That on or about the 23d day of February, 1889, William Rea and Geo. F. Robinson, copartners as Robinson, Rea & Co., J. O. Kay and Woodruff McKnight, copartners as Kay, McKnight & Co., A. W. Cadman as A. W. Cadman & Co., and Joseph McC. Biggart, applied to said court to intervene in said action, and by said court were permitted so to do, and so did, and thereafter said action proceeded with said interveners as parties thereto; and that a copy of the order of said court permitting said intervention is hereto attached and resued in any court in that state in the capacity of executor or administrator, in like manner and under like restrictions as a nonresident may sue or be sued. Bells v. Holder, 12 Fed. Rep. 668.

Upon the construction of the above statute, the court in Cady v. Bard, 21 Kan. 667, held that a nonresident might be sued in an action of contract for the recovery of money, and that service might be obtained by attachment and publication, and therefore a foreign executor or administrator could be sued in like manner.

Section 203, chapter 37, of the Kansas General Statutes, p. 472, provides that an executor or administrator duly appointed in any other state or territory may sue or be sued in any court in this state in his capacity of executor or administrator in like manner and under like restrictions as a nonresident may sue or be sued.

The Massachusetts Statute of March 4, 1784, chap. 32, providing that when an action is pending, the cause of which shall survive, if either party die, his executor or administrator may take upon himself the prosecution or defense of the action, does not apply to an administrator deriving his authority from the laws of another state where the action is a personal one founded on contract, and therefore a foreign executor or administrator is not entitled to prosecute or defend such an action. Goodwin v. Jones, 3 Mass. 514, 3 Am. Dec. 178.

In Selectmen of Boston v. Boylston, 2 Mass. 384, the question involved was the right to disclosure by a residuary legatee as against a foreign administrator and depended upon the construction to be placed upon the Massachusetts Act of June 20, 1785, which enacts that where a copy of any will proved and allowed in any probate court in any of the United States, or in any foreign state or kingdom, is directed to be filed and recorded in any probate court in this government pursuant to the act, the filing and recording thereof have the same force and effect as the filing and recording of any original will proved and allowed in the same probate court, and that the judge might proceed to take bonds from the executor or grant administration of the estate lying in this government with the will annexed, and settle the estate in the same way and manner as estates of testators whose wills have been duly proved before him, and the court held that the act only applied to effects received by such administrator in this country and not to effects received by him abroad, namely in England.

Under the Minnesota General Statutes of 1878, chap. 53, § 16, which enacts that all actions which are pending against a deceased person at the time of his death may, if the cause of action survive, be prosecuted to final judgment, and the executor or administrator may be admitted to defend the same, it was held that a judgment recovered against a foreign administrator was within the provisions of the act, the court stating the word "administrator" as general, and as applying to foreign as well as to domestic administrators, and to any species of administrator expressly recognized by the Minnesota statutes as having authority to act as such in that state. Brown v. Brown, 35 Minn. 191.

So under such statutes a foreign administrator may be admitted to defend an action pending against his intestate. Ibid.

Section 1950 of the Mississippi Code declares that personal property situated in that state shall descend and be distributed according to the laws of that state, notwithstanding the foreign domicile of deceased in another state. Carroll v. McKike, 33 Miss. 559.

In Mississippi the administration of the effects of a deceased person, no matter where his domicile was, is independent of all other administrations and is to be conducted in all respects as if the decedent had been a citizen of the state when he died, debts being paid according to the assets, and creditors, no matter where residing nor where the debts were contracted, being entitled to prove their claims and proceed to enforce them and to share the assets. In this case deceased was a citizen of Missouri, letters of administration being granted in that state and in Mississippi, the administrator being sued by a Texas creditor. Ibid.

The New York statute gives the executor or the administrator with will annexed appointed in that state, alone the right to call upon a foreign executor to account for the wrong done to the estate. Brown v. Brown, 1 Barb. Ch. 189, 5 L. ed. 349.

Under the Tennessee Act of 1841, chapter 63, letters of administration might be granted upon a nonresident estate where the deceased had any property at the time of his death, at the time letters were applied for or where a suit was to be brought or defended relating to the estate, and it was held that under such act upon a judgment recovered in Kentucky against a defendant removing to Tennessee, the Tennessee courts had authority upon the death of the administrator to grant letters of administration on the deceased's estate which would vest the title in the judgment in the new administrator. Swaney v. Scott, 9 Humph. 327.

The Revised Statutes of Wisconsin, section 3267, provide in effect that a foreign executor or administrator duly appointed upon complying with the provisions of the statute as to filing his original appointment or a copy thereof duly authenticated, as required to make the same receivable in evidence in any county court in that state, may thereafter exercise any power over such estate, . . . prosecute and defend any action relating thereto, and have all the rights and remedies which an executor or administrator appointed in that state can have or exercise. Murray v. Norwood, 77 Wis. 405.

The construction placed upon the above section of the statute, in Murray v. Norwood, 77 Wis. 405, was that the manifest intent of the provision was to give the filing of a duly authenticated copy in the county court the same legal effect which would ferred to, and found on pages 51 to 62 of 'Exhibit one,' hereto attached; and said interveners served and filed their complaint in intervention in said action, and a copy of the same is hereto attached, and referred to and found upon pages 58 to 60 of said 'Exhibit one,' hereto attached; and that thereafter, on or about the 22d day of March, 1889, the plaintiff served and filed his answer to said interveners' complaint, and a copy of the same is hereto attached, and referred to and made a part hereof, and found upon pages 61 to 66 of 'Exhibit one,' hereto attached.

"(21) That the defendant herein, as the general administrator of the estate of said Joseph Leighton, deceased, immediately upon his appointment and qualification as such, as hereinbefore shown, was notified of the pendency of said action in said Burleigh county, territory of Dakota, now state of North Dakota, and of the plaintiff's claim therein, and thereafter said action proceeded to trial in said district court, and the defendant herein the same contested and defended in the name of said Harvey Harris as administrator, as hereinbefore shown, and therefore invoked the jurisdiction and determination of said court, employed counsel, produced evidence, and the issues of said contest and defense prosecuted to a final determination; and such proceedings were had be given to the record of an original appointment made by a court of the state, the language being that a copy is to be filed in any county court of the state, and not specifying the county court of a county where there are assets or where the suit is to be brought.

When a proper copy of the original appointment is duly filed in any county court, the foreign administrator or executor is placed upon the same footing as a domestic administrator or executor, so far as capacity to sue in the Wisconsin courts is concerned, the statute giving him the right to prosecute and defend all actions relating to his estate. Murray v. Norwood, supra.

VI. As evidence of indebtedness.

In order that a judgment or decree may be set up as a bar by plea, or relied on as evidence by way of estoppel, to be conclusive it must have been rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction upon the same subject-matter, between the parties, and for the same purpose. Aspden v. Nixon, 45 U. S. 4 How. 467, 11 L. ed. 1069.

The laws and courts of a state can only affect persons and things within their jurisdiction, and both as to the administrator and the property conceded to him, and judgment in another state is res inter alios acta and is not even prima facie evidence of a debt. Turner v. Risor, 54 Ark. 33, following Stacy v. Thrasher, 47 U. S. 6 How. 53, 13 L. ed. 343; McLean v. Meek, 50 U. S. 13 How. 13, 15 L. ed. 277; Low v. Bartlett, 8 Allen, 269; Ela v. Edwards, 13 Allen, 43, 90 Am. Dec. 174; Brodie v. Bickley, 3 Rawle, 431.

A judgment against an administrator in one state is no evidence of debt in a subsequent suit by the same plaintiff in another state, either against an administrator, whether the same or a different person appointed there, or against any other person having assets of the deceased. Johnson v. Powers, 139 U. S. 150, 35 L. ed. 112, following Aspden v. Nixon, supra; Stacy v. Thrasher, 47 U. S. 6 How. 44, 12 L. ed. 337; McLean v. Meek, and Low v. Bartlett, supra.

It is not competent testimony to show a right of action against either a domiciliary or ancillary administrator in another state, or to affect assets in such other state. McGarvey v. Darnall, 10 L. R. A. 361, 134 Ill. 367, affirming 32 Ill. App. 223; Judy v. Kelley, 11 Ill. 211, 50 Am. Dec. 455; Rosenthal v. Rentek, 44 Ill. 303; Ela v. Edwards, Stacy v. Thrasher, and McLean v. Meek, supra; Price v. Mace, 47 Wis. 23.

Such a judgment, which establishes a claim against the decedent's estate, is not even prima facie evidence of the validity of the claim as against land situated in another state. McGarvey v. Darnall, supra.

Neither is it evidence against the executor or heir-at-law sued in another state. McGarvey v. Darnall, 33 Ill. App. 223, 37 L. R. A.

It is no evidence of indebtedness against another administrator of the same decedent in another state, for the purpose of affecting assets received by the latter under his administration, the administrators not being regarded as in privity with each other. Rosenthal v. Rentek, 44 Ill. 303, 207.

For the reason that the parties are different and there is no privity between them. McGarvey v. Darnall, 33 Ill. App. 223.

The evidence adduced in the foreign suit is incompetent to prove anything with regard to the assets within the jurisdiction of the courts here. Aspden v. Nixon, 45 U. S. 4 How. 467, 11 L. ed. 1069.

So the record of the allowance of a claim against an administrator in Pennsylvania is not admissible as evidence in an action to establish the same claim against an auxiliary administrator in Iowa. Creswell v. Slack, 68 Iowa, 110.

A judgment obtained in Illinois after the death of an intestate, against his administrator appointed in Missouri, is no evidence of indebtedness in an action against the estate of the deceased in Missouri. Rentek v. Jamison, 6 Mo. App. 135.

So a judgment against an administrator in Georgia was held not to be evidence of indebtedness sufficient to enable one claiming as a creditor to sustain a bill in South Carolina to set aside the gifts of the intestate as fraudulent. King v. Clarke, 3 Hill, Eq. 611.

Two suits, one in a foreign country between the executor and the administrator of a deceased claimant, acting under letters obtained in that country, and the other in Pennsylvania between the executor and another administrator of the claimant acting under Pennsylvania letters, are suits between different parties, and therefore neither the decree nor the proceedings in the one state are evidence in the other; the property in controversy being different in the two suits. Aspden v. Nixon, 45 U. S. 4 How. 467, 11 L. ed. 1069.

The record of a recovery against an administrator in Tennessee was held to be no evidence against another administrator of the same intestate in Mississippi. McLean v. Meek, 50 U. S. 13 How. 13, 15 L. ed. 277.

Although a judgment obtained against an executor in one state is not conclusive upon an executor in another state, yet it may be admissible in evidence to show that the demand has been carried into judgment, and that the other executors were precluded by it from pleading prescription or the statute of limitations upon the original cause of action. Hill v. Tucker, 54 U. S. 13 How. 453, 14 L. ed. 223, wherein executors were appointed in Virginia and also in Louisiana, and judgments were obtained against the Virginia executors by the creditors, and in default of payment, the Louisiana executors were sued.

In Goodall v. Tucker, 54 U. S. 13 How. 450, 14 L. ed. 227, the court affirmed the principles laid down in the preceding case of Hill v. Tucker, supra.

in said action from time to time by the direction and co-operation of the defendant herein that on the 28th day of August, 1891, final judgment was rendered and entered in said action, in favor of the plaintiff and the said interveners, and against the defendant Harvey Harris, as administrator of the estate of said Joseph Leighton, deceased, to be paid in due course of administration, and the other defendants in said action except Akin, for the sum of seven thousand three hundred and thirty-three dollars and eighty-five cents, and for certain costs of said action, amounting to the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars and thirty-six cents, and that said judgment is in full force and unreversed, and that a copy thereof is hereto attached, and referred to as, and made a part of, this allegation; and found upon pages 73 to 89 of 'Exhibit one,' hereto attached.

"(22) That the said Joseph Leighton, in his lifetime, in writing, signed by him the said Joseph Leighton, and on the 21st day of July, 1888, acknowledged the said indebtedness under the said contract for the work, labor, and service performed under and by virtue of said contract of affreightment by this plaintiff, as aforesaid, which acknowledgment was in words and figures as follows, that is to say: 'Joseph Leighton, President. W. B. Jordan, Vice Pres't. E. B. Weirick Cashier. H. B. Wiley, Asst. Cash-

Where executors of the same testator appointed by the same will, resided in different states, each qualifying in the state of his residence, it was held to be a case of exception to the rule as was likewise the case of an administrator with the will annexed; in such cases the court stating that although the judgment was not admitted to be conclusive, it was recognized as a proper basis for an action, and was permitted to go in evidence because there was a privity of right and official identity between executors whose powers emanated from the testator, and the judgment against one in one state might be rightfully brought in administration into the other state by proper proceedings against the executor. Turley v. Dreyfus, 88 La. Ann. 885.

In Creswell v. Slack, 68 Iowa, 110, the question turned upon the admission of a transcript of the record of the proceedings of the orphan's court in Pennsylvania, for the purpose of establishing a claim allowed against the administrator by the Pennsylvania court as against an auxiliary administrator in Iowa, and the court held it was not evidence and had no binding effect, there being no privity between the administrators, there being no general principle of law under which it could be held that a judgment upon the one was binding upon the other.

VII. Exceptions to the general rule.

The general rule as above illustrated is, however, like others, the subject of exceptions, imposed according to the position of the executor or administrator, as in cases where he moves within the jurisdiction of the court having assets in his hands, and where from the peculiar facts and circumstances of the case it is equitable that relief should be granted, and also in cases where, as illustrated under head V., supra, express provision is made by state statutes.

An executor or administrator is chargeable with assets received by him in any part of the world, but it is a different question whether, if he administers in another state and by virtue of such administration receives assets, he can be charged with them in another state, and it has been stated that if the other state were the intestate's domicile the administrator was not accountable at law in South Carolina for assets received in such other state, and that if the domicile of the deceased were in South Carolina the administrator's liability in the courts of that state depended upon the inquiry, whether his taking possession of the surplus assets from another state as administrator of the domicile would be regarded by the laws of that state as a discharge of his administration there, the court stating that the questions were ones for investigation under a plea of plene administravit. Conover v. Chapman, 2 Ball. L. 436.

A foreign executor or administrator has been held liable to be sued, in cases where he comes into the state bringing with him assets of the estate, to the same extent as he would be liable according to the laws of the state in which he was appointed. Thus, a foreign executor is chargeable in Alabama for all the assets retained in his hands, or which he has disposed of out of the course of his administration, and the distributees have the right to pursue the assets of the estate as long as they continued to be held by the executor. Williamson v. Branch Bank of Mobile, 7 Ala. 906, 48 Am. Dec. 617.

He is liable to be sued by the distributees of the estate which he represents, and to be made liable to the same extent as he would be liable according to the laws of the state in which he was appointed, and not otherwise. Johnson v. Jackson, 56 Ga. 820, 21 Am. Rep. 285, wherein the action was brought against the principal and sureties on an administration bond, who had moved from Alabama, by the heirs and distributees of the deceased.

So in Lake v. Hardee, 57 Ga. 459, where a foreign executor moved and converted the property within the jurisdiction of the Georgia court.

In Atchison v. Lindsey, 6 R. Mon. 86, 43 Am. Dec. 153, the court stated that the mere fact that the defendant was appointed administrator in another state, and received there the assets for which he was charged, did not of itself exempt him from all liability to be sued in the tribunals of that state for a claim growing out of his having received the assets, to the proceeds of which the complainants or some of them were entitled, the question whether or not a decree should be rendered against him depending upon the facts disclosed in his answer and upon the proof.

Therefore an administrator or executor who is appointed or who qualifies in another state and there receives assets into his hands, may be sued in the tribunals of Kentucky by the person or persons entitled to such assets, if he has removed to and settled in that state. Manion v. Titsworth, 18 B. Mon. 582, 597; Dorsey v. Dorsey, 5 J. J. Marsh. 280, 22 Am. Dec. 38; Atchison v. Lindsey, supra; Baker v. Smith, 3 Met. (Ky.) 264.

Not, however, as a fiduciary under the laws of such foreign state, but as an executor de non tort. Hopkins v. Towns, 4 B. Mon. 124, 39 Am. Dec. 497.

In the above-mentioned case, Dorsey v. Dorsey, supra, it was expressly decided that the distributees of the decedent might enforce distribution in Kentucky, the administrator appointed in Maryland having removed and settled in that state.

In Davis v. Connelly, 4 B. Mon. 136, it was held, in a case where a resident of Kentucky who was sued in Ohio and died leaving executors in the former state, who qualified and became parties to the action by order of the court made upon their application, that such executors could not afterwards when sued on the judgment in Kentucky deny that they were executors.

ier. 2,753. First National Bank. Capital, 50,000. Surplus and undivided profits, $65,000. Miles City, Montana, 7—21, 1888. J. D. Biggert, Pittsburg—Dear Sir: Nothing from you yet. If I don't hear soon, I will go to Bismarck, and tender amt. due, as I don't want to be bothered any more. Whatever is due is ready, as it has been for the last seven years, whenever I can safely pay either you or Braithwaite. Yours, truly, J. Leighton.' That the sum owing to plaintiff, as shown by the allegations hereinbefore contained, was the amount, and not otherwise, referred to in said letter; and the Braithwaite mentioned therein is this plaintiff, and none other; and the said J. D.

Biggert, claiming to act and acting on behalf of said interveners, was not a stranger to the transaction. That on divers and sundry times the said Joseph Leighton acknowledged said indebtedness, to wit, on the 27th day of June, 1888, on the 22d day of July, 1888, and on the 5th day of August, 1888, as will more fully appear from pages 74 to 77, of 'Exhibit one,' hereto annexed, and made a part hereof. That again, on the 1st day of August, 1888, the said Joseph Leighton, by one George T. Webster, his attorney, duly authorized so to do, acknowledged under oath the making of the contract of affreightment hereinbefore mentioned, and the voyage, as will more fully appear from pages

So where a bill was filed by the infant heirs and administrator of the domicile of the deceased, a citizen of Kentucky, against the defendant who administered on the deceased's estate in South Carolina, but was himself a resident of Kentucky, the bill alleging that he had received assets in South Carolina, the court held that because the defendant was appointed administrator in a foreign jurisdiction and received the assets there, it was no reason why he could not be held responsible to any extent and under any circumstances in the tribunals of that state for surplus remaining in his hands, and to which citizens of that state were according to all laws entitled, Atchison v. Lindsey, supra, relying upon the New York cases of Campbell v. Tousey, 7 Cow. 64, and the Pennsylvania cases of Swearingen v. Pendleton, 4 Serg. & R. 389; Evans v. Tatem, 9 Serg. & R. 252, 11 Am. Dec. 717; Bryan v. McGee, 2 Wash. C. C. 387, and the case of Dorsey v. Dorsey, 5 J. J. Marsh. 280, 22 Am. Dec. 33.

In Turley v. Dreyfus, 38 La. Ann. 885, action was brought to enforce a sister state judgment against a successful representative in Louisiana, the case coming up upon appeal from a judgment sustaining an exception of no cause of action and dismissing the suit, the plaintiff alleging that he was the transferee of a judgment obtained against the executor from the chancery court of Tennessee, who was also the executor of the will in Louisiana, and the judgment being appealed from by the executor in Tennessee where it was affirmed, contradictorily with an administrator de bonis non, appointed to replace the executor, who had died since appeal, the court held that such judgment might be made the subject of an action in the Louisiana courts as although such judgment was not conclusive yet it was a good cause of action.

So in New York he may be sued and held responsible for assets in his hands in that state. Campbell v. Tousey, 7 Cow. 67.

In the above case the defendant also collected effects in that state and was sued as executor de son tort, and held chargeable for all assets not applied by him in due course of administration, either under his foreign appointment, or in that state, whether such effects were received abroad and brought into the state, or received in the state. Campbell v. Tousey, 7 Cow. 64.

Where, however, the executors were only casually in the state of New York their residence being in another state in which the will was proved and wherein the testator died, the principal part of the property being in such other state, some being within the jurisdiction of the courts of New York, no special circumstances being shown to grant the court jurisdiction a different doctrine was applied and relief denied. Brown v. Brown, 4 Edw. Ch. 345, 6 L. ed. 901.

The following cases maintain the same principles: Re Webb, 11 Hun, 126; no matter where they may have been received; Gulick v. Gulick, 21

How. Pr. 33, 38 Barb. 102; Brown v. Brown, 1 Barb. Ch. 129, 5 L. ed. 349; Field v. Gibson, 56 How. Pr. 233, 20 Hun, 278; McNamara v. Dwyer, 7 Paige, 239, 4 L. ed. 129, 32 Am. Dec. 637; Ordroneaux v. Helle, 3 Sandf. Ch. 512, 513, 7 L. ed. 939, 941; Lyman v. Parsons, 28 Barb. 572; Lawrence v. Lawrence, 3 Barb. Ch. 71, 5 L. ed. 821; Kohler v. Knapp, 1 Bradf. 241; Metcalf v. Clark, 41 Barb. 43; Lockwood v. Brantly, 31 Hun, 157; Smith v. Webb, 1 Barb. 230; Black v. Woodman, 5 Redf. 354; Marshall v. Bresler, 1 How. Pr. N. S. 223; Brown v. Knapp, 17 Hun, 160; Despard v. Churchill, 53 N. Y. 192; Re Galloway, 21 Wend. 32, 34 Am. Dec. 209; Swearingen v. Pendleton, 4 Serg. & R. 389; Evans v. Tatem, 9 Serg. & R. 252, 11 Am. Dec. 717; Olney v. Angell, 5 R. I. 198, 73 Am. Dec. 63; Ray v. Simmons, 11 R. I. 236, 23 Am. Rep. 447; Gravely v. Gravely, 25 S. C. 1, 60 Am. Rep. 478; Patton v. Overton, 8 Humph. 192; Allsup v. Allsup, 10 Yerg. 268; Beeler v. Dunn, 8 Head. 37, 75 Am. Dec. 761; Fugate v. Moore, 86 Va. 1045; Powell v. Stratton, 11 Gratt. 792; Tunstall v. Polard, 11 Leigh, 1; Bryan v. McGee, 2 Wash. C. C. 387.

In Latine v. Clements, 3 Kelley (Ga.) 426, it was held that an action would lie against an administrator cum testamento annexo in that state, upon a judgment obtained against an executor in Virginia.

The courts will assume jurisdiction over such administrator, coming within the jurisdiction of the court, with property of the deceased which he wrongfully applies to his own use. Brown v. Brown, 4 Edw. Ch. 346, 6 L. ed. 901, 1 Barb. Ch. 129, 5 L. ed. 352; Black v. Woodman, 5 Redf. 354; Marshall v. Bresler, 1 How. Pr. N. S. 223; McNamara v. Dwyer, 7 Paige, 239, 4 L. ed. 129, 32 Am. Dec. 627.

The mere fact, however, that a single item of personal property is situated within one of the chancery circuits in the state of New York will not give jurisdiction before the vice-chancellor. Brown v. Brown, 1 Barb. Ch. 129, 5 L. ed. 349.

Equity will assume jurisdiction over foreign executors and administrators at the instance of creditors, legatees, or next of kin in special cases, in order to prevent a failure of justice, or where a hopeless remedy might otherwise occur. Brown v. Brown, supra; Shultz v. Pulver, 3 Paige, 182, 3 L. ed. 107; Price v. Brown, 60 How. Pr. 514, 10 Abb. N. C. 70; Ordroneaux v. Helle, 3 Sandf. Ch. 512, 7 L. ed. 941; Field v. Gibson, 20 Hun, 274, 56 How. Pr. 233; Lockwood v. Brantly, 31 Hun, 157; Gulick v. Gulick, 21 How. Pr. 33, 38 Barb. 102; Montalvan v. Clover, 33 Barb. 190; McNamara v. Dwyer, supra; Slatter v. Carroll, 2 Sandf. Ch. 584, 7 L. ed. 712; Re Webb, 11 Hun, 126; Kohler v. Knapp, 1 Bradf. 241; Lawrence v. Lawrence, 3 Barb. Ch. 71, 5 L. ed. 821; Brown v. Knapp, 17 Hun, 160; Despard v. Churchill, 53 N. Y. 192; Colbert v. Daniel, 33 Ala. 514; Julian v. Reynolds, 8 Ala. 680; Winter v. Winter, 1 Walk. (Miss.) 211; Mellus v. Thompson, 1 Cliff. 126, 131; Chappelaine v. Dechenaux, 8 U. S. 4 Cranch, 303, 2 L. ed.

43 to 45, of said 'Exhibit one,' hereto annexed, and made and referred to as a part hereof.

"(23) That there has been paid plaintiff, and applied in liquidation of a part of the amount so due plaintiff, as aforesaid, from the said Harvey Harris, as administrator of the estate of Joseph Leighton, deceased, the sum of four hundred and thirteen and 92-100 (413.92) dollars, said payment being made on the 31st day of March, 1892. That therefore, and the 28th day of November, 1891, there was paid on account of said indebtedness owing to this plaintiff the further sum of two thousand dollars ($2,000.00), which sum was paid for and in behalf of the said

Joseph Leighton by Kelly & Jordan, who had heretofore obligated themselves to pay the same for and in behalf of the said Joseph Leighton. And that the estate of the said deceased in the territory of Dakota, now state of North Dakota, has been fully administered upon, settled, and exhausted, and said administrator's final accounts presented to the county court in and for said Burleigh county, state of North Dakota, the same having exclusive jurisdiction therein, and by said court passed, allowed, and approved, and said administrator discharged from said trust, and that a copy of the order of said county court passing, allowing, and approving said final account is hereto attached, and referred to 630; Childress v. Emory, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 630, 5 L. ed. 711; Bryan v. McGee, 2 Wash. C. C. 587; Patton v. Overton, 8 Humph. 122; Allsup v. Allsup, 10 Yerg. 238; Beeler v. Dunn, 3 Head, 87, 75 Am. Dec. 761.

In order to prevent waste and to secure its application to the payment of the testator's debts, and to prevent failure of justice. Lockwood v. Brantly, 31 Hun, 157; Field v. Gibson, 20 Hun, 278.

According to the laws of the state from which the executors derived their authority. Ibid.; Field v. Gibson, 66 How. Pr. 233, 20 Hun, 278; Re Webb, 11 Hun, 126; McNamara v. Dwyer, 7 Paige, 239, 4 L. ed. 139, 32 Am. Dec. 637.

And this is so in the case of fraud upon creditors or distributees of the estate. Patton v. Overton and Allsup v. Allsup, supra.

The executors in such cases not being sued for any liability of the deceased or his estate, but on their own liability for the wrongful use or misapplication of trust funds which have come to their hands, equity granting the relief without proceedings before the surrogate, the estate of the deceased having been all collected and the debts paid. Montalvan v. Clover, 32 Barb. 190.

Whether, upon a bill filed by the chancellor, the court will entertain a suit to call foreign executors or administrators to account where they are within the jurisdiction of the courts of the state where appointed and where the bill does not show that the complainant has not full and perfect remedy in those courts, has been held to be an open question. Brown v. Brown, supra.

The court in such cases proceeding upon the ground that where there is a right there ought to be a remedy, and that where no remedy to enforce the right exists elsewhere chancery will enforce the remedy whenever necessary to prevent a total failure of justice if the property in controversy, or the person of the wrongdoer, is within the jurisdiction and control of the court. Ibid.

The obligation of foreign executors to the devisees or legatees offers no better reason for immunity from the process and judgments of courts of equity in other countries for their wrongful dealings with the trust fund than the case of trustees appointed by deed in a foreign country for the abuse of their trust, there being no exclusive localities for the demand of justice under such circumstances. Montalvan v. Clover, supra.

A foreign executor may on bill in equity be held to disclose the nature of the funds invested by him in the purchase of property, and to declare the holding of the same as trustee and the uses and trusts upon which held. Clopton v. Booker, 37 Ark. 482.

In McNamara v. Dwyer, 7 Paige, 239, 4 L. ed. 139, 32 Am. Dec. 637, the applicant for a discharge from a writ of ne exeat, appointed administrator of the deceased's estate in Ireland, was held liable for the estate converted by him into money, brought into the state and misapplied, the complainant claiming a share thereof, even though no letters of administration had been granted him in the state, the court stating that if it were otherwise there would be a total failure of justice.

But in Vermilya v. Beatty, 6 Barb. 429, the court drew a distinction between it and that of McNamara v. Dwyer, supra, in which the chancellor regarded the administrator, having assets in his hands unadministered, as a trustee for the creditors and next of kin, and held that such foreign administrator could be compelled to account in the state, yet in the case then under consideration there was no allegation that the defendant had been in possession of assets within the state, but the court was of the opinion that even if it had been alleged that the defendant had such assets, she would not be liable at law.

So in Lockwood v. Brantly, 31 Hun, 156, a suit against the defendant a foreign administrator, and against the corporation, to recover twelve shares of stock and to have it transferred to the name of the true owner, was held to be one in which a court of equity would interfere to enforce a trust upon or enter claims in respect thereto, and as such was maintainable against a foreign executor and administrator, the court following the case of Gulick v. Gulick, 32 Barb. 102; McNamara v. Dwyer, supra; Field v. Gibson, 56 How. Pr. 233; Brown v. Brown, 1 Barb. Ch. 139, 5 L. ed. 349.

One of the next of kin may call a foreign executor to account in the state of New York for assets brought there by him without the appointment of the administrator in that state in such cases in order to institute proceedings in equity to prevent a failure of justice and not as a denial of the jurisdiction of the surrogate to grant administration. Kohler v. Knapp, 1 Bradf. 241; Lawrence v. Lawrence, 3 Barb. Ch. 71, 5 L. ed. 321; Shultz v. Pulver, 3 Paige, 182, 3 L. ed. 109.

Circuit courts have jurisdiction of suits by or against executors or administrators if they are citizens of different states, and in certain cases where they are the real parties in interest before the court, and have succeeded by virtue of their appointment to all the rights and interests of their testators or intestates, and in suits upon promissory notes given by the deceased in certain special cases, or in bills in equity for an account. Mellus v. Thompson, 1 Cliff. 125, 131; Chappelaine v. Dechenaux, 8 U. S. 4 Cranch. 306, 2 L. ed. 629; Childress v. Emory, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 630, 5 L. ed. 711.

Such administrator may in equity be called upon by a creditor to account for the assets in another. Winter v. Winter, 1 Walk. (Miss.) 211, citing Wharton's Digest, p. 277.

A foreign administrator may be liable to be sued in Tennessee, not in the character of a foreign administrator, but in the distinct charand made a part hereof, and found on pages 92 to 94, of 'Exhibit one,' hereto attached."

On motion of the defendant the court struck these paragraphs from the complaint, on the ground that they were irrelevant and redundant. This action of the court is assigned as error. To determine this question it is necessary to determine the force and effect of a judgment against an administrator in one state against an administrator of the same estate in another state. In Johnson v. Powers, 139 U. S. 156, 35 L. ed. 112, this subject is thoroughly discussed, and the authorities are collected and cited. In this case Mr. Justice Gray, delivering the opinion of the court, says: "A judgment in rem binds only the property within the control of the court which rendered it, and a judgment in personam binds only the parties to that judgment and those in privity with them. A judgment recovered against the administrator of a deceased person in one state is no evidence of debt in a subsequent suit by the same plaintiff in another state, either against an administrator, whether the same or a different person appointed there, or against any other person having assets of the deceased. Aspdon v. Nixon, 45 U. S. 4 How. 467, 11 L. ed. 1059; Stacy v. Thrasher, 47 U. S. 6 How. 44, 12 L. ed. 387; McLean v. Meek, 59 U. S. 18 How. 16, 15 L. ed. 277; Low v. Bartlett, 8 Allen, 259. In Stacy v. Thrasher, actor of trustee for the creditors or next of kin of the estate. Patton v. Overton, 8 Humph. 122; Allsup v. Allsup, 10 Yerg. 283.

Or for those entitled to the funds in his hands. Beeler v. Dunn, 3 Head, 87, 75 Am. Dec. 761.

The removal from state to state is the act of the administrator which the creditors of the intestate cannot prevent, and therefore should not be prejudiced by it, the assets being administered according to the law of the state within which the administration is granted, and justice requiring that the administrator should be liable to the amount of the assets which have come to his hands in whatever state he may be found, no matter whether he has made such state his permanent residence or not. Evans v. Tatem, 9 Serg. & R. 262, 11 Am. Dec. 717.

In Olney v. Angell, 5 R. I. 198, 73 Am. Dec. 68, a bill was brought by legatees under a will admitted to probate in Wisconsin, which had never been proved, filed or ordered to be recorded in Rhode Island, against the administrator appointed upon the estate of the deceased in Rhode Island for an account and administration of the estate, and for a decree that the same be paid over to the administrator in Wisconsin. It was held that the action would lie, the parties suing in their own right and not as representatives.

So where the bill alleged that the defendant had withdrawn a deposit upon a bank and had it in his possession and refused to pay, the answer alleging that the defendant was appointed administrator in Massachusetts and withdrew the deposit as such, but did not deny that he held it as administrator in Rhode Island, but averred that he held the same as part of the decedent's estate, the court held that the defendant could be held to account directly with the plaintiff, and presumed that he held it as administrator in that state. Ray v. Simmons, 11 R. L. 266, 23 Am. Rep. 447.

In Powell v. Straiton, 11 Gratt. 792, it was held that an administrator in Mississippi was accountable for his administration in Virginia.

In Moss v. Rowland, 3 Rush, 505, it was held that the right of a foreign executrix to defend was not extinguished by her subsequent marriage, the Kentucky statutes to that effect not applying to foreign representatives whose rights depended upon foreign laws.

A foreign executor has been held liable to a co-executor, in order to prevent a complete or partial failure of justice, in order to maintain and enforce the trust. Price v. Brown, 60 How. Pr. 514.

When a foreign executor or administrator is sued in the courts of Georgia, the nature and extent of his liability will depend upon the laws of the state or county where he derived his authority to administer the assets of the deceased. Hoskins v. Shedd, 70 Ga. 523; Johnson v. Jackson, 56 Ga. 323, 21 Am. Rep. 226.

In Hamilton v. Taylor, 2 Conn. Sup. Ct. Rep. 408, a 37 L. R. A.

foreign executrix had instituted proceedings in Ohio and answered accountably, and subsequently dismissed the petition, the action afterwards proceeding to trial without objection on her part. It was held she could not afterwards object to the jurisdiction of the court.

Where a resident in a foreign state owned lands in New York, and conveyed them to a trustee and resident of that state upon certain trusts, and to remit the balance to a party residing at the grantor's domicile, for the purpose of being applied by him in payment of the grantor's debts, the grantor dying insolvent owing debts at his domicile, and in other states, leaving executors who qualified at his domicile, the court held that the creditors might file a bill in the state of New York against the trustee and executors for the purpose of having the lands sold and an account taken, and the effects distributed, upon the ground that the trust fund being real estate situated within the state of New York and the trustee a resident of the state, the jurisdiction of the court was unquestionable, and that in such a case the foreign executor might be made a party and no objection could be raised upon the ground that the creditor instituting the proceedings resided at the testator's domicile. Slatter v. Carroll, 2 Sandf. Ch. 584, 7 L. ed. 712.

In Brown v. Khapp, 17 Hun, 160, the testator died domiciled in Connecticut leaving a legacy to the plaintiff, the executor, who at the time of the death of the testator and at the commencement of suit resided in New York. Under the will passing the accounts before the Connecticut court, it was held that the New York court had jurisdiction over such executor to enforce payment of interest on the legacy, the court relying upon McNamara v. Dwyer, 7 Paige, 229, 4 L. ed. 129, 23 Am. Dec. 627, and Despard v. Churchill, 58 N. Y. 192.

In Gray v. Franks, 86 Mich. 332, an executor of a foreign will of a mortgagee whose will was not probated in Michigan until after the action was brought to foreclose the mortgage, was held liable in the action, the will being probated in that state before the hearing.

Where foreign executors had become, by virtue of their appointment, owners of a judgment and contracted to assign it, it was held that they were suable on such a contract outside of the state of their appointment. Johnston v. Wallis, 3 L. R. A. 822, 112 N. Y. 230.

So where a testator who held the lands as trustee died in South Carolina, and the executor took out letters testamentary in that state and sold the lands which were in Kentucky, and then removed to Alabama, it was held he could be sued in Alabama for the proceeds of the lands, inasmuch as his transactions in reference to them were not necessarily connected with the settlement of the estate under his letters testamentary. Taylor v. Benham, 46 U. S. 5 How. 228, 12 L. ed. 120.

In Newark Sav. Inst. v. Jones, 35 N. J. Eq. 495, the in which a judgment, recovered in one state against an administrator appointed in that state, upon an alleged debt of the intestate, was held to be incompetent evidence of the debt in a suit brought by the same plaintiff in the circuit court of the United States held within another state against an administrator there appointed of the same intestate, the reasons given by Mr. Justice Grier have so strong a bearing on the case before us, and on the argument of the appellant, as to be worth quoting from: 'The administrator receives his authority from the ordinary, or other officer of the government where the goods of the intestate are situate. But coming into such possession by succession to the intestate, and incumbered with the duty to pay his debts, he is considered in law as in privity with him, and therefore bound or estopped by a judgment against him. Yet his representation of his intestate is a qualified one, and extends not beyond the assets of which the ordinary had jurisdiction.' 47 U. S. 6 How. 53, 12 L. ed. 840. In answer-deceased, a resident of New York, appeared to the bill and answered, and subsequently died in New York leaving a will which was proved by the executor in New York, an order being subsequently made for revival of the suit making the executors defendants who appeared by consent and demurred to the bill. It was held that they were estopped from denying their liability as foreign executors to suit in the New Jersey courts.

Where a decree of the circuit court of the United States decreed that an administrator appointed in another state and district, but who appeared and defended the suit, was indebted to the plaintiff in a certain amount payable out of the assets of the estate, and the administrator brought a bill of review under the provisions of the Arkansas statute (Digest 1874, § 4478), in the circuit court to reverse the decree, and such court dismissed the bill for want of equity, the decree for payment binds the administrator and the assets in the estate of his appointment without further action against him or the estate, and the plaintiff's claim is not barred by the settlement of the estate and the discharge of the administrator in the state of his appointment, in proceedings of which plaintiffs had no notice and were not parties. Lawrence v. Nelson, 143 U. S. 215, 36 L. ed. 130. But the court intimated that the result would have been otherwise had the administrator appealed from the judgment against him. Ibid.

So where an executor to a foreign action pleaded nulla in record, payment and surrender of principal and judgment was found against him as executor and he was sued on a transcript in Tennessee, and a verdict was given against him upon which the court refused to levy de bonis propriis to render it leviable de bonis testatoris, it was held that the executor, not having pleaded the proper plea in the original suit, was personally liable to the debt. White v. Archbill, 2 Sneed, 588.

In Re Galloway, 21 Wend. 32, 34 Am. Dec. 208, proceedings were taken by way of certiorari to review proceedings relative to the issuance of an attachment of the petitioner, as a nonresident debtor, the facts showing that letters of administration had been granted to him a resident of England upon the decedent's estate, who as a resident of the estate was liable under covenants contained in the lease, the administrator having received the rents and profits of the premises and refused to perform the covenants, and it was held that under the statute the executor was liable upon the covenant.

It has been said that it could not be doubted that an executor or administrator as such had no power to sue extra territorium, nor was he subject to suit even where he brings with him into another country the assets received in the country from which he obtained his appointment. The latter part of the above principle, however, has been denied to be the law by Campbell v. Tousey, 7 Cow. 67, where it was held that he could be sued as executor de son tort. Calhoun v. King, 5 Ala. 523.

In the above case an administrator in Georgia removed into Alabama bringing the deceased's estate with him and the minor distributees and 27 L. R. A.

subsequently died in possession thereof. The court granted an injunction at the instance of the distributees to prevent the sale of the property for the payment of his debts, holding that a court of equity had the power to ascertain the amount in funds of such administrator and distributee, the parties all being within the jurisdiction, in order to prevent the destruction of the funds until a settlement could be made.

The court based its opinion in the above case upon the ground that it was not a suit against the administrator for a debt due from the estate but was an assertion of title to the property itself, which being found in the state gave the court jurisdiction, the court of chancery having power to interpose and prevent the destruction of the fund until the settlement could be made, the property and all parties being before the court.

An executor who records a foreign will is not liable for effects received, in the country where the testator had his domicile. Probate Court v. Matthews, 6 Vt. 268; Hagood v. Jennison, 2 Vt. 294; Selectmen of Boston v. Boylston, 2 Mass. 381.

The above decision was based upon the theory that it would be unjust and impracticable to make one who administers upon property in that state account for property received in another state or kingdom under another and the principal administration where he has or is bound to account for all effects there received and where creditors and legatees should go if they desire to avail themselves of the funds there remaining. Probate Court v. Matthews, supra.

In Cureton v. Mills, 13 S. C. 418, 36 Am. Rep. 700, administrators in South Carolina were held to account for the proceeds of personal property which at the death of the intestate were found in the state of North Carolina, the administrators taking out letters in both states and having therefore a right to receive the personal property in North Carolina by virtue of their administration in that state; being in legal possession they transferred it to themselves as administrators in the state of South Carolina.

In Gravelly v. Gravelly, 36 S. C. 1, 60 Am. Rep. 478, the executor of a testator domiciled in England qualified both in the jurisdiction of the domicile and in the United States, and it was held that he was liable in a suit by a legatee in this country, there being sufficient assets within the jurisdiction.

In White v. Archbill, 2 Sneed, 588, an executor was sued in Tennessee upon a foreign judgment and pleaded full administration of the estate in Tennessee. It was held that such plea was not available where not pleaded in the original suit.

VIII. English decisions.

An administration granted in a foreign court will not be noticed in the English courts. Tourton v. Flower, 3 P. Wms. 369, in which a foreign administrator was sought to be charged in the English courts, wherein it was stated that the English courts could take no notice of what was done in the spiritual court beyond the seas, and sustained the demurrer to the bill.

ing the objection that to apply these principles to a judgment obtained in another state of the Union would be to deny it the faith and credit, and the effect, to which it was entitled by the constitution and laws of the United States, he observed that it was evidence, and conclusive by way of estoppel, only between the same parties, or their privies, or on the same subject-matter when the proceeding was in rem; and that the parties to the judgments in question were not the same; neither were they privies, in blood, in law, or by estate; and proceeded as follows: 'An administrator under grant of administration in one state stands in none of these relations to an administrator in another. Each is privy to the testator, and would be estopped by a judgment against him; but they have no privy with each other, in law or in estate. They receive their authority

There is no privy between the administrator in one country and one in another; they do not derive their authority from the same person and their powers are conferred by separate tribunals; a judgment only binding the estate or the assets in the hands of the administrator within the jurisdiction of the court. Tighe v. Tighe, 11 Ir. Eq. Rep. 208.

Where the widow of an intestate who died in India obtained letters of administration in that country, and remitted the proceeds of the effects in government bills to her agent in England, and a creditor of the intestate took out letters of administration in the latter country and brought action against the widow's agent for money in his hands, it was held that the India letters of administration prevailed over those granted in England, and the action would lie only at the suit of the widow. Currie v. Broham, 1 Dowl. & R. 35.

Where a bill in equity sought an account of the estate of an intestate who died in India, possessed of a personal representative there, it was held that a personal representative of the intestate constituted in England was a necessary party, although it did not appear that the intestate at the time of the decease had any assets in England; and further that it was not sufficient in order to avoid a demurrer for want of parties, that the personal representative constituted in England out of the jurisdiction was made a party, and that process was prayed against her when within the jurisdiction, even though the bill alleged that the India court was the proper court for granting administration, and that the administratrix constituted by it was the sole legal representative. Tyler v. Bell, 2 Myl. & C. 89.

In Lowe v. Farlie, 2 Madd. Ch. 101, p. 386, of first American ed., vol. 1, the testator appointed parties residing in two foreign countries as executors and the will was not proved in England; the executors in one of such foreign countries remitted a portion of the estate to their agent in England, and a creditor subsequently filed a bill against such agent praying an account and payment of the money to the accountant general for security. The court sustained a demurrer to the bill upon the ground that no personal representative of the testator was made a party.

Where a testator died abroad, appointing executors in such country, leaving the residue of his property to his mother in England, and the executors transmitted such residue to England, but the mother having died, the amount was paid to her executors who paid her debts which exceeded the amount to which she was entitled from such testator's estate, it was held in an action brought by a creditor of such testator to obtain payment of his debts, or to have the testator's estate administered, that the foreign executors were improperly made parties to the claim, and that the plaintiff could not have relief against them without having a personal representative of such testator constituted in England, a party to the suit. Silver v. Stein, 9 Eng. L. & Eq. 216, 21 L. J. Ch. N. S. 812, 1 Drew. 205.

In Anderson v. Caunter, 2 Myl. & K. 763, one of the executors of a testator who died in India proved the will and took possession of the assets in India and upon his death his widow and executrix proved his will and became possessed of his assets in India and subsequently removed to England where she was made a party to an administration suit of the estate of the first testator. It was held that in such a suit the original testator's estate could not be administered, and that according to the course of the court the decree against his administratrix would not be for the general administration of the estate but would only require from her an account of what she had received and paid as executrix and would be charged with the balance.

Where probate was granted by the foreign court, and some personal property being situated in England the English court granted ancillary probate to the foreign executors, it was held that such court had no right to constitute itself a court of construction of the will, nor was it entitled to entertain an administration suit founded upon such a question, and that the foreign executors might properly except to the jurisdiction, but that the English court might have authority in jurisdiction to construe the will and administer the estate so far as funds and persons in that country were concerned, where the conduct of the parties showed a consent to the jurisdiction. Enohin v. Wylie, 10 H. L. Cas. 1, 8 Jur. N. S. 597, 31 L. J. Ch. 402, 10 Week. Rep. 467, 6 L. T. N. S. 238.

An administrator in Ireland with assets in his hands is liable to a suit in England. Dowdale's Case, 6 Coke, 62.

In Bond v. Grayham, 1 Hare, 482, 11 L. J. Ch. N. S. 306, 6 Jur. 620, it was held that to a suit in respect of an unadministered part of a testator's estate remitted from India and remaining in the hands of an executor residing in England, but who was only constituted executor of the testator in India, such executor and personal representative constituted in England, was a necessary party.

In Atty-Gen. v. Hope, 2 Clark & F. 84, 5 Bligh, N.S. 44, a testator died in England possessed of personal property there and in foreign funds, the executor taking out probate in that country and paying duty on the same property situated in England. It was held that he was not chargeable with the duty in respect to the property in the foreign funds, even though he afterwards obtained such property and administered it.

In Preston v. Melville, 3 Clark & F. 16, trustees and executors of a will of a testator domiciled in Scotland declined to act and his next of kin obtained letters of administration of his personal estate in England from the ecclesiastical court and subsequently consented to the appointment by the court of sessions in Scotland of other persons as trustees and executors in the place of those named in the will, with like powers as those conferred by the will. It was held, such trustees having commenced action in the court of sessions against the administratrix, calling for a transfer of the personal estate received under an administration, that the personal estate in England must be administered there by the administratrix under the letters of administration granted in that country.

R. W.

from different sovereignties, and over different property. The authority of each is paramount to the other. Each is accountable to the ordinary from whom he receives his authority. Nor does the one come by succession to the other into the trust of the same property, incumbered by the same debts.' 47 U. S. 6 How. 59, 60, 12 L. ed. 848. 'It is for those who assert this privity to show wherein it lies, and the argument for it seems to be this: That the judgment against the administrator is against the estate of the intestate, and that his estate, wheresoever situate, is liable to pay his debts. Therefore the plaintiff, having once established his claim against the estate by the judgment of a court, should not be called on to make proof of it again. This argument assumes that the judgment is in rem, and not in personam, or that the estate has a sort of corporate entity and unity. But that is not true, either in fact or in legal construction. The judgment is against the person of the administrator that he shall pay the debt of the intestate out of the funds committed to his care. If there be another administrator in another state, liable to pay the same debt, he may be subjected to a like judgment upon the same demand, but the assets in his hands cannot be affected by a judgment to which he is personally a stranger.' 'The laws and courts of a state can only affect persons and things within their jurisdiction. Consequently, both as to the administrator and the property confided to him, a judgment in another state is res inter alios acta. It cannot even be prima facie evidence of a debt, for, if it have any effect at all, it must be as a judgment, and operate by way of estoppel.' 47 U. S. 6 How. 60, 61, 12 L. ed. 843, 844. In Low v. Bartlett, above cited, following the decisions of this court, it was held that a judgment allowing a claim against the estate of a deceased person in Vermont, under statutes similar to those of Michigan, was not competent evidence of debt in a suit in equity brought in Massachusetts by the same plaintiff against an executor appointed there, and against legatees who had received money from him; the court saying: 'The judgment in Vermont was in no sense a judgment against them, nor against the property which they had received from the executor.' 8 Allen, 266." If the judgment recovered in Dakota against the administrator there is of no binding force and effect, not even effectual as evidence of a debt, against the administrator in this state, as is held by the authority just quoted, then the pleading of the same, as is done in this case, could subserve no valuable purpose, and it cannot be properly contended that the court erred in striking the same, and all reference thereto, from the complaint. Appellant contends that it was necessary to plead such judgment and proceedings in order to show that the demand sued on here had been given credit for the amount realized under the Dakota judgment. We think this position untenable. Such credit could have been given in any suit on the demand in litigation. The appellant further contends that it was necessary to plead the Dakota judgment and proceedings, in order to show that the Montana administrator, the defendant here, is estopped from disputing the claim sued on by reason of his having taken part, as alleged in paragraph 21, stricken from the complaint, in defending said Dakota suit in the name of Harvey Harris, administrator there. We think this contention cannot be maintained. There was no privity between these two administrators. This defendant had no authority to act or bind the estate outside of the jurisdiction of his own state or appointment. See Johnson v. Powers, supra, and authorities cited therein. 1 Woerner, Administration, § 160, p. 382.

Appellant contends that, whatever force and effect the court might give the Dakota judgment and proceedings set out in the complaint, and the action of the court therein, still he has a cause of action independent thereof, by reason of the alleged new promise in writing of Leighton in his lifetime, pleaded in paragraph 22 of the complaint, which was stricken out by the court. After striking out said parts of the complaint, the court sustained defendant's demurrer thereto on the ground that the demand sued on was barred by the statute of limitations. This action of the court is especially attacked and complained of by appellant, as he says the court, by striking out paragraph 22 of the complaint, left the same demurrable, as said paragraph set up, as claimed, a new promise, made by Leighton in his lifetime, to pay the demand sued on. While perhaps it would have been more appropriate to attack this particular paragraph of the complaint by demurrer, yet whether prejudicial error was committed by the court in its action we will consider later on. Does paragraph 22 of the complaint contain and plead such a new promise to pay the demand sued on as will relieve it from the bar of the statute of limitations? It is conceded that the demand is barred unless the bar is removed by the new promise of Leighton in his lifetime, set out in said paragraph 22. We will consider this question as if said paragraph had not been stricken from the complaint. The written new promise of Leighton relied on to remove the bar of the statute of limitations in this case is as follows: "Miles City, Montana, 7-21, 1888. J. D. Biggert, Pittsburg—Dear Sir: Nothing from you yet. If I don't hear soon, I will go to Bismarck, and tender amt. due, as I don't want to be bothered any more. Whatever is due is ready, as it has been for the last seven years, whenever I can safely pay either you or Braithwaite. Yours, truly, J. Leighton." The appellant relies on two other written instruments, signed by said Leighton, to relieve this demand from the bar of said statute. These instruments are as follows: "Miles City, Montana, 6-27, 1888. John Biggert, Pittsburg—Dear Sir: Have just returned, and have been looking over matters. I am not satisfied about the settlement of Eclipse trip. Please write me your understanding of it. Also, if I settle with your folks, if they will see me clear of Braithwaite, etc. Write me at once. Yours, truly, J. Leighton." "Miles City, Montana, 7-22, 1888. J. D. Biggert, Pittsburg—Dear Sir: Yours, with check, at hand. I am anxious to see Joe better. He came out, and figured up books, and saw that we had a loss for 1, and went away satisfied, but will write him after I get his letter. I cannot wait long for your decision. You know I am very ill, and I must have this thing off my hands. I want to help you in the matter, but the suit has got to be attended to. Very truly, J. Leighton. Why don't you write me about your letter of April, '82?" These last two instruments are referred to as exhibits, and the first instrument is set out in full in said paragraph 22. Said first written instrument or letter is especially relied on by appellant as constituting such an acknowledgment of the demand sued on, and new promise to pay the same, as to take the debt out of the operation of the statute of limitations. In Bell v. Morrison, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 352, 7 L. ed. 176, — a case involving the doctrine under discussion, — Mr. Justice Story speaking for the court, says: "To remove the bar of the statute of limitations by a new promise, it must be determinate and unequivocal; and, if a new promise is to be raised by implication of law from an acknowledgment, there must be an unqualified acknowledgment of a subsisting debt which the party is liable and willing to pay." In Biddel v. Brizzolara, 56 Cal., at page 882, the court says: "If there be no express promise, but a promise is to be raised by implication of law from the acknowledgment of the party, such an acknowledgment ought to contain an unqualified and direct admission of a previous subsisting debt, which the party is liable and willing to pay. If there be accompanying circumstances which repel the promise or intention to pay; if the expressions be equivocal, vague, and undeterminate, leading to no certain conclusion, but at best to probable inferences, which may affect different minds in different ways, — we think they ought not to go to a jury as evidence of a new promise to revive the cause of action." Mr. Justice Story in Bell v. Morrison, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 352, 7 L. ed. 179. "An acknowledgment of the debt to take the case out of the statute of limitations must be clear and unambiguous, and must recognize and be directed to the particular debt and amount to an unqualified admission that it is due and unpaid." 5 U. S. Gen. Dig. p. 1899, § 526, and authorities cited. In McCormick v. Brown, 36 Cal., at page 185, 95 Am. Dec. 170, the court says: "The acknowledgment must be a direct, distinct, unqualified admission of the debt which the party is liable and willing to pay."

We think it cannot be contended that the two writings claimed to be acknowledgments and new promises, dated respectively 6—27, 1888, and 7—23 1888, and set out above, contain any such acknowledgment of this debt, or new promise to pay the same, as to relieve the demand sued on from the bar of the statute. The instrument dated 7—23, 1888, says nothing about this demand. The instrument, dated 6—27, 1888, shows that Leighton is not satisfied about the settlement of the Eclipse trip, and asks, "If I [Leighton] settle with your folks, if they will see me clear of Braithwaite," etc. If there is any promise in this, is it not conditional? This certainly does not come within the requirements to take it out of the operation of the statute, even if the instruments were otherwise definite and certain, in which respect it seems fatally defective. Now, as to the first instrument or letter of Leighton, chiefly relied on to take this case out of the statute of limitations, this letter, like the others, is written to one J. D. Biggert, at Pittsburgh. In this letter Leighton seems to complain of Biggert's delay. He says if he does not hear soon, he will go to Bismarck, and tender amount due, as he does not want to be bothered any more. Then he says, "Whatever is due is ready, as it has been for seven years, whenever I can safely pay either you or Braithwaite." Now, what are the legitimate inferences to be drawn from this letter and the others? First, that Leighton was ill, and was anxious to settle this matter in his lifetime; second, that he was willing, and had been for seven years, to pay whatever was due from him, when the amount could be ascertained, and he should know to whom he could safely pay such amount. It is very evident that there was a dispute as to what was due, and to whom it was payable. Leighton seemed anxious to pay when these two important matters were settled. His willingness to pay was evidently conditioned upon the ascertainment of the amount due, and when he was made secure in paying either to the parties represented by Biggert or to Braithwaite. It does not appear that either of these things was ever done, or that Leighton's letter and terms therein stated were ever accepted or acted upon in any manner by plaintiff or any other party connected with this matter. These conditions should have been shown to have been performed by plaintiff before he seeks the benefit of the alleged new promise to pay. Bell v. Morrison, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 351, 7 L. ed. 175. This is not shown to have been done. But plaintiff seems to have disregarded the terms, conditions, and overtures of settlement contained in this alleged new promise, and now, after the death of Leighton, seeks to avail himself of the benefits thereof, as if such conditions were immaterial. We think no other conclusion can be fairly reached from a proper construction of all these letters and alleged new promises to pay. In none of these letters is there an unconditional, definite, certain, and unqualified acknowledgment of this demand, or any certain demand and promise to pay the same. We are therefore of the opinion that these written instruments or letters of Leighton are insufficient to remove the bar of the statute of limitations. So holding, we see no error in the action of the court in holding the complaint bad on demurrer, or that any substantial right of appellant was prejudiced by striking said paragraph 22 from the complaint, as, in our view, the complaint did not, in any event, state facts sufficient to authorize a recovery, for the reason that the demand sued on is barred by the statute of this state.

We are of the opinion that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

Harwood and De Witt, JJ., concur.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

George HODGKINSON and Wife, Plffs. in Err.,

Sarah HODGKINSON.

(.....Neb.....)

*An action is maintainable by a wife for such damages as she has sustained from desertion by her husband, against any person or persons who have brought about such abandonment.

(January 8, 1886.)

ERROR to the District Court for Nemaha County, to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages because of defendants' inducing plaintiff's husband to abandon and refuse to support her. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. E. W. Thomas and G. W. Cornell, for plaintiffs in error:

The allegations are nothing more than conclusions of the pleader, and state no facts upon which issue can be taken. There is no charge that defendants did or said anything to induce their son to abandon plaintiff, or that they did anything to alienate the affections of plaintiff's husband. Facts and not conclusions, should be alleged.

Mehrhoff v. Mehrhoff, 26 Fed. Rep. 13; Lynch v. Knight, 9 H. L. Cas. 577; Westlake v. Westlake, 84 Ohio St. 621, 83 Am. Rep. 397.

A good deal of doubt has been expressed by the courts whether a wife can maintain an action in her own name for the alienation of the affections of her husband.

Warren v. Warren, 14 L. R. A. 545, 89 Mich. 128; Duffles v. Duffles, 8 L. R. A. 420, 76 Wis. 874; 1 Bishop, Mar. Div. & Sep. § 1358.

If, however, the action can be maintained at all, in analogy to the action which it is admitted may be brought by a husband under similar circumstances, it must be held that the gist of the action is the loss of the comfort and society of the husband occasioned by the wrongful acts of the defendants.

Weedon v. Timbrell, 5 T. R. 357; Cross v. Grant, 63 N. H. 875; Bigauquette v. Paulet, 184 Mass. 123, 45 Am. Rep. 307; Maxwell, Pl. & Pr. 241; 2 Chitty, Pl. 814.

The enticement of the husband must have been malicious. There is no allegation of that kind in the petition in the case at bar, nor does the proof show anything of the kind.

1 Bishop, Mar. Div. & Sep. § 1359; Westlake v. Westlake, supra.

The parents may in good faith advise their son as to his domestic affairs and even as to *Headnote by RYAN, C.

NORM.—The right of action by a wife for enticing away her husband or alienating his affections is steadily finding support. The above decision strengthens the weight of authority against the few contrary decisions. See, to same effect, Clow v. Chapman (Mo.) 28 L. R. A. 412; Warren v. Warren (Mich.) 14 L. R. A. 545; Bennett v. Bennett (N. Y.) 27 L. R. A.

living with his wife, without being liable to an action by the wife for alienation of her husband's affections.

Huling v. Huling, 82 Ill. App. 519. See also Waldron v. Waldron, 45 Fed. Rep. 315; 1 Bishop, Mar. Div. & Sep. § 1359; Bassett v. Bassett, 20 Ill. App. 543.

The acts of the defendants that caused the alleged injury must have been malicious.

Westlake v. Westlake, supra; Lumley v. Gye, 3 El. & Bl. 216, Bigelow, Lead. Cas. Torts, 306.

Messrs. Stull & Edwards for defendant in error.

RYAN, C., filed the following opinion:

The defendant in error recovered a judgment against plaintiffs in error in the district court of Nemaha county. The cause of action, as stated, was that plaintiffs in error had induced their son, her husband, permanently to abandon the defendant in error, and to refuse to provide for her support. In connection with the history of desertion brought about as aforesaid, there were allegations that plaintiffs in error had manifested the most determined and persistent disapproval of becoming grandparents, and that to prevent this consummation they had induced their son to attempt to procure an abortion, which had failed; whereupon defendant in error was driven from the house of plaintiffs in error, wherein, with her husband, she had previously been living, and the separation and abandonment complained of immediately followed. The evidence was very conflicting, but there was sufficient to sustain the averments of the petition. There was presented in the motion for a new trial a claim that, because of surprise, plaintiffs in error should have been granted a new trial. In support of this claim there seems to have been used certain affidavits, but, as there was no identification or preservation of them by bill of exceptions, they cannot be considered. No other error arising during the trial was presented or argued. The giving, and refusal to give, instructions afford no ground of complaint, for exception was taken only to a refusal to give one instruction requested, and the substantial part of that instruction was embodied in others given by the court on its own motion. It is contended, however, that this action was not maintainable by the defendant in error, and that, in any event, a recovery could only be had for the loss of services of the husband. In respect to the proposition last mentioned, it perhaps would be a sufficient answer to point out that, at common law, the services and chattels of the husband did not belong to the wife, as did those of the latter to the former, for which reason the general rule contended for is not derivable from a mere analogy, as urged in argument.

8 L. R. A. 558, and note; Haynes v. Nowlin (Ind.) 14 L. R. A. 787; Foot v. Card (Conn.) 6 L. R. A. 829. On the other side, see Doe v. Roe (Me.) 8 L. R. A. 888; Duffles v. Duffles (Wis.) 8 L. R. A. 420. With the majority is also the Iowa case of Price v. Price,—L. R. A.—, in which a rehearing is pending.

The right of the wife to bring this action in her own name is conferred by section 8, chapter 53, Comp. Stat., which provides that "a woman may while married sue and be sued, in the same manner as if she were unmarried." In Bennett v. Bennett, 116 N. Y. 584, 6 L. R. A. 553, there is a satisfactory discussion of the rights of a married woman to recover for damages to herself under the rules of the common law, and as the same are affected by the provision of our statute above quoted; and it is shown that at the common law the right to the recovery of damages existed, but could only be had by the husband and wife jointly, on the theory that during coverture the independent claims of the wife to rights of action and chattels were suspended. By the statutory provision that a woman may, while married, sue as if she were single, this condition of suspension was terminated, and the wife could then sue, just as at common law she could sue in her own name when the suspension of her right in that respect had been ended by the death of her husband. See also in support of the right of a married woman to maintain an action of the nature of that at bar, the case of Warren v. Warren, 89 Mich. 128, 14 L. R. A. 545.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

Ames C. PENNOCK, Appt.,
v.
COUNTY OF DOUGLAS et al.

(30 Neb. 236.)

"In the absence of an express statutory mandate, a city of the metropolitan class cannot be compelled, either at law or in equity, to refund money received by it from a purchaser of real estate at a sale made thereof by the county treasurer for the purpose of collecting a special assessment or tax levied against such real estate by said city, and for which special assessment or tax said real estate was not liable. The rule caveat emptor applies with full force to such a purchaser.

(February 7, 1894.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the District Court for Douglas County in favor of defendants in a proceeding brought to compel defendants to refund certain money which plaintiff had paid to them for an illegal tax title. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. H. W. Pennock, for appellant:

A municipal corporation must deal equitably and fairly, the same as a private individual.

*Headnote by RAGAN, C.

NOTE.—The question of right to protection as a bona fide purchaser at a judicial sale is treated in an extensive note to Riley v. Martinelli (Cal.) 21 L. R. A. 38.

As to the rights of a purchaser on a sale for an assessment or special tax for a public improvement, see also the North Dakota case of Rudge v. Grand Forks, 10 L. R. A. 165.

As to purchaser of tax titles, see also Wilson v. Butler County (Neb.) 4 L. R. A. 589, and note. 27 L. R. A.

Wilson v. Butler County, 4 L. R. A. 589, 26 Neb. 676.

The case is entirely different from that of a tax-payer who voluntarily pays a questionable tax without objection.

Ibid.

The doctrine of caveat emptor will never be extended so as to permit the party in whose aid it is invoked to take advantage of his own illegal acts, nor will it be applied against the purchaser who pays a valuable consideration for that which is represented to have an existence and to be valuable, but which turns out to have no existence in fact.

Clapp v. Pinegrove Twp. 12 L. R. A. 618, 188 Pa. 42; Wilson v. Butler County, supra.

A municipal corporation is liable upon implied as well as express contracts, and such contracts may be raised by implication of law or upon application of general principles of equity.

Dill. Mun. Corp. (1881) §§ 192, 460, 750, and cases there cited; Bank of Columbia v. Patterson, 11 U. S. 7 Cranch, 306, 3 L. ed. 858; Clark v. Saline County Comrs. 9 Neb. 516; Pimental v. San Francisco, 21 Cal. 362; Paul v. Kenosha, 23 Wis. 266, 94 Am. Dec. 598; Frankfort Bridge Co. v. Frankfort, 18 B. Mon. 41.

The city of Omaha sold to the plaintiff certain real estate upon which it represented that it had a lien or claim. If the city had been possessed of any lien or claim upon the lots in question, the appellant would have taken that interest.

Merriam v. Hemple, 17 Neb. 845; Reed v. Merriam, 15 Neb. 825; Pettit v. Black, 8 Neb. 52.

But having no interest or lien the appellant took nothing, and the sale was without consideration on the part of the city. Is there any legal or equitable reason why the city of Omaha should not be liable for its illegal sale.

There is a line of decisions, represented by Taylor v. People, 66 Ill. 823, which lays down the rule of caveat emptor as binding and in full force, yet which draws a distinction between void sales where nothing is taken by the purchaser and those cases where the purchaser obtains that for which he bid, be it never so small or worthless.

The better authority allows recovery in cases similar to the one here presented.

Norton v. Rock County Suprs. 18 Wis. 612; Van Cott v. Milwaukee County Suprs. 18 Wis. 247; Chapman v. Brooklyn, 40 N. Y. 872; Phillips v. Hudson, 31 N. J. L. 153; Paul v. Kenosha, 23 Wis. 266, 94 Am. Dec. 598; Corbin v. Davenport, 9 Iowa, 240; Chapman v. Douglas County Comrs. 107 U. S. 848, 27 L. ed. 878; Louisiana v. Wood, 102 U. S. 294, 26 L. ed. 158; Bredin v. Cranberry Twp. 87 Pa. 441; Gause v. Clarksville, 5 Dill. 181.

If defendant's contention is true wherever a municipal corporation acts through its public officers and public records (and it never can act any other way), whoever deals with it as a corporation must do so with his eyes open. If he has paid his money into a city treasury as an investor, either in the purchase of its bonds, its real estate, its personal property, its taxes and special assessments, or in any other manner, he is held not to be an innocent purchaser, because all the acts of the municipality are public. If he takes nothing by his purchase and loses his money he cannot complain.

If such were the rule of law, municipal corporations could and would become the greatest swindling institutions in the land. A capitalist who has invested $10,000 in city bonds which are void for want of jurisdiction to issue (which of course would be disclosed by the records) would simply lose his money unless he could show that some fraud had been practiced upon him or that there was a mistake of fact in the transaction. But the courts have not allowed such an impractical theory to work injustice to practical business men.

Paul v. Kenosha, and Louisiana v. Wood, supra; Lexington v. Butler, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 232, 20 L. ed. 809; Marsh v. Fulton County Suprs. 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 676, 19 L. ed. 1040; Mittenberger v. Cooke, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 421, 21 L. ed. 864; Gause v. Clarksville, supra; Oneida Bank v. Ontario Bank, 21 N. Y. 490; Shirk v. Pulaski County, 4 Dill. 208.

Real estate transfers:

Clark v. Saline County Comrs. 9 Neb. 516; Pimental v. San Francisco, 21 Cal. 851, "city slip" cases; Chapman v. Douglas County Comrs., supra.

Sales of real estate for taxes:

Clapp v. Pinegrove Twp. 12 L. R. A. 618, 188 Pa. 43; Phillips v. Hudson, Taylor v. People, Norton v. Rock County Suprs. and Van Cott v. Milwaukee County Suprs., supra; Hutchinson v. Sheboygan County Suprs. 26 Wis. 402; Barden v. Columbia County Suprs. 33 Wis. 445, 14 Am. Rep. 762; Chapman v. Brooklyn, and Corbin v. Davenport, supra.

In Budge v. Grand Forks, 10 L. R. A. 165, 1 N. Dak. 809, the property was subject to levy for the improvement, there being jurisdiction in the city to lay the tax and it was only through irregularity in the proceeding that the tax title was defeated.

In the case at bar, the real estate levied upon was not subject to the assessment. Every act which the city did take or could have taken in the premises was absolutely null and void.

The exact distinction which we claim was made in Phillips v. Hudson, supra, and State v. Piscataway Twp. 43 N. J. L. 358.

In Wisconsin a broader rule has been adopted, declaring that under the common law, where the title of a purchaser at a tax sale fails, he shall have a return of his money either from the party who justly owes the tax or from the municipality which illegally levied the same.

Norton v. Rock County Suprs. 18 Wis. 612; Barden v. Columbia County Suprs. 33 Wis. 451.

If the judgment or execution is void for want of jurisdiction over the person or property, the purchaser at such a void sale is always protected either by a reformation of proceedings or by return of his money in the hands of the officer.

Freeman, Void Judicial Sales (1890) § 49, and cases cited.

The doctrine of voluntary payment is not applicable to a purchaser at tax sale.
37 L. R. A.

Brisbane v. Dacres, 5 Taunt. 147.

The rule cestui emptor does not apply to the case at bar for the reasons: First, that the contract of sale was executory; second, that the subject-matter of the sale never in fact existed.

On petition for rehearing.

Can any good reason be assigned why a supplemental levy should not be made upon the abutting property justly liable for this improvement? Can any good reason be assigned why appellant should not in this manner recover his money through the city of Omaha?

It is certain that the equitable rule of subrogation would be invoked as between individuals in like circumstance. Under the great weight of modern decisions municipalities are as much bound to act justly as individuals.

Dill. Mun. Corp. 8d ed. 460, 461, 938.

This court has held that where the title has failed under a tax deed, even where the sale had been declared void, the purchaser would be subrogated to the rights of the county to enforce its lien for taxes.

Pettit v. Black, 8 Neb. 52; Morriam v. Hemple, 17 Neb. 845; Reed v. Morriam, 15 Neb. 825.

The mistake or error which made appellant's sale void was made by the council acting judicially. Like other judicial bodies the council had the power to correct its proceedings, even where it had previously acted without jurisdiction. This it refused to do. The district court has finally determined that the council was in error. The council has the power, and now should correct its former acts and proceedings so that a purchaser at its sale shall be protected.

Freeman, Void Judicial Sales (1890) §§ 49, 52, 58.

Appellant has only an agreement for a deed, not a fully executed conveyance of the title, nor of any estate in the land.

In Phillips v. Hudson, 31 N. J. L. 148, recovery was allowed upon this ground.

Lynde v. Melrose, 10 Allen. 49; Brecoort v. Brooklyn, 89 N. Y. 128; People v. Auditor General, 30 Mich. 12; Hamilton v. Valiant, 30 Md. 139; Jenks v. Wright, 61 Pa. 410; Packard v. New Limerick, 34 Me. 266; McCormick v. Edwards, 69 Tex. 106; Sapp v. Brown County Comrs. 20 Kan. 243.

There are cases even, of fully executed conveyances, in which the rule cestui emptor will not be applied.

Clark v. Saline County Comrs. 9 Neb. 561; Pimental v. San Francisco, 21 Cal. 362; Chapman v. Douglas County Comrs. 107 U. S. 848, 27 L. ed. 878.

Messrs. W. J. Connell and A. J. Poppleton, for appellees:

For an able decision completely reviewing the cases cited in appellant's brief and demonstrating the correctness of the decree rendered in this cause in favor of appellee, see Budge v. Grand Forks, 10 L. R. A. 165, 1 N. Dak. 809.

Ragan, O., filed the following opinion:
Ames C. Pennock brought this suit to the district court of Douglas county against the city of Omaha, the county of Douglas, and one John Rush, the treasurer of Douglas county. The county interposed a demurrer to Pennock's petition on the ground, generally, that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and, specially, that it appeared from Pennock's petition that the claim sued for therein had been by him presented to the board of supervisors of Douglas county, and by them rejected, and that he had not prosecuted an appeal from the order of said supervisors rejecting said claim. The city of Omaha also demurred to Pennock's petition on the ground that the same did not state a cause of action. There was no appearance by, or service upon, Rush. The district court sustained the demurrers, and dismissed Pennock's case, and he comes here on appeal.

His counsel thus stated the facts in this case: "The petition alleges, for first cause of action, that in the year 1883 the city council of the city of Omaha created, by ordinance, paving district No. 6, comprising a portion of St. Mary's avenue, in said city. That in the year 1884 said city council passed an ordinance providing for the curbing and guttering of said street in said paving district, and levied a tax upon the abutting property to pay for the same. That in the same year said city council passed an ordinance providing for the paving of said avenue in said paving district, and levying a paving tax upon the abutting property to pay for the same. That lot eight (8), in block two (2), in Kountze & Ruth's addition to the city of Omaha was levied upon for said purpose, and the city treasurer was directed to collect said special assessments as other taxes. That in September, 1885, said city treasurer certified to the county treasurer of Douglas county the amount of said special assessments which were then due and delinquent upon said lot, and said county treasurer, after advertising the same in the manner provided by law, sold said lot to the plaintiff at private tax sale on the 28th day of December, 1885. That the plaintiff received of said treasurer a certificate of tax sale in the usual form. That the plaintiff paid to the county treasurer the full amount of said special assessments and interest, amounting to $45.98. Some time after said tax sale to the plaintiff, the owner of said lot, with other adjacent property holders, applied to the city council, by written petition, for relief against said special assessments, on the ground that the same were illegal and void. That said council refused to grant the relief asked. That on the — day of September, 1887, and more than three months before the time of redemption had expired, the plaintiff served the notice required by section 123 of the revenue law, for the taking out of a tax deed. That after serving the said notice, and before two years from tax sale had expired, the owner of said lot applied to the district court of Douglas county for a perpetual injunction restraining the collection of said special assessments, and any further proceedings under said sale; also, praying that said assessments be adjudged illegal and void, and no lien upon said lot. On the 20th day of December, 1888, final decree was rendered in said cause, granting the request of said plaintiff, and perpetually enjoining plaintiff herein from enforcing his tax sale against said property, and declaring that said special assessments were illegal and void and no lien upon said lot. That no appeal has ever been taken from said decree, and the same is in full force and effect, and that plaintiff's consideration at said tax sale has wholly failed. That afterwards the plaintiff applied to the county commissioners of Douglas county for repayment of the money expended at said sale, which was by said commissioners refused. That afterwards the plaintiff applied to the city council of the city of Omaha likewise for reimbursement of the money so expended at said tax sale, which was by said city council refused. That plaintiff had used due care and diligence in the purchase of said lot for taxes, and had no means of knowing, or reasons for suspecting, that said lot was not legally and properly assessed for said improvements, and that, through the representations of the city and its officers, he had been induced to purchase at said tax sale. That, by reason of the illegal acts of the city in the premises, the consideration of said sale had entirely failed. That the city council has authority, under a special clause of the statute, to make a supplemental assessment and levy upon the property abutting on St. Mary's avenue, to correct any error, omission, or mistake in the first assessment or levy, and that said city may thus fully reimburse itself in the premises. Second, third, and fourth causes of action contain similar allegations with reference to adjacent lots bought by the plaintiff for the same special assessments, at the same time, and under the same conditions. Prayer: (1) That the county of Douglas be required to refund to the plaintiff the amount so paid at said void tax sale, with interest; (2) that in case said county be held not liable, that John Rush, the then county treasurer of said county, who made said illegal sales, be required to pay said amount, with interest; (3) that in case neither the county of Douglas nor John Rush be held liable, that the city of Omaha be adjudged to be liable to the plaintiff as for money had and received from the plaintiff; that in that case the city be adjudged to pay to the plaintiff the amount so paid by the plaintiff, with interest at the rate of seven per cent per annum, and for such other relief as may be in accordance with equity and justice."

If appellant's claim is one for which Douglas county was liable, then, to entitle him to recover against the county, he should have filed such claim with its county clerk, had it passed upon by the county board of supervisors or commissioners, and appealed from their decision, if the same was unsatisfactory, to the district court. In no other manner could the district court acquire jurisdiction of a suit against the county, founded on such a claim as the one sued on here by the appellant. Comp. Stat. 1893, chap. 18, § 37; Brown v. Otoe County Comrs. 6 Neb.

111; State v. Buffalo County Comrs. Id. 454; Dixon County Comrs. v. Barnes, 13 Neb. 294; Richardson County v. Hull, 24 Neb. 586.

Appellant alleged that he duly filed his claim against Douglas county, and that it was rejected by the supervisors or county commissioners thereof; but it does not appear from the record before us that appellant has ever appealed from the order rejecting his claim, much less that the present suit is a prosecution of such an appeal. The judgment of the district court, then, dismissing appellant's suit against Douglas county, was right. It may be that Douglas county would have been liable for appellant's claim had he pursued the remedies provided by the statute. Comp. Stat. 1898, chap. 77, § 181; Richardson County v. Hull, supra; Roberts v. Adams County, 18 Neb. 471; Wilson v. Butler County, 26 Neb. 876, 4 L. R. A. 589. But that question is not before us, and we express no opinion on the point.

The question presented by this appeal is this: In the absence of an express statutory mandate, can a city of the metropolitan class be compelled to refund money received by it from a purchaser of real estate at a sale made thereof by the county treasurer for the purpose of collecting a special assessment or tax levied against such real estate by said city, and for which special assessment or tax said real estate was not liable? The learned counsel for appellant contends that the rule caveat emptor does not apply to such a purchaser, and in support of this contention, and that the question stated above should be answered in the affirmative, has furnished us an able and exhaustive brief and argument, in which he has cited many authorities. We have carefully examined all the cases cited by him, and it is not to be denied that the contention of counsel is supported by the decisions of the courts whose opinions are entitled to much weight. The rule contended for by appellant seems to be the doctrine of the supreme court of Iowa. In Corbin v. Davenport, 9 Iowa, 289, it is said: "A purchaser at an invalid sale of property by a city for taxes may recover from the city the amount of the purchase money and interest." It does not appear from the opinion that it was predicated upon a statute making cities liable in such cases. Such, also, seems to be the rule in Wisconsin. In Norton v. Rock County Suprs., 18 Wis. 612, it is said: "Where a tax sale is void, the county is liable to the holder of certificates issued on such sale for the amount paid, with interest. The statute makes it the duty of the treasurer to refund the money in such cases, on demand, to the purchaser or his assigns; but the liability of the county does not depend upon this statute, and whatever remedy it gives is cumulative to the right of action for money had and received." This case was cited with approval in Van Cott v. Milwaukee County Suprs., 18 Wis. 247. In Chapman v. Brooklyn, 40 N. Y. 872, the city of Brooklyn caused an assessment to be levied upon certain lots to pay the expense of grading and paving a certain avenue. The admitted benefits of this improvement to the two lots were assessed against parties who were not the owners of them. By the law in force in such cases, judgment for the amount of the assessment was rendered against the persons so assessed; executions issued on such judgment, and returned unsatisfied. The lots were then put up for sale by the street commissioner, and sold to a purchaser, who paid over the amount of the bid, and received the certificate of sale. The money was transmitted by the street commissioner to the city treasurer. An action was then brought against the city, by the assignee of this certificate, to recover back the money paid, on the ground that the assessment proceedings were absolutely void for want of jurisdiction, the assessment not having been made against the owner of the lots. The court held that the assessment was void because not made against the owner of the lot, and, by a divided court, that plaintiff could recover the money paid to the city, on the ground of an entire failure of consideration. In Phillips v. Hudson, 31 N. J. L. 143, that court said: "Where there was a sale of real estate to pay for an improvement in the city of Hudson, and a declaration of sale delivered in pursuance of a void ordinance, held, that the purchase money could be recovered back in an action of assumpsit against the city." This case was also decided by a divided court. The foregoing are all the authorities cited by counsel for the appellant which can be said to be squarely in point, and support his views. Counsel, however, refers us to the following: Pettit v. Black, 8 Neb. 52; Reed v. Merriam, 15 Neb. 828; and Merriam v. Hemple, 17 Neb. 845,—as authority for the doctrine for which he argues. These cases, however, do not support appellant's contention. In each of these cases, while the tax deeds which the purchaser obtained at the tax sale were wholly void, the taxes for which the property was sold were valid liens on the property, and, furthermore, the decisions in these cases were based on a statute. Counsel also cites us to Wilson v. Butler County Comrs., 26 Neb. 876, 4 L. R. A. 589, but this was a suit by Wilson against the county, and the opinion is predicated on a statute. Another Nebraska case cited by counsel is Clark v. Saline County Comrs. 9 Neb. 516. In that case Saline county conveyed a tract of land to one Hunt, and paid him $500 in money, in consideration of which Hunt agreed to build a bridge across the Blue river. Hunt assigned his contract to Clark, and conveyed him the land. Clark built the bridge, and the county accepted it. The title to the lands having failed, Clark sued the county for the value of the bridge, and the court held that he was entitled to recover. But there is a wide distinction between the legal status of a purchaser of property sold at a tax sale and that of one who builds an improvement for a county, and receives land or other property in payment for such improvement, the title to which fails. Appellant's case is not within the principles of the case just cited. Pimental v. San Francisco, 21 Cal. 362; Taylor v. People, 66 Ill. 322; Louisiana v. Wood, 102 U. S. 294, 26 L. ed. 153; and Chapman v. Douglas County Comrs. 107 U. S. 348, 37

L. ed. 878,—also cited by appellant's counsel,—are analogous in principle to Clark v. Saline County Comrs., supra, and need not be further noticed.

As opposed to the rule contended for by appellant's counsel are Lynde v. Melrose, 10 Allen, 49, where it is said: "If a tax title proves invalid, the purchaser at the collector's sale cannot maintain an action against the town to recover back the money paid by him as the consideration of the purchase. No precedent for maintaining such a suit is known, and the plaintiff's counsel rests his argument solely upon the ground that defendants have received the amount of the tax without consideration. . . . There is a plain distinction between the right of a person to recover from a town the amount of a tax unlawfully assessed upon him, and the claim of a purchaser under a collector's deed, whose title proves defective. . . . A purchaser is a mere volunteer in the payment of taxes. He has the same means of knowing when it is legally assessed as the town has. He buys the title without warrant except such covenants as he takes from the collector, and he must rely upon them. Beyond these covenants his deed is in the nature of a mere quitclaim, for which he has paid what he thought the chance was worth. His speculation may prove very profitable or wholly unproductive; but no one has taken his property without his consent, or with any contract, expressed or implied, to reimburse him if his bargain proves a losing one." Such is the rule in the state of Indiana. In Churchman v. Indianapolis, 110 Ind. 259, it is said: "Money voluntarily paid on a demand in the nature of a tax—and a street assessment is such—cannot be recovered back, in the absence of an express statutory provision authorizing such a recovery. The doctrine of caveat emptor applied as fully to sales for assessments for street improvements as to any other analogous class of sales. The recital, in a deed executed by a city treasurer upon the sale of lands in satisfaction of an assessment for a street improvement, that, 'it appearing from the records of the common council of this city in the city clerk's office that the aforesaid lands were legally liable for such taxes, is not a representation of fact upon which the grantee had a right to rely.' To the same effect, see State v. Casteel, 110 Ind. 174; Worley v. Cicero, 110 Ind. 208; Howard County Comrs. v. Armstrong, 91 Ind. 528; and Logansport v. Humphrey, 84 Ind. 467, where it is said: "A purchaser at a tax sale assumes all risks, and if the sale proves invalid, has no remedy against the municipality." This also seems to be the rule at present in New Jersey. In State v. Piscataway, 48 N. J. L. 353, it is said: "A municipality is not bound to refund the purchase money received on a tax sale merely because there has been illegality in the proceedings which defeats the title of the purchaser, as the rule of law applicable to such a case is that the municipality is under no obligation to refund the purchase money because the title is void. A purchaser is a volunteer, and buys at his own risk." This also seems to be the doctrine in California. In Loomis 27 L. R. A.

v. Los Angeles County, 59 Cal. 456, it is said: "In an action against a county to recover purchase money paid by the plaintiff at a void tax sale there is no rule of law authorizing plaintiff to recover." See also Harper v. Koroa, 53 Cal. 233. This also seems to be the rule in New York, notwithstanding the case of Chapman v. Brooklyn, supra. See Swift v. Poughkeepsie, 87 N. Y. 511; Phelps v. New York, 112 N. Y. 216, 2 L. R. A. 626. Such is the rule in Kansas. In Sullivan v. Davis, 29 Kan. 28, it is said: "The rule caveat emptor is, except as limited or qualified by express provisions of statute, universally applicable to all purchasers at tax sales." See also Saline County Comrs. v. Geis, 23 Kan. 381; Sapp v. Brown County Comrs. 20 Kan. 243; Wabaunsee County Comrs. v. Walker, 8 Kan. 431; Phillips v. Jefferson County Comrs. 5 Kan. 412. In San Francisco & N. R. Co. v. Dinwiddie, 13 Fed. Rep. 789, it is said: "An assessment made in strict accordance with the state constitution relating to the assessment of railway property, which violates the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, is void; but the payment made under it is not a payment under duress, but is voluntary, and cannot be recovered back." In Cooley on Taxation (1st ed. p. 328) it is said: "A tax sale is the culmination of the proceedings which are matters of record; and it is a reasonable presumption of law that, where one acquires rights which depend upon matters of record, he first makes search of the record in order to ascertain whether anything shown thereby would diminish the value of such rights, or contain any contingency to defeat them. A tax purchaser clearly cannot be, in a strict technical sense, a 'bona fide purchaser,' as that term is understood in law, because a bona fide purchaser is one who buys an apparently good title without notice of anything calculated to impair or affect it. But a tax purchaser is always deemed to have such notice when the records show defects. He cannot shut his eyes to what has been recorded for the information of all concerned, and rely implicitly upon the action of the officers, assuming what they have done is legal because they have done it. It is, indeed, a presumption of law that official duty is performed, and this presumption stands for evidence in many cases, but the law never assumes the existence of jurisdictional facts; and throughout the tax proceedings the general rule is that the taking of any one important step is the jurisdictional prerequisite to the next, and it cannot, therefore, be assumed, because one is shown to have been taken, that the officer performed his duty in taking that which should have preceded it." In Desty on Taxation (section 850) it is said: "Except as limited and qualified by express statutory provisions, the rule [caveat emptor] applies to all purchasers at tax sale, and, if the public has nothing to sell, the purchaser gets nothing. Purchasers are bound to know, at their peril, that the supposed delinquent is in fact delinquent; that he has been lawfully assessed, and has failed to make payment. . . . The purchaser at a municipi-pal sale for taxes buys at his own risk, and at his peril investigates the proceedings. A county does not guarantee tax titles except as the statute may provide, and cannot be made to refund money upon the failure of such titles."

We are urged by counsel for appellant to hold the city of Omaha liable in this case upon moral grounds, but we cannot do so. The city did not ask appellant to purchase at its tax sales. He was a "volunteer," with all that that term implies. He bought without warrant or covenant of any kind, and bid what he considered the venture worth; and under these circumstances, and in a case like the present, where there was no fraud, no misrepresentation, and no mistake of the facts, it is well settled, as between individuals, that the purchaser is without remedy in case of failure of title. Rawle, Covenants, § 821, and cases there cited. In this case appellant knew, when he made the purchase, that in case of redemption he would receive a return on his investment, unusually large. If the owners of the property failed to redeem the same, he could, under the statute, foreclose his lien, and obtain title to valuable property for a very small part of its actual worth. Appellant claims that he should be given all these advantages for unusual profits, but at the same time he should be fully indemnified against any risk of loss. In no other line of business—under no other circumstances—would such a claim be made. In the interest of the public revenue, and as an inducement to buy at tax sales, our law presents tempting offers to the speculator; but, until the legislature shall so expressly declare, the courts will not place the responsibility upon cities of refunding money paid by purchasers for property at sales made thereof for taxes. Budge v. Grand Forks, 1 N. Dak. 309, 10 L. R. A. 165. A consideration of the authorities reviewed above leads us to the conclusion that the rule  caveat emptor applies with full force to purchasers of property at tax sales, and constrains us to the conclusion that, in the absence of a statute therefor, no municipality can be compelled, either at law or in equity, to refund money which it has received from sale of real estate for taxes, even in cases where the property against which such taxes were levied was not liable therefor.

The decrees appealed from must be affirmed.
The other Commissioners and the Judges concur.

Rehearing denied.

FLORIDA SUPREME COURT.

Nathaniel WEBSTER, Impleaded, etc., Ptff. in Err.,

John CLARK, Son & Co.

(34 Fla. 637.)

1. One who is not actually a partner, and who has no interest in the partnership, cannot, by reason of having held himself out to the world as a partner, be held liable as such on a contract made by the partnership with one who had no knowledge of the holding out.
2. When one does not allow the public or individual dealers to be deceived by the appearances of a partnership, the true test of whether a partnership does in fact exist between the parties is to be found in their intent as shown by the contract which they make, and names amount to nothing when the substance of the agreement shows them to be inapplicable.
3. Where parties enter into a trade arrangement upon such a basis as that they have a community of interest in the capital stock engaged in the business, and also a community of interest in the profits resulting therefrom, the uniform rule is that they will be held to be partners in such a venture.
4. Where the agreement under which a business arrangement is carried on, and which is claimed to be a partnership, is in writing, and free from ambiguity or doubt, its legal effect must be determined as a matter of law, and the intention of the parties gathered therefrom, but, if the terms employed leave the true meaning in doubt, the construction put upon the contract by the parties thereto may be looked to in determining its legal effect.

(December 11, 1894.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Duval County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the purchase price of certain billiard and bar-room supplies furnished by plaintiff to an alleged partnership of which defendant was a member. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. A. W. Cockrell & Son for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. W. B. Young, for defendants in error:

The instrument shows a purpose to put the property, purchased and owned equally by the parties, into the business and to establish a community of profit and loss between the parties thereto and they thereby became co-partners in the undertaking.

Paul v. Oullum, 183 U. S. 549, 38 L. ed. 432; Dubos v. Hoover, 25 Fla. 720; Davis v. Sylvestre, Mont. L. Rep. 5 Q. B. 148 (see 5 Lawyer's Gen. Dig. p. 1574); Dams v. Kempster, 146 Mass. 454; Wippman v. Stacy, 80 Wis. 345; Correy v. Cadwell, 86 Mich. 570.

*Headnotes by MAREY, J.

NOTE—In connection with the extensive review in the above case of the authorities on the question what constitutes a partnership, see Tyler v. Wadingham (Conn.) 8 L. R. A. 637, and note; Seabury v. Crowell (N. J.) 11 L. R. A. 136; Dutcher v. Buck (Mich.) 20 L. R. A. 770.

37 L. R. A.

See also 36 L. R. A. 282.

Mr. J. E. Hartridge also for defendants in error.

Mabry, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendants in error as partners under the firm name of John Clark, Son & Co. sued plaintiff in error and E. Rigney as late partners doing business in the firm name of E. Rigney & Co., in an action of assumpsit for goods sold and delivered to the latter firm by the former. Webster interposed pleas that he was never indebted as alleged, and that he was not a partner of Rigney under the firm name and style of E. Rigney & Co., as set up in the declaration. Rigney did not defend. A trial before a referee resulted in a judgment in favor of plaintiffs below against defendants Webster and Rigney, as late partners doing business under the firm name of E. Rigney & Co., for the amount of plaintiffs' demand, and Webster sued out a writ of error from the judgment. Rigney has refused to join in the writ of error, and the prosecution of the same here is on behalf of Webster alone.

Rigney bought the goods sued for, being such as are usually sold in a saloon business, and the only question involved is whether or not Webster can be held liable as a partner of the firm of E. Rigney & Co. Plaintiffs introduced in evidence the following instruments in writing, viz.:

"State of Florida } "County of Duval }

"This indenture made this fifteenth day of February, A. D. 1886, by and between Nathaniel Webster, of Gloucester, Mass., of the first part, and Edward Rigney, of Jacksonville, Fla., of the second part, witnesseth: That the party of the first part, for and in consideration of the rents, covenants, and agreements hereinafter mentioned, reserved and contained on the part and behalf of the party of the second part to be paid, kept and performed, hath leased and demised, and by these presents doth lease and demise, unto the party of the second part for the full period and term of fourteen months from the date of these presents, the billiard and bar room on Julia street in the Everett hotel in the city of Jacksonville, Fla., with all the furniture contained therein, excepting the bar and bar fixtures and billiard tables and their equipments, which are to be paid for and owned equally by Nathaniel Webster and Edward Rigney. And the party of the second part shall pay unto the party of the first part the sum of two hundred and eight dollars and thirty-three cents per month in advance, and also such other sum of money as shall equal one half of the net profits of the billiard and bar room hereinbefore mentioned. And it is also distinctly understood and agreed by both parties that the net profits may consist of cash and goods on hand after all necessary bills and expenses shall have been paid.

"Nathaniel Webster, (Seal)

"Edward Rigney, (Seal)

"Signed, sealed and delivered in presence of S. I. Bradley, }
P. F. Wethington. }

27 L. R. A.

"Jacksonville, Fla., Feby 15th, 1886.

"It is understood that there shall be no net profits until Mr. E. Rigney receives as compensation for his services and for the use of money advanced by him to pay for the bar and bar fixtures and billiard tables and billiard fixtures and to carry on the business, a sum equal to the amount of rent paid Mr. Nathaniel Webster. "Nathaniel Webster,
"Edward Rigney."

Witness:

"S. I. Bradley,

"P. F. Wethington,

Witnesses were examined for plaintiffs and defendants, and among them Rigney testified as a witness for plaintiffs, and Webster testified in his own behalf. It appears from the record that all objections to the testimony were reserved for final discussion and disposition by the referee, but it is not shown that any objections were made to testimony either before or at the final hearing.

It appears from testimony before us that J. M. Lee operated the Everett hotel in Jacksonville as proprietor during the season of 1885 and 1886, and for that time he let Webster have the wine and saloon privilege of the hotel for $1,000. On settlement between Lee and Webster this amount was reduced in consequence of the late opening of the hotel to the sum of $333.83. Lee receipted E. Rigney & Co. for the reduced amount, and it is recited in the receipt that the understanding was that Rigney & Co. should pay $1,000 for the season of 1886 and 1887. In arranging for the wine and liquor privilege of the hotel, Lee negotiated with Webster personally, and while he knew that Rigney was to have charge of the bar room in the hotel, he did not know what was the understanding or contractual relation between Webster and Rigney.

Rigney testified that he and Webster were equal partners in the saloon business in the Everett hotel, and that the partnership was carried on under the written agreements above recited. He stated that the firm name of the partnership was not set out in the agreement because Webster did not want it known that he was a partner in the business, and that he (Rigney) did not disclose the fact unless it was necessary to do so. In making application for U. S. revenue license, which he did in the name of E. Rigney & Co., he was informed that the individual names of the partners would have to be set out in the sworn application, and in the presence of Webster the application was made before the revenue officer in the name of Edward Rigney and Nathaniel Webster, doing business in the firm name of E. Rigney & Co. The deputy revenue collector testified that he, by request, went to where Webster and Rigney were in the hotel and informed them of the necessity of inserting the individual names of the partners in the application for license, and that Webster's name was inserted in his presence, and that he then stated that he was a partner in the business. Rigney also stated that for the season of 1886 and 1887 he paid Webster $500, one half of the hotel privilege, and a check for this amount, payable to the order of Webster and indorsed by him, was introduced in evidence. J. H. Spillman, a traveling salesman at the time for a manufacturing establishment of billiard tables and saloon fixtures, testified for plaintiffs that he visited Jacksonville and sold billiard tables to Nathaniel Webster for E. Rigney & Co., and that Webster stated to witness that he was a partner in the company of E. Rigney & Co. Also that Rigney informed witness that Webster was doing the buying for the firm. W. H. Hellen testified that he was bartender at the saloon in the Everett hotel for ten or twelve weeks, and during that time Nathaniel Webster was often in the bar, and told witness what to do. On one occasion Webster directed witness to open the bar earlier in the morning than he had been in the habit of doing, and would order drinks and not pay for them, and they were not charged to him.

The goods sued for, it seems, were bought by Rigney in person, and the original entries were against him individually, but the journal account of plaintiffs was against E. Rigney & Co.

Webster denies that he was ever a partner of Rigney, and states that the only relation between them was that of landlord and tenant under the written agreements hereinbefore mentioned, and which had not been changed during the continuance of the saloon business by Rigney in the Everett hotel. He says that the writings were not intended to create a partnership, and that it was understood between the parties thereto at the time that no partnership should exist thereunder. The purpose of the writings, as testified to by Webster, was to definitely fix the relation of landlord and tenant, and that the rent was fixed at so much certain, and a further sum dependent upon the net profits of the business to be conducted by Rigney. One witness testified that he frequently visited the bar with Webster, and that the latter when ordering drinks would pay for them as other customers, and that witness saw no difference in that respect between Webster and other customers. Rigney, in rebuttal, denied that it was understood at the time the writings were drawn up that no partnership was to exist between the parties; but, on the contrary, it was distinctly understood that they were equal partners under the agreements, and that before the execution thereof, Webster wrote letters to him in reference to a copartnership between them. The record shows that in portions of letters from Webster to Rigney reference is made to the purchase of cash machines for the saloon business, and Webster says in the letter that he wrote to parties "describing our bar, and inquiring of them if we could not make one machine answer our purpose; that we should not have but one cashier for both bar and billiard room." And after stating that two machines had been ordered, he says: "I thought we might save the price of both machines in one season." The saloon business was conducted in the name of E. Rigney & Co. There was no testimony in reference to a knowledge on the part of the plaintiffs of the facts above recited, or of any connection of Webster with the firm of Rigney & Co. before the goods were sold and delivered.

27 L. R. A.

It is contended for plaintiff in error that if Webster held himself out, or permitted himself to be held out, to the world as a partner of the firm of E. Rigney & Co., liability for the goods sued for would attach to him, although he was not in fact a partner of said firm. It is true that one who holds himself out, or permits himself to be held out, as a partner may be held liable as such, independent of the actual existence of such relation; but the liability in such a case rests upon the principle of estoppel, that by holding himself out, or permitting himself to be held out, as a partner he has induced persons dealing with the partnership to believe him to be a partner, and, by reason of such belief, to give credit to the person so held out as a member of the firm. As the liability in such a case rests solely upon the ground that one cannot be permitted to deny a partnership relation which, though not existing in fact, he has asserted or permitted to appear to exist, there is no just foundation for holding one liable as a partner when in fact he was not one, although held out as such, when the creditor did not know of the holding out and did not act upon the supposition that the person sought to be charged was a partner in the firm when dealings were had with and credit given to said firm. The rule is correctly stated in the case of Thompson v. First Nat. Bank of Toledo, 111 U. S. 529, 28 L. ed. 507, where it was held that a person who is not actually a partner, and who has no interest in the partnership, cannot by reason of having held himself out to the world as a partner, be held liable as such on a contract made by the partnership with one who had no knowledge of the holding out. Wood v. Pennell, 51 Me. 52; Cook v. Penrhyn Slate Co. 36 Ohio St. 185; Hicks v. Cram, 17 Vt. 449; Seabury v. Bolles, 51 N. J. L. 103, 11 L. R. A. 186. In this connection it may be stated, as was observed in the case of Thompson v. First Nat. Bank of Toledo, that there may be cases in which the holding out has been so public and so long continued that a jury may infer that one dealing with the partnership knew it and relied upon it, without direct testimony to that effect. On the testimony before us it cannot successfully be maintained that the plaintiffs below were entitled to a judgment on the ground that Nathaniel Webster held himself out to the world as a partner of Rigney, if he were not in fact such partner. There is no testimony that the plaintiffs believed, or had any reason to believe, that Webster was a partner. There is testimony that he stated to the revenue officer and to the traveling salesman Spillman that he was a partner, but we do not know that plaintiffs were ever informed of such declarations before the goods were sold to Rigney & Co. The further fact, testified to by another witness, that Webster was often in the bar-room and gave directions to the bartender, in the absence of any showing that plaintiffs were cognizant of such facts, if they existed, will not justify a finding against Webster solely on the ground that he held himself out to the world as a partner. If the finding of the referee can be sustained on the testimony before us, it must be on the ground that Webster was in fact a partner of the firm of E. Rigney & Co.

As to partnership liability, it was formerly broadly laid down that every one who shared in the profits of a trade or business ought also to bear his share of the losses, for the reason that, by taking a part of the profits, he takes a part of the fund of the business upon which the creditors had a right to rely for payment. This was the rule announced in the case of Waugh v. Carver, 2 H. Bl. 235. In the application of this rule the courts began to add qualifications and to make distinctions that were not of easy application. It was said in some cases that a sharing in the profits in order to render one liable as partner must be a participation therein as principal, and the test applied in other cases was that the party entitled to a part of the profits was a partner if he had a lien thereon as against the private creditors of the other members of the firm. The question was very much discussed in England in the case of Coz v. Hickman, 8 H. L. Cas. 268, and it seems to be generally conceded that this case modified materially the rule formerly announced on the subject. It is said of this case that it brought back the English law to the true rule. The facts, in brief, were, that two merchants became embarrassed and assigned their partnership property to trustees with direction and authority for them to carry on the business in a new name, and pay the net profits ratably among the creditors of the assignors, and after the creditors were paid, the residue to go to the assignors. The creditors joined in the deed of assignment, and a majority of them had authority to make rules for the conduct of the business, or to end it if they saw proper. Debts were contracted by the trustees in conducting the business under this management, and it was held that the creditors were not liable as partners for the debts. Several opinions were rendered in the case, and those of the majority do not seem to rest upon the same grounds. It has been considered that the decision put the liability of one partner for the acts of his copartner upon the doctrine of the liability of a principal for the acts of his agent, the test of liability being in the fact that one has authorized the managers of the business to carry it on for him, and that while the right to participate in the profits was cogent, it was not conclusive evidence that the business was carried on in part for the persons receiving a part of the profits. There is found in the books a great deal of discussion on the subject of partnership liability. The following authorities, among the many, contain a thorough review of the decisions on the old rule, as it is called, and the modifications thereof: Eastman v. Clark, 58 N. H. 276, 16 Am. Rep. 193; Parchen v. Anderson, 5 Mont. 438, 51 Am. Rep. 65; Boston & O. Smelting Co. v. Smith, 13 R. I. 27, 43 Am. Rep. 8; Culley v. Edwards, 44 Ark. 423, 51 Am. Rep. 614; Denny v. Cabot, 6 Met. 82; Meehan v. Valentine, 145 U. S. 611, 36 L. ed. 836; Becher v. Bush, 45 Mich. 188, 40 Am. Rep. 465. This court, in the case of Dubos v. Hoover, 25 Fla. 720, quoted with approval the definition of a partnership given by Judge Story, viz.: 27 I. R. A.

"Partnership, often called copartnership, is usually defined to be a voluntary contract between two or more competent persons to place their money, effects, labor and skill, or some or all of them, in lawful commerce or business, with the understanding that there shall be a communion of the profits thereof between them." Story, Partn. 6th ed. § 2. It seems that when Judge Story wrote his book on partnership he conceived the liability of one sought to be charged as a partner to rest upon the law of principal and agent, and his view is quoted with approval in one of the opinions delivered in the case of Coz v. Hickman.

A reference to agency as a test of partnership has not, it seems, proven a correct guide in many cases, as agency results from partnership rather than partnership from agency. It is said in Meehan v. Valentine, supra: "Such a test seems to give a synonym, rather than a definition, another name for the conclusion, rather than a statement of the premises from which the conclusion is to be drawn. To say that a person is liable as a partner, who stands in the relation of principal to those by whom the business is actually carried on, adds nothing by way of precision, for the very idea of partnership includes the relation of principal and agent." In this case it is said: "The requisites of a partnership are that the parties must have joined together to carry on a trade or adventure for their common benefit, each contributing property or services, and having a community of interest in the profits." Judge Cooley says for the court in Becher v. Bush, supra, "that in so far as the notion ever took hold of the judicial mind that the question of partnership or no partnership was to be settled by arbitrary tests it was erroneous and mischievous, and the proper corrective has been applied. Except when one allows the public or individual dealers to be deceived by the appearances of partnership when none exists, he is never to be charged as a partner unless by contract and with intent he has formed a relation in which the elements of a partnership are to be found." The same view is announced in the recent English case of Mollwo v. Court of Wards, L. R. 4 P. C. 419. And in section 49 of his work on Partnership, Judge Story says: "In short, the true rule, ex aquo et bono, would seem to be, that the agreement and intention of the parties themselves should govern all the cases. If they intended a partnership in the capital stock, or in the profits, or in both, then, that the same rule should apply in favor of third persons, even if the agreement were unknown to them. And, on the other hand, if no such partnership were intended between the parties, then, that there should be none as to third persons, unless where the parties had held themselves out as partners to the public, or their conduct operated as a fraud or deceit upon third persons."

Where the agreement under which a business arrangement is carried on, and which is claimed to be a partnership, is in writing and free from ambiguity or doubt, its legal effect must be determined as a matter of law, and the intention of the parties gathered therefrom. We quote the language of Judge Cooley in the case referred to as expressive of the correct rule: "It is nevertheless possible for parties to intend no partnership and yet form one. If they agree upon an arrangement which is a partnership in fact, it is of no importance that they call it something else, or that they even expressly declare that they are not to be partners. The law must declare what is the legal import of their agreements, and names go for nothing when the substance of the arrangement shows them to be inapplicable. But every doubtful case must be solved in favor of their intent; otherwise we should 'carry the doctrine of constructive partnership so far as to render it a trap to the unwary.'" The last expression is quoted by him from Chancellor Kent in Post v. Kimberly, 9 Johns. 470. The test of partnership, then, is to be found in the intent of the parties themselves as shown by the contract which they make. Where parties enter into a trade arrangement upon such a basis as that they have a community of interest in the capital stock engaged in the business, and also a community of interest in the profits resulting therefrom, the uniform rule is that they will be held to be partners in such a venture. Dams v. Kempster, 148 Mass. 454. On the other hand, it has always been held that an agent or servant, whose compensation is measured by the profits of a partnership business, is not thereby made a partner. In Holmes v. Old Colony E. Corp., 5 Gray, 58, it was held that a railroad corporation by leasing a house owned by it to a party to be run as a hotel, the lessee to pay a certain sum annually and half the net proceeds arising from keeping the house, and keep an account open for inspection by the corporation, and have free passage over the railroad for himself and all persons employed and all articles used in carrying on the hotel, did not thereby become partner in the hotel business. The mere leasing of a hotel for a certain part of the net profits will not make the lessor a partner in the hotel business. This was decided in Beecher v. Bush, supra. Nor does the renting of a building for a saloon under an agreement to take half of the profits made out of the business done therein as rent make the renter a partner in the business. Thayer v. Augustine, 55 Mich. 187, 54 Am. Rep. 361. In another case the plaintiff contributed towards the business his manufactory, shops, tools, implements and machinery and the land upon which they were situated; the defendants were to furnish a certain sum as capital, and labor to carry on the business. Defendants were to account to the plaintiff at reasonable periods for the proceeds of the business or the profits thereof, and all daily transactions were to be entered on the books, to which plaintiff was to have access, and at stated periods an account was to be taken of the profits which, after deducting the costs and expenses of running the works and certain expenses, were to be divided between the parties. It was held that there was a community of interest in the capital to carry on the business, and also a community of interest in the profits, and a partnership was thereby created. Wood v. Beath, 23 Wis. 254.

27 L. R. A.

The writings produced in evidence in the case before us must be considered together as one instrument. They were executed on the same day, and it is not questioned that they were intended to express the agreement of the parties on the subject to which they relate. The agreement contains formal parts of a lease, reciting, in substance, that in consideration of the rents, covenants, and agreements therein contained to be paid, kept, and performed on the part of the second party, the first party doth lease and demise for the term of fourteen months the billiard and bar room on Julia street in the Everett hotel in the city of Jacksonville for $208.88, in advance, per month, and a further sum equal to one half of the net profits of the billiard and bar room mentioned. There are clauses as to the ownership of the bar and bar fixtures, billiard tables and their equipments, and as to the ascertainment of the net profits. The mere form of the agreement cannot alone determine its legal effect, nor is the difference between receiving a sum equal to one half of the net profits, and a sharing in the profits themselves, material, if it was in fact intended by the instrument that Webster should have one half of the net profits of the bar business. If the agreement amounts to nothing more than a lease from Webster to Rigney of the Everett billiard and bar room for $208.88 per month and a further sum equal to one half of the net profits resulting from the bar and billiard business conducted in the room, it is clear from the authorities that a partnership would not thereby be created. The fact that deductions are to be made from the net profits to an amount equal to the sum to be paid as rent, would make no difference. The other clauses in the agreement referred to, and which we are not at liberty to disregard, indicate, in our judgment, that something more than a mere lease of the bar and billiard room was contemplated by the parties in reference to the business carried on in the room. The "bar and bar fixtures and billiard tables and their equipments" were to be paid for and owned equally by both parties. If the term "bar and bar fixtures and billiard tables and their equipments" cannot be held to embrace the entire stock, including the liquors and wines, engaged in the business, they do include a portion of the capital stock employed. The net profits arising from the billiard tables are to be considered under the agreement in ascertaining the additional sum to be paid to Webster, and bar fixtures are customary equipments for the conduct of a saloon business. Webster, as is clearly shown by the agreement, was to be half owner in such equipments, as well as the billiard tables, and it has been uniformly held that where parties have a community of interest in the capital employed, and also a community of interest in the profits, they are partners as to third parties. The proof shows that Webster in person bought the billiard tables for the bar business conducted by E. Rigney & Co., at the same time stating to the seller that he was partner in the business. But in addition to the clause that Webster was to be an equal owner of the "bar and bar fixtures and billlard tables and their equipments," other provisions indicate, it seems to us, a joint interest by Webster and Rigney in the bar business. There were to be no net profits until Rigney received as compensation for his services and for the use of money advanced by him to pay for the bar and bar fixtures and to carry on the business, a sum equal to the rent paid to Webster. This means the fixed sum of $208.33 per month which Webster was to receive. This implies that Rigney was to receive out of the net profits compensation for his services and for the use of money advanced by him to pay for the bar and bar fixtures and to carry on the business, a sum equal to the sum to be paid to Webster as rent. The bar and bar fixtures, billiard tables and their equipments were, beyond question, the joint property of both parties, and an agreement that Rigney was to be remunerated out of the net profits to the extent of $208.33 per month for money advanced by him to pay for the bar and bar fixtures and to carry on the business, implies that he had expended more than his share in paying for the bar and bar fixtures and to carry on the business. The terms "money advanced by him to pay for the bar and bar fixtures and to carry on the business" naturally imply that such was the case. The fact that compensation for Rigney's services was also provided for out of the net profits arising from property in which Webster unquestionably had a joint interest tends to strengthen the view that both parties were interested in the bar business as joint owners.

While the rule is clear that a written contract free from ambiguity cannot be varied by parol testimony, yet if the language employed leaves the true meaning in doubt, the construction put upon the contract by the parties thereto may be looked to in determining its legal effect. The weight of the testimony in the present case is to the effect that both Webster and Rigney considered themselves as partners under the instrument in question.

In our judgment the written agreement discloses a partnership transaction in which both parties had a community of interest in the capital stock employed in business, and also a community of interest in the profits resulting therefrom; and this being the case they were partners as to third persons and liable as such. The fact that the real transaction is sought to be concealed under the guise of a lease, as is apparent, cannot change the legal effect of the agreement, and is unimportant in arriving at the real intent of the parties as expressed in the entire instrument.

The conclusion we have reached is, that the judgment appealed from should be affirmed, and it will be so ordered.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, THIRD CIRCUIT.

PHILADELPHIA & READING R. CO.,

Plff. in Err.,

v.

Abraham SMITH.

(64 Fed. Rep. 679.)

1. The doctrine of contributory negligence does not apply to prevent a person recovering for injury caused by nuisance because he has sustained other and additional damages of the same character through separate acts or omissions of his own.
2. Notice of damage caused by nuisance and a request to remove it must precede an action against a party who did not originally create it.
3. Repairing and preserving a railroad embankment does not make a lessee of the road liable for continuing it as a nuisance in the absence of any notice or request from the person injured.

(November 26, 1894.)

ERROR to the United States Circuit Court for the District of New Jersey, to review

NOTE.—As to the question of the necessity of notice to make one liable for continuing a nuisance which had been created by others the above case presents a valuable and sufficient review of the authorities.

As to landlord's liability for nuisances, see Watson v. Pettit (N. Y.) 5 L. R. A. 794, and note; Ahern v. Steele (N. Y.) 5 L. R. A. 448; Lufkin v. Zane (Mass.) 17 L. R. A. 261.

27 L. R. A.

a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged obstruction by defendants of the flow of water from a spring on plaintiff's land.

Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Before Acheson and Dallas, Circuit Judges, and Wales, District Judge.

Mr. John R. Emery for plaintiff in error.

Mr. R. V. Lindabury, for defendant in error:

If a nuisance is erected before a man becomes the owner of the property, and he uses it having knowledge of its injurious results, he is liable.

Wood, Nuisances, § 882; Staple v. Spring, 10 Mass. 77; Moore v. Browns, 3 Dyer, 819b; Dickson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 71 Mo. 375; Pierce v. German Sav. & Loan Soc. 72 Cal. 188; Irvine v. Wood, 51 N. Y. 228, 10 Am. Rep. 608.

Notice was not necessary, because the defendant has actively maintained and continued the embankment by repairing and stoning the same when without such repairing and stoning it would probably have been washed away long before this by the very waters which it wrongfully obstructed.

Morris Canal & Bkg. Co. v. Ryerson, 27 N. J. L. 469; Walter v. Wicomico County Comrs. 35 Md. 893; Wasmer v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 80 N. Y. 216, 36 Am. Rep. 608; Tate v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 64 Mo. 155.

The evidence was sufficient to establish an ancient watercourse.

Earl v. De Hart, 19 N. J. Eq. 268, 72 Am. Dec. 895.

Dallas, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

On May 14, 1879, the Delaware & Bound Brook Railroad Company leased its railroad to the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad Company, plaintiff in error, and the latter company entered under the lease. Long prior to the demise, an embankment forming part of the roadbed had been so constructed as to prevent the flow of water through a small run, fed by springs, on land of the plaintiff below; and a ditch had been dug along the foot of the embankment to conduct the water to the Raritan river and there discharge it. The first count of the declaration avers that this ditch "falls altogether to drain the water of said springs from the plaintiff's said farm;" and, on behalf of the plaintiff, evidence was adduced to show that the defendant allowed it to become filled, and that, although the plaintiff had cleaned his spring run out once after the railroad ditch was dug, such cleaning proved to be useless, because the spring run had no outlet. This was contradicted by the witnesses for the defendant, and upon the question thus presented the court instructed the jury that, if any portion of the plaintiff's damage was due to his failure to keep the run in proper condition on his own land, "he could not recover for such portion;" "that if he, by any act of omission or commission, permitted the ditch upon his own property to become so clogged up or filled up that the water, instead of going down to the property of the defendant, went out over his own property, soaked through the ground, and over the top of it, so as to render it acid or boggy, for that part of the damages he cannot recover." The defendant was not satisfied with this, but asked for further instruction "that the plaintiff was bound to keep open his spring-run ditch upon his own land, and if the situation of the ditch was such that, from freshets or other causes, the ditch became filled, he cannot recover, if his negligence to keep the ditch open contributed to his injury." This point was evidently framed upon the theory that if the plaintiff's neglect had caused him any damage, he could not recover at all,—not even for that which had been caused wholly by the defendant; and it was disaffirmed upon the ground that failure to keep his spring run open would not bar his right of recovery to the extent of any damage which actually resulted solely from the defendant's wrong, even if the plaintiff had been additionally damaged through his own want of care. In this there was no error. The doctrine of contributory negligence has no application. One who decisively contributes to bring a mischief on himself may not impute it to another, but he who does hurt to his neighbor cannot escape liability for the damage thereby occasioned by showing that the person he has injured has also sustained other or additional damage of the same character through separate acts or omissions of his own. In such cases, each party is chargeable with the consequences of his own conduct, and neither of them is at liberty to shift his burden to the shoulders of the other. This view of the law was appropriately applied by the court below, and therefore the second assignment of error is not sustained.

87 L. R. A.

The remaining assignments relied upon relate to the cause of action set out in the second count. That count alleges that the embankment already mentioned diverts the ancient course of the water of the Raritan river, in times of freshet, to the injury of the plaintiff's land, and this allegation is to be now accepted as true. It also avers that the defendant became the lessee and possessor of the railroad after the embankment had been erected, but "has since continued, used, and maintained it," and of these facts there is no doubt. It further alleges, however, that the plaintiff "requested the said defendant to remove the said obstruction," but of such request no proof whatever was made or evidence offered, and thus arises the most important question in the case, viz., Is the appellant liable, without request or notice, for the damage caused to the appellee by the existence of this embankment, although the appellant did not erect it, and has maintained and used it only as a part of its roadway?

From the report of Penruddock's Case, 5 Coke, 101, it appears that the house of the defendant had been built by his feoffee on his own freehold, but so near to a house which was afterwards, and before suit brought, conveyed to the plaintiff, that the former discharged water upon the latter. The plaintiff brought his action quod permittat, and one of the points presented and considered was whether the action would lie against the feoffee of him who had erected the house which caused the nuisance, and it was held by the king's bench, affirming the judgment of the common pleas, that it would, but only after request for abatement. The court said: "And if it be not reformed after request made, the quod permittat lies against the feoffee, and he shall recover damages if he do not reform it; but without request made it doth not lie against the feoffee, but against him who did the wrong it lies without any request made, for the law doth not require any request to be made to him who doth the wrong himself."

The judgment in the Case of Relf, which was decided about fifteen years earlier, seems to have been to the same effect, but the Penruddock Case has, for about three centuries, been regarded as the leading one on the subject, and as settling the law of England with respect to it. Pollock on Torts, which was first published in 1886 or 1887, has already passed through three editions, and in the latest of these its eminent author still retains his citation of that case as authority for the proposition, which he lays down without hesitancy or qualification, that "if one who has erected a nuisance on his land conveys the land to a purchaser who continues the nuisance, the vendor remains liable, and the purchaser is also liable if, on request, he does not remove it." If it had been deemed necessary, other authorities might have been added in support of this statement, and among them the case of Jones v. Williams, 11 Mees. & W. 176, in which Baron Parke followed the Case of Penruddock, and quoted with approval Jenkins' Sixth Century, case 57 (where he assumes the Penruddock Case to have been referred to), for this recital of the law: "A. builds a house so that it hangs over the house of B., and is a nuisance to him. A. makes a feoffment of his house to C., and B. a feoffment of his house to D., and the nuisance continues. Now D. cannot abate the said nuisance, or have a quod permittat for it, before he makes a request to C. to abate it; for C. is a stranger to the wrong. It would be otherwise if A. continued his estate, for he did the wrong. If nuisances are increased after several feoffments, these increases are new nuisances, and may be abated without request."

It is not necessary to make any further reference to the English Reports. The industry of appellee's counsel has not enabled him to show that the doctrine maintained in the cases we have mentioned has been discarded by the English courts, and it is entirely safe to assume that it has not been. It is, however, contended that it has been departed from, or materially qualified, in this country, and especially in the state of New Jersey, where the subject matter of this controversy is situated. If this was so, it would, we think, be unfortunate; for, in our opinion, the requirement of notice in cases of this sort imposes no hardship upon plaintiffs, and is, in fairness, due to defendants. A grantee should not, of course, be held responsible for the creation of an injurious structure by his grantor, and, if not notified of objection, he may be ignorant of its harmful nature, or may legitimately presume that it is voluntarily submitted to; and therefore a plaintiff ought not to be permitted to recover damages for injury alleged to have been done to him by the maintenance of a pre-existing condition during a period when, with full knowledge of his hurt, he had made no complaint of it, nor requested the removal of its cause. As was said in Central Trust Co. of New York v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. infra, "The subject has been fully considered by the courts both in England and in this country," and with the same result, viz., "that, where the party was not the original creator of the nuisance, he must have notice of it, and a request must be made to remove it, before any action can be brought." There may be some divergence in expressions of different judges, but that this is a correct statement of the effect of the decisions there can be no doubt. Central Trust Co. of New York v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 57 Fed. Rep. 441; Plumer v. Harper, 8 N. H. 88, 14 Am. Dec. 383; Outrice v. Thompson, 19 N. H. 471; Carleton v. Redington, 21 N. H. 291; Johnson v. Lewis, 13 Conn. 303, 83 Am. Dec. 405; Noyes v. Stillman, 24 Conn. 15; Conhocton Stone Road v. Buffalo, N. Y. & E. R. Co. 51 N. Y. 573, 10 Am. Rep. 646; Ahern v. Steels, 115 N. Y. 203, 5 L. R. A. 449; McDonough v. Gilman, 8 Allen, 264, 80 Am. Dec. 73; Nichols v. Boston, 96 Mass. 89, 98 27 L. R. A.

Am. Dec. 132; Grigsby v. Clear Lake Water Works Co. 40 Cal. 396; Castle v. Smith (Cal.) 36 Pac. Rep. 859.

It is, however, further contended that in this particular case notice was not requisite—First, "because the defendant has made use of the embankment ever since it acquired possession of the same, with a knowledge of its injurious results; and, second, because the defendant has actively maintained and continued the embankment by repairing and stoning the same." The assertions of law and of fact embodied in these propositions have had our careful consideration, but we have not been convinced that either of them is well founded. We are by no means satisfied that knowledge by a defendant of the damage caused to a plaintiff renders a request to abate unnecessary. The general principle that ordinarily actual knowledge supersedes a requirement of notice is not overlooked, but here not only is notice required to direct attention to the damage occasioned by the nuisance alleged, but a request to abate is also needed to inform him who continues it that it is not assented to. As was said in Johnson v. Lewis, supra, the plaintiff "should be presumed to acquiesce until he requests a removal of the nuisance;" and, if this view be correct, knowledge of the injury done, even if tantamount to notice of that fact, is still not equivalent to all that is requisite, for it does not rebut the presumption of acquiescence. But it is not necessary to pass upon this point, and we do not do so. For the present purpose, it is sufficient to say that we find upon the record before us no evidence whatever that the appellant actually knew of the hurt done by the embankment, and that nothing appears which, in our opinion, would warrant us in charging it with constructive knowledge of it.

As to the second proposition, it must be admitted that the appellant has maintained the embankment; that it uses it as part of its roadbed, and for that use has repaired and preserved it. Does it follow that this action, though brought without notice or request, can be maintained? There certainly is nothing in the Penruddock Case, or in any of those which follow its lead, upon which an affirmative answer to this inquiry could be based. There are cases to the effect that a feoffee or lessee is liable, without request, where he increases the nuisance; but where this is shown he is held to be liable to the extent of the increase only, and this upon the ground that to that extent the nuisance is a new one, and arises from his own act. This principle of liability has been applied, too, in cases where the cause or means of nuisance was not added to, but where the use made of it was such as to be in itself a nuisance, and, consequently, a new wrong. Of these, Moore v. Browne, 3 Dyer, 319b, is an example. It was an action on the case for diverting the water of a conduit pipe. It appeared that the husband of the defendant had attached to the main a small pipe with a cock, thereby drawing water, at his pleasure, to serve his house. The wife continued to draw after his death, and for this she was held liable as for a new diversion. The distinction between such a case and that now under consideration is manifest. Continuance in the active commission of a wrong, by the use of pre-existing means, is one thing, but the use of a wrongful structure in a manner and for a purpose wholly disassociated from the wrong is quite another and a very different thing. The use of this embankment by maintaining tracks on it neither renders it more injurious, nor inflicts any separate injury. If it had been constructed for the purpose of accumulating water, and the appellant had used the water so accumulated, the cases would be more like; as it is, they are essentially dissimilar. If the complaint was, not merely of the maintenance of the embankment by the defendant, but that the defendant backed up and used the water, there would have been no necessity to allege who erected it, or that request had been made for its removal, because the conduct of the defendant itself would have been the basis of the action, and not the presence of an embankment which it had not constructed. There is another class of cases, represented by Irvine v. Wood, 51 N. Y. 238, 10 Am. Rep. 608, in which it is held that, where a positive legal duty is attached to the possession of property, a failure on the part of its possessor to discharge that duty is not justified by the fact that its performance was rendered necessary by the condition in which the property had come into his hands. But what duty with respect to this embankment, either to the appellee or to the public, has the appellant neglected? It is not only admitted, but is insisted, that it has been kept in repair, and it is not pretended that the appellant has been guilty of any want of care to the damage of the appellee. No, it is the existence of the embankment which is complained of, and to assert that there is, in the absence of request, a duty to remove it, is to beg the question at issue, not to solve it. Irvine v. Wood, and other like cases, do not determine it, for they did not involve nor induce its consideration.

But it has been insisted that, although the views we have expressed may prevail in England, and throughout the United States generally, they are not in accord with the law of New Jersey, and therefore we have given to the decisions of the courts of that state especial consideration. The earliest of these is to be found in the report of the case of Pierson v. Glean (1838) 14 N. J. L. 36, 35 Am. Dec. 497. There the question was whether a party upon whose land a dam had been erected by a prior owner was, without request, liable for the nuisance thereby occasioned, and it was held that he was not. The defendant had set up, by pleas, that no request had been made, and to those pleas the plaintiff demurred. In the opinion of the court (Hornblower, Ch. J.), the law on the subject is said to have been then settled; and the Penruddock Case, and others, are referred to as supporting this statement and conclusion: "As well, then, upon the good sense and common justice of the case, as upon the ground of unquestioned authority, 27 L. R. A.

I am of the opinion that the demurrer ought to be overruled."

In Beavers v. Trimmer (1855) 25 N. J. L. 97, the defendant demurred to the declaration, assigning for cause: "(1) That there is no allegation that the defendant erected the dams, etc.; (2) that there is no averment of a request to remove them."

And as to these two causes the court, citing Pierson v. Glean and other authorities, said: "Where the action is brought for the erection or continuance of a nuisance, it is necessary to allege that the defendant erected or continues it; and if the action is not brought against the original erector, but against the feeoffee, lessee, etc., a special request to remove it must be alleged."

Then followed the decision in Morris Canal & Bkg. Co. v. Ryerson (1859) 37 N. J. L. 457; and it is argued that by it the two preceding cases were overruled, or at least so modified and limited as to render them ineffective in the present case. The first of these suggestions encounters the objection that no intention to supplant the earlier cases is expressed in the later one; and the alternative position rests upon a construction of the judgment in the Ryerson Case which is inaccurate and inadmissible. Pierson v. Glean was explained and distinguished,—not overruled; and, although the learned judge who delivered the opinion had concurred in the judgment in Beavers v. Trimmer, that case was not even mentioned. In Morris Canal & Bkg. Co. v. Ryerson the action was brought for damage done to the plaintiff's land by the defendant's use of, and omission to repair, certain works of its canal, for the creation of which it was not responsible; and in a single sentence of the opinion of the court we have the substance of the utmost which it contains to give color to the view which the appellee asks us to take of it as a whole. That sentence is, "An action may be maintained against a party who continues a nuisance erected by another, without a request to abate it;" and the question which confronts us is, What is the precise thought intended to be expressed by this inexplicit language? In what sense were the words "continues a nuisance" used; or, to put it differently, what was in mind as constituting a continuance of a nuisance? If this question can be satisfactorily answered, all difficulty as to the true purport and effect of the opinion may be overcome. In the first place, it may be said that it is scarcely conceivable that a different significance was purposed to be ascribed to the term "continuance of a nuisance" from that which had been theretofore attached to it. The Penruddock Case was not rejected, and the decisions which uphold its rule, though to some extent critically discussed, were not disapproved. It was said that Penruddock's Case does not support the doctrine which was contended for in the case which was under consideration, but it was not intimated that the doctrine which it does support is not in conformity with the law of New Jersey. It was pointed out that it was not necessary to question the correctness of the decision in Pierson v. Glean, for, admitting its authority in its broadest extent, its principle was not pertinent. Indeed, the opinion in the Ryerson Case cannot be carefully read without discerning that the object of its author was, not to discard or overthrow an established doctrine, but to demonstrate its inapplicability to a particular case. The right of the defendant to maintain the works there in question was upheld (page 467), and the instruction of the trial judge that there was no liability except for faulty construction or failure to repair was approved, the court saying: "Although one of the counts of the declaration claims damages resulting from the erection of the dam and embankment, yet the charge of the court clearly excludes from their consideration all damages resulting from that cause alone."

In short, the defendant's liability was maintained (irrespective of the omission to repair, which was the actual basis of the decision) solely upon the ground of continuance of nuisance; and, as we have before said, the only question is as to what was in contemplation as evidencing or constituting a continuance. If it was intended to affirm that any use whatever of a structure which had been wrongfully erected amounts to a continuance of the wrong, even though the acts of user are not themselves injurious, and do not newly cause or add to the original injury, then indeed this opinion would conflict with the uniform current of authority. But we do not think that it is fairly subject to such interpretation. It contains this defining language: "Whether there be in fact a continuance of the nuisance by the defendant is a question of evidence. If the defendant, by any active participation of his, assent to the wrong, . . . he continues the nuisance."

There must be assent to the wrong, and to establish this there must be evidence of active participation in the wrong. Use of the thing complained of, for a purpose entirely apart from the hurt it occasions, is not enough. Such a use is, with respect to the injury, passive, and not active. It involves no participation in, no adoption or partaking of, the wrong committed by the creator of the injurious thing. The illustrations which accompany the definition we have quoted make this very clear. It is said: "If, for instance, he [defendant] repairs the dam, and holds back the water upon his neighbor for use of his own mill or canal, he continues the nuisance, . . . but, if the defendant simply suffer a dam erected upon his land by a former owner to remain without being used by him, it is no continuance of the nuisance."

The distinction is obvious. One who by repairing a dam causes water to accumulate on another's land, and uses that water for his own mill or canal, actively participates in the wrong itself, and partakes of the very element of direct injury. He continues, not the dam merely, but the nuisance committed by its means. But where a dam is suffered to remain without being used as or for the purposes of a dam (and the character of use referred to in both illustrations must be taken to be the same), there is no use of it as a wrongdoing agency, and consequently there is not a continuance of the nuisance. What has been said makes it unnecessary for us to further comment upon the opinion in Morris Canal & Bkg. Co. v. Ryerson. The following passages from it do not require explanatory discussion. They indicate its general tenor, and support, we think, our apprehension of its import. In speaking of Moore v. Browne, supra, it is said: "The clear principle of the case is that an act of hers, appropriating the water to her use, thus recognizing and sanctioning the wrongful act of her husband, was a continuance of the wrong."

Of the Penruddock Case, it is said: "It is obvious that the defendant did no act assenting to the wrong, or appropriating it to his use, and thereby adopting or continuing the nuisance. He was therefore no more liable for the injury than he would have been if a stranger had entered upon his premises, and placed a nuisance there without his assent. The case is in strict accordance with the principle adopted in Hughes v. Mung [8 Harr. & McH. 441], viz., that the defendant's living in the house did not amount to a continuance of the nuisance by him."

With respect to Bewick v. Ounden, Cro. Eliz. 402, it is observed: "But, the case being again argued, the court held that the action could not be maintained, on the ground that there was no offense done by the defendant, for he did not do anything; and therein the case was distinguished from the case in 4 Assiz. pl. 3, for there the using was a new nuisance."

And in discussing Pierson v. Glean it is remarked: "It is not the erection of a dam, but the holding back of the water upon the plaintiff's land, that constitutes the nuisance; and had the plaintiff, instead of demurring to the plea, replied that the defendant had so held back the water, and had, by means of the gates, from time to time, overflowed the plaintiff's lands, the case would have been brought directly within the authority of Moore v. Browne."

A few lines further on it is stated that the complaint in the Ryerson Case was: "Not that the defendants wrongfully maintained the dam, but that they neglected to maintain and keep in repair the guard bank erected to secure the plaintiff's land from injury resulting from the erection of the dam. If it was the defendant's duty to maintain and keep in repair the guard bank, no notice can be necessary to sustain an action for damages resulting from neglect of such duty."

So that it appears that the point which is controlling here was not necessarily for consideration there; and the circumstance that the facts of that case did not require that the agency of nuisance should be distinguished from the nuisance committed by the use of the agency no doubt accounts for the frequent, but not universal, employment in the opinion of the word "nuisance" to designate the instrumentality by means of which the wrong is effected, as well as to denote the wrong itself,—the injurious use. That this indiscriminate application of the word "nuisance" was not, however, made in deliberate disregard of its distinctive appropriateness in cases where the wrong is committed by use, is evidenced by the remark before quoted,—that “it is not the erection of a dam, but the holding back of the water upon the plaintiff's land, that constitutes the nuisance.”

In conclusion, we do not doubt that, not only in England but in the United States as well, and especially in the state of New Jersey, the rule of Penruddock's Case is firmly established; and we are satisfied that it has not undergone any modification nor been subjected to any qualification which renders it inapplicable to the present case. We are therefore of opinion that in refusing to apply it upon the trial, there was error; and solely upon this ground the judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Samuel T. FIELD, Appt.,

v.

LAMSON & GOODNOW MANUFACTURING CO.

(162 Mass. 883.)

1. The holder of preferred stock, even if it was issued in compromise of a debt of the corporation to him, is a stockholder and not a creditor, under a statute giving the holders of such stock all the privileges of other members of the corporation, including the right to vote upon the stock.
2. A guaranty by a corporation of dividends upon preferred stock in accordance with a statute permitting a guaranty of such dividends payable cumulatively, out of net profits, does not make the dividend payable at all events, but only devotes the profits to the payment of dividends upon such stock in preference to common stock.

3. The declaration of a dividend out of net profits contrary to the judgment of the directors is not required by a guaranty by the corporation of dividends upon preferred stock in accordance with a statute simply permitting a guaranty of such dividends payable cumulatively out of net profits.
4. The right to dividends on preferred stock which are payable out of net profits cannot be enforced in an action at law, even if there are net profits out of which they might be paid, if no dividend has been declared.
5. A court of equity cannot compel the declaration of a dividend on preferred stock out of net profits from which the directors have a right to make the dividend payable

NOTE.—Preferred, guaranteed and interest-bearing stock.

- I. Power to issue.
  - a. In the first instance.
  - b. Given by change of charter or articles.
- II. Estoppel to deny validity.
- III. Nature of interest created by.
- IV. Rights and preferences as to assets.
- V. Rights and preferences in dividends.
  - a. In general.
  - b. Payment out of capital.
  - c. Payment when capital is impaired or debts unpaid.
  - d. Guaranteed dividends.
  - e. Preference over common stock.
  - f. Accumulations and arrears.
- VI. Remedy to obtain or protect dividends.
- VII. Guaranty of dividends by outside party.
- VIII. Interest-bearing stock.
- IX. Special stock.
- X. Reduction of shares.
- XI. Miscellaneous matters.

I. Power to issue.

a. In the first instance.

All kinds of shares of stock which have any peculiar advantages over other shares may be considered in some respects preferred stock, but as will appear below, in addition to a mere provision for preference over other shares in respect to payment of dividends there sometimes is added a guaranty of some sort, making what is called guaranteed stock. So, also, stock has sometimes been issued with an express provision for interest as distinguished from dividends. Another kind of stock called special stock, with a provision for its redemption and other peculiarities, is issued under the Massachusetts statutes.

A railroad company has not power to guarantee a specified dividend on its stock as a premium to induce a subscriber to take it, even if the guaranty is in part consideration of necessary services. 37 L. R. A.

unless such power is expressly granted. Memphis Grain & Elevator Co. v. Memphis & C. R. Co. 85 Tenn. 708.

As to effect of guaranty, see infra, V., d.

The right of a corporation to issue preferred shares in the first instance, that is, before any vested rights of stockholders have accrued, is discussed in Kent v. Quoksilver Min. Co., 78 N. Y. 159, in which it is said: “We know nothing in the constitution or the law that inhibits a corporation from beginning its corporate action by classifying the shares in its capital stock, with peculiar privileges to one share over another, and thus offering its stock to the public for subscriptions thereto. . . . Each subscriber would know for what class of stock he put down his name, and what right he got when he thus became a stockholder.” This is now well settled doctrine in this country as will appear from the statements following.

Lack of any authority in the charter for the issue of preferred stock will not prevent stock otherwise properly issued from being valid as preferred stock if it was issued by the original authority and consent of all the shareholders, or has received their subsequent ratification, or long acquiescence. Higgins v. Lansingh, 154 Ill. —.

Where all stockholders consent a corporation may lawfully issue preferred stock in the absence of any provision to the contrary. Havemayer v. Bordeaux Co. (Ill. C. C.) 8 Nat. Corp. Rep. 127.

Where the charter does not prohibit the issue of preferred stock and the amount of stock issued does not exceed the limit allowed by the charter, the issuance of preferred stock is not unlawful. Hazlehurst v. Savannah, G. & N. A. R. Co. 43 Ga. 12.

A claim that distinctions between preferred stock and common stock could not be made in the organization of a corporation by the purchasers of a railroad at a judicial sale was made but not decided in Mackintosh v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 38 Fed. Rep.

cumulatively, where for half the time for which the dividends are claimed there were no net profits, and the condition of the corporation is such that the court cannot say that the payment of dividends might not injure the concern, or that the withholding of them might not be judicious.

(November 28, 1894.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Franklin County, in favor of defendant in an action brought to compel payment of dividends upon plaintiff's stock in the defendant corporation. Affirmed. The Lamson & Goodnow Manufacturing Co., was prior to July 20, 1885, a manufacturing corporation organized under the laws of the commonwealth, with a capital stock of $300,000. On that day its debts were so large and so pressing that a compromise agreement was effected between it and its creditors for the purpose of avoiding compulsory winding-up proceedings. This agreement provided that the creditors who signed it should take in lieu of their claims preferred stock and bonds of the corporation in certain proportions, and upon certain terms, prescribed by the compromise agreement.

The stock was to be preferred stock with a guaranteed dividend. The agreement was carried out and the plaintiff holding some of the stock upon which the guaranteed dividend had not been paid brought this suit to compel payment.

Further facts are stated in the opinion.

$50, where the objection was made by persons who had no shares of stock but were demanding some by virtue of certain certificates which called for stock after five consecutive annual dividends had been made on preferred stock and these had not yet been paid.

In Anthony v. Household Sew. Mach. Co., 5 L. R. A. 575, 16 B. I. 571, it appeared that no power to issue valid preferred stock existed at the time a contract therefor was made, but the reason of this incapacity does not appear, and the power was afterwards obtained.

In England the power to issue preference shares depends on the memorandum and articles of association.

Without passing on the question of right an injunction was refused against the issue of preferred shares of stock in the case of Fielden v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co., 2 DeG. & S. 531, on the ground that more mischief was likely to be done by interfering at that stage than by refusing to do so.

Where power to create preference shares up to a certain limit was expressly given, it was held that the issue of such shares beyond that limit could not be permitted, although the company was authorized to increase its capital by the issue of "new shares." Melhado v. Hamilton, 21 Week. Rep. 619, 23 L. T. N. S. 578, affirmed in 20 L. T. N. S. 354, 21 Week. Rep. 574.

Power to issue preference shares is not found in a provision of articles of association that directors may increase the capital by issuing new shares of such nominal value as may be determined on. Moss v. Syers, 33 L. J. Ch. 711, 11 Week. Rep. 1046.

An injunction against the issue of some of the shares with a preferential dividend under resolution and where the articles contained no power in this respect, was granted on the application of shareholders who were not present at a general meeting of the shareholders which authorized such issue, although they had notice of it. Hutton v. Scarborough Cliff Hotel Co., 2 Drew. & S. 514, 18 Week. Rep. 631, affirmed in 4 DeG. J. & S. 972.

The decision is based on the proposition that the articles of association constitute the contract, and that the issue of part of the shares with a preferential dividend is an alteration of the contract of any shareholder who does not assent thereto.

Expressly refusing to express his own opinion as to the correctness of the decision in the case of Hutton v. Scarborough Cliff Hotel Co., Sir G. Jessel, M. R., decided in Harrison v. Mexican R. Co., L. R. 19 Eq. 358, 12 Moak, Eng. Rep. 793, 44 L. J. Ch. 403, 32 L. T. N. S. 32, 23 Week. Rep. 403, that the implication against the right to issue preferred shares where the memorandum of the association was silent on the subject, might be repudiated where the articles of association contemporaneous therewith contained clear provisions on the subject.

37 L. R. A.

The creation of new shares to be called preference shares with a right to preferential dividends of 5 per cent is held in Re South Durham Brewery Co., L. R. 81 Ch. Div. 231, 55 L. J. Ch. 179, 53 L. T. N. S. 923, 34 Week. Rep. 123, reversing the decision of the judge below, to be within the power of the company where its articles of association contemporaneous with the memorandum authorize the increase of capital with or without special privileges and priority over the original shares.

Where the original articles of association gave power to create additional share capital which might be issued as preference shares if so resolved by a general meeting, and such shares were issued pursuant to a resolution giving them a preference, it is said that they had exactly the same status or qualification as if the memorandum of association had in terms authorized their issue with such preference. Re Ridgewater Nav. Co., L. R. 39 Ch. Div. 1, 23 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 393, 57 L. J. Ch. 509, 55 L. T. N. S. 476, 36 Week. Rep. 769.

The exchange of ordinary shares of stock fully paid by surrender to the company for new preference shares is held valid in Eichbaum v. City of Chicago Grain Elevators [1891] 3 Ch. 459, 65 L. T. N. S. 704, where the exchange was pursuant to special resolutions in accordance with the memorandum and articles of association of the company. Counsel objected not only to the exchange of shares as such, but to the preference that would result in discrimination against other shareholders. As to this point counsel for the company argued that the proposed issue of preference shares was authorized by the memorandum and articles of association, and that the only preference would be created under the powers of the constitution itself. The court without discussion of this point further than to say that the powers conferred were being strictly pursued, did not seem to consider the point of lack of consideration for such transfer. It seems that the whole of the capital had been issued and all shares paid up, some of them being held in America, and the proposition was to provide for the exchange by ordinary shareholders of their existing shares for preference shares preferred as to capital as well as dividend. An arrangement with American shareholders to permit this exchange by British shareholders is recited in the statement of the case. It would seem from the case that the objector was one of those entitled to exchange his shares for preference shares and so not within any discrimination "even if such existed as to the American shareholders." But the court does not discuss the question further than is above stated.

The sale of preferred shares at a discount is not within the power of a company limited by shares formed and registered under the Act of Parliament of 1863, under which a shareholder's liability is limited by the amount unpaid upon his shares.

Mr. Samuel T. Field, appellant in propria persona:

It is shown that there were net profits from which the defendant could have made the payments which the plaintiff seeks to recover in this action.

If the net profits have been sufficient in amount to pay said installments their payment is not subject to any other condition or to any discretion of the directors of the corporation. If so it might have been so stated in the certificates. But the certificate runs thus: "The holder of the stock represented by this certificate is entitled to dividends upon it at six per cent for each year from the time of its issue cumulatively, before any dividends shall be paid upon any of the stock of said company except the preferred stock issued under said act, which dividends are guaranteed by said company, a vote to that effect having been passed prior to its original issue."

Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. § 459; Hazel-tine v. Belfast & M. L. R. Co. 79 Me. 417.

In Henry v. Great Northern R. Co., 1 DeG. & J. 606, the following language is used: "We think the guarantee here in question will bear the construction that the preference stockholders shall be entitled to 5 per cent semi-annual dividends when there are profits to pay them and not otherwise.

See also Taft v. Hartford, P. & F. R. Co. 8 R. I. 834, 5 Am. Rep. 575; Lockhart v. Van Alstyne, 31 Mich. 82, 18 Am. Rep. 156.

The defendant owes a debt; the dividends,

(Ooregum Gold Min. Co. of India, Limited v. Roper, 41 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 550), and a provision in the English Companies Act of 1867, section 26, that every share shall be taken subject to the payment of the whole amount in cash, unless otherwise determined by a contract in writing, does not change this rule.

Issuing preference shares for dividends on such shares to be taken by the shareholders at par, is held to be ultra vires, and that each shareholder who was not willing to accept them was entitled to have the proceeds of the whole applied ratably, if they could be lawfully issued at all. Hooile v. Great Western R. Co., L. R. 3 Ch. App. 322, 16 Week. Rep. 260, 17 L. T. N. S. 158.

The shares being unsaleable except at a discount, the court considered that the issuing of them directly to the shareholders for dividends amounted to selling them at a discount.

b. Given by change of charter or articles.

An apparent conflict of decisions exists as to the power to issue preferred shares without consent of all the shareholders, where a corporation has been organized with common shares only.

The power to issue preferred stock under statutes which simply allow the increase of stock and articles of association which give no such authority, and where unanimous consent of the existing stockholders was not shown, is denied in Bard v. Banigan, 30 Fed. Rep. 13, and the decisions affirmed on the ground of estoppel as Banigan v. Bard, 134 U. S. 291, 33 L. ed. 932.

So a leading New York case holds that when shares of ordinary stock have been issued under a by-law which divides the whole amount of capital stock into equal shares without any provision for a preference, the by-law is as much the law of the corporation as if its provisions had been a part of the charter, and the purchasers of such stock acquire vested rights which cannot be changed without their consent by any subsequent action of the corporation giving a preference to other shareholders, even where there is power given in the charter to alter, amend, add to, or repeal by-laws at pleasure. Kent v. Quicksilver Min. Co. 78 N. Y. 159.

Following that case it is held again that it is not within the implied power conferred upon a corporation or its stockholders to change the relative value of its shares after they have been issued, without consent of the stockholders. Campbell v. American Zylonite Co. 11 L. R. A. 596, 123 N. Y. 455.

This was the case of an attempt to authorize the issue of some preferred shares to a creditor in substitution for shares surrendered by stockholders for that purpose and the unregistered owner of shares who had taken them by assignment was held entitled to hold the shares unaffected by an attempt made without his consent to change the relative value of the company's shares, although his assignor, the apparent owner of the shares, joined in the consent and surrendered his proportion of the shares to be canceled.
37 L. R. A.

The above cases did not involve the question of statutory changes or authority. But several American cases hold that such power may be given by statute, even against dissent of prior shareholders. A change in the charter of a corporation authorizing the issue of preferred stock in order to obtain necessary funds is held not to be such an alteration of the contract of the previous subscriber to the corporate stock as to relieve him from his subscription. Everbart v. Westchester & P. R. Co. 23 Pa. 339.

And a statute authorizing the issue of preferred stock by a corporation which already has stockholders is held not to be an infringement upon the rights of a minority of the stockholders who refuse their assent. Curry v. Scott, 64 Pa. 270.

So in Vermont a statute authorizing a corporation to issue preferred stock and guarantee a certain dividend on it in order to raise money, is held not an infringement on the rights of a previous subscriber to the stock so as to release him from his subscription. Rutland & B. R. Co. v. Thrall, 35 Vt. 593.

So in Kentucky the constitutionality of a statute amending the charter of a corporation so as to authorize the issue of preferred stock when the funds of the company had been exhausted and more must be procured by mortgage or by the issue of preferred stock, or in some other way, in order to carry on the corporate enterprise, is upheld in Covington v. Covington & C. Bridge Co., 10 Bush. 60, on the ground that it is only a mode of pledging the revenues of the company to obtain money instead of pledging the franchise or other property.

In England the question is merely that of the power of the corporation to change its articles without express authority under act of parliament, and does not involve any question of constitutional right as against such an enactment.

The majority of the shareholders of a corporation have no right at a general meeting to alter the articles of association so as to authorize the issue of new shares with a preferential dividend where the original articles did not provide for it. Although the statute provides for modifying the regulations of the company, as this provision relates to the management and not to the altering of the constitution. Hutton v. Scarborough Cliff Hotel Co. 2 Drew. & S. 521, 11 Jur. N. S. 849, 13 L. T. N. S. 57, 13 Week. Rep. 1059.

A provision in articles of association that capital produced by the issue of B shares should be invested, and that the income, and, so far as neces-so called, were actually due and payable when the action was brought, under the statute, by the force of which the stock was issued; there was a clear contract to pay annually, at a definite time, a definite sum to the holders and owners of the preferred stock, subject only to the contingency that the net profits of the corporation should be sufficient to meet the payment, and the facts show that such contingency has been met and that the profits are more than sufficient to pay the amount claimed.

The action is upon a contract by which the defendant obligated itself, if there were net profits, to pay certain specified sums at certain times in consideration that the plaintiff would assign his claims against said corporation and take the company's stock.

any, the capital, should be applied to make good a preferential dividend on A shares, is held to alter the conditions in the memorandum of association which stated the objects of the company to be the cultivation of lands and other similar purposes, and to do all such other things as the company might deem incidental and conducive to those objects, and therefore to violate section 13 of the English Companies Act of 1862 which prohibits any alteration in the conditions of such memorandum. Guinness v. Land Corporation of Ireland, L. R. 22 Ch. Div. 340, 52 L. J. Ch. 177, 47 L. T. N. S. 517, 81 Week. Rep. 341.

Notwithstanding the fact that this decision prevented the company "from doing that upon the expectation of doing which everybody has subscribed his money," the court with regret felt obliged to hold the application of any capital to such preferential dividends invalid. Expressly stating their belief in the honesty and fairness of the promoters of the company and its management, it was said that the provision could not be upheld without enabling almost every company managed by dishonest promoters to drive a coach and four through the companies act.

The right to issue new shares with preference if so resolved having existed under the constitution of the company from its inception, it is said that the substitution of new articles could make no alteration in this respect. Re Bridgewater Nav. Co., L. R. 39 Ch. Div. 1, 26 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 268, 37 L. J. Ch. 809, 58 L. T. N. S. 476, 36 Week. Rep. 769.

But in this case the court held that as the preference shares had been issued and no attempt made to remove the holders from the register, they must be regarded as shareholders on the dissolution of the corporation.

II. Estoppel to deny validity.

The preference of shareholders as among themselves being a matter of contract and one which would seem to involve no danger of injury to the public generally, there seems no reason for denying the operation of the principle of estoppel with respect to rights in preferred stock.

In Bard v. Bannigan, 39 Fed. Rep. 13, Shipman, J., expresses disapproval of the Massachusetts cases which hold that the purchaser of invalid special stock can recover back the money paid therefor from an assignee or receiver when the company has become insolvent.

As to these Massachusetts cases see infra under heading, IX., Special stock. Whether there is any rational distinction between special and preferred stock in relation to the doctrine of estoppel or not, it may be observed that all the cases respecting preferred stock recognize that an estoppel may ex-

Williams v. Parker, 136 Mass. 204; Rutland & B. R. Co. v. Thrall, 35 Vt. 586; Redf. Railways, p. 592; Bates v. Androscoggin & K. R. Co. 49 Me. 492; Hazeltine v. Belfast & M. L. R. Co. 79 Me. 411; West Chester & P. R. Co. v. Jackson, 77 Pa. 321; Belfast & M. L. R. Co. v. Belfast, 77 Me. 452; Boardman v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 178.

Mr. Henry Winn, for appellee:

The plaintiff is a stockholder, not a creditor. He is a profit sharer to the full extent. He is a co-manager by his vote of company affairs.

The terms of his certificate entitle him to "dividends" "out of net profits in preference and priority" to the holders of any other stock. These, unless controlled by the contest against denying its validity at least when its issue did not violate any express provision of statute.

After the consideration has been received by a corporation for the issue of preferred stock to which all the stockholders consented, there is a plain estoppel against contesting the validity of the stock. Havemayer v. Bordeaux Co. (Ill. C. C.) 3 Nat. Corp. Rep. 127.

Stockholders cannot dispute the validity of the issue of preferred stock which was issued with their sanction and under their covenant and assurance that it should have the same validity as if issued pursuant to law. McGregor v. Home Ins. Co. of Newark, 38 N. J. Eq. 181.

On the ground that preference between shares of stock is a matter of mere contract among the stockholders where a contract for the construction of a railroad provided for the giving of preferred stock to the contractors in payment for their work, it was held that the stockholders of the company who enjoyed the benefits of the contract without objection, were estopped afterwards to contest the power of the company to issue preferred stock. Haselhurst v. Savannah, G. & N. A. R. Co. 43 Ga. 13.

Holders of common stock cannot repudiate the issue of preferred stock which has been taken and paid for and the profits of which have been used in paying for real estate of the corporation, without any return of the consideration paid by the holders of the preferred stock, especially where the complaining stockholder or the prior owners of their shares voted in favor of issuing the preferred stock. Hill v. Cincinnati Hotel Co. (Cin. Super. Ct.) 25 Ohio L. J. 425. Affirmed by the supreme court on motion for leave to file petition in error.

A corporation or the holder of stock or scrip therein cannot compel an accounting for dividends received on preferred stock on the ground that the issue of such stock was ultra vires, after they have received full value for the stock, authorized its issue, paid dividends on it, and in many ways treated it as valid for twenty-two years. Higgins v. Lansingh, 154 Ill. —.

Even a non-assenting stockholder is denied the right to object to the issue of preferred stock, although it was issued for 40 per cent of its face value, where with knowledge or abundant means of knowledge he fails to object for ten years after the issue of the stock and the exercise of the rights of stockholders by the holders thereof. Taylor v. South & North Ala. R. Co. 4 Woods, C. C. 575, 13 Fed. Rep. 152.

Tacit acquiescence and delay in action by a minority of stockholders who do not assent to the act of the corporation creating preferred shares of stock, may amount to indefensible laches and estoppel against contesting the validity of the preftext, indicate that he is a stockholder merely.

Neither the statute authorizing the stock (Acts 1885, chap. 849), nor the certificate, nor his fundamental contract with the company under which his title was created, provides for him anything more than "dividends" out of "net profits" under a guaranteed preference. The court will not construe such an interest to be a debt.

The holder of preferred stock is not entitled to dividends absolutely, even if there be net earnings, for it may be necessary to use them to keep up the property for the good of the business, and to pay the debts which have priority to the plaintiff's right.

The duty to declare a dividend is not profits are in hand, is, within reasonable limits, discretionary in its nature.

There is no promise for its performance to be drawn in favor of the separate shareholder of this case. He cannot maintain assumpsit. His remedy, if any, is in equity, wherein some representative of the creditors who have priority over him, and the various parties affected, may be summoned in to defend their interests, and the directors may be ordered to declare a dividend if they ought.

Wiliston v. Michigan, S. & N. I. R. Co. 13 Allen, 401; Barnard v. Vermont & M. R. Co. 7 Allen, 516; Chaffes v. Rutland R. Co. 55 Vt. 110; Pittsburg & C. R. Co. v. Alleghany County, 68 Pa. 126; Nichols v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 15 Fed. Rep.

ferences, at least where the issue of preferred stock is not expressly prohibited by the charter or any statute. Such is the case where for four years with ample knowledge or means of knowledge on the part of all stockholders the certificates of preferred stock were dealt in by the public, recognized in annual reports of the directors, and quoted in the daily public prints as different from the ordinary stock. Kent v. Quicksilver Min. Co. 78 N. Y. 150.

So the holder of such stock may be estopped from denying its validity. Thus a director who was active in passing a resolution for the issue of preferred stock, which the company had no lawful power to issue, and in inducing other persons to take it and in giving credit to the corporation on the ground that such stock had been taken, who actually paid his money into the company for such stock, held it for over two years while the corporation was struggling, and voted upon it at two elections, was denied the right to recover back the money paid by him from the effects of the corporation after it became insolvent. Banigan v. Bard, 124 U. S. 291, 38 L. ed. 922, affirming Bard v. Banigan, 30 Fed. Rep. 13.

And holders of preferred stock who have accepted it in payment of work as contractors in building a railroad for the corporation, and received interest on it for several years, are estopped from questioning the power of the company to issue such stock in order to avoid being considered stockholders instead of creditors, especially where neither the state nor common stockholders have ever objected to the issue of the preferred stock. Branch v. Jesup, 106 U. S. 468, 37 L. ed. 279, affirming Branch v. Atlantic & G. R. Co. 3 Woods, C. C. 481.

Neither can a city which has made a subscription to the preferred stock of a railroad company avoid the payment of her subscription on the ground that the railroad company had no power to issue preferred stock when neither the company nor any other stockholders are objecting. Evansville, I. & C. S. L. R. Co. v. Evansville, 15 Ind. 395.

An unauthorized alteration of certificates of stock by striking out the words "preferred" and "on which the company guarantees 10 per cent interest payable annually" does not release the holder from liability as a stockholder to a creditor of the company, where he has held the stock and been active in the management of the corporation for about ten years, knowing that this stock was included in the amount necessary to give the company a right to do business. Tama Water Power Co. v. Hopkins, 79 Iowa, 653.

Holders of preferred stock authorized and created by the holders of common stock, cannot claim to be the only stockholders where for more than twenty years they have stood by while the holders of the common stock have elected the managers and performed all other acts as stockholders of the company. Higgins v. Lansingh, 154 Ill. 301, 37 L. R. A.

III. Nature of interest created by.

The main case of FIELD v. LAMSON & G. MFG. CO. is in full accord with the prior cases in respect to the nature of the interest of a preferred stockholder.

The issue of preferred stock in exchange for common stock for the extra payment of five dollars per share was claimed in Kent v. Quicksilver Min. Co. 78 N. Y. 150 (affirming Kent v. Quicksilver Min. Co. 12 Hun, 58, and Hoyt v. Quicksilver Min. Co. 17 Hun, 160), to be merely a mode of obtaining money which constituted a borrowing; but the court said it was not a borrowing but a preference of one class of stockholders to another, giving the first class a perpetual, inextinguishable prior right to a portion of the earnings of the company before the other class might have anything therefrom. See on this question as affecting right to issue preferred stock against dissent of existing shareholders cases in division I, b, as to change of charter or articles.

Holders of preferred stock are subject to the statutory liability of stockholders equally with the holder of common stock. Railroad Co. v. Smith, 48 Ohio St. 219.

The fact that a transferee of stock from a director of a corporation took it on his representation that it would have a preference in the division of the profits, which was not true, does not relieve the purchaser from liability in respect to the shares as a contributory of the company on its winding up, although it may give a remedy against the director personally. Re National Patent Steam Fuel Co., Ex parte Worth, 4 Drew. 529, 23 L. J. Ch. 589.

Calling stock "preferred stock" does not per se define the rights in such stock, but these depend on the statute or contract under which it was issued. Elkins v. Camden & A. R. Co. 36 N. J. Eq. 223.

That holders of certificates are called preferred stockholders and the payments guaranteed to them are called dividends, does not determine their status, but they may nevertheless by virtue of their contract be in fact creditors and not stockholders. Burt v. Rattle, 81 Ohio St. 112.

Holders of certificates are not stockholders or members of a corporation although the certificates are called preferred stock, where the corporation guarantees certain semi-annual dividends thereon and also the final payment of the entire amount at a specified time, with a right to convert the certificates into common stock, securing the performance of its contract by a mortgage, where the holders have no right to vote and do not participate in either the profits or losses of the corporation, with an express declaration that they shall not be individually liable to creditors of the company. Ibid.

Bond-holders of a corporation who exchange their bonds for preferred stock which is entitled to 575; Hazeltine v. Belfast & M. L. R. Co. 79 Me. 433; Taft v. Hartford, P. & F. R. Co. 8 R. I. 310, 5 Am. Rep. 575; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 8d ed. § 267; Lockhart v. Van Alstyne, 31 Mich. 76, 18 Am. Rep. 156; Jackson v. Newark Pl. R. Co. 31 N. J. L. 277; Voss v. Grant, 15 Mass. 510.

The guaranty of dividends cannot be construed as a contract for the absolute payment of dividends, as a debt, when net profits are made.

If it were an absolute guaranty that when net profits are made there should be a dividend at all events, they might be taken away from the creditors who are preferred to him, and if the profits be no more than enough to meet these dividends, the company might become insolvent under their division, and then the directors themselves would become liable to pay the debts, under chapter 106, section 60, clause 1, of the Public Statutes. Suit against the company on such a guaranty might involve unlawful division of the capital to a stockholder, and thus enlarge the plaintiff's right, which is only to a dividend of net profits.

Williston v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Co. supra; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 2d ed. § 267; Lockhart v. Van Alstyne, Chaffee v. Rutland R. Co. and Taft v. Hartford, P. & F. R. Co. supra.

In Les v. Neuchatel Asphalt Co. L. R. 41 Ch. Div. 1, the company was one of wasting capital, and, as in like cases, it was held preferred dividends out of the net earnings "if earned in the current year but not otherwise," are no longer creditors but stockholders. St. John v. Erie R. Co. 89 U. S. 23 Wall. 136, 23 L. ed. 743, affirming 10 Blatchf. 371.

The relation of a holder of preferred stock is in some of its aspects similar to that of a creditor, but he is not a creditor save as to dividends after the same are declared, nor does he sustain a dual relation to the corporation. He is either a stockholder or a creditor; he cannot by virtue of the same certificate be both. Whether he is the one or the other depends upon the particular construction of the contract he holds with the company. Miller v. Ratterman, 47 Ohio St. 141.

Certificates of preferred stock are decided to be stock and not credits or certificates of indebtedness of the corporation for the purpose of taxation, where the certificates call for certain dividends guaranteed by the corporation and also by another corporation and secured by mortgage, with a provision that no further or other mortgage should thereafter be made to the prejudice of the holders of such stock, and that the holders should not have the right to vote upon the stock. Ibid.

The court in this case said it might not be easy to determine satisfactorily what office the mortgage should perform, if it could not be operative against creditors of the company, as the court held it could not be, but regarded the mortgage as indicating that the holders of the certificates were nevertheless to be regarded as stockholders, else the clause about prejudicing their rights by other mortgages would have been unnecessary, and that the option to foreclose thereunder gave merely a mode for winding up the corporation on petition of the stockholders.

Stock entitled to perpetual preferential dividends but conferring no right to vote, is nevertheless stock in a corporation within the meaning of a statute imposing ad valorem duty on sale of stock. Ulverstone & L. R. Co. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. 2 Hurlst. & C. 565, S. C. sub nom. Furness R. Co. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. 23 L. J. Exch. 173; 10 Jur. N. S. 1126, 10 L. T. N. S. 161, 18 Week. Rep. 10.

A statute authorizing a county to issue bonds "in subscription for preferred stock" of a railroad company providing that it should receive preferred stock which should bear interest at the rate of seven per cent per annum, means that the preferred shall be capital stock of the company differing from other stock only in the matter of dividends. And any certificates which show that the county was not to be regarded as a shareholder of the company do not meet the requirements. State v. Cherau & C. R. Co. 16 S. C. 524.

So-called "income bonds" reciting that the income of the corporation is specifically pledged to their payment, principal and interest, in preferred L. R. A.

ence to the payment of dividends on the capital stock, give the holders no right to object to the execution by the corporation of a subsequent mortgage to secure other bonds to obtain funds for the use of the company. Garrett v. May, 19 Md. 177.

A lease of a railroad company which attempted to place preferred stockholders in the position of creditors by providing for payments of dividends to them as if they were creditors which would make a breach of trust to the disadvantage of other creditors of the company, was prevented by injunction, although this provision of the lease might have been insufficient to deprive such creditors of their rights. Phillips v. Eastern R. Co. 128 Mass. 123.

Under a statute in relief of an embarrassed railway company providing for the issue of different classes of irredeemable debenture stock to the holders of existing securities and another class of debenture stock from existing arrears of interest on debentures with a suspense period of ten years during which no action should be brought against the company except in respect of liabilities contracted thereafter, the holders of debenture stock were held to have no right to bring a suit without leave of the court during that period for interest accruing after the passage of the act on the principal for which debenture stock was held. London Financial Assn. v. Wrexham, M. & C. Q. R. Co. L. R. 18 Eq. 566, 30 L. T. N. S. 491.

The state is held to have a certain and valuable interest in preferred stock of a railroad company, so as to make the board of public works as its representative a necessary and proper party to a suit affecting the validity of such stock, which had been pledged or mortgaged to the board, and where the state also had a lien on the entire property of the company for payment of its debt on failure of dividends on the stock held by the state. Ragland v. Broadnax, 22 Gratt. 401.

Shares of capital stock of a church corporation which are declared redeemable in money when the holder takes up a permanent residence elsewhere, are held valid to sustain an action of indebitatus assumpsit against the corporation, in Davis v. Second Universalist Meeting House Proprs. in Lowell, 8 Met. 321.

Deeds of trust given to secure the performance of an undertaking by a corporation to pay dividends or interest semi-annually on guaranteed preferred stock and ultimately to pay for the stock itself, are in the strictest sense mortgages to secure the payment of money which may be foreclosed by valid sale of the land. Fitch v. Wetherbee, 110 Ill. 475.

The question in this case related to the right of redemption from such sale turning on the question whether the sale was a judicial sale or a sale under a power.

that the capital need not be made up before declaring a dividend, although the capital was being lost. The court says: "If this property was a property of another nature, the case would stand in a very different position." While the capital stands impaired it is not clear that the directors can properly declare a dividend. Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 2d ed. §§ 199, 546; Lockhart v. Van Alstyne, supra; Sanger v. Upton, 91 U. S. 58, 23 L. ed. 220; Williams v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 98 N. Y. 189; Wood v. Dummer, 8 Mason, 306; Re Ebbw Vale Steel, Iron & Coal Co. L. R. 4 Ch. Div. 827; Re Kirkstall Brewery Co. L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 535. McCullough's Definition of Profits, quoted Coltress Iron Co. v. Black, 6 App. Cas. 329.

IV. Rights and preferences as to assets.

The question what interest preference shareholders take in the surplus assets of a corporation on its dissolution must depend on the contract between the members of the company contained in the articles, if, and so far, as they bear on the subject. The preference may be given both as to dividend and in the distribution of the assets, or as to dividend only. Re Bridgewater Nav. Co. L. R. 39 Ch. Div. 1, 26 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 386, 57 L. J. Ch. 809, 58 L. T. N. S. 476, 36 Week. Rep. 799.

Where the parties do not enter into a contract as to the mode of division of surplus assets they are to be divided on equitable principles and in the above case it was first decided that a fair rule is to divide them among the holders of all the shares of the company in proportion to the amount paid up thereon. But on appeal the house of lords held sub nom. Birch v. Cropper, 61 L. T. N. S. 621, S. C. Re Bridgewater Nav. Co. 14 App. Cas. 525, 38 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 586, modifying the decision below, that after payment of debts and costs of liquidation and repayment to shareholders, both ordinary and preference, of the capital respectively paid on their shares, a division must be made among all such shareholders in proportion to the amount of their shares irrespective of the amount paid in by them.

Preferred shareholders are on equal footing with ordinary shareholders on the winding up of the corporation where its articles provide that subject to difference in dividing profits the shares should rank equally and that the holders should be equal in respect to their status and liability for debts. Griffith v. Pager, L. R. 6 Ch. Div. 511, 25 Week. Rep. 523, 46 L. J. Ch. 498, 37 L. T. N. S. 141.

There being no provision made for the breaking up of a company and the sale of its property and a division of surplus capital, but the contract of the stockholders providing merely for preferential dividends where no profits have ever been made and no dividend declared, any surplus must be distributed among the shareholders according to their capital without reference to their rights in respect to dividend. Re London India Rubber Co. L. R. 5 Eq. 519, 18 L. T. N. S. 530, 16 Week. Rep. 334, 37 L. J. Ch. 236.

Reserve funds set apart by a canal company for (a) depreciation of steamers, (b) insurance, (c) canal improvements, which have not been used while the company was doing business, and which were made up of profits which would have been distributed in dividends to the ordinary shareholders except for the caution exercised in setting them aside to meet unforeseen contingencies and possible losses and depreciations, do not on the winding up of the company, leaving a surplus for shareholders, constitute a part of the capital or assets for distribution among both preference and ordinary shareholders, but are income which should be given to

If the directors have refused to pay dividends on this preferred stock, acting according to their honest discretion, the court, in the absence of any evidence of fraud or intended oppression, will not interfere to compel the directors to declare or the company to pay such dividends.

For the directors are personally responsible for the debts of the company if making a dividend whereby the company is rendered insolvent, to the extent of such dividend (Pub. Stat. chap. 100, § 60, cl. 1), and the law intends they shall have a fair discretion in the matter.

Belfast & M. L. R. Co. v. Belfast, 77 Me. 453; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 2d ed. § 539; Ely v. Sprague, Clarke, Ch. 351, 7 L.

the ordinary shareholders from whom it had been withheld. Re Bridgewater Nav. Co. [1901] 2 Ch. 317.

Preferred stock reciting that it is a "first claim upon the property of the corporation after its indebtedness," and entitled to 7 per cent annual interest from the net earnings of the company, does not give the holders any priority of lien over the claims of subsequent creditors; but the general rule applies that stockholders can be paid only when other liens have been paid. King v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 2 Fed. Rep. 83.

Preference over common stockholders and not over creditors in the distribution of the assets of a corporation is given to holders of certificates of preferred stock which was made a first claim upon the property after its indebtedness, as well as entitled to preference in dividends. Warren v. King, 108 U. S. 389, 27 L. ed. 799.

The courts say the preferred shareholders are not preferred as to reimbursement of principal or as to the right to net earnings, over any one but the holders of common stock, and that while the certificate calls for payment of "interest" on such stock before any dividend on the common stock, the so-called interest is really a dividend because it is to be paid on stock and out of net profits.

An exception to the ordinary rule which limits the preference of holders of preferred stock to the matter of dividends out of the net earnings is found in Totten v. Tison, 54 Ga. 129, in which certificates of stock were issued under a statute authorizing the company to borrow money and secure the loan by mortgage, and were indorsed with the statement that they represented preferred stock with a guaranty of 15 per cent annually for two years when they were to be redeemed or converted into common stock at the option of the holder. The court held that these holders were entitled to claim the rights of creditors in the assets of the company on its insolvency. It was regarded that the relation of creditor was stipulated for in the original contract between the parties.

Under the Pennsylvania Act of 1872, authorizing corporations to issue preferred stock calling for not more than 12 per cent payable out of net earnings, and the Act of 1873 authorizing the issue of different classes of preferred stock with preferences in rates and order of payment of dividends or in redemption of principal, with right to redeem on terms prescribed in the issue, and providing that the company may specifically appropriate for dividends or redemption the revenues from any specific department of business or the proceeds of any specified portion of its assets, or property, provided no injustice shall be done to the existing rights of creditors or other stockholders, a holder of preferred stock in a real estate company to which the company is bound to apply any fund remaining in its treasury to redeem at par on demand of the holder, cannot claim the right to redemption

ed. 140; Williams v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 98 N. Y. 192; Park v. Grant Locomotive Works, 40 N. J. Eq. 14; King v. Bank of England, 2 Barn. & Ald. 620; Pratt v. Pratt, 83 Conn. 457; Elkins v. Camden & A. R. Co. 86 N. J. Eq. 238.

No dividends accruing prior to August 10, 1890, though not yet declared or paid, can be recovered by the plaintiff. For they were appropriated under the Indenture of Compromise, articles 15 and 16, for the benefit of the defendant in payment of its obligations, and belong to it.

Davis v. Second Universalist Meeting-House Proprs. in Lowell, 8 Met. 321; Bates v. Androscooggin & K. R. Co. 49 Me. 491; Belfast & M. L. R. Co. v. Belfast, 77 Me. 445.

out of any other specific assets to the injury of creditors or stockholders by crippling the business. Culver v. Reno Real Estate Co. 61 Pa. 367.

Holders of preferred stock are to be first paid in the distribution of the capital of a corporation before ordinary stockholders can share therein, under N. J. Rev., 191, which is regarded as making a legislative declaration of such preference by providing for a proportional distribution to the general stockholders "after payment of creditors, and costs and expenses, and the preferred stockholders," when a corporation is being wound up under that Act. McGregor v. Home Ins. Co. of Newark, 83 N. J. Eq. 181.

The fact that a corporation is being wound up by its officers and not under direction of the court does not change the right of preferred stockholders to preference in the assets where they are entitled thereto on a winding up under the statutes. Ibid.

A preference as to capital as well as dividends entitling the preference shareholders to priority in surplus assets is created where in the exercise of lawful power a company raised capital by the issue of preference shares entitled to preferential interest at 10 per cent per annum, the amount of the shares to be repaid on six months' notice with 25 per cent bonus, and such payment of interest, repayment and bonus to be made before any dividend, interest, or other money should be paid to the original shareholders. Re Bangor & P. Slate & Slab Co. L. R. 20 Eq. 59, 32 L. T. N. S. 389, 23 Week. Rep. 735.

V. Rights and preferences in dividends.

a. In general.

A by-law providing for dividends on preferred stock establishes the terms of a contract between the company and stockholders who take stock relying on the by-law. Hazeltine v. Belfast & M. L. R. Co. 79 Me. 411.

The right of preferred shareholders to dividends payable out of the net earnings only cannot restrict the right of the company to conduct its operations in good faith as it may see fit, although a different management might have created or left net earnings. St. John v. Erie R. Co. 80 U. S. 22 Wall. 136, 22 L. ed. 743.

Directors have the power to devote the profits of any given year to objects which are legitimate and proper, such as necessary improvements, although this may prevent the payment of dividends on preferred shares, where the holders are entitled "to non-cumulative dividends . . . in preference to the payment of any dividend on the common stock, but dependent on the profits of each particular year as declared by the board of directors." New York L. R. & W. R. Co. v. Nickals, 119 U. S. 296, 80 27 L. R. A.

Morton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff is the holder and owner of thirty shares of preferred stock in the defendant company. Part of them he obtained from the trustee as a creditor of the company, under the indenture of compromise, and part of them he acquired by purchase from another person. Although the shares differ in important respects from common shares in the defendant company, we think that the plaintiff must be regarded as a stockholder, and not as a creditor. Williston v. Michigan, S. & N. I. R. Co. 13 Allen, 401; Williams v. Parker, 136 Mass. 204; St. John v. Erie R. Co. 89 U. S. 22 Wall. 136, 22 L. ed. 743; Lockhart v. Van Alstyne, 31 Mich. 76. 18

L. ed. 363, reversing 15 Fed. Rep. 575, as the provision quoted does not give an absolute right to dividends except where the directors declare them or ought to declare them.

The issue of preferred stock bearing the right to dividends of 6 per cent semi-annually "until the net earnings of the road shall be sufficient to pay an interest of 6 per cent per annum on all stock issued," etc., is held to require a whole year to be taken into account in determining the sufficiency of net earnings to pay the dividend on all the stock, and not merely the period of six months. Bates v. Androscooggin & K. R. Co. 49 Me. 491. See also Hoole v. Great Western R. Co. L. R. 3 Ch. 262, 16 Week. Rep. 260, 17 L. T. N. S. 153.

Payment of the required amount to a trust company to entitle the holder of preferred stock in a railroad company to an equal number of shares in a new company which succeeded the former, entitles a shareholder to dividends on the shares of the new company where the dividend is subsequently declared, although he has not yet surrendered his old shares and obtained the new ones. Ellsworth v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 19 N. Y. Week. Dig. 211.

This case appears to be affirmed by the memorandum decision affirming a case of the same name in 98 N. Y. 648.

Undeclared and undivided dividends on preferred stock which have been earned are incidents to the shares and pass by assignment of the latter. Manning v. Quicksilver Min. Co. 24 Hun. 360.

The sale or assignment of guaranteed stock carries with it as an incident a right to dividends previously accrued, but which has been repudiated by the corporation and the earnings which should have been appropriated thereto otherwise applied. Jermain v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 91 N. Y. 438.

The court holds the case to be substantially the same as that of Boardman v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 84 N. Y. 157, although in the Boardman case there was no dividend due or enforceable when the plaintiff took his stock, but became subsequently enforceable for a period reaching back to a time before he acquired the stock. Without attempting to present here any cases except those respecting preferred stock, it may be said that cases as to common stock agree with these.

A transfer of shares of stock after the declaration of dividends but before the time of payment thereof, carries with it the right to the dividends. Burroughs v. North Carolina R. Co. 67 N. C. 376, 12 Am. Rep. 611.

This case seems to be opposed to other cases on the effect of transfers of ordinary stock, and no distinction seems to be reasonable. Opposed decisions are Hopper v. Sage, 112 N. Y. 530; Spear v. Hart, 3 Robt. 420. That such dividends will pass by a residuary bequest in case of the death of the shareholder before the time of payment but

Am. Rep. 156; Taft v. Hartford, P. & F. R. Co. 8 R. I. 310, 5 Am. Rep. 575; Boardman v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 178; Belfast & M. L. R. Co. v. Belfast, 77 Me. 445; Chaffee v. Rutland R. Co. 55 Vt. 110; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 3d ed. §§ 267, 271. The stock was issued under and in accordance with the provisions of Stat. 1885, chap. 349. By section 2 of that Act it is expressly provided that the holders of preferred stock "shall be entitled to all the privileges of other members of said corporation, including the right to vote upon such stock, in person or by proxy, at all corporate meetings." Independently of other considerations, this provision plainly puts the preferred shareholders upon the footing of members of the corporation. By section 8 of the Act it is provided that "the provisions of law relative to special stock . . . shall not be held to apply in case of stock issued under this act," thus removing the objection which might otherwise be made under Williams v. Parker, supra, that it is the policy of the commonwealth to regard special stockholders, and, by parity of reasoning, preferred stockholders, as creditors. It is immaterial how or where the plaintiff obtained his shares. The preference belongs to the stock, and not to the stockholder; otherwise the stock would be preferred as long as it was held by a creditor who was a party to after they are declared, is held in De Gendre v. Kent, L. R. 4 Eq. 232, 16 L. T. N. S. 604.

b. Payment out of capital.

No dividends on preferred stock can be claimed unless there are net earnings, where the right to dividends is based on a statute which declares merely that the holders shall be entitled to dividends not to exceed 7 per cent per annum before any dividend shall be paid on other stock. This statute does not give the absolute right to dividends but merely declares a preference as between stockholders. Elkins v. Camden & A. R. Co. 38 N. J. Eq. 238.

A prohibition against paying dividends out of capital applies to payment of dividends from moneys paid to a railway company by contractors for delay in completing their work, where it is admitted that the delay was attributable to the company's default in delivering possession of the land to the contractors, and that the amount must be repaid to a contractor out of the capital. Salisbury v. Metropolitan R. Co. 38 L. J. Ch. N. S. 249, 22 L. T. N. S. 539.

A dividend declared and paid under a delusive balance sheet when there were no funds properly applicable thereto can be recovered back on the winding up of the company, although the court will not lightly interfere with the payment of dividends honestly paid on estimates of assets which subsequently prove erroneous. Re County Marine Ins. Co., Rance's Case, L. R. 6 Ch. 104, 40 L. J. Ch. 277, 28 L. T. N. S. 623, 19 Week. Rep. 291.

A dividend actually declared and paid cannot be recovered back in winding up the company on the ground that it was never earned, if it was declared in good faith on the basis of estimated value of assets which were in jeopardy and were subsequently lost. Re Mercantile Trading Co., Stringer's Case, L. R. 4 Ch. 475, 38 L. J. Ch. 608, 20 L. T. N. S. 558, 17 Week. Rep. 604.

Payment to shareholders of interest out of capital is a breach for which the directors are liable. Re National Funds Assur. Co. L. R. 10 Ch. Div. 118, 48 L. J. Ch. 163, 39 L. T. N. S. 420, 27 Week. Rep. 302.

The liability of directors on the winding up of a corporation for the amount of moneys abstracted from capital to pay preferential dividends is enforced in Re Alexandra Palace Co., L. R. 21 Ch. Div. 149, 51 L. J. Ch. 655, 46 L. T. N. S. 730, 30 Week. Rep. 771, in which they were held liable jointly and severally for the amount of the dividends paid out of insurance money, and as to other dividends paid from money borrowed for the purpose they were held jointly and severally liable for such a sum as would enable the liquidator to pay on all debts proved such a dividend as would have been payable on all debts other than those for such borrowed money in case no proof of these had been made.

See further, as to guaranteed dividends, infra.

c. Payment when capital is impaired or debts unpaid.

Preferred stock is intended to have special advantages and be exempt from a general statute prohibiting dividends while the capital is impaired, at least so far as respects an impairment of the capital existing when the preferred stock was issued, where the statute authorizing its issue gave the alternative right to raise money by the sale of mortgage bonds and plainly declared that the holders of the preferred stock should be entitled to dividends of 7 per cent per annum out of the net earnings, which should be cumulative, and at the time of the statute the company was so indebted that it must have been apparent that dividends must be paid before supplying the previous impairment of capital in order to make any inducement to purchase the preferred stock. Cotting v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 54 Conn. 158.

Dividends on preference shares sold to obtain additional capital for making a great expenditure in the restoration of a reservoir which had burst, declared for the time during which no income was produced by the company because the reservoir was in process of construction, are held properly attributable to capital, being in substance interest on unproductive capital. Bardwell v. Sheffield Water Works Co. L. R. 14 Eq. 517, 41 L. J. Ch. 700, 20 Week. Rep. 939.

In this case the right to pay dividends when no income was made was not considered, the only question being as to whether they were to be attributed to income or capital.

An injunction against the declaration of dividends on preferred stock until provision had been made by means of a sinking fund or otherwise for the replacing of capital lost or sunk or expended in the purchase of the waste property of the company, was denied where the articles of association declared that in case of dispute as to the amount of net profits, the decision of the company at a general meeting should be final and the proposed dividend had been ordered at such a meeting. Lambert v. Neuchâtel Asphalte Co. 51 L. J. Ch. 882, 47 L. T. N. S. 73, 30 Week. Rep. 913.

One ground of denying an injunction against dividends on preferred stock while floating or unsecured debts are unpaid in Stevens v. South Devon R. Co., 9 Hare, 815, 21 L. J. Ch. N. S. 815, was the lack of power in the court to interfere with the internal management of the corporation, and it is said that the principle applicable to partnerships should apply.

So an injunction against the declaration of any dividends by a railway company until all its works were completed was denied in Browne v. Monmouthshire R. & Canal Co., 12 Beav. 22, 20 L. J. Ch.

the indenture of compromise, and would lose its privileges when it passes into the possession of one who was not a party to that instrument.

The principal question relates to the right of the plaintiff to dividends, and involves—First, the construction of section 8 of the Act aforesaid; and, secondly, whether this action can be maintained, or, if not, whether there is a remedy in equity. Section 8 provides that “the holders of said preferred stock shall be entitled to dividends upon the same annually, out of the net profits, in preference and priority to the holders of any other stock of said corporation, to the amount of such rate per cent thereon, not exceeding seven per cent, as may be determined by vote of said corporation prior to issue of the same, which rate per cent of priority shall be expressed in the certificates of said preferred stock, and shall also share pro rata with the holders of the common stock in any excess divided in any year above a dividend on the whole stock at said rate per cent, and dividends to the holders of such preferred stock, at the rate per cent fixed upon shall be paid for each year from the time of its issue, cumulatively, before any dividends shall be paid upon any other stock of said corporation, and if so voted and expressed in the certificates, may be guaranteed by said corporation.” Prior to the issue of said preferred stock,

N. S. 497, 15 Jur. 475, on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction to interfere merely to prevent violation of duty to the public, and also that misapplication of income was the subject of internal regulation.

A tramway company which had failed to set apart a reserve fund adequate for its maintenance until it had become worn out, was held to have no right to declare a dividend to preferred stockholders without making any provision for restoring the tramway. Dent v. London Tramways Co. L. R. 16 Ch. Div. 844, 50 L. J. Ch. 190, 44 L. T. N. S. 91; Davison v. Gillies, L. R. 16 Ch. Div. 847, note, 50 L. J. Ch. 192, note, 44 L. T. N. S. 92, note.

But holders of preferred shares the dividends on which depend on the profits of the particular year only, are entitled to dividends out of the net profits after deducting therefrom a proportionate amount of what is needed for the restoration of the road, and cannot be deprived of their dividends in order to make good what the company has erroneously applied to dividends in previous years. Dent v. London Tramways Co. supra.

Without adopting the rule that all debts must be paid before a corporation can be compelled to pay dividends on preferred stock, the right to dividends was denied in Belfast & M. L. R. Co. v. Belfast, 77 Me. 445, in case of a corporation which had in addition to its bonded mortgage debt an outstanding note which was regarded as given for temporary purposes in anticipation of rents receivable.

In a later case concerning the same corporation the court required a dividend on preferred stock to be made amounting to about $16,000 where the company had an annual rental from the lease of its railroad amounting to $36,000, and bills payable amounting to about $8,000 only, while its sole indebtedness was a mortgage debt of $150,000 on a road which cost a million dollars, and the company had sufficient means or credit to provide for the debt without reserving these funds for that purpose, although the debt was soon to mature. Hazeltine v. Belfast & M. L. R. Co. 79 Me. 411. See also on this point the main case of FIELD V. LAMSON & G. MFG. CO.

Scrip for dividends on preferred stock having been issued without right by a corporation which had no surplus profits properly applicable thereto, a holder of such scrip is held entitled to payment thereof where the company alone contests its validity after it has honored a large part of such scrip by converting it into bonds, at least when it appears that the company's debt has been largely reduced and it does not appear that the company would be embarrassed by treating plaintiff's scrip as it had other similar scrip. Chaffee v. Rutland R. Co. 55 Vt. 110.

A stockholder is not charged with constructive notice of the financial condition of the corporation making it improper to declare dividends so far as to prevent him from holding scrip which was issued for dividends as a valid claim against the company where the conduct of the corporation is such as to estop it from denying the validity of such scrip. Ibid.

See further as to guaranteed dividends, infra.

6. Guaranteed dividends.

See also Memphis Grain & Elevator Co. v. Memphis & C. R. Co. 85 Tenn. 703, supra, I. a, and Dickinson v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. infra, XI.

Except where so-called guaranteed stock is in the nature of an absolute obligation to a creditor of the corporation rather than a contract with a shareholder, there is force in the objection against any dividends which cannot be paid out of income but which can be paid only by drawing upon the capital. Sustaining this objection with practical unanimity, the courts, as in the main case of FIELD V. LAMSON & G. MFG. CO., have construed general language guaranteeing dividends on stock to mean that dividends should be paid out of profits if any were made, but not otherwise.

Certificates of stock in the usual form but indorsed “5 per cent semi-annual dividend guaranteed,” issued under a resolution for the issue of preferred capital stock with a semi-annual dividend of 5 per cent guaranteed by the company, were held in Lookhart v. Van Alstyne, 81 Mich. 78, 18 Am. Rep. 156, to entitle the holder to the dividend only when there were profits to pay them, but with the right to have arrears of one year made up from the profits of another year.

Judge Cooley writing the opinion in this case says that a contrary view involves extraordinary results, as it might require the dissipation of the assets of the company to pay so-called dividends and make a conflict of interest between the common and preferred shareholders respecting the management of the corporation.

So it was held in Taft v. Hartford, P. & F. R. Co., 8 R. I. 810, 5 Am. Rep. 575, that the holder of preferred and guaranteed ten per cent stock on which dividends are to be paid before any dividends shall be paid on any other stock of the company is entitled to dividends only out of the net earnings of the company and has no claim until dividends are earned.

And to similar effect is the decision in Feld v. Roanoke Investment Co. (Mo.), Jun: 30, 1894, denying rescission of a contract for preferred stock on failure to pay the agreed annual interest so called.

And in Miller v. Ratterman, 47 Ohio St. 141, where the question was whether so-called preferred and guaranteed stock, guaranteed not only by the corporation which issued it but by another also, and secured by mortgage, should be deemed to be stock or credits for purpose of taxation, the court held it to be stock and that dividends were payable thereon only out of profits, although the guaranty was in general terms expressing no such limitation.

the corporation and the directors determined by vote the rate of dividend to be paid, and the form of certificates to be issued. The certificates issued to the plaintiff were in the form thus determined, and so much of them as is now material is as follows: "Said stock is issued under and subject to an act of the general court of the commonwealth of Massachusetts approved June 18, 1885, entitled 'An act to authorize the Lamson & Goodnow Manufacturing Company to issue preferred stock;' and its holder has all the rights provided for the holders of such preferred stock by this act. The holder of the stock represented by this certificate is entitled to dividends thereon annually out of net profits, in preference and priority to the holders of any stock of said corporation, except the preferred stock issued under said act, to the amount of six per cent, which rate per cent was determined by vote of said corporation prior to its original issue; and said holder is also entitled to share pro rata with the holders of the common stock in any excess divided in any year above a dividend on the whole of said stock of said company at said rate of six per cent. The holder of the stock represented by this certificate is entitled to dividends upon it at six per cent for each year from the time of its issue, cumulatively before any dividends shall be paid upon any stock of said corporation except the preferred

To the same effect was the decision in Chaffee v. Rutland R. Co., 55 Vt. 110, that a corporation has no right to declare dividends on guaranteed preferred stock, which is entitled to dividends from the earnings and income in preference to dividends on common stock, although there is a provision that no mortgage shall be made by the company to take precedence of such stock in the application of its income, where there are no surplus earnings if the floating debt and current expenses were first paid and the only earnings and income was rental insufficient to pay the operating expenses and floating debt.

The application to arrears of dividends due on guaranteed stock of funds obtained by borrowing is not necessarily illegal or subject to injunction, where the money which should have paid the dividends had been applied to capital purposes. Mills v. Northern Railway of Buenos Ayres Co., L. R. 5 Ch. 621.

A contract by a corporation that the dividends accruing on certain stock transferred by it in payment for patents should amount to a certain sum before May 17, which is executed by payment thereof, is held not to preclude the stockholder's right to claim the whole of another dividend declared in July following, since no dividend accrues until it is declared. Parks v. Automatic Bank Punch Co. 14 Daly, 424.

The resolution of a board of directors for the issue of guaranteed stock calling for certain dividends before any dividends on the other stock, is held properly considered in evidence to explain the real character of guaranteed stock issued thereunder. Boardman v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 157.

a. Preference over common stock.

Nothing can be paid by discretion of the directors to ordinary stockholders until the preferred shareholders have received a dividend of 7 per cent, where the statute gives the latter a right to such a dividend before any dividend shall be paid on the common stock. Elkins v. Camden & A. R. Co. 36 N. J. Eq. 233.

Holders of a small portion of the shares of preferred stock which were entitled to dividends out of net earnings before any payment on the other stock, were held to have the preference as if they were the only preferred shareholders where the others had relinquished their shares in exchange for consolidated stock, by which the greater part of the preferred shares had been retired, and that was also exchanged for common stock on different and less favorable terms. West Chester & P. R. Co. v. Jackson, 77 Pa. 321.

Where 10 per cent was fixed as the maximum rate of dividend on certain shares, and 7 per cent was the maximum rate on other shares, in the act for the formation of the company, a declaration of a dividend of 8 per cent on the former and 7 per cent on the latter was made and the court refused to interfere so as to compel a dividend in proportion to the maximum rates. Maukhan v. Leamington Priors Gas Co. 15 Week. Rep. 333.

Holders of preferred stock are entitled to 7 per cent dividends before the holders of common shares get anything, and to further dividends only after the common stock has also received 7 per cent, after which both kinds of stock share equally, where the indenture under which the stock was issued provides for 7 per cent dividends on the preferred stock "before any dividend shall be declared upon other unpreferred shares . . . and to an equal dividend with said other shares of the net earnings of the company beyond said 7 per cent." Bailey v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 96, 21 L. ed. 611, affirming 1 Dill. 176.

The declaration of a 10 per cent dividend on all the stock, common and preferred, but payable in preferred stock to holders of such stock, and in common stock to holders of common stock, is sustained against objection by owners of bonds and common stock, in Howell v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 51 Barb. 373, where the company had power to issue additional preferred stock and the holders of preferred stock were entitled to 7 per cent dividends before anything was given on the common stock, and after the 7 per cent dividend on the latter, was entitled to 8 per cent more and then both were to share equally in any surplus, while at the market value of the stock or at its nominal value the holders of preferred stock were not getting more than they were entitled to.

The holder of preferred stock is not estopped from asserting his right to preference given by statute simply because for some years the holders of preferred stock without objection have allowed dividends to be shared with holders of the ordinary stock, who were not entitled thereto. Elkins v. Camden & A. R. Co. 36 N. J. Eq. 233.

Creditors of a corporation who under a scheme of arrangement accept debenture stock with certain preferences, do not thereby lose their previous priority with respect to a judgment creditor who has sued out an elegit and who does not accept and is not bound by the scheme. The court while seeking to prevent prejudice to the rights of such creditor by the scheme, declined to allow him to acquire a priority over others by refusing to accept it. Stevens v. Mid-Hants R. Co. L. R. 8 Ch. 1064, 42 L. J. Ch. 694, 30 L. T. N. S. 813, 21 Week. Rep. 853.

Special resolutions altering the application of revenue as between preference and ordinary shareholders in a manner beneficial to the preference shareholders, are held in Ashbury v. Watson, 54 L. J. Ch. 965, 54 L. T. N. S. 27, 33 Week. Rep. 832, L. R. 30 Ch. Div. 373, 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 833, to be invalid as a violation of a statutory provision prohibiting the alteration of a condition contained in the memorandum of association ex-stock issued under said act, which dividends are guaranteed by said company, a vote of said company to that effect having been passed prior to its original issue." It is to be observed that the act only authorizes the payment of dividends on the preferred stock out of net profits, and that, to secure their final payment in case there should be no net profits or a deficiency at any time, but should be net profits later, the dividends are made payable cumulatively. The certificates follow the act; and we think that the effect of the guaranty which the act authorized, and which was voted by the company, and is contained in the certificates, was not to make dividends of 6 per cent payable at all events, and whether there were net profits or not, but to add to the statutory liability the direct undertaking of the company that the net profits should be devoted first of all, as between the preferred stockholders and the holders of any other stock, common or special, to the payment of preferred dividends. In the strict sense of the word, "guaranty" or "guarantee" applies to an undertaking by another, though it is sometimes used in the sense of "warranty" or "warrant." Wiley v. Athol, 150 Mass. 434, 6 L. R. A. 842. To give it in the present case the effect of rendering the company absolutely and at all events liable for the dividends would be inconsistent with the provision authorizing cept in certain other matters. Whether such misappropriation can be ratified was questioned, but in any event it was held that there was not sufficient proof of ratification.

2. Accumulations and arrears.

Nearly all the cases support the right to have arrearages of dividends on preferred shares which are due to lack of profits paid out of profits of subsequent years as soon as they become sufficient although there is no express provision therefor as there is in the main case. But one case was found to the contrary. That is Belfast & M. L. R. Co. v. Belfast, 77 Me. 445, in which it was held that a by-law providing for dividends on preferred stock not exceeding 6 per cent, then a like dividend on the common stock, and for a division of any surplus on all the stock pro rata, shows an intent to have all net earnings divided every year so that dividends on preferred cannot be cumulative, that is, to have arrearages of one year paid out of the earnings of another. As to this the same court declares in Hazeltine v. Belfast & M. L. R. Co., 79 Me. 411, that it was a decision very liberal to the common stockholders, giving them the benefit of the doubt.

Several of the cases allowing the claim to arrearages of dividends, but not all of them, were cases of guaranteed dividends.

Thus in Boardman v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 84 N. Y. 157, it is held that dividends are cumulative and a specific charge upon accruing profits to be paid as arrears before any other dividends are divided upon the common stock where there is an absolute guaranty of "the payment of dividends as aforesaid" included in a certificate of stock entitled to ten per cent dividends out of the net earnings.

The same is held in Prouty v. Michigan, S. & N. I. R. Co., 1 Hun, 655, 4 Thomp. & C. 230, in which case the court approves the rule that such arrears are to be paid as part of the guaranteed dividends unless there is some agreement to the contrary. Also in Lockhart v. Van Alstyne, 31 Mich. 75, 18 Am. Rep. 156.

So payment of arrears of dividends out of subsequent profits is held lawful in Stevens v. South Devon R. Co., 9 Hare, 315, on stock having a guaranty of 6 per cent dividends per annum.

The same rule of allowing arrears of dividends to be paid from subsequent profits was upheld in respect to guaranteed half-shares issued under an act which allowed a shareholder who had a share half paid up to have his share divided into a guaranteed half-share, and a deferred half-share, the former of which should have preference in dividends applicable to the share. Matthews v. Great Northern R. Co., 5 Jur. N. S. 284.

It is the same where the shareholders are in general terms given the right to a dividend of ten per 27 L. R. A.

cent per annum payable half yearly, and also to a pro rata participation in surplus dividends after ten per cent had been paid to the ordinary shareholders. There also a deficiency of dividends on preference capital may be made good out of subsequent profits. Webb v. Earle, L. R. 20 Eq. 556, 44 L. J. Ch. 608, 24 Week. Rep. 44.

The right to have arrears of dividends on preferred shares paid out of subsequent profits is affirmed also in Crauford v. Northeastern R. Co., 3 Kay & J. 723, 3 Jur. N. S. 1098. The court in this case considers that the word "dividend" is not necessarily restricted to the profits of any definite period.

Shares having preference in payment of dividends are held entitled to have arrearages paid out of profits under a general provision for preference, in Oorry v. Londonderry & E. R. Co., 29 Beav. 233, 7 Jur. N. S. 608, 30 L. J. Ch. 290, 9 Week. Rep. 301, 4 L. T. N. S. 181.

Arrearages of dividends remaining unpaid for lack of net profits are held payable out of such profits when earned, where preference shares of various kinds have been issued, some of them calling for "interest or preference dividend in perpetuity;" others providing for "preference to the payment of dividends on the ordinary shares." Henry v. Great Northern R. Co., 1 DeG. & J. 606, 4 Kay & J. 1, 32, 27 L. J. Ch. 1, 3 Jur. N. S. 1133.

The fact that a statute has directed the profits of a particular half year to be applied in replacing a certain loss, leaving no surplus to be divided in dividends, was held not to exclude the right of the preferred shareholders to have the arrearages paid from subsequent profits. Ibid.

Certificates purporting to carry interest at 6 per cent per annum in perpetuity, referred to in a subsequent act of parliament as entitled to "dividends," which the statute provided should be paid before dividends on other shares, were held to give the right to have arrearages of dividends paid out of subsequent profits when the statute was construed with reference to a later one providing for other shares called debenture shares, the interest on which was given a preference over the "interest or dividend" on the guaranteed or preference shares and the arrears thereof. Sturge v. Eastern Union R. Co., 7 DeG. M. & G. 155, 31 Eng. L. & Eq. 403, 1 Jur. N. S. 713.

Holders of preference shares entitled to first payment of a dividend and to participate equally in any further dividends after an equal dividend to the ordinary shareholders had been made, and which are entitled to have arrears of dividends made up out of subsequent profits, must permit the ordinary shareholders to have arrears made up in the same way before the preference shareholders can participate in any surplus profits beyond the amount of their preference. Allen v. Londonderry & E. R. Co., 25 Week. Rep. 524.

Bonds secured by mortgage issued to preferred dividends on preferred stock to be made from net profits. It cannot be supposed that the legislature having provided for the payment of dividends from net profits, and by implication forbidden their payment from anything else, would, in almost the next sentence, authorize the company to incur a liability which might compel it to pay dividends, though its business was conducted at a loss. A construction which attached such a meaning to the guaranty which the company was authorized to give would nullify the provision in regard to the payment of dividends from net profits. In the case of Williams v. Parker, supra, not only was there no provision in the statute that the dividends should be payable from net profits, but the statute expressly provided that the company was "to give its guaranty that each share of said stock shall receive semi-annual dividends of four dollars on each share;" and the guaranty accordingly was held to be an absolute one. That case was much stronger than this. Generally, the use of the word "guaranteed," as applied to dividends upon preferred stock, whether in connection with the word "preferred" or alone, has not been held to import an absolute liability. Williston v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Co., Taft v. Hartford P. & F. R. Co., Lockhart v. Van Alstyne and Boardman v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., supra; Miller v. Ratterman, 47 Ohio St. 141; Sterens stockholders for their dividends which had been earned, represent in fact a loan of the amount of the dividends to the company, and payment in one year of the bonds representing several years dividends does not violate a provision that the dividends are not cumulative. Wood v. Lary, 47 Hun. 550. Appeal dismissed on other grounds, 124 N. Y. 83.

Interest on arrears of dividends due to preferred stockholders from the time the net earnings of the corporation applicable thereto were misappropriated to holders of common stock is allowed in Prouty v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Co., 1 Hun. 655, 4 Thomp. & C. 230.

VI. Remedy to obtain or protect dividends.

Where the holder of preferred stock brings an action not upon the stock, nor technically for dividends, but upon a contract for the payment of specified sums at certain times in consideration of his taking stock, it was held that verbal inaccuracies or omissions would not constitute such a variance between the description of his stock set out according to their tender and the instruments offered in evidence as would require their exclusion. Bates v. Androsoggin & K. R. Co. 49 Me. 491.

A suit for specific performance of a contract guaranteeing certain dividends on preferred stock is a proper remedy for the stockholders where the corporation improperly refuses to declare or pay the dividends. Boardman v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 157.

Such a condition of the finances of a corporation as would justify payment of dividends is necessary to authorize the payment of scrip or certificates for dividends payable as soon as the treasurer is "able to pay." Richardson v. Vermont & M. R. Co. 44 Vt. 613.

The court can interfere in behalf of the holders of preferred stock to compel the distribution of net earnings as dividends where there are sufficient earnings possessed by the company and the contract to pay dividends is upon the sole condition of such earnings. Hazeltine v. Belfast & M. L. R. Co. 79 Me. 411.

A Massachusetts case holds that a foreign corporation cannot be compelled by a suit in equity to pay dividends on guaranteed preferred stock, but such remedy must be left to a court which has general jurisdiction over the corporation. Williston v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Co. 13 Allen, 401.

So one ground of the decision in Howell v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 51 Barb. 373, was that an injunction against the issue of stock dividends by a foreign corporation was not authorized by the code. Although its general language might be construed more liberally, the court thought it was not intended to extend the right of action against foreign corporations further than it existed under previous statutes, which did not authorize it except 27 L. R. A.

in cases of attachment of property for collection of a debt or the redress of a wrong.

But a later case holds that the New York statute authorizing actions against foreign corporations "for any cause of action" entitles the holder of preferred stock in that state to maintain an action to compel a foreign corporation to apply net earnings to dividends on his stock. Prouty v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Co. 1 Hun. 655, 4 Thomp. & C. 230.

A holder of guaranteed stock which has a preference in dividends over common stock and recites that payment of the dividends was guaranteed, is a member of the company and not a creditor such that he can sue at law for the dividends. Williston v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Co. supra.

See also on this point the main case of Field v. Lamson & G. Mfg. Co.

But an action of general assumpsit was sustained by the holder of scrip which the company was estopped to repudiate where it had refused payment in money or bonds as promised and as had been done with other scrip. Chaffee v. Rutland Co. 55 Vt. 110.

On a creditor's bill by holders of guaranteed stock for themselves and others to enforce a contract for participation in dividends all such guaranteed stockholders are entitled to come in and participate although they have not been plaintiffs in the record or represented by counsel, and those who have not been thus represented are liable for counsel fees. Gordon v. Richmond, F. & P. R. Co. 81 Va. 621.

The objection that stockholders should have been made parties to an action against a corporation for dividends on preferred stock is held untenable in Prouty v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Co. 1 Hun. 655, 4 Thomp. & C. 230.

Common stockholders are not necessary though they may be proper parties to an action by preferred stockholders to compel payment of dividends from earnings which they allege have been diverted to permanent improvements and additions. Thompson v. Erie R. Co. 45 N. Y. 468.

Directors or other officers of a new consolidated corporation are not necessary or proper parties to an action by holders of preferred stock of one of the merged corporations to enforce a right to dividends, where the new company has assumed the obligations of the old ones, but the cause of action is against the corporation alone. Chase v. Vanderbilt, 62 N. Y. 307.

In a suit by the holder of preferred stock against a foreign corporation to obtain dividends a motion after the referee's report directing judgment to substitute as defendant a new interstate corporation into which the foreign company had been merged by consolidation, was granted, but reversed on appeal on the ground that the substitution would make the referee's decision against the officers of the original defendant binding on the officers of the new company and thus apply to them an ad*v. South Devon R. Co.* 9 Hare, 815; Henry v. Great Northern R. Co. 1 De G. & J. 606; Sturge v. Eastern Counties R. Co. 7 De G. M. & G. 158; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 3d ed. §§ 267-275. In some instances its use has led to preferred dividends being regarded as cumulative. Stevens v. South Devon R. Co., Henry v. Great Northern R. Co. and Boardman v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. supra. But although, in the present case, that effect cannot be given to it, since it is expressly provided that the dividends shall be cumulative, we think that that fact, in view of the provision already noted, that the dividends are payable from net profits, should not cause the guaranty to be regarded as an absolute one. Moreover, the preferred stockholders are entitled to dividends as dividends, and not as interest, and as members of a corporation, and not as creditors. Thus, it is provided that "the holders of said preferred stock shall be entitled to dividends," etc. They are to share with holders of common stock in excess dividend above a dividend upon the whole stock at the rate fixed for the preferred stock. "And dividends to the holders of such preferred stock . . . shall be paid . . . cumulatively before any dividends shall be paid upon other stock," etc. Though the company was authorized to issue the stock in payment of its indebtedness, there is no provision in the act that judication made against others. Prouty v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 52 N. Y. 363.

A preferential shareholder is held entitled to an injunction against a dividend prejudicial to his rights when there are not sufficient funds to make it. Sturge v. Eastern Union R. Co. 7 De G. M. & G. 158, 81 Eng. L. & Eq. 406, 1 Jur. N. S. 712.

Preferred stockholders cannot have an injunction against the execution of a new mortgage by the corporation for a lawful purpose and in a lawful manner and the issue of bonds secured thereby, on the ground that payment of interest thereon may interfere with the payment of dividends on the stock, although if the preferred stock is entitled to dividends subject only to the payment of interest on prior mortgages such payment of interest on the new mortgage to their detriment may be prevented. Thompson v. Erie R. Co. 42 How. Pr. 66, 11 Abb. Pr. N. S. 188.

Holders of preferred stock in a railroad company were held barred by laches from relief against a railroad corporation which had purchased the road on foreclosure of a mortgage given by a company which held possession of it under an ultra vires agreement attempting to make a perpetual transfer, where their delay in beginning proceedings had allowed the intervention of other equities by virtue of assignments and mortgages. Boston & F. R. Corp. v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 13 R. I. 260.

The same decision was affirmed and held res judicata in Emerson v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 14 R. I. 555.

VII. Guaranty of dividends by outside party.

See also Miller v. Ratterman, 47 Ohio St. 141, supra, in division No. III.

A guaranty by one corporation of certain dividends on the stock of another company with which it makes a contract, is a matter between the corporations to which the stockholders of the latter company are not a party and gives them no right to interfere with a modification of the agreement between the corporations. People v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 26 Hun. 82.

A guaranty of dividends on the capital of a company made to the company on the sale of its business is within the power of the company to change and in part release by a subsequent arrangement. Sheffield Silver, Nickel & Plated Co. v. Unwin, L. R. 2 Q. B. Div. 214, 46 L. J. Q. B. 299, 36 L. T. N. S. 246, 26 Week. Rep. 468.

A guaranty by one corporation to another of a certain dividend on the capital stock of the latter, is held to be a contract between the corporations subject to the fair exercise of the power of the directors to modify the contract, notwithstanding objection from the holders of the stock on which the dividends had been guaranteed. Flagg v. Manhattan R. Co. 20 Blatchf. 142, 10 Fed. Rep. 412.

27 L. R. A.

VIII. Interest-bearing stock.

Stock bearing interest without restricting it to payment out of income is generally held invalid, although a few cases have treated the question as doubtful, or held the stock lawful.

A provision for interest on railroad stock until the road is opened is involved in McLaughlin v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 8 Mich. 100, in which the power of the corporation to issue it was not disputed and the issue by officers without authority was held to have been ratified.

An agreement by a corporation to pay interest on stock subscribed and paid for, until twelve miles of its railroad should be completed and in operation, is held within the discretion of the directors under a charter which, although not recited, is said to confer upon the directors "power of that enlarged and plenary character usually found in the charters of railroad corporations in this state." Milwaukee & N. I. R. Co. v. Field, 12 Wis. 340.

To the same effect as to the validity of a contract for interest on advance payments for stock is the decision in Racine County Bank v. Ayers, 12 Wis. 512, in which the stipulation was for interest on the amounts paid in on stock until dividends should be declared from the earnings. In both the above cases the question involved was the liability of a subscriber for payments on his stock and the time for payment of interest does not seem to have been considered.

A provision in a subscription for stock that interest should be allowed on all sums assessed and paid until a railroad is put in operation by the company, but without specifying any time for payment of the interest, is upheld as a just condition between the subscribers and construed not to require payment of interest until the road went into operation. An objection that it reduced the stock below the amount subscribed was held untenable. Rutland & B. R. Co. v. Thrall, 36 Vt. 536.

A later case in the same state is to the same effect, holding that a corporation has authority to stipulate for interest on sums paid in on stock subscriptions while its railroad is in process of construction, payable when surplus earnings enable the company to pay it. Richardson v. Vermont & M. R. Co. 44 Vt. 612.

The same contract is construed in Massachusetts to the same effect holding that a contract by a railroad company to pay interest on sums received on stock subscriptions until the road goes into operation without specifying any time for payment does not make the interest payable until the road has gone into operation and earned an income. Waterman v. Troy & G. R. Co. 8 Gray, 453; Wright v. Vermont & M. R. Corp. 12 Cush. 68.

The above cases give slight ground for holding that a corporation may contract to pay interest on stock otherwise than from income unless expressly authorized by statute. On the other hand the these creditors, who have accepted the stock in payment of their debts, are henceforth to be regarded in any other light than that of stockholders. The fact that the dividends were payable cumulatively out of net profits, at the rate of 6 per cent, in preference to any other stock, well may have operated as a sufficient inducement to creditors to exchange their demands against the corporation for preferred stock, especially if the prospects of successful business were good, as it fairly may be assumed that the parties interested supposed them to be. Creditors may also have thought that this was far better than insolvency. Good and sufficient reasons can be found for the action of the creditors in exchanging their demands against the company for its preferred stock, without construing the guaranty as importing an absolute undertaking on its part to pay dividends at the specified rate. Some of them are stated in the preamble of the indenture of compromise.

Neither do we think that the guaranty can be regarded as an undertaking that, whenever there were net profits, they should be divided without regard to the circumstances or situation of the company, among the preferred stockholders. The act itself does not in terms compel such a division; and we see nothing in it to take the case out of the general rule that, in the first instance, the de-power is very effectually negated by the cases following.

A provision in a preliminary contract for subscription to stock that dividends by way of interest should be paid during the construction of a railroad is contrary to public policy and void. Troy & R. R. Co. v. Tibbits, 18 Barb. 307.

Payment of interest periodically on stock out of the capital of a company before any earnings are made is within a prohibition against paying dividends out of the capital. Pittsburg & C. R. Co. v. Allegheny County, 68 Pa. 123.

The guaranty of a corporation to pay interest on stock "as soon as paid" was previously held in Miller v. Pittsburg & C. R. Co., 40 Pa. 237, 80 Am. Dec. 570, to call for no interest on stock which was not fully paid up, even if the guaranty was valid, which seems to have been questioned by the court.

Without express authority of law a corporation has no power to issue some certificates of stock bearing interest and others not, and it is against public policy to uphold such contracts for payment of interest until the completion of a railroad of the company, even if made with all stockholders equally so far as to divert the funds of the company from its corporate purposes, leaving its debts unpaid. Painesville & H. R. Co. v. King, 17 Ohio St. 534.

In this case a statute expressly prohibiting the payment of interest to stockholders while its debts were unpaid for labor or materials, or when it would reduce the capital stock, was referred to, and it was held that even if it did not apply to the case in hand the same rule would govern under another statute which made no express provision on the subject.

A provision in the articles of association authorizing directors to pay interest on paid-up capital while another provision prohibits dividends except out of profits, is not intended to authorize the payment of interest out of capital but only out of income. Re National Funds Assur. Co. L. R. 10 Ch. Div. 113, 48 L. J. Ch. 163, 27 Week. Rep. 302, 39 L. T. N. 8420.

Nor can such payment of interest to shareholders before any profits have been realized be authorized by resolution at a general meeting of the company, but will be restrained by the court as an impairment of the capital to the prejudice of creditors. Macdougall v. Jersey Imperial Hotel Co. 2 Hem. & M. 523, 10 Jur. N. S. 1043, 34 L. J. Ch. 23, 12 Week. Rep. 1142, 10 L. T. N. 843.

A later English case holds that the payment of interest out of the capital when there are no profits is ultra vires notwithstanding any provision in the articles of association. Re Sharpe [1892] 1 Ch. 154.

A claim of statutory authority to pay interest has been made in a few cases.

A provision in a subscription to a railroad company that application should be made to the legislature for authority to issue a limited number of shares to be applied in paying interest on installments of money paid by subscribers, until the road should earn an income, is construed in Manice v. Hudson River R. Co., 3 Duer. 423, and it is held that this did not require a subscriber to take such shares instead of cash in payment of the interest due him, but that the interest was to be paid from the proceeds of the sale of such shares.

A provision in a subscription to increase stock issued to obtain funds for the extension of a railroad that interest on installments paid in should be allowed until the completion of the extension, and that the new stockholders should not participate in any of the profits made during that period, was held in McManus v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 53 Pa. 330, to be unauthorized by mere statutory authority to issue increased stock in all respects upon the footing of the original stock, and a vote of stockholders that the directors might dispose of it as they should deem advisable.

A certificate issued by a dental college for a share of its real estate property, "drawing an interest of 6 per cent," is held in Ohio College of Dental Surgery v. Rosenthal, 45 Ohio St. 183, to give the holder no right of action for interest before dissolution of the corporation or other proceedings to divide the respective interests in the property, no time for payment of interest being specified.

To the same effect is Bryant v. Ohio College of Dental Surgery, 1 Cin. Super. Ct. Rep. 67.

Where a binding obligation to pay interest exists under a resolution to allow interest on installments as paid and carry to the account of the stockholder and issue stock certificates in payment when the amount is sufficient, a transfer of stock after interest has accrued thereon does not carry the right to the interest. Ohio v. Cleveland & T. R. Co. 6 Ohio St. 439. But see Painesville & H. R. Co. v. King, 17 Ohio St. 534.

What is called $75 stock and $50 stock, although it was to be of equal rank and value with other stock for which $100 per share was paid, is held entitled to interest only for the amount actually paid thereon, where a corporation had stipulated to pay interest during the construction of its railroad on sums actually paid in on subscription. Richardson v. Vermont & M. R. Co. 44 Vt. 613.

Scrip issued by a railroad company to represent its obligation for interest on payments for stock while the road was building, reciting a vote which authorized the issue of the scrip and the payment thereof when the treasurer was able to pay it, gives no claims against the corporation until money comes into the treasury. Cunningham v. Vermont & M. R. Co. 12 Gray, 411.

On such scrip the court will require payment if the corporation is able to pay, but where the necessary expenses are large and constant and expensive repairs required, and sudden and great cision of the question whether there shall or shall not be dividends lies with the company or its agents. Looking at section 8 in connection with the rest of the act, we think that the reasonable construction of it is that if there are net profits which, in the fair judgment of the company or its agents, taking all the circumstances into account, are or should be available for dividends, then the preferred stockholders are entitled to receive dividends on their stock at the rate fixed by the vote of the company, and expressed in the certificates, before any dividends are paid on any other stock, and that, if the company has passed any dividends, the preferred stockholders are entitled to have them made good to them before any dividends are paid on any other stock. This conclusion derives some support from the concluding sentence of section 8, already referred to,—that “the provisions of law relative to special stock,” upon which corporations are expressly required “to pay a fixed half-yearly sum or dividend” (Pub. Stat. chap. 106, § 42; Williams v. Parker, supra), shall not be held to apply in the case of stock issued under this act. If under section 6, in connection with Pub. Stat., chap. 106, § 60, the officers could be made liable for a dividend which the law compelled them to declare, or for a debt which they could not prevent (which we do not decide), then that contingencies may at any time require a large outlay of money, the court may refuse to compel payment of a dividend on such scrip although the corporation has on hand money enough to pay a portion of the interest called for by the scrip. Barnard v. Vermont & M. R. Co. 7 Allen, 612.

The word “interest” is held to refer to dividends when used in articles of association in reference to payment upon shares of stock. Harrison v. Mexican R. Co. L. R. 19 Eq. 358, 12 Moak, Eng. Rep. 798, 44 L. J. Ch. 403, 32 L. T. N. S. 82, 23 Week. Rep. 403.

IX. Special stock.

In Massachusetts the statutes beginning with the Act of 1855, chapter 143, provide for a peculiar kind of stock called special stock the characteristics of which are that it is limited in amount to two fifths of the actual capital, is subject to redemption by the corporation at par after a fixed time to be expressed in the certificates, entitles the holder to a half-yearly sum or dividend upon it as a debt of the corporation, and does not make him liable in any event for the debts of the corporation beyond his stock, while the issue of such stock makes the general stockholders liable for the debts and contracts of the corporation until the special stock is fully redeemed. American Tube Works v. Boston Mach. Co. 130 Mass. 5; Williams v. Parker, 136 Mass. 204; Reed v. Boston Mach. Co. 141 Mass. 454.

For redeemable stock, see also Davis v. Second Universalist Meeting-House Proprs. in Lowell, 8 Met. 221; Totten v. Tison, 54 Ga. 129, and Culver v. Reno Real Estate Co. 91 Pa. 387, under headings Nos. III. and IV.; also, Re Diodo Pier Co. infra.

A vote to issue special stock under the Massachusetts statutes can be passed only by three fourths of the general stockholders at a meeting duly called for that purpose, and a notice of a meeting to vote on an issue of preferred stock is insufficient to authorize a vote for special stock. American Tube Works v. Boston Mach. Co. supra.

The records of a meeting duly called for the issue of special stock must show that the requisite three fourths of the stockholders actually voted in favor of the issue of the stock and merely showing that three fourths of them were present is not sufficient by reason of any presumption that they voted for the issue. Ibid.

This special stock under the Massachusetts statutes is shown by Williams v. Parker, supra, to be distinct from all ordinary preferred stock, and to make the holders creditors of the corporation for the dividends guaranteed.

A holder of special stock issued under Mass. Stat. 1855, chap. 290, cannot on the insolvency of the corporation before the time when the stock was redeemable prove against the insolvent company any claim as a creditor except for accrued 37 L. R. A.

dividends or notes therefrom which he had received. Allen v. Herrick, 15 Gray, 274.

The court holds that the agreement to redeem is executory and cannot be regarded as a present existing debt or duty, but that a more decisive objection to allowing the claim under the contract of redemption is that it would violate the intent of the statute to treat it as a debt entitling the holder to share in the assets pari passu with other creditors, but that the holders of this special stock were entitled to no rights or immunities over the general stockholders except those specifically enumerated in the act. Ibid.

The court allowed holders of special stock which was invalid merely because the requisite three fourths of the stockholders were not shown to have voted for its issue, to rescind their contract and recover back the money paid for the stock, even after they had held the stock for more than two years and until after the corporation became insolvent. American Tube Works v. Boston Mach. Co. and Reed v. Boston Mach. Co. supra.

The claim that a person who has received special stock and also received dividends thereon should be held estopped to deny that he was a stockholder after the corporation has become insolvent, is denied in the Massachusetts case of American Tube Works v. Boston Mach. Co. 130 Mass. 5.

This is contrary to the doctrine which has become fully established in respect to preferred stock, as shown by the cases cited under the heading Estoppel. See supra.

On the claim that special stock was never lawfully issued and that the holder was therefore entitled to claim a return of his money paid therefor from assets of an insolvent corporation, it was held in Allen v. Herrick, 15 Gray, 274, that he had made no election to rescind and had not tendered back the money or notes which he had received under the contract when the first publication of notice of the insolvency proceedings was made, and he could not recover back his money on the ground that the contract had failed.

But commenting on this case in Reed v. Boston Mach. Co., 141 Mass. 454, the court distinguishes it on the ground that the stockholders in the case of Allen v. Herrick had received and held notes indorsed by another party for the dividends. The case of Reed v. Boston Mach. Co., supra, holds that it is necessary for the holder of special stock to return dividends received thereon in order to rescind the contract and avoid liability as a stockholder, if what he has received is less than what he is entitled to on the rescission.

The same is held in American Tube Works v. Boston Mach. Co. 130 Mass. 5.

X. Reduction of shares.

That preferred as well as common shares are subject to reduction for loss of capital is decided fact also would furnish an argument against regarding the guaranty as an absolute one. We discover nothing in the way of contemporaneous construction at variance with that which we have adopted. No dividend having been declared, it follows that this action, which is a suit at law, cannot be maintained. Williston v. Michigan, S. & N. L. R. Co. supra.

The remaining question is whether, upon the facts agreed, if applied to proceedings in equity, the plaintiff could have relief. We assume that the directors and manager could be compelled to make dividends out of net profits to the preferred stockholders if it turned out that they were acting unreasonably in refusing to declare them; but we do not think that in this case the plaintiff would be entitled to relief. The capital is seriously impaired. Though the indebtedness was reduced by the compromise, and has been further reduced by payments since, it still amounts to a large sum, and is payable on demand or on short time. The bonds matured in August, 1890. None of them were paid before maturity, and the concern could not have paid any of them without seriously crippling it, or destroying its business. It is true that the assets seem to be largely in excess of the indebtedness, and that it has been held that preferred stockholders are not bound to wait for dividends till the impaired capital has been made good and the debts have been paid. Stevens v. South Devon R. Co. and Belfast & M. L. R. Co. v. Belfast, supra. But the valuation put upon the assets appears to be to a considerable extent a bookkeeping one; and it is agreed that if the company should be obliged to dispose of them, to pay its debts or to close up its business, they would suffer a very great shrinkage from the valuation put upon them. No dividend has been paid upon the preferred stock, and none upon the common stock since 1882. It is not claimed that there were any net profits prior to January 1, 1888, sufficient to justify a dividend. From January 1, 1886, to July 1, 1890, after paying all expenses and current interest on its debt, and depreciation of property "the business resulted in net gains, in actual cash value, in assets more than in liabilities, in Re Great Western S. S. Co., 56 L. J. Ch. 3, 35 Week. Rep. 154.

Where both preference and ordinary shares had been issued and paid up in full and some of each class had been given in payment for patents, and of these some of both kinds had been surrendered to the company for the benefit of the company and canceled, in pursuance of an arrangement for abatement of the purchase money on the ground that it was excessive, a reduction of capital by canceling such ordinary and preference shares as had not yet been issued and by accepting and canceling those of both kinds surrendered for cancellation as above stated, was held lawful. Re Gatling Gun, 62 L. T. N. S. 512.

Preference shareholders whose shares were given for the purchase price of property, cannot object to a reduction of the shares of the company on account of lost capital, on the ground that it violates their contract, where at the time the shares were taken the company was authorized by law to reduce shares in such cases upon vote of the shareholders, although the preferred shareholders had no right of voting. Re Barrow Haematite Steel Co. L. R. 39 Ch. Div. 582, 56 L. J. Ch. 148, 56 L. T. N. S. 500, 37 Week. Rep. 249.

The right to reduce the capital of a company and alter the amount and denomination of its shares by the nominal amount of one half of each share, ordinary and preferential, under a general provision in the articles for the reduction of capital and alteration of shares, is upheld against the objection of the preferred shareholders, who claimed that it was an infringement of their rights, in the case of Bannatyne v. Direct Spanish Teleg. Co., 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 368, L. R. 84 Ch. Div. 237, 56 L. J. Ch. 107, 56 L. T. N. S. 714, 35 Week. Rep. 125, although the vice-chancellor, whose opinion was reversed by this decision, had declared that "it would be a wholesale recipe and a mode of cheating preference shareholders for the benefit of ordinary shareholders, whatever the relative amount or value of the shares might be."

The above decision was the denial of an injunction against proceedings for such reduction. Following it the court decided in Re Direct Spanish Teleg. Co., L. R. 84 Ch. Div. 307, 56 L. J. Ch. 363, 56 L. T. N. S. 804, 35 Week. Rep. 209, 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 377, that the approval of the court to a scheme for reduction might be withheld if the scheme would work injustice, and leave the company to prepare a new scheme; but in this case where the company had lost part of its assets, a scheme for reducing its capital by a corresponding amount by writing off £5 per share from the amount paid up on both preference and ordinary shares, the former of which had been fully paid at £10 each, and on the latter of which £9 had been paid, and also reducing the unissued shares one half was approved.

Where some of the rights of preference shareholders were prejudiced by a proposed scheme on arrangement although it appeared that on the whole the scheme was much to their advantage, it was held that they were a class prejudicially affected within the meaning of the Railway Companies Act of 1867. Re Neath & B. R. Co. [1897] 1 Ch. 349.

Where no power to issue preference shares was given by the act under which a company was formed except to divide any shares into half-shares, one of which should be called preferred and the other deferred, with a preference in dividends to the former, the holders of the preferred half-shares were held not to form a class of preference shareholders whose separate assent to a scheme of arrangement must be obtained under section 12 of the English Railway Companies Act of 1867, which provides for a scheme of arrangement between a company and its creditors. Re Brighton & D. R. Co. L. R. 44 Ch. Div. 23, 62 L. T. N. S. 353.

The reduction of the capital of a company by paying off preference shares pursuant to its articles out of a sinking fund into which a specified portion of the net profits was annually put as provided for in the articles, was held in Re Didco Pier Co. [1891] 2 Ch. 354, to be a valid carrying out of the contract contained in the memorandum and articles of association, and did not involve a "payment to any shareholder of paid-up capital" within a provision of the English Companies Act of 1877, section four. In this case no question of the rights of creditors was involved, and the question was simply between the company and the preference shareholders. No one opposed the petition of the company. The court says: "Whatever difficulty there may be in this case arises from the extraordinary prosperity of the company," and that "the case is a very peculiar one and not likely to occur again."

sufficient in amount to warrant the payment of dividends on the preferred stock at the rate provided for in the certificates for every year since the time of its issue to the trustee, with interest." But in the year ending July 1, 1894, there were no net profits. During half the time, therefore, from the date of compromise, in July, 1885, to July, 1894, there seem to have been no net profits, showing that the business was somewhat precarious in its nature. The controlling purpose of the directors and manager has been to provide for the payment of the debts, and to put the concern in a position strong enough to secure renewals of such of its debts as could not be paid when due. Their discretion, it is agreed, has been honestly exercised to that end, and they have refused to declare dividends, in part because they believed that it would endanger the ability of the company to pay its debts, and in part because they did not deem it proper to declare dividends on account of the impairment of the capital. We do not think that the directors and manager appear so plainly to have acted in disregard of the rights of the preferred stockholders as to justify the interference of a court of equity. The directors and manager were bound to have regard to all of the interests intrusted to them. If one class was to be favored above another, the creditors were to be looked after in preference to the stockholders. It was for the benefit of the stockholders, the preferred as well as the common, that the impaired capital should be made good, and that the business, if possible, should be put on a sound and enduring basis. We cannot say that if dividends had been paid, the result might not have been to injure the concern, nor that the conduct of the directors and manager has not been on the whole judicious. Barnard v. Vermont & M. R. Co. 7 Allen, 516; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Nickals, 119 U. S. 296, 80 L. ed. 360; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 3d ed. § 371.

The result is that, in the opinion of the majority of the court, the judgment must be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

The right of a company on reduction of capital to leave the preferred shares untouched and make the reduction from ordinary shares is sustained in Re America Pastoral Co., 62 L. T. N. S. 625, and in Re Agricultural Hotel Co., 63 L. T. N. S. 748.

But a proposed reduction of capital which seemed to throw the whole burden of the loss which had been incurred by the company upon the ordinary shareholders in favor of the preference shareholders, who were entitled to be preferred in dividends only, was condemned in Re Quebrada Railway, Land & Copper Co., L. R. 40 Ch. Div. 363, 26 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 880, 60 L. T. N. S. 482, where the resolution producing this effect had been assented to at a meeting at which only a small number of shareholders were represented, and the notice for which, while stating a proposed reduction, had not indicated that any such inequality was proposed.

XI. Miscellaneous matters.

A contract for the purchase of land by a railroad company to be paid for "in 5 per cent preferred stock" does not authorize a decree for payment in stock "guaranteed to pay 8 per cent." Dickinson v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 7 W. Va. 390.

Money loaned to a corporation, to be repaid in preferred stock to be subsequently issued, may be recovered back where the corporation had at the time of the loan no power to issue such stock, although the power to issue such stock had been granted to the corporation before the trial of the action, since a contract by a corporation to repay a loan in preferred stock which it had no authority to issue is a nullity, and is not renewed by a subsequent act authorizing it to issue preferred stock, but which does not empower it to renew that contract. Anthony v. Household Mach. Co. 5 L. R. A. 575, 16 R. I. 571.

Under the New York Act of April 1, 1854, authorizing a railroad corporation to issue preferred stock on payment "in such manner as the board of directors of such company shall direct at the time of subscribing," they may take a note in payment of a subscription. Magee v. Badger, 30 Barb. 246.

The privilege to surrender common for preferred stock "at any time," offered for the purpose of obtaining funds by means of a required cash payment on the exchange of 20 per cent, must be exercised within a reasonable time in order to serve the purpose for which it is offered, and cannot be claimed thirty-six years afterwards. Holland v. Cheshire R. Co. 161 Mass. 231.

Statutory power to issue preferred stock to increase the capital of a corporation does not include the power to issue any common stock. Covington & C. Bridge Co. v. Sargent, 1 Cin. Super. Ct. Rep. 354.

A suit against directors to establish their liability for misrepresentations as to the preferential character of stock sold by them was dismissed in Eaglesfield v. Marquis of Londonderry, L. R. 4 Ch. Div. 608, 35 L. T. N. S. 822, 25 Week. Rep. 190, on the ground that there was no deception by misrepresentations of fact, but only a common misconception of law.

A claim by holders of preferred stock to 4 per cent interest which had been remitted by mortgage creditors and constituted the usurious excess of interest called for by the mortgage, under a contract by which this 4 per cent was to be paid to such holders of preferred stock as should surrender their certificates for new ones bearing less interest, was held invalid on the ground of usury as well as laches and various other defenses. Sullivan v. Portland & K. R. Co. 4 Cliff. 212.

A lease of a railroad for ninety-nine years at a rent which is not sufficient to pay anything except a portion of the dividends on preferred stock if otherwise regular and lawful and made with the approval of the required number of stockholders, cannot be defeated by a holder of common stock on the ground that it practically annihilates his stock. Middletown v. Boston & N. Y. Air Line R. Co. 53 Conn. 351.

It is said in Jones v. Concord & M. Railroad (N. H.) July 20, 1892, that the natural inference is that new stock issued under general authority to increase stock is common and not preferred where the contrary does not appear.

Failure of a corporation to pay 7 per cent interest on preferred stock issued to the holder under an agreement to pay such interest is not such a breach of contract as justifies a rescission by him, where the corporation has no funds for dividends. Feld v. Roanoke Investment Co. (Mo.) June 30, 1894.

For redeemable stock, see cases presented in or referred to from heading Special stock. B. A. R.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

Solomon HOWSER, Appt.,
v.
CUMBERLAND & PENNSYLVANIA R.
CO.

(.....Md. ....)

Presumption of negligence arising out of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies to the falling of cross-ties from a railroad car injuring a person walking over a foot-path running beside the roadbed, but not upon the right of way.

(McSherry and Fowler, JJ., dissent.)

(December 18, 1894.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Washington County, in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. W. S. Cochrane and F. F. McComas, for appellant:

The wrong or thing amiss was the negligent manner of loading the car. The consequence of such negligence was the injury which the plaintiff sustained. The wrong and the damage conjoined when the accident happened, and the defendant could not escape the consequences of the first wrong by running the car in any way, good, bad, or indifferent.

Northern Cent. R. Co. v. State, 29 Md. 434, 96 Am. Dec. 545; Cooley, Torts, p. 62.

In Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Phillips, 49 Ill. 284, the boiler of an engine exploded in the company's depot and injured Phillips who was not under its control or care. It was "held that the mere fact that the boiler exploded was prima facie evidence of negligence, to overcome which it must be shown that the materials used in its construction were of the kind usually employed, and that it had been subjected to and withstood the usual tests, and was used with judgment and skill by persons of experience."

Where the thing is shown to be under the management of the defendant or his servants and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendants, that the accident arose from want of care.

Scott v. London & St. K. Decks Co. 3 Hurlst. & C. 600.

The breaking down of a coach whereby a passenger was injured made out a prima facie case of negligence.

Christie v. Griggs, 2 Camp. 79.

It is not incumbent on plaintiff after proving an accident which implies negligence to go

NOTE.—In connection with the very interesting case above reported, see, on the subject of the presumption of negligence from occurrence of accidents, the case of Barnowski v. Helson (Mich.) 18 L. R. A. 38, and note, treating three divisions of the subject, viz.: Personal injuries, injuries to live-stock by railways trains, and railway fires. 37 L. R. A.

further and show what the particular negligence was, when from the circumstances it is not in his power to do so.

Feital v. Middlesex R. Co. 109 Mass. 898, 13 Am. Rep. 720; Byrne v. Boadle, 2 Hurlst. & C. 726; Mulcairns v. Janesville, 67 Wis. 26; Cummings v. National Furnace Co. 60 Wis. 811; Dougherty v. Missouri R. Co. 81 Mo. 829, 51 Am. Rep. 239; Ulrich v. McCabe, 1 Hilt. 252.

Railroads are bound to conduct their business with due regard to the safety of the public like individuals.

Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 38 Md. 554.

It is a sound rule of law not to look out for danger when there is no reason to apprehend any.

Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 83.

Even a pedestrian crossing a highway need not anticipate reckless riding.

Stringer v. Probst, 2 L. R. A. 614, 116 Ind. 477.

Nor that a wagon will overtake and strike him when there is ample room to pass.

Shea v. Reems, 36 La. Ann. 966.

In the exercise of lawful rights, every person has a right to presume that every other will perform his duty and obey the law.

Beach, Contrib. Neg. p. 53, note.

Messrs. Robert H. Gordon and Henry Kyd Douglas for appellee.

Roberts, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This appeal brings before us for consideration a single question, yet one of interest and some importance, the determination of which is not entirely free of difficulty. In the fall of 1892, while the defendant was passing from the place of his employment to his home he walked over a foot-path on the land of William E. Walsh, in the city of Cumberland, which had been for twenty years used by various persons. This path extended along the roadbed of the appellee but not upon its right of way.

As the plaintiff proceeded on his way to his house, the defendant's train was approaching on the outside track, the one nearest to him. Attached to the train was a gondola car loaded with railroad cross-ties. When the car containing the cross-ties got opposite to where he was walking a part of the ties slipped off of the car, and about a half dozen fell upon him and broke one of his legs in two places and otherwise injured him. In his testimony he says, "he supposed there was a jar on the track." The case was tried before a jury, the court at the instance of the appellee instructing them "that upon the pleadings in the cause and the evidence given to the jury, the plaintiff was not entitled to recovery." If the defendant was entitled to recover, it was only because of the insufficiency of the proof offered by the plaintiff in that connection. We will now proceed to consider the instruction.

While the general rule undoubtedly is, that the burden of proof that the injury resulted from negligence on the part of the de-defendant is upon the plaintiff, yet in some cases, "the very nature of the accident may of itself, and through the presumption it carries, supply the requisite proof." Whart. Neg. § 421.

Thus when the circumstances are, as in this case, of such a nature that it may be fairly inferred from them that the reasonable probability is, that the accident was occasioned by the failure of the appellee to exercise proper caution, which it readily could and should have done, and in the absence of satisfactory explanation on the part of the appellee, a presumption of negligence arises against it.

In the case of Byrne v. Boadle, 2 Hurlst. & C. 722, the plaintiff was walking in a public street past the defendant's shop, where a barrel of flour fell upon him from a window above the shop and seriously injured him. The court held that these facts constituted sufficient prima facie evidence of negligence for the jury, to cast on the defendant the onus of proving that the accident was not caused by his negligence. Pollock, C. B., said: "There are many accidents from which no presumption of negligence can arise; but this is not true in all cases. It is the duty of persons who keep barrels in a warehouse to take care that they do not roll out, and I think that such a case would, beyond all doubt, afford prima facie evidence of negligence. A barrel could not roll out of a warehouse without some negligence. So, in building or repairing a house, if a person passing along the road is injured by something falling upon him, I think the accident would be prima facie evidence of negligence."

Shortly after this decision, a similar case, that of Scott v. London & St. K. Docks Co., 3 Hurlst. & C. 596, was decided in the exchequer chamber. The plaintiff proved in this case that while in the discharge of his duties as a customs officer, he was passing in front of a warehouse in the dock and was felled to the ground by six bags of sugar falling upon him. The court said: "There must be reasonable evidence of negligence. But where the thing is shown to be under the management of the defendant or his servants, and the accident is such as, in the ordinary course of things, does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from want of care."

Then followed the leading case of Kearney v. London, B. & S. O. R. Co. L. R. 5 Q. B. 411. This case underwent great discussion with a view to the settlement of the true principle governing it. The facts were that the plaintiff was passing on a highway under a railway bridge when a brick fell and injured him on the shoulder. A train had passed over the bridge shortly before the accident. The bridge had been built three years, and was an iron-girder bridge, resting on iron piers on one side and on a perpendicular brick wall with pilasters on the other, and the brick fell from the top of one of the pilasters, where one of the girders rested on it. A motion was made for a non-suit on the ground that there was no evidence of negligence to leave to the jury. The court of queen's bench, by a divided vote, held that this was a case to which the maxim res ipsa loquitur was applicable, or in other words, that there was prima facie evidence of negligence. Kelly, C. B., delivering the opinion on the appeal, said: "We are all agreed that the judgment of the queen's bench must be affirmed. . . . The question, therefore, is whether there was any evidence of negligence on the part of the defendants; and by that we all understand such an amount of evidence as to fairly and reasonably support the finding of the jury."

"The lord chief justice, in his judgment in the court below, said res ipsa loquitur, and I cannot do better than to refer to that judgment. It appears, without contradiction, that a brick fell out of the pier of the bridge, without any assignable cause except the slight vibration caused by a passing train. This, we think, is not only evidence, but conclusive evidence that it was loose; for otherwise so slight a vibration could not have struck it out of its place. No doubt it is humanly possible that the percussion of the iron girder, arising from expansion and contraction, might have gradually shaken out the mortar, and so loosened the brick; but this is merely conjecture. The bridge had been built two or three years, and it was the duty of the defendants, from time to time, to inspect the bridge and ascertain that the brick work was in good order, and all the bricks well secured. If there were necessity for other evidence, the case is made still stronger by the evidence of the plaintiff, which was uncontradicted on the part of the defendants, that after the accident, on fitting the brick to its place, several other bricks were found to have fallen out."

And again in the case of Briggs v. Oliver, 4 Hurlst. & C. 403, the plaintiff going to a doorway of a house in which the defendant had offices, was pushed out of the way by his servant, who was watching a packing-case belonging to his master, and was leaning against the wall of the house. The plaintiff fell and the packing-case fell on his foot and injured him. There was no evidence as to who placed the packing-case against the wall, or who caused its fall. The court held that there was a prima facie case against the defendant to go to the jury.

We have made full reference to the foregoing cases as showing the views of the English courts upon this question. These and many other English and American cases clearly establish the fact that it is not requisite that the plaintiff's proof, in actions of this kind, should negative all possible circumstances which would excuse the defendant, but it is sufficient if it negatives all probable circumstances which would have this effect. Thomp. Neg. 1229. It is also well settled that the cause of accident must be connected with the defendant either by direct evidence that it is his act, or that it is under his control, before it can be presumed that he has been negligent. Higgs v. Maynard, 12 Jur. N. S. 705; Welfare v. London & B. R. Co. L. R. 4 Q. B. 698; Smith

v. Great Eastern R. Co. L. R. 2 C. P. 10. When, however, there is no duty upon the plaintiff, as under the facts of this case, or when the duty which he has to perform has been performed by him, it is clear that the negligence of the plaintiff is out of the question; and if the accident is connected with the defendant the question whether the phrase "res ipsa loquitur" applies or not becomes a question of common sense. Whittaker's Smith, Neg. 423.

The American cases sustaining the maxim res ipsa loquitur are numerous and to the point. In the case of Cummings v. National Furnace Co., 60 Wis. 603, when the defendant company was engaged in unloading iron ore from a vessel by means of a crane to which was attached a bucket, while so engaged the bucket tipped and threw its contents upon a seaman lawfully working upon the deck of the vessel. The court said: The accident itself was of such a character as to raise a presumption of negligence, either in the character of the machinery used, or in the care with which it was hauled; and as the jury found the fault was not with the machinery, it follows that it must have been with the hauling, otherwise there is no rational cause shown for its happening. The leading American case, however, appears to be Mullen v. St. John, 57 N. Y. 567, 15 Am. Rep. 530. The opinion of the court was delivered by Dwight, C., and is a most able and exhaustive examination of the subject.

He cites with approval many of the English and American cases to which reference is made in this opinion. The case was one in which the walls of a building, without any special circumstances of storm and violence, fell into one of the streets of the city of Brooklyn, knocking down the plaintiff, who was on the sidewalk, and seriously injuring her. The court said: "There was some evidence tending to show that it was out of repair. Without laying any stress upon the affirmative testimony, it is as impossible to conceive of this building so falling unless it was badly constructed, or in bad repair, as it is to suppose that a seaworthy ship would go to the bottom in a tranquil sea and without collision. The mind, necessarily, seeks for a cause for the fall. That is apparently the bad condition of the structure. This again leads to the inference of negligence, which the defendant should rebut."

To like effect are, Lyons v. Rosenthal, 11 Hun. 46; Edgerton v. New York & H. R. Co. 39 N. Y. 227; Kirst v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 26 Wis. 439; Smith v. Boston Gas Light Co. 129 Mass. 818; Clare v. National City Bank, 1 Sweeny, 539; Brehm v. Great Western R. Co. 84 Barb. 256; Sullivan v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. 39 La. Ann. 800; Hays v. Gallagher, 72 Pa. 136; Thomas v. Western U. Tele. Co. 100 Mass. 156; Dixon v. Pluna, 98 Cal. 884, 20 L. R. 698.

We have referred to numerous cases as illustrating the views which we entertain, because the question on this appeal has not heretofore been determined by this court. Cases resting in contract have frequently received our consideration and they are generally free from difficulty, because the mere happening of the accident will be prima facie evidence of a breach of contract without further proof, while in those not resting in contract, it must not only appear that the accident happened, but the surrounding circumstances must be such as to raise the presumption of a failure of duty on the part of the defendant towards the plaintiff. Article, Res ipsa loquitur, Judge Seymour D. Thompson in 10 Cent. L. J. 261. None of the cases herein quoted relate to those resting in contract.

In all cases of the character we have been considering, the most careful scrutiny should be given to the circumstances attending the accident and while an excellent authority has said that after all the question resolves itself into one of common sense, we would add that it should be of a high order. For it is unquestionably true that the authorities are by no means in accord on the question which arises out of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. The facts of this appeal are very meagre but they by no means lie on the border line, nor even close to it. Here you find the plaintiff traversing a path over which the defendant had no dominion, for the plaintiff was rightfully there.

The defendant moves its cars over its roadway along said path and from a gondola car there slips an half dozen railroad cross-ties, falling upon the plaintiff and seriously injuring him.

The plaintiff was guilty of no negligence in being where he was at the time he was injured, and in so far as the defendant's rights are involved, the principle is the same whether he was on the land of Mr. Walsh or on his own land. The accident happened at the hour of noon, as the plaintiff was on his way to his dinner. There is no contention that it did not happen just as the plaintiff has himself represented. The plaintiff had no control over nor was he in any way connected with the loading or management of the cars or trains upon defendant's road. If the cross-ties had been properly loaded, there existed no reasonable probability of their falling off.

A cross tie is defined to be a sleeper, connecting and supporting the parallel rails of a railroad. Stand. Dict. 444. Its figure and dimensions are familiar and its flat surfaces and weight illustrate how readily they can be loaded so as to form an almost compact body of wood, if reasonable care be exercised in placing them on the flat bottom of the car, and proper lateral support be given them. If by accident the ties had become displaced, it was a duty incumbent upon the defendant and its servants to have re-adjusted them, in such a manner as to have prevented the happening of an accident. It was the duty of the defendant and its servants to have carefully loaded said cross-ties upon its cars, and it was equally its duty to have exercised reasonable care in seeing that its train was transported in such condition as to avoid all reasonable probability of injury.

If the presumption arising out of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur finds proper application anywhere, we think this is a case in which it should be applied. In conclusion, taking the proof as we find it in the record, we think the case should have been permitted to go to the jury, with proper instructions from the court.

The judgment must be reversed.

Judgment reversed and new trial awarded.

McSherry, J., dissenting:

I am constrained to dissent in this case, and I will state very briefly my reasons for the opinion I have formed. An accident happened, and the plaintiff was injured. There was no relation of passenger and carrier existing between the plaintiff and the defendant, and there was no proof of any antecedent negligence on the part of the defendant, and no proof as to what caused the cross-ties to fall from the moving cars. Under these circumstances, the court below properly, I think, took the case from the jury; but a majority of this court now reverse that ruling, and holding that there was sufficient evidence for the jury to consider on the question of negligence. The plaintiff was not a passenger. As I understand the repeated rulings of this court, it is the settled law in Maryland that where that relation does not exist no presumption of negligence can ever arise from the mere fact that an injury has been sustained. Something more must be shown. Where the defendant is under no contractual obligation to the plaintiff, the mere occurrence of an accident resulting in injury furnishes no evidence of causative negligence on the part of the defendant. This principle is well illustrated in Hammack v. White, 11 C. B. N. S. 588. It is incumbent, therefore, on the plaintiff in such cases, not only to show an injury, but also to show that the defendant had been guilty of some negligence which produced that injury. There must not only be negligence, but between that negligence and the injury complained of there must be the relation of cause and effect. Negligence which produces no injury furnishes no right of action, and an injury not caused by any negligence cannot justify a recovery. Proof, then, of both the injury and the negligence which caused it must be given. They are both indispensable constituents of the plaintiff's case, and proof of the one cannot, in the absence of a contractual duty, establish the existence of the other, unless, in obedience to some unvarying physical law, you can say with unerring certainty that the given effect necessarily proceeded from a particular exclusive cause. If, consistently with known laws, a particular effect could not exist, except as the result of a single cause, then, when the effect does exist, that single cause, and no other, must, in the nature of things, have produced it; and to that extent proof of the effect is proof of its cause, or of what its cause was. But, if the effect could have resulted from any one of several causes, then it is obvious that something more than the effect itself is required to be shown before it can be determined from which one of those several causes the given effect did in fact in the particular instance proceed. More especially is this so if of these several causes some are of such a nature that they impose no obligation on the defendant at all. It seems to me, then, to follow that where the injury could have happened in consequence of an accident pure and simple, unmixed with negligence, and for which and its consequences the defendant is not responsible; and where it could, under the proven facts, equally have happened as the result of actionable negligence for which the defendant would be responsible; and there is no evidence to show that it did not happen, or could not have happened, by sheer accident, or that it did happen, or could only have happened, as the result of negligence,—the plaintiff, upon whom the burden to show how it did happen always rests, would fail to sustain his case. And he would fail because his proof in the case supposed would be as consistent with the hypothesis that the injury was caused by non-actionable accident as with the opposite theory, that it was caused by actionable negligence.

Now, in the case at bar the only evidence is that as the freight train approached the plaintiff, who was walking towards it just outside of the right of way, he thought he saw a jar on the track, as he expressed it, and the cross-ties fell off from the moving car when it was opposite to him, and struck and injured him. There is no evidence in the record that these ties had been improperly loaded on the car, or to show when, where, or by whom they were loaded, or how far they had been hauled, or to show that the car upon which they had been loaded was out of repair, or that the track was not in proper and safe condition, or that the employees of the defendant were unskillful, careless, or incompetent. The naked fact that the ties fell off while the car was in motion is all the evidence that was adduced. If it had been shown, or could rightly be assumed as a fact established by known and admitted physical laws, that these ties could not have fallen off at that particular place except because they had been negligently loaded, or because of some other negligence on the part of the defendant, I concede there would then have been sufficient evidence before the jury to justify them in concluding that there had been antecedent negligence which, through the falling of the ties, caused the injury; because then the probability of the existence of a non-actionable accident, as the cause of the injury, would necessarily be precluded. But with the numerous probabilities existing that the same result could have happened, though there had been no anterior negligence, the jury, if allowed to consider the case at all, would have been at liberty to speculate between these conflicting probabilities, none of which were excluded by the proven facts, and to base a verdict, at best, upon mere conjecture. The cases relied on by the appellant are distinguishable from the one at bar. Take, for example, the case of Byrne v. Boadle, 2 Hurlst. & C. 726. There the barrel rolled out of the warehouse of the defendant, and fell upon a person rightfully passing along the public thoroughfare below, and, though no evidence was offered to show what caused the barrel to roll out, the case was allowed to go to the jury upon the theory, I take it, that, according to the fixed laws of dynamics, it was physically impossible for the barrel to roll at all without the application of some force which must have been applied on the defendant's premises while those premises were so unguarded as to permit the barrel to roll out of the door. Had the door not been left open when it ought to have been closed, or, at all events, ought to have been protected by a servant or watchman, the barrel could not have rolled out as it did. Allowing the door to remain open or unguarded was an act of negligence. Now, negligence, in the abstract, is a nullity, but in the concrete it is either positive or negative; that is to say, it consists either in the doing of some act which ought not to have been done, or in the omission to do some act that ought to have been done. In both instances it is the breach of a duty that is owed to another. In the barrel case the plain duty which the owner of the warehouse owed to the public, and to every individual who was entitled to use the public street, was to keep the door so closed or guarded that a barrel could not roll out in the way it did roll out, no matter how it received the impetus, and the failure to do this was clearly an act of negligent omission, which directly caused the injury. Had the omitted duty been observed, it was physically impossible for the barrel to roll out as it did. But the case at bar is widely different. It does not follow that because the logs fell off the car they were negligently put on,—for, though properly loaded, they may have become displaced, without negligence, by the jarring incident to a moving train; or, by other means, they might have fallen without involving a breach of duty towards any one, and therefore without involving antecedent negligence. To conclude that there was negligence because an injury happened is to assume as proved the very fact to be proved. It seems to me, then, that some evidence tending to show negligence ought to have been adduced, and that the court below was right in withholding the case from the jury upon the failure of the plaintiff to adduce such additional evidence. I am authorized by Judge Fowler to say that he concurs in these views.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT, (In Banc).

PEOPLE of the State of California, Resp't.,

v.
William BRAY, App't.

(.....Cal.....)

1. The sale or giving of liquors to an Indian of full blood, whether he has adopted the habits of civilization and separated from tribal relations or not, is prohibited by Penal Code, § 897, prohibiting the sale or furnishing of such liquors "to any Indian."
2. A citizen of Indian blood is not deprived of any constitutional privileges and immunities by a statute prohibiting the sale or giving of intoxicating liquors to any Indian.

(December 31, 1894.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Sonoma County, convicting him of selling intoxicating liquors to an Indian contrary to the provisions of the statute. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. M. Thompson and Rolfe L. Thompson, for appellant:

Section 897 of the Penal Code cannot possibly contemplate all persons of Indian blood, who now do, or may hereafter, come within the jurisdiction of the California courts.

The Indian in question being a citizen, the law was not violated by furnishing her the liquor.

If the power to pass such a law exists, it might equally well have forbidden such liquor to be furnished to Irishmen, or Germans, or Americans, or persons of color, or it might have included only one or more of the classes mentioned; and a law which would make such grossly unjust discriminations against the class of citizens mentioned could not remain upon the statutes of the state as legal.

Re Parrot, 1 Fed. Rep. 481; People v. Antonio, 27 Cal. 404; State v. Richter, 23 Minn. 81.

Laws public in their object must be general in their application; they may extend to all citizens or be confined to particular classes, such as miners, bankers, traders, etc.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 8d ed. 890, 891; Re Yick Wo, 68 Cal. 295, 58 Am. Rep. 12; People v. Henshaw, 76 Cal. 436.

If a statute purporting to have been enacted to protect public morals or public safety is an invasion of rights secured by the fundamental law, it is the duty of the court to so adjudge and thereby give effect to the constitution.

To this end section 897, if intended to apply to citizens of Indian blood, should be declared repugnant to the constitution and void.

Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; Abel v. Clark, 84 Cal. 226; Utsey v. Hott, 30 S. C. 880; State v. Goodwill, 6 L. R. A. 621, 38 W. Va. 179; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220; Tugman v. Chicago, 78 Ill. 405; State v. Berka, 20 Neb. 875; People v. Haug, 68 Mich. 549.

An act which prohibits the employment of Chinese or Mongolians is void.

8 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 691, 727.

Also which prohibits colored people from serving as jurors.

Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 803, 25 L. ed. 664.

And the Kentucky Homestead Law of 1866

NOTE.—For jurisdiction of crimes committed by or against Indians, see note to State v. Campbell (Minn.) 21 L. R. A. 100.

For authorities as to equal privileges or immunities, see note to Louisville Safety Vault & T. Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 14 L. R. A. 679.

27 L. R. A.

is void so far as it excludes negroes from its benefits.

Custard v. Poston (Ky.) Feb. 14, 1886.

A state law which discriminates in favor of a school for white children is void.

United States v. Buntin, 10 Fed. Rep. 780.

The "queue ordinance" of San Francisco is void, as being directed against Chinese.

Ho Ah Kow v. Nuan, 5 Sawy. 552.

The statute of this state prohibiting aliens from fishing in its water is unconstitutional.

Re Ah Chong, 2 Fed. Rep. 733.

And requiring a bond that Chinese emigrants shall not become a charge upon the state is without legal sanction.

Re Ah Fong, 3 Sawy. 144.

A law which imposes a tax upon Chinese over eighteen years of age for each month of his residence in the state is also unconstitutional.

Lin Sing v. Washburn, 20 Cal. 534.

An ordinance requiring Chinese to remove to a certain part of the city is void.

Re Lee Sing, 48 Fed. Rep. 359.

A law is illegal which forbids the sale of goods on Sunday, but at the same time permits Jews to sell.

Shreveport v. Levy, 26 La. Ann. 671, 21 Am. Rep. 553; 17 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 251.

Mr. W. H. Hart, Atty-Gen., for the People.

De Haven, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant was convicted of the crime of selling intoxicating liquor to an Indian named Mary Smith, in violation of section 397 of the Penal Code, which, as amended in 1893 (Stat. 1893, p. 98), reads as follows: "Every person who sells or furnishes, or causes to be sold or furnished, any intoxicating liquors to any habitual or common drunkard is guilty of a misdemeanor; or who sells or furnishes, or causes to be sold or furnished, intoxicating liquors to any Indian, is guilty of a felony." It was admitted upon the trial that the defendant furnished intoxicating liquor to the said Mary Smith, named in the information, at the time and place stated therein, and that she "has no other than Indian blood in her veins." It was further shown that her father and mother lived in a house of their own; that they both dressed like white people, and have adopted the habits and customs of civilized life. Her father is a fisherman, and sells his fish in the neighboring city of Santa Rosa. He owns a horse, wagon, household goods, and other property, and their said daughter, Mary, resides with her parents, and none of them have ever lived upon a government reservation, "nor have they ever lived in tribal relations, or under or subject to the control of any chief or like authority." Upon this state of the evidence the defendant requested the court to give the following instructions: "(2) Section numbered 397 of the Penal Code, under which the information in this case was filed, is not violated by a sale of intoxicating liquor to an Indian who at the time of the sale was a citizen of this state." "(4) If you find from the evidence that the Indian in question was born in this state, and at the time of her birth her parents were living separate and apart from any tribe of Indians, and had no tribal relations, and did not live on any Indian reservation, or other land set apart for such purpose, then I charge you that the Indian in question is a citizen of the United States, and you cannot convict the defendant of the crime charged against him in the information, even if you should also find that he did sell or furnish the said Indian intoxicating liquors at the time alleged." "(12) All citizens of this state are entitled to equal protection under the law in person, property, and privileges; and a law which takes from one person, on account of color or race, any privilege which others are legally permitted and allowed to enjoy, is void as to such person." The court refused to so instruct the jury, and this refusal is assigned as error, and covers all the grounds upon which the defendant claims that the judgment and order appealed from should be reversed; and the argument made in behalf of defendant for such reversal rests upon these three propositions: First, that under the facts shown the person named in the information as the one to whom defendant furnished the intoxicating liquor is a citizen of the United States; second, that section 397 of the Penal Code, in so far as it relates to Indians, applies only to those Indians who are under control of the general government as dependent communities, living in tribal relations, or upon government reservations, and as such deemed wards of the general government; third, that, if said section is not so limited by construction, it is void, because it discriminates between citizens of the United States, denying to the citizen of Indian birth the privilege of buying intoxicating liquors, which is accorded to citizens of the white race, and in making such distinction that it abridges the privileges and immunities of the former.

By an act of congress approved February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 390), it is provided that "every Indian born within the territorial limits of the United States who has voluntarily taken up within said limits his residence, separate and apart from any tribe of Indians therein, and has adopted the habits of civilized life, is hereby declared to be a citizen of the United States, and is entitled to all the rights, privileges, and immunities of such citizens, whether said Indian has been or not, by birth or otherwise, a member of any tribe of Indians within the territorial limits of the United States, without in any manner impairing or otherwise affecting the right of any such Indian to tribal or other property." It was undoubtedly competent for congress to thus confer upon Indians the privileges of citizenship (Elk v. Wilkins, 112 U. S. 94, 28 L. ed. 648), and it may be conceded that the facts of this case show that the said Mary Smith, referred to in the information, is a citizen of the United States, within the meaning of the act of congress from which the foregoing quotation is made, and as such is entitled to the privileges and immunities of such citizens; but we are not able to agree with the further contention of appellant's counsel in their construction of section 397 of the Penal Code. In our opinion that section forbids the sale or giving of liquors to Indians of full blood, without any reference to the question whether they have or have not adopted the habits of civilization or separated themselves from tribal relations. It was intended to apply to Indians as a class, and was enacted in view of their well-known race peculiarities and their relations to society. There are thousands of California Indians to be found in this state, most of them civilized in a certain degree, perhaps none of them living under any well-defined tribal government. They live generally by themselves, in small villages or communities, and yet are in constant contact with the white race, some of them living in families as servants, and all of them at times engaged in fishing or employed as laborers in the harvest fields or otherwise. The statute applies to this people as a race, and in its enforcement all inquiry as to the habits or the degree of civilization attained by the individual of such race to whom the intoxicating liquor is furnished, or as to whether he is or is not a citizen of the United States under the act of congress before referred to, is irrelevant; and, as thus construed, this section of the Penal Code is not in conflict with any provision of the Constitution of the United States or of this state. It is general and uniform in its operation, because it affects in the same manner all persons belonging to the class to which it refers (Ex parte Smith, 38 Cal. 710), and does not deprive any citizen of his privileges and immunities as such. The privileges and immunities which pertain to citizens in the several states are thus defined by Washington, J., in Corfield v. Coryell, 4 Wash. C. C. 380, Fed. Cas. No. 8,230: "We feel no hesitation in confining these expressions to those privileges and immunities which are in their nature fundamental, which belong of right to the citizens of all free governments, and which have at all times been enjoyed by the citizens of the several states which compose this Union, from the time of their becoming free, independent, and sovereign. What these fundamental principles are it would perhaps be more tedious than difficult to enumerate. They may, however, be all comprehended under the following general heads: Protection by the government; the enjoyment of life and liberty, with the right to acquire and possess property of every kind, and to pursue and obtain happiness and safety; subject, nevertheless, to such restrictions as the government may justly prescribe for the general good of the whole, the right of a citizen of one state to pass through or to reside in any other state for purposes of trade, agriculture, professional pursuits, or otherwise; to claim the benefit of the writ of habeas corpus; to institute and maintain actions of any kind in the courts of the state; to take, hold, and dispose of property, real and personal, and an exemption from higher taxes or impositions than are paid by the other citizens of the states,—may be mentioned as some of the particular privileges and immunities of citizens which are clearly embraced by the general description of privileges deemed to be fundamental, to which may be added the elective franchise, as regulated and established by the laws or constitution of the state in which it is to be exercised." It will be seen that in the above extract the learned judge was careful to say that the right to acquire and possess property and to pursue and obtain happiness is not unlimited, but "subject, nevertheless, to such restraints as the government may justly prescribe for the general good of the whole." And it is well settled that in regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors the legislature may, in the exercise of its judgment as to what restrictions upon such sale the general good of the public requires, prescribe the conditions upon which the license to make such sale shall be granted. "Wherever the law allows the sale of liquor under licenses or other restrictions, there are statutes forbidding such sale to certain classes of persons who are peculiarly liable to be injured or demoralized by indulgence in alcoholic beverages; such as minors, persons already intoxicated, and habitual drunkards. The constitutionality of such laws has seldom been questioned, and, indeed, their validity could scarcely be assailed with any show of reason." Black, Intoxicating Liquors, § 42. Whatever may be true in respect to particular individuals of that race, it is certainly true that Indians as a class are not refined, cultured,—civilized in the same degree as persons of the white race,—and doubtless, in the judgment of the legislature, they are less subject to moral restraint, and therefore more liable to be dangerous to themselves or others when under the influence of liquor, or less able to resist the desire for such liquors, and for that reason they, as well as the community in which they move, were thought entitled to the protecting influence of this statute. We have no doubt the law under consideration falls within the proper exercise of the police power of the state. It was so stated by Sanderson, J., in Ex parte Smith, 38 Cal. 708, and a statute in all respects similar to it was upheld by the supreme court of the territory of Montana as a valid exercise of the police power in the case of Territory v. Guyot, 9 Mont. 46, the court there saying: "The act under consideration is clearly within the police power of the territorial government as defined by the courts, and is not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States." These views dispose of all the questions arising upon this appeal.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: Garoutte, J.; Harrison, J.; McFarland, J.; Van Fleet, J.; Fitzgerald, J.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

Peter RITCHIE

v.

William WALLER, Appt.

(63 Conn. 155.)

1. The question is in most cases one of fact whether or not the act of a servant for which it is sought to hold the master responsible was done in the execution of the master's business, within the scope of the servant's employment.

2. If a servant's deviation from the strict course of his employment or duty is slight and not unusual the court may determine as matter of law that he is still executing the master's business, and if the deviation is very marked and unusual, it may likewise determine that he is not executing the master's business within the rule that the master is liable for his negligence.

3. That a servant sent by the master with the latter's team and wagon to a certain place to procure a load deviates from the most direct course home for the purpose of seeing about the repair of his own shoes is not of itself sufficient to show that he had so far departed from the execution of the master's business as to relieve the master from liability for his negligent management of the team.

4. An objection that defendant was not given time to demur to an amended complaint after the allowance of the amendment is not available on appeal, if it is not fairly included in the assignments of error and it nowhere appears that an offer to demur was made or the right to do so questioned or denied.

(May 22, 1893.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Fairfield County in NOTE.—Master's civil responsibility for the wrongful or negligent act of his servant or agent towards one who has no claim upon the master by reason of a contract incipient or perfected.

I. LIABILITY FOR ACTS EXPRESSLY DIRECTED TO BE DONE.

II. GROUNDS OF LIABILITY IN CASE THE SERVANT IS NOT OBEYING ORDERS.

III. THE SERVANT MUST HAVE BEEN ACTING IN THE CAPACITY FOR WHICH HE WAS EMPLOYED.

IV. MASTER LIABLE FOR ACTS WITHIN SCOPE OF SERVANT'S EMPLOYMENT.

a. Liability Rule.

b. Liability for Negligent Acts.

c. Liability for Fraudulent and Tortious Acts.

d. Limitation of Scope of Employment.

e. Disobedience of Orders.

f. Performance of Unlawful Acts.

g. Acts of Master of Vessel.

h. Willful and Malicious Acts.

V. WHEN THE RESULT OF ABUSE OF AUTHORITY WILL BE SERIOUS OR THE TEMPTATION TO ABUSE IS STRONG.

VI. NEGLIGENCE OR DISOBEDIENCE OF STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS.

VII. QUESTION FOR JURY.

VIII. CONTRIBUTION TO INJURY.

I. LIABILITY FOR ACTS EXPRESSLY DIRECTED TO BE DONE.

Where a servant in doing a wrongful act is executing the direct commands of his master there is no question that the master is responsible for the act. The maxim qui facit per alium facit per se then applies. Indeed the fact of liability is so plain that it seems to have been seldom questioned in judicial tribunals and all the modern declarations of the principle, at least, consist simply of dicta. The act is so entirely that of the master that trespass will lie against the master for the act of his servant done at his command. Wilkins v. Gilmore (1840) 2 Humph. 140.

So trespass is the proper remedy where at the time of the accident the master is sitting by the side of the driver, the act of the driver being then considered as the act of the master. Chandler v. Broughton (1832) 1 Cramp. & M. 23, 3 Tyrw. 220; McLaughlin v. Pryor (1842) 4 Maon. & G. 58, 4 Scott, N. R. 655, Car. & M. 354.

If the wrong is done at the command of the master—
27 L. R. A.

ter, he is liable for the injury. Hill v. Caverly (1894) 7 N. H. 215, 23 Am. Dec. 735.

If the principal procures the agent to do an illegal act the principal will be liable for the consequences whether the agent acted innocently or maliciously in executing his order. Hynes v. Jungren (1871) 8 Kan. 391.

A master is liable for an assault by his servant which was authorized by him. Bell v. Martin (Tex.) Nov. 30, 1893.

The master is liable for a trespass done by his agent with his knowledge in the course of his business. Exum v. Brister (1858) 35 Miss. 391.

The master is always liable for the willful act of the servant when the latter is in his immediate employment unless he forbids the act. Korah v. Ottawa (1863) 32 Ill. 121, 33 Am. Dec. 255.

The acquiescence of the master in the use by his employees of an engine in going to and from their meals may render the master liable for injuries caused by the negligent running of the engine. Reilly v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1897) 94 Mo. 600.

But mere receipt by the owner of a wagon of compensation for the act of his servant who has been sent to a neighboring town, in selling some goods for a third person while there contrary to the master's orders, will not make the master responsible for the faithfulness of the servant, and he cannot be held liable in case the servant neglects to turn over part of the money received for the goods. Hodges v. Holderby (1857) 49 N. C. 600.

II. GROUNDS OF LIABILITY IN CASE THE SERVANT IS NOT OBEYING ORDERS.

As soon as the servant is not acting in conformity with the master's will the maxim qui facit per alium facit per se ceases to be applicable. One person cannot be said to do an act by another which he did not authorize such other to do. And the extent of departure from instructions is immaterial. The slightest departure from instructions as effectually breaks the connection between the master's volition and the completed act as the greatest departure. Yet it has been universally admitted that when a person undertakes to have an act done for his benefit some responsibility rests upon him to make good injuries which result to third persons from such act.

Most of the modern negligence cases, so far as they arise in connection with corporations at least, are based upon this principle, and the law is so well settled that no objection is now made merely favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant's servant. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion. Messrs. J. J. Rose and G. P. Carroll for appellant.

Messrs. N. W. Bishop and E. O. Hull for appellee.

Torrance, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action against a master for damage caused by the negligence of his servant. The court below, upon the facts found, decided that the injury occurred solely through the negligence of the servant. One of the claims of the defendant, though it was not pressed on the argument, is that the court, as matter of law, erred in so doing. Upon this point it is sufficient to say that the record does not present any question of law for review. Upon the facts as they appear of record we must regard the decision of the trial court upon this point as final and conclusive. In the discussion of the case, therefore, we will assume that the negligence of the servant and the damage resulting therefrom have been determined against the defendant, and that the question of the responsibility of the master therefor alone remains to be considered.

The facts bearing upon this question are in substance the following: The defendant is a farmer in Trumbull, and at the time of the injury, in September, 1891, and for some years prior thereto, had been accustomed twice a week to get manure for his farm from a brewery on North Washington avenue, in Bridgeport. This avenue and Main street intersect at a point called "Bull's Head," about a thousand feet south of the brewery. The avenue and Main street are connected by three cross streets, called, respectively, beginning with the one next north of Bull's Head, "Mulloy's Lane," "Grand Street," and upon the ground that the negligence was that of a servant.

Regarded as the master's act.

Not perceiving a better foundation for such liability it has been placed upon the maxim qui facit per alium, etc. It was held that the maxim did not become inoperative when there was only a slight departure and it was left to the courts to say in each case whether or not there was a sufficient departure to make the maxim inapplicable. The result has been a mass of conflicting decisions out of which no rule could be evolved.

In Rayner v. Mitchell (1877) L.R. 2 C. P. Div. 357, Coleridge, Ch. J., says: The cases which have arisen upon this subject have from the earliest time been productive of much astute and interesting discussion in courts of law, and eminent judges have differed widely in their decisions.

In every case where one person engages another to do work for him his liability for the negligent or wrongful acts of the latter will depend upon two considerations: 1st. The duty or authority apparently or actually imposed upon or committed to the servant. 2d. The master's duty to refrain from injuring third persons by the prosecution of his business. It is not until both these considerations are given their true weight that the law upon this subject can be settled.

The result of leaving out one of these elements is well illustrated by a recent New York decision which has been regarded as an important addition to the law upon the subject.

The court said: "The master is liable only for the authorized acts of the servant, and the root of his liability for the servant's acts is his consent, express or implied, thereto." And after a few intervening sentences it again said: "In most cases where the master has been held liable for the negligent or tortious act of the servant, the servant acted not only without express authority to do the wrong, but in violation of his duty to the master. Rounds v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (1876) 64 N. Y. 120, 21 Am. Rep. 597.

The absurdity of those statements taken together is such that the learned judge who made them never would have done so had he not wished to apparently conform to precedents by which he did not intend to be bound as is apparent from the remainder of the opinion. "It is, in general, sufficient to make the master responsible that he gave to the servant an authority, or made it his duty to act in respect to the business in which he was engaged when the wrong was committed, and that the act complained of was done in the course of his employment. The master in that case will be deemed to have consented to and authorized the act of the servant, and he will not be excused from liability, although the servant abused his authority, or was reckless in the performance of his duty or inflicted an unnecessary injury in executing his master's orders. The master who puts the servant in a place of trust or responsibility, or commits to him the management of his business or the care of his property, is justly held responsible when the servant, through lack of judgment or discretion, or from infirmity of temper, or under the influence of passion aroused by the circumstances and the occasion, goes beyond the strict line of his duty or authority and inflicts an unjustifiable injury upon another."

"If he is authorized to use force against another when necessary in executing his master's orders, the master commits it to him to decide what degree of force he shall use; and if, through misjudgment or violence of temper, he goes beyond the necessity of the occasion and gives a right of action to another, he cannot, as to third persons, be said to have been acting without the line of his duty, or to have departed from his master's business. If, however, the servant, under guise and cover of executing his master's orders, and exercising the authority conferred upon him, willfully and designedly, for the purpose of accomplishing his own independent, malicious or wicked purposes, does an injury to another, then the master is not liable. The relation of master and servant, as to that transaction, does not exist between them. It is a willful and wanton wrong and trespass, for which the master cannot be held responsible. And when it is said that the master is not responsible for the willful wrong of the servant, the language is to be understood as referring to an act of positive and designed injury, not done with a view to the master's service, or for the purpose of executing his orders." Ibid.

That reasoning purports to be based upon the fact that the master authorized or consented to the wrongful act. But the liability cannot be made to rest upon that ground. For not only did the master not consent but the entire necessity for the discussion is caused by the fact that he did not.

It would seem to be much easier and more logical to declare a duty towards third persons directly than to attempt to reach the same result by declaring that the master consented when he did not consent.

"Commercial Street." The brewery is nearly opposite the point where Mulloy's lane enters the avenue. In December, 1890, the defendant hired the servant in question, whose name is Blackwell, as a farm laborer. Soon thereafter the defendant, for the purpose of getting a load of manure, and of showing Blackwell the place to procure it in the future, drove with him from the farm to the brewery, passing down Main street to Grand, through Grand to North Washington avenue, and thence southerly to the brewery. After getting a load they returned through Grand street to Main, and thence northerly home. Neither at that time nor on any subsequent occasion did the defendant give any special directions or instructions as to what particular route Blackwell should follow in going to or returning from the brewery with manure, although he supposed Blackwell took the same route followed on the first occasion above mentioned. In fact, Blackwell went or returned sometimes by way of Mulloy's lane, and sometimes by way of Grand or Commercial street, and the defendant never at any time made any inquiries as to what route he took. On the day of the injury the defendant told Blackwell to go to the brewery after a load of manure, and to spread it on a designated lot on the farm. These were all the directions given to him. The defendant did not know that he intended to go to any other place. Pursuant thereto, Blackwell, with the wagon and two horses of the defendant, went to the brewery, and procured a load of manure. After so doing, instead of returning to Main street through the lane or Grand or Commercial street, and going thence northerly towards Trumbull, as usual, Blackwell drove southerly down the avenue to Bull's Head, and thence into Main street, and thence northerly in the direction of home till he came to a certain shoemaker's shop on Main street, southerly of Mulloy's lane. There he got off his wagon, leaving his team for about five minutes, and went

Another late New York case furnishes a similar example of indirect reasoning to reach a correct conclusion:

In Electric Power Co. v. Metropolitan Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (1894) 75 Hun, 68, in which the employees of one electric company cut from their fixtures certain wires belonging to another company, the court held that by the directions of defendant the wire belonging to plaintiff was cut from fixtures and removed therefrom without notice to plaintiff and without affording it a reasonable opportunity of collecting together and reclaiming such property and such wire having been removed by the employees of defendant it was an act so clearly and intimately connected with and related to their employment that though it was not authorized by defendant it is but just that the employer should be held liable. The court says there has been upon this branch of the law a gradual tendency to increase the liability of the master for the acts of the employee done not only within the scope of his employment but also within the scope of the business with which he is intrusted. But in that case the court relies upon authorities which were determining the liability of the master to one towards whom he owed a special contract duty.

Cases in which there was a special duty have had a marked influence in calling the attention of the courts to the more logical rule of decision, that of general duty to society, cases being frequently cited upon both questions indiscriminately. See notes on arrest and assault appended to the cases of Mulligan v. New York & R. R. Co. (1892) (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 791, and Davis v. Houghtellin (1891) (Neb.) 14 L. R. A. 737.

Duty to society.

It is only recently that the liability has been placed upon the true ground. That is the master's duty toward his neighbors. As long ago as 1824 in considering the liability of public officers for the acts of their servants the court in Hall v. Smith, 2 Bing. 160, says the maxim "respondet superior" is bottomed on this principle; that he who expects to derive advantage from an act which is done by another for him must answer for an injury which a third person may sustain from it.

But while such remarks were sometimes made the general application of the principle has been of very slow growth.

The true basis for the liability is that the principles of modern jurisprudence require that the one who employs another to do an act for his benefit and who has the choice of the agent must take the risk of injury to third persons by either the manner or mode of performance. Barton's Hill Coal Co. v. Reid (1888) 4 Jur. N. S. 787, 3 Macq. H. L. Cas. 206; Sleath v. Wilson (1889) 9 Car. & P. 607; McDonald v. Snelling (1897) 14 Allen, 290, 38 Am. Dec. 768; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Derby (1893) 55 U. S. 14 How. 408, 14 L. ed. 532; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Middleworth (1895) 46 Ill. 404; Higgins v. Watervliet Turnp. & R. Co. (1871) 46 N. Y. 23, 7 Am. Rep. 526; Northwestern R. Co. v. Hack (1873) 68 Ill. 238; New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Bailey (1898) 40 Miss. 206; New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Albritton (1899) 38 Miss. 242, 75 Am. Dec. 98; Rounds v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (1874) 3 Hun, 329; Redding v. South Carolina R. Co. (1871) 3 S. C. N. S. 1, 16 Am. Rep. 681; Schaefer v. Osterbrink (1896) 97 Wis. 456, 56 Am. Rep. 375; Ft. Worth & N. O. R. Co. v. Smith (Tex.) March 21, 1894; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Shields (1890) 3 L. R. A. 464, 47 Ohio St. 387; Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Stearnes (1871) 9 Heisk. 62, 24 Am. Rep. 266.

He is not required in all cases to insure the conduct of his agent, but if the probable effect of misconduct, either because of the dangerous character of the implements entrusted to the servant or of the exacting nature of his duties, will be serious injury to third persons, he must do so. In other cases his care in selecting his agent must be proportioned to the effect of misconduct and the temptation likely to come to the agent.

To render the master liable, 1st. The servant must have been acting in the capacity for which he was employed. 2d. The master will be liable, (a.) for all acts done within the scope of the servant's employment, (b.) For acts done by the servant in his capacity as servant although he abuses his authority or uses his power for purposes of his own, if the abuse is likely to occur and the probable result of such abuse will be serious injury to third persons. In cases where the result would not be so serious but the temptation to abuse is strong there must be reasonable care in the selection of the servant to avoid liability.

There is such dissimilarity in the elements of the master's duty to the public in the several classes of cases that may arise that one case cannot safely be decided by analogy to another unless all essential elements are the same in each.

Other rules.

Many of the general rules which have been laid down are faulty because they do not cover all the into the shoemaker's shop. Blackwell's purpose and object in so doing was to see the shoemaker about soling or mending the shoes belonging to and then worn by him. While he was in the shop, the team started at a slow trotting "gait up Main street, till it came opposite the plaintiff's market, where the wheels of the defendant's wagon caught in the left rear wheel of the plaintiff's wagon, upsetting the same, and causing the injuries to the plaintiff and his property referred to in the complaint. Blackwell was employed by the month, and the carting of the manure was within the ordinary scope of his employment as a servant of the defendant, and he was in the service of the defendant at the time of the accident.

Just here it may be well to call attention to two points in the finding, and to settle its interpretation with reference to them. After stating that Blackwell drove around to the shoemaker's shop, and there left his team and went into the shop, the court, as we have seen, adds that "Blackwell's purpose and object in so doing was to see the shoemaker about soling or mending his shoes." Now, whether the phrase "in so doing" refers to the entire conduct of Blackwell from the time he left the brewery till the horses ran away, or only to his act in leaving them and going into the shoemaker's shop, is perhaps not free from doubt. We will assume, however, in accordance with what seems to be the claim of the defendant, that the phrase in question refers to the entire conduct. Again, the finding is that Blackwell "was in the service of the defendant at the time of the accident." This may mean simply that at the time of the accident his term of service had not expired, and that he had not been discharged, or it may mean that in making the detour he was, and continued to be, in the execution of the master's business, within the scope of his employment. We shall, for the purposes of the discussion, assume that the former meaning is the correct one.

possible elements. Thus in Bowler v. O'Connell, post, 178, it is said that "an act done by a servant while engaged in his master's work, but not done as a means, or for the purpose of performing that work, is not to be made the act of the master."

That is true but it does not follow that the master may not be liable for the act of the servant in misusing a dangerous machine which has been placed in his keeping as in Texas & P. R. Co. v. Scoville, post, 179.

In Springfield Engine & Threshing Co. v. Green (1887), 25 Ill. App. 106, the court in deciding that agents in that case exceeded their authority in instituting an action against a third person says in regard to acts that would be authorized by implication only, because within the scope of the employment: "The principal may control the agent as to the object, time, means, and manner of performance, or forbid it altogether. This principle of liability furnishes a test by which to determine whether a given wrongful act of the agent is or is not within the scope of his employment. It may often be difficult to decide correctly whether the employer had the legal right, simply by virtue of his relation as principal, to forbid its performance absolutely or in the particular case in question, or to require its performance in a different and proper manner; but if it be clear that he had, the act must have been within the scope of the employment, and if otherwise, it could not have been so."

In Baker v. Kinsey (1869) 38 Cal. 631, 99 Am. Dec. 438, it is said that if the servant can justify his act to his master as being within the line of his duty to him, the act is the act of the master and not otherwise.

Under Louisiana code the master is not responsible unless he could have prevented the act which caused the damage and did not do so. Ware v. Barataria & L. Canal Co. (1840) 15 La. 169, 35 Am. Dec. 189.

In Voegeli v. Pickel Marble & Granite Co. (1892) 49 Mo. App. 645, Biggs, J., says that the best statement of the rule is that given by Wood (Mast. & S. 2d ed. § 309): "The act must have been done while engaged in the prosecution of some business for the master, and that business must have been such as the servant had authority from the master to do; that is, he must have been authorized, either expressly or impliedly, to do the act in some manner, which he has improperly or wrongfully performed, and the fact that he was only authorized to do the act in a certain way does not save the master from liability. If he was authorized to do the act at all, the master is liable for the consequence." 27 L. R. A.

quences of his doing it in a different manner, if the mode adopted by him is so far incident to the employment that it comes within its scope, for having given the servant any authority in the premises, he alone must suffer for its abuse.

The liability of the master for the acts of the servant rests now upon the condition whether or not the act of the servant was in the course of his employment. Farber v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (1883) 20 L. R. A. 350, 116 Mo. 81.

None of those statements cover all the elements which have entered into the numerous cases which have been before the courts for decision.

III. THE SERVANT MUST HAVE BEEN ACTING IN THE CAPACITY FOR WHICH HE WAS EMPLOYED.

The act for which the master is liable must be something incident to the employment for which the servant is hired and which it is his duty to perform. Stevens v. Woodward (1881) L. R. 6 Q. B. Div. 318, 50 L. J. Q. B. 281, 44 L. T. N. S. 153, 29 Week. Rep. 506, 45 J. P. 608.

To render the master liable the act must pertain to the particular duties of the employment. Keith v. Lynch (1886) 19 Ill. App. 574.

The rule of respondent superior belongs to the relation of superior and subordinate and is applicable to that relation wherever it exists whether between principal and agent or master and servant and to the subjects to which that relation extends, and is co-extensive with it and ceases when the relation itself ceases to exist, and it is founded on the power which the superior has the right to exercise and which for the prevention of injury is bound to exercise over the acts of his subordinates. Blake v. Ferris (1851) 5 N. Y. 48, 55 Am. Dec. 304.

The master cannot be made liable for acts which a servant volunteers to do for him beyond the scope of his employment. Marion v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1882) 59 Iowa, 423, 44 Am. Rep. 687.

The liability of the master does not reach wrongs caused by the carelessness of the servant in work not directed by the master, as business of a third person or of the servant himself or of the master which he did not expressly or impliedly direct him to perform. Wiltse v. State Road Bridge Co. (1886) 63 Mich. 644.

So the master is not liable for the unskillfulness of engineers engaged to run a steamer in attempting at the request of a passenger to run an aerial railway at a pleasure resort which was at the time closed, it being no part of the duties of the em-

Whether, then, upon the facts found, the master is responsible for the negligence of the servant, is the important question. The general rule of law applicable in this class of cases is accurately and comprehensively stated in Stone v. Hills, 45 Conn. 47, 29 Am. Rep. 635, as follows: "For all acts done by a servant in obedience to the express orders or directions of the master, or in the execution of the master's business, within the scope of his employment, and for acts in any sense warranted by the express or implied authority conferred upon him, considering the nature of the services required, the instructions given, and the circumstances under which the act is done, the master is responsible; for acts which are not within these conditions the servant alone is responsible." Of these "conditions" of liability, the one under which the present case seems to fall, if it falls under any of them, is the one for acts done "in the execution of the master's business within the scope of his employment." This rule or "condition" of liability is in itself simple and intelligible enough, but, in determining whether any particular case falls within it or not, difficult and troublesome questions may arise. "The cases which have arisen upon this subject have from the earliest times been productive of much astute and interesting discussion in courts of law, and eminent judges have differed widely in their decisions. It has always been a matter of extreme difficulty to apply the law to the ever-varying facts and circumstances which present themselves." Rayner v. Mitchell, L. R. 2 C. P. Div. 357. In reality, however, the difficulty here spoken of arises in ascertaining whether the act was done in the execution of the master's business within the scope of his employment, which, as we shall see, is ordinarily a question of fact, and not in applying the rule when that fact has been ascertained. This fact once determined, the rule can be easily applied, but the rule cannot at all aid in the deterployés of the steamer to run such railway. Biederman v. Brown (1893) 49 Ill. App. 483.

If the master of a vessel is not in charge of it he cannot bind the owner by contracts clandestinely made. Walter v. Brewer (1814) 11 Mass. 99.

Assisting third person.

So the master is not liable for the acts of his servant done while assisting a third person. Sawyer v. Martins (1898) 25 Ill. App. 521.

The owner of a boiler is not liable for the act of its engineer, which results in the explosion of the boiler which is done while he is assisting the employés of the vendor who have been sent to test the boiler and put it into the condition required by the contract of sale. Olive v. Whitney Marble Co. (1896) 108 N. Y. 232.

The master is not liable if at the time of the commission of the act the servant was acting under command of a third person. Murphy v. Caralli (1864) 3 Hurlst. & C. 462, 34 L. Exch. 14, 10 Jur. N. S. 1207, 18 Week. Rep. 165.

A master is not liable for the acts of his servant while he is under control of a third person. Bourke v. White Moss Colliery Co. (1877) L. R. 2 C. P. Div. 205, 46 L. J. Cl. P. 233, 36 L. T. N. S. 49, 25 Week. Rep. 263.

So where a servant was sent to deliver goods at a certain place and directed to go and return by a certain route, and when he reached his destination, the customer wanted him to carry them further, which he did, and while so doing the horses ran away, the court held that the servant had left his master's employment and was under the control of the customer and the master was not liable for the injuries caused by the running horses. Stone v. Hills (1877) 45 Conn. 47, 29 Am. Rep. 635.

Instances of servant acting outside of capacity.

A bank is not liable for the loss of money given to its bookkeeper away from the bank and out of banking hours to be by him deposited to the credit of one from whom he received it. Manhattan R. Co. v. Lydig (1899) 4 Johns. 377.

A railroad company is not liable for the act of one of its trackmen in advising a boy whom he has taken away from home to attempt to board a moving freight train for the purpose of returning to his home. Keating v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. (1898) 97 Mich. 154.

A railroad company is not responsible for the acts of its local agent in preventing the attorneys of one injured on the road from having access to a witness who is in the employ of the company. Marsh v. South Carolina R. Co. (1876) 56 Ga. 274.

The owner of a foundry is not liable for injuries to a boy who falls into hot ashes, given by them to their engineer and removed by him after working hours to a vacant lot in the vicinity, where he intended to apply them to his own use, although they knew of the place where he had stored them and knew they were liable to do injury. Burke v. Shaw (1892) 59 Miss. 445, 42 Am. Rep. 370.

A railroad company is not liable for injuries caused by the obstruction of a highway crossing by refuse removed from its cars by a brakeman and placed in the highway for his own use. Pittsburg, W. & C. R. Co. v. Maurer (1871) 21 Ohio St. 421.

A servant employed to post bills in a certain town is not acting within the scope of his employment in taking the bills to a town fifteen miles away and leaving them in a heap in the highway, so as to render the master liable for injuries to a horse frightened by them. Smith v. Spits (1892) 156 Mass. 319.

A parlor-car company is not liable for injuries to a bystander caused by its porter throwing from the car a bundle containing his personal effects. Walton v. New York Cent. Sleeping Car Co. (1885) 139 Mass. 556.

A station agent is not acting within the scope of his employment in placing upon the track torpedoes which have been thrown from the train by conductors and which he has picked up and placed on the track merely to hear them explode, where station agents have no duty to perform with torpedoes and the rules of the company prohibit their use near stations. Smith v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. (1894) 73 Hun. 524.

A railroad company is not liable for the act of its fireman in going into the caboose, getting torpedoes and placing them on the track for the purpose of making a noise to aid a fourth of July celebration going on near the station. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Epperson (1887) 26 Ill. App. 79.

As to liability for misuse of torpedoes by persons who have been placed in charge of them, see V.

Where a baggageman on a train went into the express car for the purpose of having some fun with a boy who was there and the boy being frightened jumped off from the moving train and was injured, the court held that the railroad company was not liable, if the baggageman was not about its business when he left his compartment and went into that of the express company. Louis mination of the fact. The rule tells us that the master's liability depends upon whether the acts were done in the execution of his business within the scope of his employment, but it does not help us to determine whether they were or not so done.

In like manner the general rule of construction is that the intent of the parties shall prevail. This tells us what to do when the intent has been ascertained, but affords no aid in a particular case in ascertaining what the intent is. Whether, then, the act of a servant, for which it is sought in a particular case to hold the master responsible, was done in the execution of the master's business within the scope of the employment, or not, must, from the nature of things, in most cases be a question of fact, to be determined as such by the jury or other trier, because no general rule of law has been, or probably can be, laid down, the application of which will determine the matter in all cases. Sometimes, however, this question is determined by the court as a matter of law. But in by far the greater number of cases where the question of the master's responsibility turns, as in the present case, principally upon the mere extent of deviation by the servant from the strict course of his employment or duty, it has been generally held to be one of fact and not of law. In such cases it is, and must usually remain, a question depending upon the degree of deviation and all the attendant circumstances. In cases where the deviation is slight and not unusual, the court may and often will, as matter of law, determine that the servant was still executing his master's business. So, too, where the deviation is very marked and unusual, the court in like manner may determine that the servant was not on the master's business at all, but on his own. Cases falling between these extremes will be regarded as involving merely a question of fact, to be left to the jury or other trier of such questions. Thus, in Phelon v. Stiles, 43 Conn. 426, the ville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Douglass (1892) 69 Miss. 723.

A railroad company is not answerable for the act of its baggageman in assisting an employé of a contractor to put tools off from the train, which the contractor is allowed by the railroad company to carry free of charge. Cunningham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (1871) 81 U. C. Q. B. 360.

A baggageman on a train is not serving his master in delivering drills which are carried merely to accommodate persons who have not contracted with the carrier and for which the carrier receives no benefit, and therefore his negligence in throwing the drills from the car by which the person to whom they were sent is injured does not make the carrier liable. Walker v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1894) 24 L. R. A. 363, 121 Mo. 575.

The master is not liable for the negligence of his servants, who have been engaged in moving a house, in erecting steps thereto at the request of the tenant which the master was under no obligation to erect and which the servants undertook to do after they had quit the master's employment at the close of working hours for the day. Dells v. Stollenwerk (1890) 78 Wis. 899.

The owner of a livery stable with whom a horse is left to be kept is not liable for the death of his horse by reason of his servant's immoderate driving of it for exercise under instructions from the owner. Adams v. Coet (1884) 62 Md. 264, 50 Am. Rep. 211.

It is no part of the ordinary business of a clerk in a store to borrow money and draw notes in the name of the firm for the amount, so that the proprietor is not liable upon a note so drawn by him without showing that he had express authority to draw it. Kerns v. Piper (1835) 4 Watts, 222.

The fact that horses are struck and rendered unmanageable so that they cause injury by one who had been employed by the owner, but who at the time was not attending to any business which concerned the owner, is not sufficient to render the owner liable for the damage. Weldon v. Harlem R. Co. (1859) 5 Bosw. 578.

A railroad company is not liable for the act of its brakeman on a train which is in charge of a conductor in commanding a boy who is on the train to assist in adjusting boards loaded on some of the cars, in doing which the boy is injured. Sherman v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1890) 72 Mo. 62, 37 Am. Rep. 423.

A toll-bridge company is not liable for the act of the bridge keeper in setting furniture out of the 27 L. R. A. house for the purpose of cleaning it, so that it frightens horses passing over the bridge. Wiltse v. State Road Bridge Co. (1886) 63 Mich. 644.

A slave owner is not liable for the act of his overseer and slaves in turning a tenant out of a house on the premises and then setting fire to it, if such act is done without his knowledge or authority. Boulard v. Calhoun (1859) 13 La. Ann. 445.

A railroad company is not liable for the act of its servants in pursuing, capturing, and taking to a place of examination, a man seen running from where obstructions had been placed on the track. Porter v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1875) 41 Iowa, 358.

A master is not liable for the death of a horse which he has instructed his servant to turn out of a certain pasture if after it is turned out the servant while boys are trying to drive the horse along the road strikes it with a whip causing it to injure itself so that it dies. Yates v. Squires (1895) 19 Iowa, 23, 37 Am. Dec. 418.

It is not within the authority of the conductor of a railroad train to pursue a boy into his father's house, and with a pistol in his hand force the boy to go away with him on the train, and the railroad company is not liable for such acts. Gilliam v. South & North Ala. R. Co. (1881) 70 Ala. 268.

A carrier is not liable for the value of a package entrusted to his servant to be carried by the latter for a consideration paid to him for his own benefit, and lost in transit. Butler v. Basing (1827) 2 Car. & P. 618.

The master is not liable for an injury to a small child which the employé has invited to ride upon a hand-car, while after quitting work for the day they are taking passengers to a house, along the track, for their own purposes and contrary to the rules of the company. Houston C. A. & N. R. Co. v. BOLLING, post, 190.

A railroad company is not liable for the negligence of the master of its round-house while he is running an engine on the main track for the purpose of going for a doctor to attend a sick neighbor. Cousins v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1877) 65 Mo. 572.

In the latter case the custody of the engine having been entrusted to the master of the round-house it would seem that the company should be responsible for the manner in which he executed his trust.

Servant acting under special orders.

Where a master having a servant at work by the deviation by the servant from the strict course of his duty was so slight that this court, as matter of law, held the master liable, while in Stone v. Hills, 45 Conn. 44, 29 Am. Rep. 635, the deviation was so marked and unusual that it refused to hold the master responsible. On the other hand, where a servant, contrary to his duty, and solely for a purpose of his own, drove his master's horse and cart a quarter of a mile out of the way, the question whether in and while so doing he was in the execution of his master's business, within the scope of his employment, was left to the jury as a question of fact. Whatman v. Pearson, L. R. 8 C. P. 422. "Whether the servant is really bent on his master's affairs or not is a question of fact, but a question which may be troublesome." Pollock, Torts, *71. In the following cases, among many others, this question was decided as one of fact: Kimball v. Cushman, 103 Mass. 194, 4 Am. Rep. 528; Redding v. South Carolina R. Co. 8 S. C. N. S. 1, 16

Am. Rep. 681; Rounds v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 64 N. Y. 129, 21 Am. Rep. 597; Cor-mick v. Digby, 9 Ir. C. L. Rep. 557; Burns v. Poulson, L. R. 8 C. P. 568.

In cases of deviation the authorities are clearly to the effect that a mere departure by the servant from the strict course of his duty, even for a purpose of his own, will not, in and of itself, be such a departure from the master's business as to relieve him of responsibility. "Not every deviation of the servant from the strict execution of his duty, nor every disregard of particular instructions, will be such an interruption of the course of employment as to determine or suspend the master's responsibility; but where there is not merely deviation, but a total departure, from the course of the master's business, so that the servant may be said to be 'on a frolic of his own,' the master is no longer answerable for the servant's conduct." Pollock, Torts, *76. In the case of Joel v. Morrison, 6 Car. & P. 501, the jury were told day, burned over some land and then told the servant to harrow in another field and left, but the servant instead of so doing attempted to burn some brush in such field first and by so doing set fire to adjoining property; the court held the master not liable, stating that when the servant works under special orders of the master, the master is responsible only for his skill and care in executing those orders. Wilson v. Peverly (1823) 3 N. H. 548.

A master who sends his servant to haul goods of a certain person with instructions not to take the goods of any one else is not responsible for the goods of a third person taken by the servant and embezzled by him during the journey. Satterlee v. Groat (1828) 1 Wend. 272.

IV. MASTER LIABLE FOR ACTS WITHIN SCOPE OF SERVANT'S EMPLOYMENT.

a. Liability the general rule.

There is perhaps no rule of law more firmly settled than that a master is ordinarily liable to answer in a civil suit for tortious acts of his servant, if the act be done in the course of his employment in the master's service. Ayrigg v. New York & E. R. Co. (1864) 80 N. J. L. 460.

The principal is liable for the act of his agent. Arthur v. Balch (1851) 23 N. H. 167; Brown v. Lent (1845) 30 Vt. 529; Hill v. Morey (1854) 26 Vt. 178.

The master is liable for the acts of his servant. Charlock v. Freel (1801) 125 N. Y. 387; Suydam v. Moore (1850) 3 Barb. 368; Morgan v. Bowman (1856) 23 Mo. 538; Dillon v. Hunt (1834) 82 Mo. 160.

The master is liable for injuries caused by the act of his servant in throwing snow and ice from the roof into the street below when he has sent him to clean off the roof. Althof v. Wolf (1859) 2 Hilt. 344.

The master is liable for the act of his general collecting agent in collecting money on false bills. Adams v. Cole (1861) 1 Daly, 147.

The master is liable for the act of his servant in drawing in a gang-plank so as to throw a person trying to cross it into the water. Baldwin v. New York & H. Nav. Co. (1872) 4 Daly, 814.

The master who sends his servant to cut trees on his own land but who fails to point out his division line is responsible if the servant ignorantly or wantonly cuts trees belonging to an adjoining owner. Carman v. New York (1882) 14 Abb. Pr. 301.

Where a farm hand took a bag containing barley supposing it to be oats to feed his team and finding his mistake put an iron bolt into the bag to carry it home and returned the bag with its contents to the place where he found it, the master who subsequently used the bag to take some grain to mill without knowing that the bolt was in the bag, was held liable for injuries to the mill machinery caused by the bolt getting into it. Tuel v. Weston (1874) 47 Vt. 634.

If a servant kindles a fire in the way of husbandry and proper for his employment though he had no express command of his master, yet his master should be liable to an action for damages done to another by the fire. Turberville v. Stampe (1698) 1 Ld. Raym. 264, 1 Salk. 13.

As to liability for fires generally, see note to Brown v. Brooks (1896) (Wis.) 21 L. R. A. 255.

b. Liability for negligent acts.

In Barton's Hill Coal Co. v. Reid (1858) 4 Jur. N. S. 767, 3 Macq. H. L. Cas. 268, the court in considering the question of the liability of a master to one servant for the negligence of a co-servant said: "In general it is sufficient to hold (the master) liable to show that the person whose negligence caused the injury was at the time when it was occasioned acting not on his own account but in the course of his employment as a servant in the business of a master and that the damage resulted from the servant so employed not having conducted his master's business with due care. In such a case the maxim 'respondet superior' prevails and the master is responsible. Thus if a servant in driving his master's carriage along the highway carelessly runs over a bystander, or if a game keeper employed to kill game carelessly fires at a hare so as to shoot a person passing on the ground, or if a workman employed by a builder in building a house negligently throws a stone or brick from a scaffold and so hurts a passer-by, in all these cases (and instances might be multiplied indefinitely) the person injured has a right to treat the wrongful or careless act as the act of the master. . . . The law does not permit him to escape liability because the act complained of was not committed with his own hands. He is considered and reasonably considered as bound to guarantee third persons against all hurt arising from the carelessness of himself or of those acting under his orders. . . . A person sustaining injury . . . has a right to say: 'If you choose to do or cause to be done any of these acts it is to you and not to your servants I must look for redress if mischief happens to me as their consequence.' A large portion of the ordithat if the servant, with his master's horse and cart, made a detour in order to call upon a friend, or if, when driving on his master's business, he went out of his way against his master's implied commands, the master remains liable for the servant's negligence while extra viam; but that "if he was going on a frolic of his own, without being at all on his master's business, the master will not be liable." If the servant, in going extra viam, is really engaged in the execution of the master's business within the scope of his employment, it is immaterial that he joined with this some private business or purpose of his own. Thus, in Patton v. Rea, 2 C. B. N. S. 606, the servant started out on business of the master, and also to see a doctor on his own account. While on his way to see the doctor he negligently drove against a horse and killed it, and the master was held responsible. In Sleath v. Wilson, 9 Car. & P. 607, the master was held liable for the negligent act of his servant, who, after having set his master down, drove around to deliver a parcel of his own, and did not drive directly where he had been ordered to go. See the case, also, of Cormick v. Digby, supra, upon this point. In Storey v. Ashton, L. R. 4 Q. B. 476, Chief Justice Cockburn says: "I think that if a driver, while acting in his master's business, were to make a slight deviation to carry some business of his own into effect, in such a case the master might be liable, and that the question would be one of degree as regards the extent of the deviation. . . . I am far from saying if the servant, when going on his master's business, took a somewhat longer road, that owing to the deviation he would cease to be in the employment of the master, so as to divest the latter of all responsibility. In such cases it is a question of degree as to how far the deviation could be considered as a separate journey." In Whatman v. Pearson, supra, the servant, with the horse and cart of the master, contrary to express orders, nary acts of life are attended with some risks to third parties and no one has a right to involve others in risks without their own consent, this consideration is alone sufficient to justify the wisdom of the rule which makes the principal by whom or by whose orders these risks are incurred responsible to third persons for any ill consequences resulting from want of any due skill or caution."

The master is liable for the negligence of the servant within the scope of his employment. Montgomery & E. R. Co. v. Chambers (1885) 79 Ala. 338; Louisville Gas Co. v. Gutenkuntz (1884) 82 Ky. 433; Harlow v. Humiston (1826) 6 Cow. 189; Gleason v. Amsdell (1880) 9 Daly, 368; Oil-Creek & A. R. R. Co. v. Keighron (1873) 74 Pa. 316.

The master is liable for the negligence of his servants as for his own. Burton v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. (1845) 4 Harr. (Del.) 252.

The master is liable for the negligent act of his servant in leaving water running in the master's apartments, by reason of which injury is done to property of a third person, situated lower down in the same building. Gass v. Coblenz (1869) 48 Mo. 377.

The occupant of the upper portion of a building will be liable for damages caused to lower occupants by the negligence of his servants in leaving water running in his apartments which floods the lower floors. Simonton v. Loring (1878) 68 Me. 164, 28 Am. Rep. 29.

The landlord of a building is liable to his tenant for injury by water permitted to overflow from a wash basin by the negligence of the janitor of the building. Pike v. Brittan (1886) 71 Cal. 159, 60 Am. Rep. 527.

A coal merchant is liable for the act of his servant in leaving open a coal chute, through which he was delivering coal, so that a person fell into it and was injured. Whittley v. Pepper (1877) L. R. 2 Q. B. Div. 276, 46 L. J. Q. B. 436, 36 L. T. N. S. 588, 25 Week. Rep. 607.

A railroad company is liable for the negligent use by the engineer of the whistle so as to frighten horses on a highway. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Brannen (1886) (Pa.) 2 Cent. Rep. 33, 33 Alb. L. J. 316; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Stinger (1875) 78 Pa. 218; Pennsylvania Co. v. Barnett (1868) 59 Pa. 259.

The railroad company may be liable for the heedless or careless act of its servants in letting off steam from an engine or in blowing a whistle. Culp v. Atchison & N. R. Co. (1877) 17 Kan. 475.

A corn factor is liable for injuries caused by a truck negligently left in the road by an inebriated 27 L. R. A.

man employed to take some corn out of the shop to a customer by the factor's sister who was left in charge of the shop during the factor's absence. Wanstall v. Pooley (1841) 6 Clark & F. 910, note.

Where a master commands a thing to be done and injury results from the want of care of the servant whilst performing the order, the master is liable in trespass. And he is responsible for consequential damages where by the negligence and carelessness of the servant in doing the business of his employer another receives injury for which the servant would himself be liable in trespass. Douglas v. Stephens (1853) 18 Mo. 362.

The master is liable for the act of his servant in carelessly throwing a keg out of a window so as to injure a person in a passageway below. Corrigan v. Union Sugar Refinery (1868) 96 Mass. 577, 96 Am. Dec. 685.

A railroad company is liable for the negligence of its servant in running over cattle on the track. Cincinnati & Z. R. Co. v. Smith (1871) 22 Ohio St. 227, 10 Am. Rep. 729.

The owner of a raft running in a river is liable for the injuries caused by the negligence of his servant in charge of it. Shaw v. Reed (1845) 9 Watts & S. 72.

Where a servant was directed to cut timber in a certain direction and the true line was not pointed out to him and he negligently cut over the line, the principal was held responsible in trespass. Luttrell v. Hazen (1855) 3 Sneed, 20.

The master is liable for the negligent chastisement of a slave which results in his death. Echols v. Dodd (1857) 20 Tex. 190.

A railroad company is liable for the negligence of its porter in handling baggage so that it falls upon and injures a bystander. Tebbutt v. Bristol & E. R. Co. (1870) L. R. 6 Q. B. 73, 40 L. J. Q. B. 73, 29 L. T. N. S. 772, 19 Week. Rep. 383.

Where a sailor negligently unlashed a skid from the rigging where it had been placed by a stevedore for use in loading the vessel for the purpose of tarring the rigging against which it rested by reason of which it fell and injured a third person, the ship owner was held liable for the injury. The Polaria (1885) 25 Fed. Rep. 735.

A railroad company is liable for injury caused by the negligence of its conductor in ordering his train to run out on the main line at a time when another train is due, of which fact he had knowledge, but had for the moment forgotten it. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Chicago, P. & St. L. R. Co. (1893) 63 Ill. App. 41.

went a quarter of a mile out of his way purely for a purpose of his own, and the master was held responsible. In Mitchell v. Craswell, 13 G. B. 237, Maule, J., said: "The master is liable even though the servant, in the performance of his duty, is guilty of a deviation, or a failure to perform it in the strictest and most convenient manner." In some of its aspects the case of Quinn v. Power, 37 N. Y. 535, 41 Am. Rep. 392, is somewhat similar to the case at bar. There a boatman at a certain town on the Hudson river applied to the pilot in charge of a ferry boat, asking to be put on board of a canal boat then in midstream. The pilot, without compensation, and apparently out of mere "good nature," agreed to do so. Similar acts had occasionally been done before, but without the knowledge or express authority of the master. To reach the canal boat the pilot diverged from his regular course, and while so out of his course, through the negligence of those in charge of the ferry boat, a collision with a canal boat occurred. In behalf of the master it was urged that his servants, when the collision occurred, were not acting in his business or within the scope of their employment, but in the execution of an independent purpose of their own, not connected with the master's business; but upon this point the court said:

"We do not concur in this view of the transaction. At most, it appears to us a case where the servant, while acting in the master's business and within the scope of his employment, deviated from the line of his duty to his master, and disobeyed his instructions. When this ferry boat left the dock at Athens it started for its terminus at Hudson. It took freight and passengers to transfer across the river. Servants and boat, as the latter moved out into the river, were doing the master's business, and acting in the line of duty and of employment. There was a usual track or route by which the boat crossed. It may even have been selected and

The negligence of an engineer in permitting sparks to escape from his engine to the injury of property in the vicinity is imputable to the master. Haywood v. Hedrick (1863) 94 Ind. 340.

The owner of a farm is liable for the act of one whom he employs to work it in setting fire to stumps at an improper time so that it spreads to adjoining land and injures property there. O'Connell v. Strong (1837) Dud. L. 255.

A gas company is liable for the negligent act of its agent in causing an explosion while attempting to locate a leak in a private house which he had been sent to find. Lannen v. Albany Gas-Light Co. (1871) 44 N. Y. 459; (1865) 46 Barb. 264.

The negligence of a flagman stationed at a railroad crossing to give notice of the approach of trains, in failing to do so, is imputable to the company. Dolan v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. (1877) 71 N. Y. 285.

A telegraph operator who is given a key to a switch and charged with the duty of operating it for certain trains will render his master liable for injuries caused by his mistake in sending a wrong train on to the switch. Tierney v. Syracuse, R. & N. Y. R. Co. (1896) 52 N. Y. Supp. 627.

In that case the court says if he exceeded his instructions to the injury of a third person the defendant who furnished him the means and opportunity to cause the injury should bear the loss rather than an innocent party.

If a servant does without special orders an act of such a nature that he is justified in doing it as between himself and his master without an express order, the master is liable for damages sustained by an individual in consequence of the act being done in an unskillful manner. Gilmartin v. New York (1869) 55 Barb. 220.

A street-railway company is liable for the act of its driver in starting up the horses when a boy who had come on the car at the driver's request to furnish him with a drink of water is attempting to get off, in consequence of which the boy is injured. Day v. Brooklyn City R. Co. (1877) 13 Hun, 435, affirmed (1879) in 78 N. Y. 593.

A railroad company is liable for the negligence of its servant in catching the hand of a car inspector between two cars which they are attempting to couple while he is engaged in fixing one of the couplings so as to make it fit to perform its work. Rhodes v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. (1894) 59 N. Y. S. R. 598.

A railroad company is liable for the negligence of its servants in permitting a steer which had been killed on its track to be placed near the traveled part of a highway so as to frighten passing horses. Baxter v. Chicago, R. L. & P. R. Co. (1893) 87 Iowa, 498.

A master is liable for the negligent setting of fire by his servant in preparing ground for cultivation. Ellegard v. Ackland (1890) 43 Minn. 332.

A master is liable for the negligent act of his servant in exploding fireworks which the master has contracted to do in aid of a celebration. Colvin v. Peabody (1891) 155 Mass. 104.

The owners of a street railroad company are liable for the negligent acts of their employees in driving a car against a pipe near the opening of a sewer excavation, the result of which is to throw the pipe into the excavation and injure a man working there. Schmidt v. Steinway & H. P. R. Co. (1890) 55 Hun, 496.

A railroad company is liable for the act of its employees, who being engaged in fixing a cattle-guard at a railroad crossing leave some of the weather-beaten timbers lying at the side of the highway in such a manner as to be likely to frighten passing horses. Tinker v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. (1893) 71 Hun, 432.

The master is liable for the negligent act of his servant in delivering goods to a customer which results in breaking a window. Ridge v. Railroad Transfer Co. (1894) 56 Mo. App. 133.

A railroad company is liable for the injuries caused by its conductor, leaving his train standing without an attendant. Rauch v. Lloyd (1858) 31 Pa. 353, 72 Am. Dec. 747.

The master is liable for the carelessness and negligence of his servant in driving trespassing cattle out of his field, although it is not shown that the particular act was commended by him. Smith v. Causey (1866) 28 Ala. 655, 65 Am. Dec. 372.

Negligent driving of horses.

The owner is liable for his servant's negligence in driving his horse. Metcalf v. Baker (1874) 57 N. Y. 632; Wright v. Crompton (1876) 53 Ind. 337; Moebus v. Herrmann (1888) 103 N. Y. 849; Coulter v. American Merchants Union Exp. Co. (1871) 5 Lans. 67; Moriarty v. Zepp (1891) 42 N. Y. S. R. 824; Huff v. Ford (1878) 126 Mass. 24, 30 Am. Rep. 645; Harpell v. Curtis (1850) 1 E. D. Smith, 78; McCahill v. Kipp (1854) 2 E. D. Smith, 413; Kimball v. Cushman (1869) 103 Mass. 194, 4 Am. Rep. 523; Springett v. Ball (1865) 4 Foot. & F. 472; Phelps v. Wait (1864) 30 N. Y. 73.

The master is liable for the agent's negligent dictated by the owner. In deviating from it the servants might disregard the instructions of the master, but they were none the less engaged in the master's business of transporting passengers from Athens to Hudson because they did not follow the usual route, or pursued another, or even a forbidden, track. They were still doing their employer's work, though in a manner contrary to his instructions. If they stopped the boat in the middle of the river, they did not cease to be engaged in the master's business. Even if the motive was some purpose of their own, they were still about their usual employment, although pursuing it in a way and manner to subserve also such purpose. When they took this passenger to the tow, and in so doing deviated from the usual route, and stopped the boat midriver for that reason, they were still engaged in the master's business of transporting freight and passengers across the river. They were doing it in a mode and manner perhaps not authorized, and possibly in some sense to effect a purpose of their own, but none the less acting within the scope of their employment, and engaged in the master's business." Some of the above remarks are quite applicable to the case at bar. In making the detour, Blackwell was still in charge of his master's team, though on a roundabout way home, carting manure to his master's farm. That was his main purpose and object throughout the entire transaction. In the language of the case last cited, even if the motive was some purpose of his own, he was still about his usual employment, although pursuing it in a way and manner to subserve such purpose also.

Applying these principles to the case at bar, the question for the court below was whether or not Blackwell, for the time be-care of a team on account of which it ran away causing injury. Norris v. Kohler (1869) 41 N. Y. 42.

The owners of a stage-coach are liable for injuries caused by the negligent driving of their driver. Johnson v. Small (1844) 5 B. Mon. 2; Hart v. New Orleans & C. R. Co. (1841) 1 Rob. (La.) 178, 36 Am. Dec. 689.

The master is liable for the reckless driving of his servant. Metcalf v. Baker (1871) 2 Jones & S. 10.

A sewing-machine company is liable for the negligent act of its agent engaged in traveling about with a horse and wagon for the sale of machines in driving upon and injuring a person on the highway. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Bahn (1899) 132 U. S. 518, 38 L. ed. 440, affirming Bahn v. Singer Mfg. Co. (1895) 26 Fed. Rep. 912.

A traveling salesman who hires a horse to visit customers will render his employer liable for his negligent management of it, although at the time of hiring it he does not disclose the fact that he was merely an agent. Ploken v. Diecker (1871) 21 Ohio St. 212, 8 Am. Rep. 55.

If the master permits his servant to use his horse and carriage in collecting rents for the master he will be liable for his negligent use of it. Lovington v. Bauchsens (1899) 34 Ill. App. 544.

In Michael v. Alestree (1877) 2 Lev. 172, the master was held liable for injuries inflicted by the servant in taking horses into a much-used place to break them, on the ground that it would be intended that the master sent the servant there to train the horses.

Where defendant and his groom in riding along a highway on horse-back, passed the plaintiff who was on foot driving a three-horse team, and at the moment of passing the groom touched his horse with his spur, causing it to kick and injure plaintiff, the master was held liable. North v. Smith (1891) 10 C. B. N. S. 572, 4 L. T. N. S. 407.

If the servant is upon his master's business when he injures a third person by driving against him, the master is liable although the horses belong to the servant and the servant is at the same time attending to business of his own. Patten v. Rea (1867) 2 C. B. N. S. 606, 26 L. J. C. B. 236, 40 Eng. L. & Eq. 329, 3 Jur. N. S. 892.

The fact that defendant's driver is at the time of the accident demeaning himself improperly is not sufficient to defeat the action if the injury was caused by his carelessness. Barlow v. Emmert (1872) 10 Kan. 358.

If the servant in charge of the team commits the reins to another by whose careless driving the injury is done, the master is still liable. Booth v. Miester (1836) 7 Car. & P. 64.

27 L. R. A.

Negligent ejection from train.

A railroad company is liable for the act of its brakeman in compelling a boy to jump from a train which is moving at a dangerous rate of speed. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. v. Kelly (1897) 36 Kan. 655, 59 Am. Rep. 601.

A railroad company is liable for injuries resulting from the reckless manner in which servants remove a trespasser from a moving engine. Carter v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. (1894) 98 Ind. 552, 49 Am. Rep. 780.

A railroad company is liable for injuries resulting from its conductor compelling a boy to get off from a moving train. Benton v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1881) 56 Iowa, 496.

A railroad company is liable for the act of its conductor in pushing a drunken man off from a platform of a moving car. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Dunkin (1883) 92 Ind. 601.

A railroad company is liable for the act of its engineer in compelling a boy to get off from the engine while it is in motion although the boy was on the engine at his invitation which was without the scope of his authority to give. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. West (1888) 125 Ill. 520, Affg. 24 Ill. App. 44.

A railroad company is liable for the negligent act of its watchman in removing a boy from a moving train. Brill v. Eddy (1893) 115 Mo. 596.

A trespasser cannot be ejected from a train without a reasonable regard for his safety. Arnold v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Pa.) Feb. 7, 1897.

A railroad company is liable for the act of its driver in pushing a trespassing boy off from the car under the wheel of a passing truck, thereby injuring him. Amato v. Sixth Ave. R. Co. (1894) 59 N. Y. S. R. 674.

A street-car company is liable for the act of its driver in compelling a boy whom he has allowed to ride on the platform a short distance, to leave the car when it is going at a rate making it dangerous for him to do so. Lovett v. Salem & S. D. R. Co. (1895) 9 Allen, 557.

A railroad company is liable for the negligence of its conductor in putting a person off from the cars. Moyer v. Pacific Railroad (1897) 40 Mo. 156.

The disposition to shield the master and to hold him responsible only for acts properly done by the servant is very prominent in a New York decision in which it was held that a brakeman with authority to remove trespassers from a train is not acting within the scope of his authority, so, as to render the master liable in compelling a boy to leave the train while it is in motion so that the proceeding is dangerous. Hughes v. New York & N. H. R. Co. (1873) 4 Jones & S. 222.

ing, totally departed from the master's business, and set out upon a separate journey and business of his own. If the rule of law were that any deviation by the servant "to carry some business of his own into effect" was of itself such a departure, the above question would be one of law. But this, as we have seen, is not the rule of law. To decide the question in a case like the present, the trier must take into account, not only the mere fact of deviation, but its extent and nature relatively to time and place and circumstances, and all the other detailed facts which form a part of and truly characterize the deviation, including often the real intent and purpose of the servant in making it. Without spending more time upon this point, we think the above question is one of fact in the ordinary sense, and that the case at bar clearly falls within the class of cases where such question is strictly one of fact to be decided by the trier. As such, we think the court below decided it. It is true that upon our interpretation of the finding the court below has not found formally and in terms that Blackwell, during the time of the detour, was in the execution of his master's business, and perhaps such interpretation does that court an injustice; but, however this may be, the court, in deciding as it did, necessarily found that Blackwell continued in the execution of the master's business all the time, and this is enough without so finding in terms. This court will not review such a finding upon the errors assigned. If, however, we should hold the question raised upon this point to be one of law, we have no hesitation in saying that the court below reached the correct conclusion on the facts found. In either point of view, then, there is no error.

The remaining question relates to the al-

Permitting children to be in danger.

Where a child went into a shed where machinery was operated by horse power and sat upon the seat to drive the horse, and the servant whose duty it was to start the machinery knowing that he was there started the machinery and then left after which the child in attempting to get down was caught in the machinery and injured, the court held the master liable, saying: "We need not consider whether the act of the agent in granting permission to the deceased to ride on the horse-power was in the course of his employment or not; for whether the deceased was within the building and upon the machinery with or without the express or implied consent of defendants, its agent then present and engaged in and about its business, knew the situation of the deceased lad; and his negligent act in starting the horse and leaving the boy in a perilous position was in the course of his employment and is clearly imputable to the defendant. Gunderson v. Northwestern Elev. R. Co. 47 Minn. 161.

The master is responsible for the act of his servant in charge of a pump-house containing exposed machinery in negligently permitting a youth of immature judgment and discretion to be in the house about the machinery in consequence of which he is injured. White v. San Antonio Water Works Co. (Tex.) Jan. 16, 1895.

A steamboat company is liable for the act of those in charge of a boat in inviting a child on board where it is likely to be injured by dangerous machinery or places, if it is in fact so injured. Cook v. Houston Direct Nav. Co. (1890) 76 Tex. 363.

A street-car company is liable for the negligence of its driver in permitting little children to ride on the platform of a moving car. Pittsburg, A. & M. Pass. R. Co. v. Caldwell (1873) 74 Pa. 421.

A street railroad company is liable for the negligence of its driver in permitting a child to ride on the front platform of a car by reason of which it fell off and was injured although it was riding free by permission of the driver. Brennan v. Fairhaven & W. R. Co. (1877) 45 Conn. 284, 29 Am. Rep. 679.

But in other cases it has been held that—

To charge a railroad company with a duty towards a child who has been invited into a place of danger by one of its servants, it must be shown that the servant had the authority to give the invitation, so as to bind the company. Mexican Nat. R. Co. v. Crum (1894) 6 Tex. Civ. App. 702.

It is not within the scope of the authority of the engineer of a freight train to permit boys to ride on the train so as to make the company liable in case there was injury thereby. Chicago, R. & Q. R. Co. v. Casey (1881) 9 Ill. App. 632.

37 L. R. A.

A railroad company is not liable for the negligence of its servants engaged in moving cars, in inviting children to get upon them for the purpose of having a free ride. Snyder v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1875) 60 Mo. 412.

The company is not liable for the negligent act of its conductor in letting a boy come on board a train for the purpose of selling papers. Duff v. Allegheny Valley R. Co. (1879) 91 Pa. 453, 36 Am. Rep. 675.

Permitting slave to escape.

The owner of a stage-coach is liable for the negligence of its agent in permitting a slave to be taken away on the coach. Lowe v. Stockton (1835) 4 Cranch, C. C. 537.

The owner of a stage-coach is liable for the negligent act of his servant in permitting a slave to ride on the coach, whereby the slave is lost to its owner. Harris v. Mabry (1840) 23 N. C. 240.

The owner of a steamboat is liable for the act of the captain in neglecting to make search for a slave which he is informed is on board, so as to prevent its escape from its master. Pennsylvania, D. & M. Steam Nav. Co. v. Hungerford (1884) 6 Gill & J. 291.

If the captain of a vessel negligently permits slaves to be transported out of the state in it, the owner will be liable, but if he willfully and knowingly permits them to go out on his boat, the owner will not be liable. Price v. Thornton (1848) 10 Mo. 135.

Neglect to perform a duty resting on the master.

The master is not discharged from debts, which he gives his servant money to pay, if the servant keeps the money. Wayland's Case, 3 Salk. 234.

The master cannot escape liability for the negligence of his servant whom he has employed to remedy a defective vault, which results in the work being improperly done. Martin v. Richards (1892) 155 Mass. 381.

In a case where defendant's servants had contrary to his order left some timber, which he had directed them to move, in the street in front of his premises, so that it caused injury for which suit was brought, the court said: "The present case does not seem to call for the application of the rule under which a master is held responsible for the tortious acts of his servant done in violation of orders but rather for the consideration of the question whether or not a person who has ordered a certain thing to be done, the doing of which imposes on him the duty of seeing that something further is done, can escape responsibility for the non-performance of that duty by showing that he ordered his servant to perform it and his servant allowance of the amendment. The complaint alleged that the damage was done by the defendant, while the proof was that it was done by his servant. After the plaintiff rested, the defendant moved for a nonsuit on the ground of this variance, and the court permitted the plaintiff to amend his complaint in this respect. According to the record, the only objection made by the defendant was a general one to the allowance of the amendment, and the error assigned upon this point seems to relate wholly to the allowance of the amendment. Under the statute (sec. 1023) the court clearly had the discretionary power to allow the amendment, and the power, for aught that we can see, was very properly exercised. Santo v. Maynard, 57 Conn. 157. The real grievance of the defendant, however, upon this part of the case, as stated upon his brief, seems to be that he was not allowed time to demur to the amended complaint. Now, if we admit for argument's sake that the amended complaint was demurrable, there are two sufficient answers to this claim of the defendant. The first is that it is not fairly included in the assignments of error, and the second is that it nowhere appears that the defendant asked or offered to demur, or that his right to do so was questioned or denied by the court below.

There is no error in the judgment appealed from.

The other Judges concur.

neglected to do so. The removal of the timber from the street was a duty resting upon defendant personally which was negligently performed. The case comes within the familiar rule, that if one does or authorizes the doing of an act which causes a public nuisance, he becomes answerable in damages to those who suffer special injuries thereby." Driscoll v. Carlin (1887) 50 N. J. L. 23.

c. Liability for fraudulent and tortious acts.

The master is liable for the torts of the servant committed in the course of service. Denver South Park & P. R. Co. v. Conway (1884) 8 Colo. 1, 54 Am. Rep. 587.

A railroad company is liable for the wrongful act of its agent who through bribery or from motives of partiality or oppression gives unlawful preference to one shipper over another to the injury of the latter. Galena & C. U. R. Co. v. Rse (1857) 18 Ill. 488, 68 Am. Dec. 574.

A principal who is agent of forwarding merchants and entrusts his agent with the management of the business is responsible if his agent falsely represents to the merchants that certain advances have been made on shipments and draws to cover the amount and after the draft is honored misappropriates the proceeds. Swire v. Francis (1877) L. R. 3 App. Cas. 106, 47 L. J. P. C. 18.

A railroad company may be liable for the act of its watchman at a foot-bridge over its track who by frightening boys away from the bridge with a stick causes one of the boys to attempt to cross the tracks on a level, by reason of which he is injured. Clarke v. Midland R. Co. (1880) 43 L. T. N. S. 831.

If a master sends his servant to draw his lumber from a saw mill with directions to take the advice of the sawer as to its identity, he is liable to a third person in trespass if the servant either by mistake or misdirection of the sawer takes away lumber of such third person. May v. Bliss (1850) 22 Vt. 477.

Where the agent of an attorney, not knowing that the debt had been paid, entered up judgment and levied an execution to collect the debt, the court held that the creditor who had employed the attorney to collect the debt, and the attorney who had set his agent in motion, were liable for the trespass. Bates v. Pilling (1826) 6 Barn. & C. 38, 9 Dowl. & R. 44.

A railroad company is liable for the wrongful act of its baggageman in refusing to return trunks which he refused to check without the payment of extra fare and which the owner has decided not to send under those conditions, although he has sent them on board the train, and delay will ensue if he attempts to recall them. McCormick v. Pennsylvania Cent. R. Co. (1872) 49 N. Y. 308.

The owner of a boat which is accustomed to ply for hire, who employs a boatman to have charge of it is liable for the act of the latter in carrying a passenger over a course which conflicts with the 27 L. R. A.

ferry route of a third person if the fare is turned over to him although he did not authorize or know of the intention of the servant to carry the passenger. Huzzey v. Field (1885) 2 Cramp. M. & R. 432, 1 Gale, 166, 5 Tyrw. 855.

False bills of lading.

In accordance with the early doctrine that the master's liability must be limited as far as possible it was held that—

A master of a vessel signing a bill of lading for goods that had never been shipped is not to be considered as the agent of the owner in that behalf, so as to make the latter responsible to one who makes advances upon the faith of the bill. Grant v. Norway (1851) 10 C. B. 665, 20 L. J. C. P. 93, 15 Jur. 296.

The master of a vessel cannot charge the owners by signing bills of lading for greater amounts of goods than is put on board. Hubbersty v. Ward (1853) 8 Exch. 330, 22 L. J. Exch. 113.

The owner of a vessel is not liable for a greater amount than is actually received on board. McLean v. Fleming (1871) L. R. 2 H. L. Sc. 123, 25 L. T. N. S. 817.

The owner of a vessel is not liable upon a bill of lading signed by the ship's agent for a larger amount of goods than was shipped. Jessel v. Bath (1867) L. R. 2 Exch. 267, 36 L. J. Exch. 149, 15 Week. Rep. 1041.

Bills of lading are not conclusive upon the ship owner. Berkley v. Watling (1837) 7 Ad. & El. 38.

It is not, within the scope of the authority of the master to sign a bill of lading for goods not received. Sears v. Wingate (1861) 8 Allen, 100; Ryder v. Hall (1833) 7 Allen, 453.

The owner is not liable on a fraudulent bill of lading. Louisiana National Bank v. Lavielle (1873) 52 Mo. 380.

The master's bill of lading is not binding on the owner. Brown v. Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Co. (1875) L. R. 10 C. P. 562.

In The Freeman v. Buckingham (1855) 50 U. S. 19 How. 182, 15 L. ed. 841, the court held that the vessel being under the control of a special owner, the master was not the agent of the general owner so as to bind him by fraudulent bills of lading. But that case recognizes the doctrine of the English cases that he would not be bound by the fraud of the master in case he was not in fact his agent. The point decided in the Freeman Case was also decided in The Loon (1870) 7 Blatchf. 244, and in the subsequent case of Pollard v. Vinton (1881) 105 U. S. 7, 23 L. ed. 998, the question was distinctly raised and the authority of English cases recognized and followed.

And the effect of those decisions has been felt in the decisions upon the question of liability upon modern bills of lading.

Of course as between the original parties the

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Patrick Henry BOWLER

v.
Daniel O'CONNELL et al.

(.....Mass.....)

The scope of employment of a servant leading a colt from a water tub to a yard near by does not extend to an invitation to ride, given by him to a boy who is injured in attempting to accept it.

(October 24, 1894.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendants to rulings of the Superior Court for Hampden County, made during the trial of an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from negligence of defendants' servant, for which they were responsible. Sustained.

The evidence of the plaintiff tended to show that defendants owned a barn in which numerous horses were kept. That plaintiff, a lad near six years of age, went to the barn with one of the defendant's sons; that another son, Frank by name, started to lead a colt from the barn to the yard in which defendants' house stands, and that about that time the plaintiff started to return to his home, bill of lading is merely a receipt which may be explained by parol. The Lady Franklin (1869) 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 325, 19 L. ed. 455.

So there is no estoppel as between the parties. Dean v. King (1871) 22 Ohio St. 118; Kirkman v. Bowman (1844) 8 Rob. (La.) 248; Fearn v. Richardson (1857) 12 La. Ann. 753; Fellows v. The R. W. Powell (1851) 16 La. Ann. 316, 79 Am. Dec. 581.

And it has been held that a railroad company is not liable for the act of its station agent in issuing bills of lading for goods which have not been received although advances have been made on the faith of it. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Wilkens (1876) 44 Md. 11, 23 Am. Rep. 26. In that case the one issuing the bill was also the consignor.

A station agent of a railroad company does not act within his authority in issuing fraudulent bills of lading, so as to charge his principal with the loss to a third person caused by advancing money on such bills. Erb v. Great Western R. Co. (1877) 43 U. C. Q. B. 90; Oliver v. Great Western R. Co. (1877) 28 U. C. C. P. 143.

And the Erb Case was affirmed in 5 Can. Sup. Ct. 179. But in that case it appeared that the agent who issued the bill of lading was also interested as consignor.

And there had been a decision bearing somewhat in the opposite direction, in McLean v. Bufalo & L. H. R. Co. 28 U. C. Q. B. 448, 24 U. C. Q. B. 271.

A wharfinger is not liable for the act of his servant in giving a receipt for grain which has never been delivered at the wharf upon the faith of which the consignee advances money to the holder of the receipt. Coleman v. Riches (1855) 18 C. B. 104, 3 C. L. Rep. 796, 24 L. J. C. P. 125, 1 Jur. N. S. 596.

But those decisions have not proved entirely satisfactory and one court at least has seen fit to revise the reasoning by which it holds the bill of lading inconclusive.

The consignee cannot verify the signature of the carrier's agent but he is legally bound to know the signature of his regular correspondent and when he receives a bill of lading he honors the bill of exchange drawn against the shipment or makes the required advance not on any proof which the bill of lading affords him of its genuineness or of the authority of the person by whom it purports to have been signed, but upon the confidence which he reposes in the good faith of his correspondent, who must have perfect information as to its genuineness and the authority of the person by whom it is signed. Hunt v. Mississippi Cent. R. Co. (1877) 29 La. Ann. 446.

There may be enough elements in the case so that it is not really a question of master and servant. However, it has been decided that—lading furnished by its agent after a third person has advanced money on the faith of it, although the property represented by it has not been received. Wichita Sav. Bank v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1878) 20 Kan. 519.

A railroad company cannot contradict a bill of 37 L. R. A.

A railroad company whose agent issues bills of lading for property which has not been received will not be permitted to set up that fact against one who has made advances on the faith of them. Armour v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. (1875) 65 N. Y. 111, 23 Am. Rep. 603.

A railroad company cannot deny the validity of a receipt for goods given by its shipping clerk after a third person had advanced money on it, although the goods had never been received for shipment. Brooke v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1885) 108 Pa. 529, 56 Am. Rep. 235.

A railroad company whose agent has negligently executed two delivery orders for the same property will not be permitted to dispute the fact that there were two lots as against one who has made advances upon both. Coventry v. Great Eastern R. Co. (1883) L. R. 11 Q. B. Div. 776, 52 L. J. Q. B. 604.

A railroad company is bound by a fraudulent bill of lading on which advances have been made. Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. First Nat. Bank of Fremont (1880) 10 Neb. 556, 36 Am. Rep. 488.

A railroad company is estopped to deny the assertion contained in the bill of lading. Brooke v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1885) 108 Pa. 529, 56 Am. Rep. 235.

In Stone v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. (1881) 9 Ill. App. 48, where a bill of lading was issued to a person who did not own the property before it was received for shipment, and a third person advanced money on the faith of it, after which the true owner delivered the property for shipment and before it had reached the consignee brought replevin to recover possession of it, the court said the proceeds of the property can be applied to the payment of the debt and in this manner the wrong done to the one who cashed it can be repaired while the loss can properly be made to fall upon the railroad company whose agent seems to have been the only party through whose fault the fraud was permitted to be perpetrated.

In Dickson v. Seelye (1851) 12 Barb. 102, the master who signed the bill was himself the owner of the vessel.

The owner of a vessel who is in charge himself or by a super-cargo is not bound upon contracts clandestinely made with the master. Walter v. Brewer (1814) 11 Mass. 99.

Distrain for rent.

A landlord who authorizes a broker to distrain for rent due is liable for the act of the broker in when Frank called out to him asking if he would like a ride on the colt, and upon his replying in the affirmative, Frank said, "Come along and I will give you a ride," and that he ran towards the colt and upon reaching it the colt kicked, striking him and inflicting the injuries complained of.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. T. B. O'Donnell and George D. Robinson, for defendants:

If plaintiff went into the defendants' yard without any proper person looking out for him and while following the colt he was hurt, there was contributory negligence as to him sufficient to defeat in law his action.

The custodian of the plaintiff for the time being either let him go into danger, or voluntarily exposed him, or left him without any care at all.

Wright v. Malden & M. R. Co. 4 Allen, 283; Callahan v. Bean, 9 Allen, 401; Lovett v. Salem & S. D. R. Co. 9 Allen, 557; Mulligan v. Curtis, 100 Mass. 512; Lynch v. Smith, 104

Mass. 52; Gibbons v. Williams, 135 Mass. 833; O'Connor v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 125 Mass. 352; Messenger v. Dennie, 137 Mass. 197, 50 Am. Rep. 295; Grant v. Fitchburg, 160 Mass. 16; McGeary v. Eastern R. Co. 135 Mass. 363; Collins v. South Boston R. Co. 142 Mass. 301, 56 Am. Rep. 675; Marland v. Murray, 148 Mass. 91; Slattery v. O'Connell, 10 L. R. A. 653, 153 Mass. 94; Brown v. Sherer, 155 Mass. 83; Creed v. Kendall, 156 Mass. 291.

The question arises wholly under the law of master and servant.

Yates v. Squires, 19 Iowa, 26, 87 Am. Dec. 418.

The court erred in instructing the jury that it was competent for the jury to find the action of said Frank to be negligent, and such negligence to be within the scope of his employment.

Hove v. Newmarch, 12 Allen, 49; Heenrich v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 20 Fed. Rep. 100.

The mere fact that a tortious act is com-making an excessive or unlawful levy. Gauntlett v. King (1857) 3 C. B. N. S. 69.

A landlord is liable for irregularities of a broker in proceedings to sell goods which he has rightly distrained on the leased property. Haselet v. Le-moyne (1858) 23 L. J. C. P. 108.

But a landlord is not liable for the acts of bailiffs in distraining goods for rent upon property of a person other than the tenant unless he expressly authorizes it or adopts the benefit. Lewis v. Read (1845) 13 Mees. & W. 384, 14 L. J. Exch. 295.

d. Limitation of scope of employment.

There was a strong tendency among the early cases to limit the liability of the master to cases in which the act was expressly commanded by him. This was accomplished by holding that in the language of the Delaware court: "A master is liable only for such acts of his servant as are done within the scope of his authority." Higgins v. Chesapeake & D. Canal Co. (1842) 3 Harr. (Del.) 411.

And then to confine the scope of authority within the narrowest limits. In the language of one of the earliest cases: "If I command my servant to do what is lawful and he misbehaves himself, or do more, I shall not answer for my servant but my servant for himself, for that it was his own act, otherwise it were in the power of every servant to subject his master to what action or penalties he pleased." Kingston v. Booth (1688) Skin. 223.

That reasoning receives little recognition at the present day. The master is and should be regarded as the responsible person when he is seeking to avoid the necessity of doing a particular thing himself, by taking advantage of another's services. It is entirely for the master's benefit that the servant is employed and third persons have the right to hold him responsible. Of course, he is not liable for acts done outside of the particular service for which he substituted the agent in his place.

And if the consequence of misconduct will be serious the master has the alternative of doing the work himself or of employing a responsible servant who can answer over to him for his misconduct. Most of the cases arise out of the employment of persons wholly unfit for the duties that are placed upon them.

In Middleton v. Fowler (1899) 18 Lk. 232, in which the owner of a stage-coach was held not liable for the loss of a trunk by the carelessness of the servant L. R. A.

ant because the master did not undertake to carry trunks, Lord Holt said, no master is chargeable with the acts of his servant, but when he acts in execution of authority given by his master, and then the act of the servant is the act of the master.

As shown in the authorities cited supra, this doctrine was short lived, but it had its effect in giving a bent to a line of decisions upon the subject, which it has been difficult to overcome, and the long line of cases has been the fruitful source of an unsettled discussion as to what is within the scope of authority rather than what was the master's duty to society in view of the character of the work which he wished to do by a servant.

General agents.

Proprietors of gas works are liable for the acts of their superintendent in casting refuse into a river in such a way as to constitute a nuisance, although they do not know that he is doing so and the plan pursued by him is a departure from the original plan adopted by them. Rex v. Medley (1834) 6 Car. & P. 232.

Where under the advice of the manager of a bank, money was placed in his hands for investment as the representative of the bank, and he absconded with it, the court held the bank liable on the ground that the manager of the bank is a person appointed to conduct the entire business, and if business is transacted with him as the representative of the bank, the bank is held liable. Thompson v. Bell (1864) 10 Exch. 10, 2 C. L. Rep. 1212, 23 L. J. Exch. 321.

But a general agent having charge of a mill with authority to keep it in repair, lease it and collect rent, will not render the owner liable for making excavations in the bed of the stream whereby water is wrongfully diverted from the wheel of another mill. Stokney v. Munroe (1837) 44 Me. 195.

So the managers of a sewage farm are not liable for the acts of their manager which constituted a trespass on adjoining property done while he was deepening a brook for the purpose of getting better drainage upon the farm. Bollingbroke v. Swindon New Town Local Board of Health (1874) 43 L. J. C. P. 237, L. R. 9 C. P. 575, 30 L. T. N. S. 723, 23 Week. Rep. 47.

More excess of authority.

In Lucas v. Mason (1875) L. R. 10 Exch. 251, 44 L. J. Exch. 145, 33 L. T. N. S. 13, 23 Week. Rep. 924, the court in deciding that the chairman of a public meeting was not liable for the acts of officers in mitted by a servant while he is actually engaged in the performance of the service he has been employed to render cannot make the master liable.

Snyder v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 60 Mo. 418; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. pp. 626 et seq.; Buswell, Personal Injury, pp. 44 et seq. and notes; Roberts & Wallace, Liability of Employers, 84, 85; Shearn, & Redf. Neg. §§ 62-64, and notes; Whart. Neg. § 164; Pollock, Torts, p. 74; Blahop, Non-Cont. L. § 612; Addison, Torts, p. 106; 2 Thomp. Neg. p. 885; Bigelow's Lead. Cas. Torts, p. 85, and notes; 2 Kent, Com. p. 280; Wood, Mast. & S. §§ 281 et seq., and notes.

Frank's invitation was not in the line of his employment; it did not pertain to his duties, but was wholly outside of them.

Walton v. New York Cent. Sleeping Car Co. 189 Mass. 556; Smith v. Spits, 156 Mass. 319; Storey v. Ashton, L. R. 4 Q. B. 476; Yates v. Squires, 19 Iowa, 26, 87 Am. Dec. 418; Meehan v. Morewood, 52 Hun, 566; Farber v.

Missouri Pac. R. Co. 82 Mo. App. 378; Davis v. Houghtelin, 14 L. R. A. 737, 88 Neb. 532.

If the act be done while the servant is at liberty from the service and pursuing his own ends exclusively the master is not responsible.

Golden v. Newbrand, 52 Iowa, 59, 85 Am. Rep. 257; Keith v. Lynch, 19 Ill. App. 574; Clerk & Lindsell, Torts, p. 54.

When the servant does something he is not employed to do at all the master is not responsible.

Chicago City R. Co. v. Mogk, 44 Ill. App. 17; Aramisith v. Temple, 11 Ill. App. 89; Innes, Torts, pp. 58-62, citing Lamb v. Park, 9 Car. & P. 629; Stephenson v. Southern Pacific Co. 15 L. R. A. 475, 98 Cal. 558; Sleath v. Wilson, 9 Car. & P. 607; Woodman v. Joiner, 10 Jur. N. S. 852; Campbell v. Providence, 9 R. I. 262; Wilson v. Peverly, 2 N. H. 548.

As to invitation to children to ride or expose themselves to danger, when master not assaulting a person whom they thought to be disturbing the peace, said that where the relation of master and servant exists, the former is liable for the tortious acts of the latter, wherever they are such as come within the scope of the servant's general duty, although in doing the particular act complained of, he may exceed his authority, providing that what he does is in the honest belief that he is executing his master's orders.

Effect of holding agent out as having authority.

Where a certificate of deposit was given to an express agent to be forwarded for renewal, and he collected the amount and failed to return it, the express company was held liable on the ground that the agent was employed in this character of business and so "was held out as a person authorized and fully to be trusted therein." Dougherty v. Wells (1872) 7 Nev. 363.

Illustrations of scope of employment.

In Foster v. Essex Bank (1881) 17 Mass. 479, 9 Am. Dec. 163, the court in deciding that a bank is not liable for the loss of a special deposit by the fraud or theft of its cashier, says: "No one will suppose if my servant commits a fraud relative to a subject that does not concern his duty toward me, that I should be civilly answerable for such fraud. If I send him to market and he steps into a shop and steals or upon false pretences cheats the shopkeeper of his goods, I think all mankind would agree that I am not answerable for the goods he may thus unlawfully acquire." "There can be liability only when the servant is, when committing the fraud, acting in the business of his master. If the servant steps out of his employment to do a wrong towards another, the master is no more answerable than any stranger. The cases of innkeepers, common carriers, and perhaps ship masters when goods are embezzled, are exceptions to the general rule founded on public policy."

Where a lighterman sent with plaintiff's boat to a certain wharf to be unloaded, moved a boat which he found moored there and fastened it where it was injured by the changing tide, the owner of the boat was held liable because the servant was acting within the course of his employment. Page v. DeFries, 7 Best & S. 137.

The act of a fireman in throwing a burning stick of wood from the engine into dry grass at the side of the track causing fire and injury, is within the scope of his employment where it appears that firemen frequently throw out wood which is found to be too large for the fire box of the engine. Spaulding v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1878) 83 Wis. 582.

Where a railroad company carried some plants and the station master at the point of destination permitted them to be set in the ground for a short time until the consignee should be ready for them, and when he called for them, he refused to permit them to be taken, the court held that he was acting within the scope of his authority and that the railroad company was liable for the conversion. Giles v. Taff Vale R. Co. (1883) 3 El. & Bl. 822.

A bank is responsible for the act of its cashier in paying money to one who believes it to be in payment of a debt, whereas the cashier makes it a loan by requiring signature to a check which the receiver takes to be a receipt for the money. Foster v. Green (1863) 31 L. J. Exch. 153.

A clerk in the cloak-room of a railroad station who takes parcels to the trains for passengers when there is no other porter there, is acting within the scope of his employment, in returning from the train, so as to render the company liable for his negligence in running against a third person causing injury. Milner v. Great Northern R. Co. (1884) 50 L. T. N. S. 367.

One paying money to a clerk for the master may hold the master responsible in case the proper credit is not given. Cary v. Webster (1722) 1 Strange, 450.

An action lies against a goldsmith in case his apprentice takes the stones out of a piece of jewelry shown him to ascertain the value of it and refuses to return them. Armory v. Delamirie (1723) 1 Strange, 506.

An action will lie against the master in case of the refusal of his servant to return gold given him in the course of his business to assay. Mead v. Hammond (1722) 1 Strange, 505.

The master is liable if a section foreman in returning home from work with his crew, to avoid an obstruction on the road, transfers his car to the track of another company and inflicts injury on an employé of the latter while running the car on its track. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Kirk (1885) 102 Ind. 390, 33 Am. Rep. 675.

A master who instructs his servant to go to a certain place and kill a beef is liable, if the servant goes to the place and in good faith kills an animal belonging to a third person. Maler v. Randolph (1885) 33 Kan. 240.

Where a servant was instructed to drive some cattle back to cars from which they had escaped liable, see Snyder v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 60 Mo. 413; Plotter v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 69 Pa. 210, 8 Am. Rep. 251; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Duickins, 77 Tex. 228; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Cusey, 9 Ill. App. 632; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Michie, 83 Ill. 427.

Defendants were under no obligation to take care of him, though they could not maliciously or recklessly hurt him. If he put himself into danger without their knowledge or fault, he must bear his injury alone.

Daniels v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 13 L. R. A. 248, 164 Mass. 349; Sullivan v. Boston & A. R. Co. 156 Mass. 378; McGuinness v. Butler, 159 Mass. 233; Gay v. Essex Electric Street R. Co. 21 L. R. A. 448, 159 Mass. 238; Mergenthaler v. Kirby (Md.) March 14, 1894.

Mr. William H. Brooks for plaintiff.

Allen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In determining the legal question which and he without leave took the horse of a third person to assist him in the work and the horse was injured, the master was held liable for the injury. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Randall (1888) 40 Kan. 421.

A servant engaged to deliver flour and feed, who to facilitate his delivery, so that he could get through sooner, to do some work for himself, leaves some bags by the side of the road while he delivers others, is acting within the scope of his employment, so as to render his master liable for injuries caused by the frightening of horses caused by the bags. Phelon v. Stiles (1876) 43 Conn. 428.

A servant employed to peddle goods for his master who injures a third person while driving to the store to get goods is within the scope of his employment, so as to render the master liable for the injury. Shea v. Reems (1894) 36 La. Ann. 968.

A servant employed to do general farm work is acting within the scope of his employment in driving cows out of the corn so that the master will be liable in case he hits one of them with a stone and kills it. Evans v. Davidson (1879) 53 Md. 245, 38 Am. Rep. 400.

A saloon keeper is liable for the act of his bartender in ejecting an intoxicated person from the saloon in a reckless and negligent manner. Brazil v. Peterson (1890) 44 Minn. 212.

The owner of a public carriage in charge of a servant whose duty is to carry passengers for hire is liable for a negligent injury by the servant to one whom he has invited to ride free. Siegrist v. Arnot (1881) 10 Mo. App. 201.

A street-railway company is liable for injuries caused by its driver's negligence to a child, which he has invited to ride without payment of anything for the privilege. Wilton v. Middlesex R. Co. (1871) 107 Mass. 108, 9 Am. Rep. 11.

Where the agent of a corporation in executing an order of the corporation to remove a boy from its premises, did it with such violence and in such a careless and wanton manner as to inflict an unjustifiable personal injury upon the boy ordered to be taken and removed, the company may be held liable. Hewett v. Swift (1882) 3 Allen. 420.

A servant sent to get certain cattle from a pasture is acting within the scope of his employment in searching for them in the vicinity, if he does not find them in the pasture so that he will render the master liable in case he takes cattle of a third person by mistake from an adjoining lot. Andrus v. Howard (1863) 36 Vt. 248, 84 Am. Dec. 680.

A master is liable for hay taken to feed a team 27 L. R. A.

is presented, we must assume that the jury adopted the plaintiff's view as to the circumstances attending the accident, and the testimony in contradiction thereof may be disregarded. With reference to this aspect of the case, the defendants asked an instruction to the jury that they were not responsible for the acts of Frank O'Connell, in his invitation to the plaintiff to take a ride upon the colt. The jury, however, were instructed that if Frank O'Connell was the servant of the defendants in leading the colt from the stable to the defendants' yard, and while so leading the colt the plaintiff was invited by Frank to ride, and was injured as he was going forward to accept the invitation, it would be competent for the jury to find that such invitation was within the scope of the employment of Frank; and, again, that if while Frank was leading the colt along or across the sidewalk, or in the yard of the defendants, as the servant of the defendants, and while so leading the colt, in which he has intrusted to his servant without making any provisions for its sustenance. Potulni v. Saunders (1887) 37 Minn. 517.

Where the general manager of defendant, a horse dealer, had a horse and gig of his own which he sometimes used about the master's business, and negligently injured a third person while driving his horse to collect a debt due the master, and afterwards to see his own doctor, it was held that at the time of the accident he was engaged in the master's business so as to render him liable for the injury. Patten v. Rea (1887) 40 Eng. L. & Eq. 329, 3 C. B. N. S. 606, 26 L. J. C. P. 235, 8 Jur. N. S. 862.

Where a servant of a railroad company whose duty was to remedy anything which he saw amiss at any time about the track, after the regular working hours, for a purpose of his own took down some bars leading on to the track which he left down and plaintiff's horses went through them and were killed, the company was held liable on the ground that his duty required him to replace the bars no matter how they got down and his failure to do so was negligence for which the company was responsible. Chapman v. New York Cent. R. Co. (1865) 33 N. Y. 389, 38 Am. Dec. 302 (1860) 31 Barb. 309.

A line-man of a telegraph company having authority to remove trees which he regards as dangerous to the line will render the company liable for a trespass in cutting trees on the property of third persons which he regards as dangerous. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Satterfield (1889) 24 Ill. App. 386.

A servant authorized to test a boiler to a pressure of 150 pounds has not so far departed from his authority when he tests it to 200 pounds, that his master will not be liable for the injuries caused by an explosion before the 200-pound mark is passed. Ochsenbein v. Shapley (1881) 85 N. Y. 214.

The owner of a ferry-boat is liable for the result of a collision caused by the effort of those in charge of the boat to put a boatman on a boat in the middle of the river although the employees had no general power further than to carry passengers and freight across the river from shore to shore. Quinn v. Power (1832) 87 N. Y. 535, 41 Am. Rep. 392, reversing (1879) 17 Hun, 102.

It is within the scope of the service of a farm hand employed by the month, who is directed to summer-fallow a piece of ground, to cut and remove the brush therefrom, and the master will be liable for injuries caused by fire set by him to the brush. Simons v. Monier (1856) 23 Barb. 419.

A servant who is sent to get bags of paper shavthe line of his duty, he, with his own accord, and without the knowledge or authority of, or direction from, the defendants, invited the plaintiff to ride upon the horse, and while the plaintiff was attempting to go forward to accept the invitation of Frank he was injured, it was competent for the jury to find the action of Frank to be negligent, and such negligence to be within the scope of his employment.

The correctness of these instructions is to be determined with reference to the testimony in the case. The colt, it would seem, was about two years and nine months old. It was not harnessed into a wagon, but the boy Frank, who must be assumed to have been in the defendants' employment, was leading it from the watering tub to its stall, or to some other place. The defendants were contractors and excavators, and owned many teams. There was nothing to show that it was any part of their business, or that it was their habit or custom, to furnish horses or colts to ride, or to allow boys to ride upon them, or that they in any way ever authorized or permitted Frank to do this. Under this state of things, we are unable to see how the invitation by Frank to the plaintiff to ride upon the colt, although given while Frank was engaged in his employment, can be considered to be an act done in the course of such employment, or for the purpose of doing the business of his masters. The true test of liability on the part of the defendants is this: Was the invitation given in the course of doing their work, and for the purpose of accomplishing it? Was this act done for the purpose or as a means of doing what Frank was employed to do? If not, then in respect to that act he was not in the course of the defendant's business. Snyder v. Hannibal & St. & J. R. Co. 60 Mo. 413, 419; Morier v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 31 Minn. 351, 47 Am. Rep. 798; Davis v. Houghtelin, 33 Neb. 582, 14 L. R. A. 737. An act done by a servant while engaged in his master's work, but not ings from a building, who undertakes to guard the entrance to the building while the bags are thrown through a hatch from an upper story, is acting within the scope of his employment, so that his neglect to warn one about to enter the building will render his master liable if injury is caused by such neglect. Post v. Stockwell (1887) 44 Hun, 28.

A master is liable for the act of his servant in placing dynamite given him to blast with, in a blacksmith shop, to preserve it from the rain. Birmingham Water Works Co. v. Hubbard (1888) 85 Ala. 173.

A fireman left to "watch" a standing engine is acting within the scope of his employment in letting off steam so as to charge the master with liability in case injury is done by his doing it so negligently as to frighten horses standing near. Andrews v. Mason City & Ft. D. R. Co. (1889) 77 Iowa, 606.

A master may be liable for the act of his servant sent to haul certain supplies in taking a part of a wagon, the property of a third person, to enable him to reach his destination, upon the breaking of the wagon which he is using. Walker v. Johnson (1881) 23 Minn. 147.

In removing to a place of safety a person who has been injured by collision with a train, the employees of a railroad company are acting within the scope of their employment, and if they negligently place him without assistance in a shed and look him in erroneously believing him to be dead, in consequence of which he dies, the company will be liable. Northern Cent. R. Co. v. State (1888) 29 Md. 430, 98 Am. Dec. 545.

The principal is answerable for the acts of the agent with general authority to collect accounts in foreclosing a mortgage and taking possession of property in violation of the rights of a third person. Byne v. Hatcher (1885) 75 Ga. 286.

Where the conductor of a freight train left it standing in such a way as to obstruct access to a station and upon a person's approaching it to go to the station directed him to pass under the train in attempting to do which the person was injured by the starting of the train, the court held the company liable, saying that while it was true that he was acting outside of the scope of his authority in directing one to pass under the train yet he had wrongfully obstructed the passway to the depot. It was his duty to have opened his train and failing to do so, he undertook to perform his duty in another mode by directing deceased to pass under the end of the car. But even if not so endeavoring, he was engaged in the performance of his duty to the company and was in this matter not so acting as though engaged in his own private affairs. Although injury resulted from an act he was not required by the company to perform it was connected with the business of the company and in the performance of which he was engaged. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Sykes (1880) 96 Ill. 175.

Acts held not to be within scope of employment.

A tenant is not liable for the burning of the leased house by reason of his servant's using some furze and straw to burn out the soot from the chimney, if it was no part of the servant's duty to clean the chimney, which services were usually done by a carpenter and mason. McKenzie v. McLeod (1884) 10 Bing. 385, 4 Moore & S. 249.

A master is not liable for injuries caused by a servant whom he has sent on an errand without providing him with a horse, by riding against a third person with a horse which he has procured on his own responsibility to carry him on his journey. Goodman v. Kennell (1827) 3 Car. & P. 167, 1 Moore & P. 241.

A solicitor will not be liable for the act of his clerk in leaving the water running in a lavatory in the solicitor's private apartments, where the clerk has no right to be, but where he has gone for purposes of his own. Stevens v. Woodward (1881) L. R. 6 Q. B. Div. 318, 50 L. J. Q. B. 231, 44 L. T. N. S. 153, 29 Week. Rep. 506, 45 J. P. 603.

The scope of employment of a servant leading a colt from a water tub to a yard near by does not extend to an invitation to ride given by him to a boy who is injured in attempting to accept it. Bowler v. O'Connell, ante, 183.

In an action of trespass for making roads across plaintiff's land, in making charcoal on defendant's land, and transporting it to his furnace, the court says to render the master liable for a trespass committed by the servant, it is necessary to show that the acts were done while the servant was acting under the authority of the master, and since it was not shown that the master knew of or assented to the making of the roads, he was not liable. Church v. Mansfield (1850) 20 Conn. 284.

A street-car company is not liable for the act of its driver in striking with his whip at a boy which results in the boy's becoming entangled in the whip and thrown under the car. Ryan v. Hudson River R. Co. (1871) 1 Jones & S. 139.

A street-car driver is not within the line of his employment in striking with the lines at a boy near done as a means or for the purpose of performing that work, is not to be deemed the act of the master. And under this rule, in view of the testimony, the defendants were not responsible for the consequences of Frank's invitation to the plaintiff to ride upon the colt. Howe v. Newmarch, 12 Allen, 49; Hawks v. Charlemont, 107 Mass. 414; Haves v. Knowles, 114 Mass. 518, 19 Am. Rep. 383; Levi v. Brooks, 121 Mass. 501; George v. Gobe, 128 Mass. 290, 35 Am. Rep. 376; Wallace v. Merrimack River Nav. & Exp. Co. 134 Mass. 95, 45 Am. Rep. 801; Walton v. New York Cent. Sleeping Car Co. 139 Mass. 556; Young v. South Boston Ice Co. 150 Mass. 537; Mitchell v. Crassweller, 18 C. B. 237; Croft v. Alison, 4 Barn. & Ald. 590; Limpus v. London General Omnibus Co. 1 Hurlst. &

C. 526; Barwick v. English Joint Stock Bank, L. R. 2 Exch. 259, 265; Storey v. Ashton, L. R. 4 Q. B. 476; British Mut. Bkg. Co. v. Charwood Forest R. Co. L. R. 18 Q. B. Div. 714.

There may be cases where injuries result from accepting unauthorized invitations to ride which do not fall within the above rule, and are to be distinguished. Such cases may be found in the books, and need not be considered here, the circumstances being different. Under the circumstances disclosed in the present case, it was not competent for the jury to find that the invitation given to the plaintiff to ride was within the scope of Frank's employment, and for this reason there must be a new trial.

Exceptions sustained.

the car, so as to render the company liable for injuries inflicted by such act. Chicago City R. Co. v. Mogk (1882) 44 Ill. App. 17.

Where the delivery clerk on a wharf whose business was to take receipts for goods that were taken away for the purpose of getting a view of another part of the wharf, from where he was standing because some goods had been stolen on the previous day and he wished to watch the action of certain persons who were there, pushed over a bale of cotton which had been left standing, thereby inflicting injury on a third person, it was held that he was not acting within the scope of his authority so as to render the master liable. Courtney v. Baker (1874) 5 Jones & S. 255.

But that case was reversed on appeal on the ground that it is difficult to say that a delivery clerk, whose function was to see that the proper goods were delivered to the proper parties, was traveling outside of the scope of his duty in observing whether or not the goods were being stolen when he suspected that they were. But that at all events since the clerk was testifying in the interests of his employer, the jury were not bound to believe his testimony as to the motive that led him to throw down the bale of cotton. Courtney v. Baker (1875) 60 N. Y. 1.

A fireman has no authority to request a boy to assist him in filling the tank of the engine with water so that he will render the company liable for injury to the boy while attempting to comply with the request. Flower v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1871) 60 Pa. 210, 8 Am. Rep. 251.

A railroad company is not liable for the acts of its conductor in forcing a boy by means of threats to go between and uncouple cars for the purpose of aiding the conductor in his work, since the conductor's act is a willful, malicious trespass outside and beyond the scope of his authority and his line of duty. New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Harrison (1873) 48 Miss. 112, 12 Am. Rep. 366.

A railroad company is not liable for the act of its engineer in running his engine which belonged to a construction train out on the main track at night for the purpose of carrying a coffin for the accommodation of a third person when in running the engine at that time he is acting against express orders of the company. New York, T. & M. R. Co. v. Sutherland (1886) 3 Willson Civ. Cas. (Tex.) § 140, p. 177.

In an action for damages for shooting through a tin ventilator the court said the defendant was not responsible for the act unless what he said and did justified an understanding by the agent that he wished it done or induced the act. Rich v. Jakway (1854) 18 Barb. 367.

One who employs a detective to find property of his judgment debtor on which execution can be levied is not liable for the act of the detective in causing the arrest of the debtor on the charge of illegally selling lottery tickets if the creditor did not know of or authorize the arrest. Riboux v. Mayer Bros. (1877) 29 La. Ann. 823.

The superintendent of a mill has no implied authority to institute suits to recover property wrongfully taken from the mill, and the owners will not be liable for his act in instituting such suit which results in the arrest of a person into whose hands the property is traced. Pinkerton v. Gilbert (1887) 22 Ill. App. 563.

Where laborers engaged in erecting a telephone line were instructed to cut poles only on the right of way which was clearly defined, but they negligently or willfully cut them from the adjoining land, the master was held not liable, the court saying: "These laborers were the mere sentient tools of the company authorized by the character of their employment to exercise no discretion or judgment, but were simply charged with the performance of the physical labor necessary to the execution of the instructions of their superior." Fairchild v. New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. (1883) 60 Miss. 381, 45 Am. Rep. 427.

Where in order to drive some of the crew of a boat away from where part of the cargo consisting of whiskey was stowed, the mate threw a pine knot and hit one of the men injuring him, the owner of the boat was held not liable, because it was no part of the mate's duty to guard the whiskey or to throw pine knots from the boiler deck to the main deck. Dyer v. Biele (1876) 23 La. Ann. 6.

Where the servant was sent to drive cattle out of a field and after getting them out he proceeded to drive them along a lane, the court held that when they were over the borders of the field, the scope of the employment ceased, and that the master was not liable for injuries inflicted afterwards. Oxford v. Peter (1863) 23 Ill. 434.

Where a servant was sent to remove a vessel from a wharf into the stream and after placing and mooring it there, he took the vessel's boat to return to the shore and abandoned it so that it floated away and was lost to the owner, the court held that when he had finished mooring the vessel his employment ceased and the acts done afterwards did not render his master liable. Brown v. Purviance (1828) 2 Harr. & G. 316.

One who hires a shed for the purpose of having a sign board made in it is not liable to the owner in case the shed is burned by the carpenter employed to make the sign-board, who in attempting to light his pipe drops fire among the shavings, since lighting the pipe is no part of the duty for which the carpenter is hired. Williams v. Jones (1895) 3 Hurlst. & C. 603, 11 Jur. N. S. 842, 13 L. T. N. S. 509, 19

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, FIFTH CIRCUIT.

TEXAS & PACIFIC R. CO., Pff. in Err.,
v.
P. A. SCOVILLE.

(63 Fed. Rep. 730.)

The engineer and fireman in charge of a railroad locomotive are acting within the scope of their employment in blowing the whistle wantonly and maliciously to frighten a horse which a person is driving near the track, so as to render the company liable for injuries to the driver.

(May 23, 1894.)

Week. Rep. 1083, affg. S. C. sub nom. Woodman v. Joiner, 10 Jur. N. S. 582, 11 L. T. N. S. 109, 38 L. J. Exch. 297, 8 Hurlst. & C. 254.

In some of the latter cases the scope of the servant's employment seems to be unduly limited. The hirer of a shed certainly has some duty to care for it, and if he places a servant in charge of it that duty rests upon the servant for a neglect of which the hirer will be liable. So it seems strange that a servant sent to do an act in the middle of a river should be compelled to abandon his service in midstream with no means of returning to land.

Servant in charge of horse.

It would seem that the same rule should apply to this subject as to any other case of entrusting a servant with a dangerous agency. And such seems to have been the opinion of some of the judges.

If a servant having in charge his master's horse and proceeding on his master's business, goes out of his way for a purpose of his own even against the master's implied command, the master will be liable. Joel v. Morison (1834) 6 Car. & P. 501.

One who entrusts a horse and wagon to another generally to get such business as he can, is liable for the negligence of the servant at a time when after delivering a trunk he attempts to bring home a load of poles for himself on the return journey. Mulvehill v. Bates (1884) 31 Minn. 364, 47 Am. Rep. 798.

Where the statutes make the proprietor and driver of a cab sustain to each other the relation of master and servant, the master is liable for injuries caused by the reckless driving of the driver in returning to the stables, although after he has set down his last passenger, he goes a quarter of a mile out of his way, to get some snuff at a tobacconist, since the cab is entrusted to the driver to use entirely at his discretion, provided he uses it properly and returns it to the stables when the day's work is over. Venables v. Smith (1877) L. R. 2 Q. B. Div. 279, 46 L. J. Q. B. 470, 36 L. T. N. S. 509, 25 Week. Rep. 584.

Whoever drives a horse in a thoroughfare owes the duty of due care to the community or to all persons whom his negligence may expose to injury, nor is it open to question that the master in such case is responsible for the misconduct of his servant. McDonald v. Snelling (1867) 14 Allen, 290, 32 Am. Dec. 768.

Whenever the master has entrusted the servant with the control of his carriage it is no answer to an action for injuries caused by the servant's carelessness, that the servant acted improperly in the management of it, or that he went out of the prescribed course for purposes of his own. The master in such case will be liable on the ground that he put it into the servant's power to mismanage the carriage by entrusting him with it. Sleath v. Wil-
37 L. R. A.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Texas, to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from negligence for which defendant was responsible. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. T. J. Freeman for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. C. C. Leverett and R. C. De Graffenried for defendant in error.

McCormick, Circuit Judge, delivered the following opinion:

P. A. Scoville, the defendant in error, son (1889) 9 Car. & P. 607, sub nom. Heath v. Wilson, 2 Mood. & R. 181; Rayner v. Mitchell (1877) L. R. 3 C. P. Div. 357, 25 Week. Rep. 683.

But in a subsequent case where one who had been sent to deliver goods on the return persuaded the driver to drive to his house, and while on the way damage was done, the chief justice says: "I cannot adopt the proposition in Sleath v. Wilson, that wherever the master has entrusted the servant with the control of the carriage it is no answer that the servant had acted improperly in the management of it. I think that a servant can only be said to be acting in the employment of his master so long as he is doing some act with his master's assent. I think that if the driver while acting in his master's business were to make a slight deviation in order to carry some business of his own into effect in such a case the master might be liable, and that the question would be as regards the extent of the deviation. But this is not the present case; here the man starts upon an entirely independent journey which has nothing to do with that which he undertook on behalf of his master." Storey v. Ashton (1890) 38 L. J. Q. B. 223, L. R. 4 Q. B. 476, 17 Week. Rep. 727. In that case the accident took place two miles out of the way which the master's journey required the servant to take.

No rule can be satisfactory in which the master's liability is made to depend on the extent of the deviation. There is no solid foundation upon which it can be placed. With regard to a thing so capable of doing injury if improperly managed as a horse and wagon the master's liability should depend upon the power entrusted to the servant. If he is entrusted with the care of the horse generally the master should be responsible for his misuse of the trust no matter under what circumstances it arises. If the servant is entrusted with the horse for a particular journey or during a certain portion of the day the master should be responsible for the use made of it until it is returned to the master unless in the exceptional cases where the servant has abandoned the intention of returning it. Any other principle of decision can but lead to conflicting cases, as will appear from the cases collected, infra.

Horse taken without master's knowledge or assent.

Of course if the master's horse is taken by the servant for purposes of his own, the master is not liable for injuries caused by it on the journey. Maddox v. Brown (1880) 71 Me. 432, 36 Am. Rep. 336.

So a farmer is not liable for the negligence of a servant who has taken one of his horses to go to a railroad station to meet a friend in leaving the horse unsecurely hitched by reason of which it ran away causing injury. Way v. Powers (1894) 87 Vt. 125.

brought this action against the Texas & Pacific Railway Company, the plaintiff in error, to recover damages for injuries he claimed to have received from the willful and wanton misconduct of its servants while engaged in its business. The part of his pleading pertinent to the questions raised on this writ of error is as follows:

"Plaintiff, for cause of action, alleges that on the 2d day of May, 1891, he was riding on horseback (returning home from Longview, Texas) along a public road running parallel with said railway of defendant company (said road on which plaintiff was so riding on horseback being about twenty-five yards south of said railway), and that defendant company, its agents and employes, knew or could have known of the existence of said public road, and its proximity to said defendant company's railway, the same having been used by the traveling public for the period of fifteen years for travel, and in full view of said railway company's agents and employes; that immediately south of the road on which plaintiff was riding was a fence; that while plaintiff was passing along said road, as above set forth and described, the place on said road on which he was riding as above indicated being about one fourth of a mile from said town of Longview Junction, a point on said railway, a train of cars in charge of, and under the control of, the agents and employes of defendant company, while coming east from said Longview Junction, while nearing the plaintiff, and when directly opposite the plaintiff, the agents and employes of the defendant company, with the intention to frighten plaintiff's horse, commenced, and continued until some distance beyond plaintiff, to blow the whistle of the engine of said train of cars in a manner more calculated to frighten and render unmanageable horses and other domesticated animals; that the manner of blowing said whistle at the time and the place above mentioned was not called for nor demanded by

A farmer is not liable for the negligence of his servant in the care of a horse which he has borrowed to take himself and some other persons to a fair in an adjoining village. Bard v. Yohn (1856) 26 Pa. 482.

The owner of a hack is not liable for the violation of a city ordinance by his day driver who has taken the hack for his own use in the night-time. Campbell v. Providence (1890) 9 R. I. 232.

If the servant takes his master's horse for purposes of his own not being at the time on the master's business, the master is not liable for injuries caused by his careless driving, nor is the master liable if the servant lends the horse to another without authority, by whom the injuries are caused. Joel v. Morison (1834) 6 Car. & P. 501.

5 Mews' Digest, p. 264, states that where a servant borrowed his master's horse to go on an errand of his own and promised to do an errand for the master also, to which the master assented, and drove so negligently that he inflicted an injury on plaintiff, the court refused to hold, as matter of law, that the master was responsible. Cornick v. Digby, 9 Ir. C. L. Rep. 557.

Where a servant whose duty was to deliver beer and bring back empty kegs took the horse and cart for purposes of his own and after accomplishing his object, picked up two empty kegs from a customer which he took back with him, the court held that he had not returned to his employment so as to render his master liable for injuries caused by his negligent driving. Rayner v. Mitchell (1877) L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 337, 25 Week. Rep. 633.

Horse placed in servant's charge.

Where an employe engaged to drive a horse in prosecution of work upon an excavation, took it to his home when he went for dinner and left it standing in front of his house, when it ran away inflicting damage, the court held that the servant was employed to take care of the horse and was engaged in taking care of it when the mischief arose, and that the master might properly be found liable. Whitman v. Pearson (1888) 37 L. J. C. P. 156, L. R. 3 C. P. 423, 18 L. T. N. S. 290, 16 Week. Rep. 649.

Where after being directed to take a team to the stable, the driver at the request of another employe of the master went about a mile out of his way to deliver a trunk for such other servant, during which drive an injury was caused by his negligent driving, the master was held not liable. Cavanagh v. Dinsmore (1878) 12 Hun, 465.

Where after a cartman came in from his day's 27 L. R. A.

work he procured the keys of the stable at the shop and started to put the horses up, but, instead of going directly to the stable, drove in another direction to take a friend home, and while so doing caused an injury, the master was held not liable on the ground that the servant was at the time not in his employ. The judge says that if the master is liable where the servant has deviated, it must be where the deviation occurs in a journey on which the servant has originally started on his master's business; in other words he must be in the employ of his master at the time of committing the grievance. Mitchell v. Craseweller (1863) 12 C. B. 237, 22 L. J. C. P. 100, 17 Jur. 716.

Where a coachman upon finding the road obstructed with a van to which horses were attached, standing across the road, from which cases were being unloaded into adjacent premises, got off from the box and turned the horses off from the street so as to give him room to pass, by which a case was made to fall off from the van upon a gig standing near, breaking it, the court held that the coachman in moving the horses was not acting within the scope of his employment so as to charge his master with responsibility for his act. Lamb v. Palk (1840) 9 Car. & P. 639.

The master is not liable for an injury caused by his coachman who has taken the horse and carriage to do an errand of his own. Sheridan v. Charlick (1879) 4 Daly, 338.

A driver of an ice wagon does not necessarily leave his master's employment by needlessly driving the wagon over on the wrong side of the road against a carriage which is standing there, although there was room for him to have passed in safety had he remained on the proper side of the road. Young v. South Boston Ice Co. (1890) 150 Mass. 527.

In Vernon v. Cornwell (Mich.) Feb. 12, 1895, in which plaintiff was injured by a collision on the highway with a team under the charge of defendant's servant, the contention was that the servant was not acting within the scope of his employment, and the court charged that if the jury should find that the collision was caused by the wrongful act of the teamster, which act was beyond the scope of the defendant's business (the act charged was voluntarily running horses), and that such act was wantonly done, the verdict must be for defendant. The verdict was for plaintiff so that the correctness of these instructions was not necessarily passed upon by the supreme court, but the judgment was affirmed.

any event or circumstances within the range of defendant company's legitimate business; that when the agents or employes of defendant company began to near, and until they were beyond, plaintiff's horse, they began to give, and continued to give, keen and frightful sounds, in quick and rapid succession, by means of the whistle, the immediate effect of which was to frighten the plaintiff's horse, which he was then and there riding, causing his horse to leap and jump with him in the most violent manner; that, by reason of such violent capering and jumping of his horse, he, the plaintiff, was placed in great danger of being killed and greatly injured, and seriously and permanently injured. Plaintiff states that the agents and employes of the defendant company saw the effect of said frightful noise on plaintiff's horse when the whistling commenced, and while the same was going on, and might have ceased making the same, and thereby prevented the said injuries, or greatly lessened the same, but for no legitimate purpose, willfully, knowingly, negligently, wantonly, and intentionally, and only for the purpose of gratifying a base curiosity and malignant spirit, they commenced and continued blowing said whistle in the most frightful manner of which they were capable."

The answer of the railway company is not brought up in the transcript, but it appears from the judgment of the circuit court that a general demurrer to the plaintiff's petition was overruled. Four errors are assigned, but each involves substantially the same question, which the counsel for the railway company, in his printed brief, propounds as follows:

"Is a master responsible for the willful, wanton, and malicious acts of his servants, not done for the master's benefit, and not within the scope of the employment of the servant, and not done by the authority or

In an action to recover for injuries to a child caused by the rapid starting of a delivery wagon upon which it had climbed while it was standing in front of a house, it appeared that the driver had left the wagon to pay a personal visit to the house, and the court said if the injury was the consequence of leaving the wagon unattended, the act of so leaving it was performed while the wagon was diverted from the business of defendant and used to promote the pleasure of the driver. If we assume, that, notwithstanding his departure from his route, injuries inflicted by him while driving, resulting from his manner of driving, would have charged the defendant as being within the scope of the employment of the driver or his discretion as to the route, no such presumption can be made as to the act of abandoning temporarily the services of the defendant and leaving his property without care. Chicago Consol. Bottling Co. v. McGinnis (1898) 51 Ill. App. 325.

Burden of proof.

That the servant had departed from the course of his employment is a matter of defense, the burden of proof of which is on defendant. Cleveland v. Newsom (1890) 45 Mich. 62.

e. Disobedience of orders.

That the servant disobeys the master's instructions is immaterial. Gregory v. Ohio River R. Co. (1893) 87 W. Va. 606; Consolidated Ice Mach. Co. v. Keifer (1890) 10 L. R. A. 696, 124 Ill. 481; Johnson v. Central Vermont R. Co. (1884) 56 Vt. 707; Mound City Paint & Color Co. v. Conlon (1897) 92 Mo. 221; Moir v. Hopkins (1855) 16 Ill. 315, 63 Am. Dec. 312.

The fact that the servant disobeyed the master's instructions will not relieve the latter from responsibility. Mound City Paint & Color Co. v. Conlon (1897) supra.

Ignorance on the part of the master is no excuse. Noble v. Cunningham (1874) 74 Ill. 51.

A master is liable for the infringement by his servant of a patent in the course of his business, although the infringement is contrary to his express orders. Betts v. De Vitre (1868) L. R. 3 Ch. 441, 37 L. J. Ch. 325, 18 L. T. N. S. 165, 16 Week. Rep. 529.

The test of the master's responsibility for the act of his servant is not whether the act was done according to the instructions of the master to the servant but whether it was done in the prosecution of the business that the servant was employed by the master to do. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Randall (1898) 40 Kan. 421.

A master will be liable for the act of a servant 37 L. R. A.

whom he has sent to drive cattle out of a lot in running and worrying them with dogs although he instructs the servant before he goes not to do so. Schmidt v. Adams (1886) 18 Mo. App. 432.

Where the clerk of the keeper of a gun store at the request of a customer and for the purpose of effecting a sale loaded a gun in the store, against the commands of his employer, and the gun was discharged and injured a third person, the master was held liable. Garretzen v. Duenckel (1872) 50 Mo. 104, 11 Am. Rep. 405.

Where a servant in charge of defendant's truck was instructed to leave it in a certain yard at night, but instead of doing so left it in the street, by reason of which an injury was done to a third person, the owner was held liable. The court says: "The servant was rightfully in possession of the truck and being thus rightfully in possession and about his master's business, the master must be responsible for his neglect in improperly leaving the truck in the street. Powell v. Deveney (1849) 3 Cush. 304.

An agent may render his principal liable in firing a signal gun although he acts contrary to his instructions, if at the time he is engaged in the execution of the master's business. Oliver v. North Pacific Transp. Co. (1869) 3 Or. 84.

The owner of a lumber yard is liable for injuries caused by its superintendent piling lumber in the street for his own convenience contrary to the employer's instructions. Cosgrove v. Ogden (1872) 49 N. Y. 255, 10 Am. Rep. 361.

In Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Derby (1852) 55 U. S. 14 How. 468, 14 L. ed. 502, a case in which the injury occurred to a passenger on the road, the court held the railroad company liable for the acts of its servants although they were acting in disobedience of orders. The court says: "Although among the numerous cases upon this subject some may be found . . . in which the court have made some distinctions which are rather subtle and astute, as to when the servant may be said to be acting in the employ of his master, yet we find no case which asserts the doctrine that a master is not liable for the acts of a servant in his employment when the particular act causing the injury was done in disregard of the general orders or special command of the master. Such a qualification of the maxim respondet superior would in a measure nullify it. . . . The entrusting such a powerful and dangerous engine as a locomotive to one who will not submit to control and render implicit obedience to orders is itself an act of negligence, the 'causa causans' of the mischief; while the proximate cause, or the causa negligens which produces it, may truly under the order of the master, but committed willfully, maliciously, and exclusively for the servant's private ends or malice?"

The counsel formulates his answer to his question thus:

"A master is not liable for the willful, wanton, malicious, and deliberate wrongs committed by the servant, not done on the master's account or to further his interest, but done willfully, maliciously, and exclusively for the servant's private ends or malice."

It will be observed that both the question and its answer, as propounded by counsel, are somewhat broader in their terms than the question strictly raised by the general demurrer to the pleading of the plaintiff. The question stated by counsel has exercised judicial inquiry and deliberation from the earliest times. In the often-quoted case of Mo-Manus v. Crickett, 1 East, 106, decided in the first year of this century, Lord Kenyon said:

"It is a question of very general concern, and has been often canvassed, but I hope at last it will be at rest. . . . When a servant quits sight of the object for which he is employed, and without having in view his master's orders, pursues that which his own malice suggests, he no longer acts in pursuance of the authority given him, and his master will not be answerable for such acts."

In the familiar case of Wright v. Wilcox, 19 Wend. 348, 32 Am. Dec. 507, Judge Cowen says:

"The line where the master's liability shall terminate must be placed somewhere, and the acquiescence of Westminster Hall for many years on the rule we have cited, as laid down by Lord Kenyon, is an evidence of the common law not to be resisted, especially as it will not be found, I imagine, to conflict with any general principle of that law."

In Isaacs v. Third Ave. R. Co. 47 N. Y.

be said, in most cases, to be the disobedience of orders by the servant so entrusted. If such disobedience could be set up by a railroad company as a defense when charged with negligence, the remedy of the injured party would in most cases be illusory. . . . Any relaxation of the stringent policy and principles of the law affecting such cases would be highly detrimental to the public safety."

But there is an English case which appears to be in conflict with the principle of the decisions elsewhere.

Where a railroad constable whose instructions were to use his power to arrest with extreme caution, and not to arrest any one after a fight is over, began a fight with some persons who had been turned out of the railroad station and after it was over he directed the arrest of a person who was walking away from the station, the court held that the company was not liable because the action of its servant was beyond the scope of his authority and in contravention of his instructions. Walker v. South Eastern R. Co. (1870) 23 L. T. N. S. 14, 18 Week. Rep. 1032, L. R. 5 C. P. 640, 39 L. J. C. P. 846.

f. Performance of unlawful acts.

There has in some cases been a disposition to hold that the master was not responsible for unlawful acts done by the servant. But this distinction does not seem to be based on sound principle.

Thus where the servant had authority to distrain cattle found damage feasant, and finding a horse running at large in the highway drove it into his master's close and then distrained it, the master was held not liable on the ground that the act being unlawful in itself, the master was not liable unless he expressly authorized it; and a distinction is made between acts unlawfully and those negligently done. Lyons v. Martin (1838) 8 Ad. & El. 512, 3 Nev. & P. 506.

In order to charge the master, the act must be one which it would be unlawful for the master himself to have done. So where the master was wrongfully holding public land and the servant attempted to maintain the possession by force of arms and in so doing shot and killed a third person, it was held that the master could not be held civilly liable for the act. Sagers v. Nuckolls (1898) 3 Colo. App. 95.

A curious application of this rule was made in Missouri.

In Jones v. St. Louis, N. & P. Packet Co. (1891) 43 Mo. App. 411, the owner of an inland vessel was held not liable for the act of its mate in assaulting 27 L. R. A.

a sailor for the purpose of compelling him to work on the ground that no express authority had been given and that since the owner would have had no authority himself to have assaulted the sailor for such purpose no authority in the mate could be implied.

But within a year the same court decided that a master is liable for the act of his servant in burning rubbish in the street although it is unlawful if he has given him authority to dispose of the rubbish in some way. The court says: "The test is not in the lawfulness or unlawfulness of the means adopted by the servant to accomplish the master's business, but it is whether or not such means are so far incident to the employment as to come within its scope." Voegeli v. Pickel Marble & Granite Co. (1892) 49 Mo. App. 643.

The court in the second case was right and it is difficult to understand what principle of distinction could be made which would justify different decisions in the two cases.

An attorney is personally liable for the costs in case a summons is set aside, because his clerk fraudulently simulated the court's seal upon it, although he was ignorant of the fraud. Dunkley v. Farris (1851) 11 C. B. 437.

A servant engaged in running logs in a navigable river will render the master liable for the obstruction of navigation with them although such obstruction is unlawful. Enos v. Hamilton (1869) 24 Wis. 653.

g. Acts of master of vessel.

For liability of the owner of a vessel upon fraudulent bills of lading issued by the master, see supra: False bills of lading, under IV. c.

The master of a vessel appears to occupy a somewhat anomalous position. Under the common law the question of the master's liability is made to depend upon the general principles governing master and servant cases. But other judges have applied the principles of the maritime law to the settlement of controversies arising over his acts.

Collision cases.

Some of the cases have decided the question of the liability of the owner for collisions upon principles governing master and servant cases.

The master of a vessel is acting within the scope of his employment in rendering salvage services so as to render the owner liable for his negligence in performing such services, whereby another vessel is sunk. The Thetis (1890) L. R. 3 Adm. 355, 38 L. J. Adm. 43.

123, 7 Am. Rep. 418, Judge Allen, in referring to the case of Hibbard v. New York & E. R. Co., 15 N. Y. 455, says:

"Some of the expressions in the opinions of the judges . . . are open to criticism, as not in harmony with the later authorities, and would not probably be regarded as sound, although they are supported by the earlier cases and by the elementary authorities:" citing McManus v. Orickett and the authorities therein cited, and Wright v. Wilcox.

In Hove v. Neumarch, 12 Allen, 49, it was held that if the act was done by the servant in the execution of the authority given him by his master, and for the purpose of performing what the master had directed, the master will be responsible, whether the wrong done be occasioned by negligence, or by a wanton and reckless purpose to accomplish the master's business in an unlawful manner.

In Wallace v. Merrimack River Nav. & Exp.

Co., 134 Mass. 95, 45 Am. Rep. 801, it is said:

"The instruction given treats the defendant as exonerated from responsibility if the act done by its servant was wanton and malicious, and disregards the inquiry whether he was acting under the general authority of the defendant, as master, and for the purpose of doing its work. There are respectable authorities, certainly, such as Richmond Turnp. Co. v. Vanderbilt, 1 Hill, 480, and Wright v. Wilcox, 19 Wend. 343, 33 Am. Dec. 507, which hold that where the acts of a servant are willful the master is not responsible, even if they are done in the performance of his business, because such willful acts are held to be a departure from the master's business."

The court then cites Hove v. Neumarch, supra, as holding that the act being willful or malicious is not sufficient to effect a departure from the master's business, and says

The owner of a vessel is responsible for the acts of the master in navigating the vessel. Chamberlain v. Ward (1859) 62 U. S. 21 How. 543, 16 L. ed. 211.

The owner of a vessel is responsible not only for injuries resulting from the negligence of those in charge of it, but also from their ignorance of the established sailing rules. St. John v. Paine (1850) 51 U. S. 10 How. 557, 13 L. ed. 537.

The owner is liable for the negligence of the commander of the vessel. Stone v. Ketland (1804) 1 Wash. C. C. 143.

But it now seems to be the rule that the liability of the vessel for torts in navigation is based upon the maritime law and not upon the common-law rule in regard to master and servant. The China (1869) 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 53, 19 L. ed. 67.

The owner of a vessel is liable for the torts of its master under a general principle of the maritime law and not by virtue of any special contract. Dean v. Angus (1785) Bee, 375.

So the owner of a vessel is liable for the willful and malicious act of its master in steering against a vessel to its injury. Balston v. The State Rights (1886) Crabbe, 22; Duggins v. Watson (1864) 15 Ark. 113, 60 Am. Dec. 500.

So the willful and malicious acts of those in charge of a steamboat in running it against a pleasure yacht will prevent the fact that the yacht was sailing on the Lord's Day, contrary to the provisions of the statute, being used as a defense to an action against the owners of the steamboat for the injuries inflicted on the yacht. Wallace v. Merrimack River Nav. & Exp. Co. (1883) 134 Mass. 95, 45 Am. Rep. 801.

But in other cases it has been held that—

The owner of a steamboat is not liable for the willful act of its master in running it against and injuring another boat. Richmond Turnp. Co. v. Vanderbilt (1841) 1 Hill, 480, even though the act is authorized by the general agent of defendant. Vanderbilt v. Richmond Turnp. Co. (1849) 2 N. Y. 479, 51 Am. Dec. 315.

The owners of a steamboat are not liable for the damage resulting from collision caused by the willful act of their servants and agent in charge of the boat. Cox v. Keahey (1860) 36 Ala. 340, 76 Am. Dec. 325.

Acts towards cargo.

The shipowner is liable for the conversion by the master of goods shipped on board, if the freight is to be paid to him, but in case the master is to have the freight, the case may be different. Boucher v. Lawson (1784-35) Cas. & Hardw. 85, 194, 37 L. R. A.

The owner of a ship is liable for the act of the master in willfully carrying goods beyond the point of destination. Ellis v. Turner (1800) 8 T. R. 531.

If acting according to his best judgment the master, because of the bad condition of the ship, sells the cargo at a point short of destination, the owner is liable for the conversion. Kwbank v. Nutting (1849) 7 C. B. 797.

Acts towards crew.

The owner of a vessel is liable for injuries to a seaman through the negligence of the master of the vessel. Thompson v. Hermann (1879) 47 Wia. 602, 32 Am. Rep. 784.

The vessel is liable for the negligence of the master in failing to keep the rigging safe for the purpose to which it is to be put, by reason of which a seaman is injured. The A. Heaton (1860) 43 Fed. Rep. 594.

But in England it is held that the captain and crew of a ship are fellow servants, so that the owner is not liable to a sailor for injuries resulting from the negligence of the captain. Hedley v. Pinkney & Sons S. S. Co. Limited [1892] 1 Q. B. 58.

The owners of a vessel are liable for an assault by its master upon a seaman in attempting to compel him to obey orders, but not for an assault committed by the master in attempting to punish the seaman after the transaction is over for an alleged disobedience of orders. Spencer v. Kelley (1887) 33 Fed. Rep. 888.

A willful and unjustifiable attack with kicks and blows by the captain of a vessel upon a seaman, merely because he said he was sick when ordered to go on deck, is not within the scope of the captain's employment or authority and will not render the owners of the vessel liable for the injury thereby caused. Gabrielson v. Waydell (1892) 17 L. R. A. 223, 135 N. Y. L. In that case three of the seven judges dissented upon the ground that the act was the negligence of the master in performing the stipulations of the contract of employment and also in performing a duty imposed upon him by law, and for this the owners of the ship have bound themselves to be responsible. If they entrust the discharge of their obligations to another they guarantee his fidelity and his default becomes their default under the well-settled rules of law establishing the liability of persons for the acts or omissions of their agents.

Other cases.

In a United States court it was held that the that case has been since repeatedly recognized, and seems to express the true rule to which it relates.

In Rounds v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 64 N. Y. 129, 31 Am. Rep. 597, it is said: "It is quite useless to attempt to reconcile all the cases. The discrepancy between them arises, not so much from a difference of opinion as to the rule of law on the subject, as from its application to the facts of a given case."

Strong as was Lord Kenyon's hope that he had put the question at rest, and reluctant as have been Westminster Hall and the courts of last resort in this country to pass the line he set to terminate the master's liability, an examination of the cases shows that the most enlightened and conservative courts no longer hold that a willful and malicious purpose is prima facie a departure from the master's business. It will be conceded that, as to passengers on railroads, the line drawn by Lord Kenyon does not now receive the sanction of the courts. It is sometimes contended that this departure results from the contract between the passenger and the carrier, and the reasoning to support the decisions declining to follow the earlier cases often gives emphasis to this feature. No such feature, however, is present in the case of Wallace v. Merrimack River Nav. & Exp. Co., nor in Hove v. Newmarch; and while perhaps most of the cases have presented that feature, and counsel and judges have become so familiar with it that it readily occurs to the minds of both, and often finds expression, it will be found that the cases are few where, in recent years, recovery has been denied strictly on the ground that, as to persons not passengers, public carriers are not liable for the willful or malicious acts of their servants in the use of the instruments of carriage committed to their control in the conduct of such carriage or business. There are some such cases. The most recent of such that I have examined, and one bearing close analogy to owner of a vessel fitted out as a privateer is not liable for any piratical acts done by the officers, although he may be liable for unlawful acts committed upon vessels properly taken as prize. Dias v. The Owners of Privateer Revenge (1814) 3 Wash. C. C. 262.

But in a later case in the United States Supreme Court it was held that the owners of a privateer are liable for the acts of its crew in plundering and robbing a neutral vessel to the extent of actual damages, but cannot be made liable for vindictive damages. The Amiable Nancy (1818) 18 U. S. 3 Wheat. 557, 4 L. ed. 458.

The owner of a ferry boat is not liable for damages done by the captain of the boat in leaving the slip without orders and pursuing a burning barge and towing it so that it comes in contact with a yacht, so that it sets fire to it causing injury. Ay-crigg v. New York & R. R. Co. (1884) 30 N. J. L. 460.

As to liability for permitting slave to escape, see IV., b, Permitting slave to escape.

b. Willful and malicious acts.

In accord with the idea entertained in the early decisions that the master's liability depended on authority given the court in McManus v. Crickett (1800) 1 East, 106, advanced the dictum that the master could not be liable for a willful or malicious act of his servant because as soon as the act became willful or malicious the servant was no longer within the scope of his employment. The court said: "The servant by willfully driving a chariot against the plaintiff's carriage without authority of the master gained a special property for the time and as to that purpose the chariot was the servant's."

That reasoning is not in line with the principle of the modern decisions, and it has to a great extent been departed from, but it made a deep impression upon subsequent decisions and many cases have been made to turn upon the presence or absence of malice.

In commenting on the case of McManus v. Crickett, Judge Redfield in his work on Railways, 5th ed. page 584, says: "The reasoning (by which the master is held liable) certainly applies with the same force to that class of cases where the act of the servant is both direct and willful, as where it is only negligent. The master is not liable in either case, perhaps, so much for having impliedly authorized the act, as for having employed an unfaithful servant, who did the injury in the course of his employment. And whether done negligently or willfully, seems to be of no possible moment, as to the liability of the master, the only inquiry being whether it was done in the course of the servant's employment. . . . It is very obvious the proper distinction, in regard to the master's liability, cannot be made to depend upon the question of the intention of the servant. The master has nothing to do, either way, with the purpose and intention of his servants. It is with their acts that he is to be affected, and if these come within the range of their employment, the master is liable, whether the act be a misfeasance, or a nonfeasance, an omission or commission, carelessly or purposely done."

Judge Reeve says: "In many cases of injury by negligence there is no other implied contract than that general one with all mankind that they shall not suffer from the neglect of those whom the master employs; and this general implied contract may exist, in case of torts by violence, that his servants in pursuit of his business shall commit no tort." Reeve, Dom. Rel. 8d ed. 519.

I can see no more reason why the master shall be liable for damages occurring by negligence of the servant than for his violence whilst pursuing his business. Reeve, Dom. Rel. 8d ed. 520.

The development of the law upon this branch of the subject and the caution with which the courts advance is very interesting.

Acts done by servant outside of his capacity as servant.

There can be no question that the master will not be liable for acts which the servant does out of pure malice or wantonness not purporting to act as servant and having no relation to his employment.

The principal is responsible, not because the servant is acting in his name or under color of his employment, but because the servant was actually engaged in and about his business and carrying out his purposes. It matters not in such cases whether or not the injury with which it is sought to charge him is the result of negligence, unskillfulness, or wrongful conduct, for he must choose good agents for the conduct of his business. But if his business is done or is taking care of itself and his servant not being engaged in it, nor concerned about it but impelled by motives which are wholly personal to himself and simply to satisfy his own feelings of resentment whether provoked or unprovoked, commits an assault upon another when that is and can have no tendency to promote any purpose in which the principal is interested and to the case we have at bar, is Stephenson v. Southern Pac. Co. 93 Cal. 558, 15 L. R. A. 475.

In the case of Philadelphia & R. R. Co., v. Derby, 55 U. S. 14 How. 468, 14 L. ed. 502, it is said:

"Although, among the numerous cases on this subject, some may be found in which the courts have made some nice distinctions, which are rather subtle and astute, as to when the servant may be said to be acting in the employ of his master, yet we find no case which asserts the doctrine that a master is not liable for the acts of a servant in his employment, when the particular act causing the injury was done in disregard of the general orders or special command of the master. Such a qualification of the maxim respondet superior would in a measure nullify it. A large proportion of the accidents on railroads are caused by the negligence of the servants or agents of the company. Nothing but the most stringent enforcement of discipline, and the most exact and perfect obedience to every rule and order emanating from a superior, can insure safety to life and property. The intrusting such a powerful and dangerous engine as a locomotive to one who will not submit to control and render implicit obedience to orders is itself an act of negligence,—the causa causans of the mischief,—while the proximate cause, or the ipso negligentia, which produces it, may truly be said in most cases to be the disobedience of orders by the servants so intrusted. If such disobedience could be set up by a railroad company as a defense, when charged with negligence, the remedy of the injured party would in most cases be illusive, discipline would be relaxed, and the danger to the life and limb of the traveler greatly enhanced."

Only negligent misconduct was involved in the case just cited; hence, the language of the court is limited to negligence. The party injured was traveling by railroad; and it may be insisted that only such travelers, promote which the servant was employed, then the wrong is merely the personal wrong of the servant for which he and he alone is responsible. Haehl v. Wabash R. Co. (1893) 119 Mo. 325.

Thus the master will not be liable for the act of a brakeman who when standing on the platform of a car kicks a person standing on the ground, and who has made no attempt to board the train. Molloy v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. (1882) 10 Daly, 483.

So a railroad company is not liable for the act of its conductor in knowingly and willfully taking and transporting upon the cars, against his will, one whom he had no right to receive upon the cars for transportation. As where the conductor assists a third person in kidnapping a person. Jackson v. St. Louis, L. M. & S. R. Co. (1885) 37 Mo. 422, 56 Am. Rep. 460.

So if a servant sets fire to a prairie through motives of malice or wantonness, the principal will not be liable for that will be an abandonment of the business of the agent. Johnson v. Barber (1849) 10 Ill. 425, 50 Am. Dec. 416; Armstrong v. Cooley (1849) 10 Ill. 512.

As to willful acts done in the presence of the master, see supra, I.

As to liability for aiding escape of slave, see IV., b, Permitting escape of slave.

Decisions following McManus v. O'Connell.

There are many decisions which turn upon the question of willfulness or malice alone, holding that when those elements appear the servant is no longer within his employment.

The master is not liable for the malicious acts of his servant. Repaheer v. Watton (1851) 17 Pa. 305.

The master is not liable for a willful trespass of the servant. Wesson v. Seaboard & R. R. Co. (1857) 49 N. C. 379.

A master is not liable for injuries designedly or intentionally inflicted by his servant. Snodgrass v. Bradley (1852) 2 Grant, Cas. 43.

The principal is not in general responsible for the criminal conduct of his agent. Mitchell v. Mims (1852) 8 Tex. 6.

A person allowed to ride free on a train, by employees of the company, cannot hold the company liable for injuries received by his being pushed from the train by the employees in attempting to rob him. Alabama & V. R. Co. v. McAfee (1893) 71 Miss. 70.

As to willful acts of master of vessel see IV., g.

A laborer on a building who negligently or wantonly pushes a brick from the top of a completed wall, which he had no business to touch although it is done before he has left the place where he has been at work is not acting within the scope of his employment, so as to make the master liable. Mayer v. Thompson-Hutchinson Bldg. Co. (Ala.) (1894) L. R. A.

A master who sends his servant to turn a trespassing horse out of his field cannot be made liable for the wanton act of the servant in throwing a stone at the horse which breaks its leg. Cantrell v. Colwell (1859) 3 Head, 471.

Where servants, in removing stones from the bed of a stream, contrary to the master's orders trespassed on the land of an adjoining owner and removed stones from his land it was held that the master was liable for their act, if they negligently disregarded his commands, but not if they willfully did so. Southwick v. Estes (1851) 7 Cush. 395.

The master is not liable for the willful act of his servant in setting the master's dog on cattle of another person. Steele v. Smith (1854) 3 E. D. Smith, 321.

Servants engaged in clearing a field of ground under orders to set no fire in the absence of the master will not make the master liable for injuries caused by their willfully setting fire in his absence which causes injury to a third person. Andrews v. Green (1882) 62 N. H. 436.

If the declaration is against the master for the act of his agent, the act must not be charged to have been willfully done, but the charge must be negligence. Brasher v. Kennedy (1849) 10 B. Mon. 23.

A city marshal who employs an agent to carry into effect an ordinance relating to the killing of unmuzzled dogs is not liable for the willful act of the agent in killing a dog not within the terms of the ordinance. Pritchard v. Keefer (1870) 50 Ill. 117.

In Tuller v. Voght (1851) 13 Ill. 277, the court after stating that the master cannot be made liable in trespass for the willful acts of his servants, states that he is undoubtedly responsible for injuries resulting from the negligence, carelessness, or unskillfulness of the servant, but that he is only liable in a special action on the case. And that in such action the declaration avers that the injury resulted from the carelessness or unskillfulness of the agent.

A master is not liable for the willful acts of his servant when contrary to his orders in interfering with a business rival, as where the servants of the and by the railroad sought to be charged, were in contemplation of the court. The whole text of the opinion shows that its logic has a larger scope. The injury was not caused by the negligence or other misconduct of the servants engaged in carrying this traveler. His right to recover damages was expressly held to be independent of any contract for carriage. One who has such a contract may found, in part at least, his right to recover on the contract to carry safely. But the maxim of respondet superior is wholly irrespective of any contract, expressed or implied, or any other relation, between the injured party and the master.

In the case of Culp v. Atchison & N. R. Co., 17 Kan. 475, it appears that the plaintiff was traveling in his private wagon, drawn by his own team of horses, on the public highway, near a station on the defendant's road, at the time when a train of its cars was standing there on its track; that the servants of the company, carelessly, unnecessarily, and with gross negligence, caused the steam whistle to be blown with great violence, at which the plaintiff's team took fright, ran, and the plaintiff was injured. A demurrer to the petition was sustained by the trial judge, which on appeal was held to be error. In delivering the opinion of the court, Judge Brewer said:

"These acts [sounding the whistle, and causing steam to escape, etc.], which at times are legal and necessary, may be done without any necessity therefor, out of mere heedlessness and negligence, or with a wanton and criminal intent to do wrong. . . . In this case, while the defendant might, under some circumstances, lawfully, and without subjecting itself to responsibility for injuries resulting therefrom, cause the whistle to be blown, . . . yet the same act, done without any necessity therefor,—done negligently and heedlessly,—might render the defendant responsible for all injuries caused thereby. [Citing] Toledo, W. & W.

proprietors of an omnibus line attempted to break up the business of a rival by surrounding the omnibus of the rival so that passengers could not get into it. Green v. Macnamara (1859) 1 L. T. N. S. 9.

The master of a vessel is not liable in trespass for the act of one of the crew in willfully cutting the sail of another vessel for the purpose of separating the two when they had become entangled. Bow-cher v. Noldstrom (1809) 1 Taunt. 568.

Where a driver of an omnibus struck with his whip at the servant of a tramway company, who had ascended the steps of the omnibus to get its number because it was obstructing the way, the court held that if the act was for the purpose of preventing an action against the owner, the owner was liable, but if it was to prevent an action against the servant himself, there was no liability. Ward v. General Omnibus Co. (1873) 43 L. J. Q. P. 265, 28 L. T. N. S. 850.

To make the master liable for consequential damages resulting from the trespass of the servant it must appear that the servant was in the course of his employment and that by an injudicious, negligent, or unskillful act done in furtherance of the business, the injury resulted to the plaintiff. But if the servant willfully and to effect some design of his own does an injury to another, the master will not be liable. The business of life requires the employment of servants or agents, and to hold that masters are liable for their willful and wanton acts, would be placing every employer entirely at the mercy of those whom he might engage in his service. Such a principle would greatly impede if not wholly prevent commercial intercourse between man and man. Douglas v. Stephens (1853) 18 Mo. 362.

A bottler who has undertaken to wash and return whatever bottles of a rival come into his possession is not liable for the act of one of his servants whom he has set to washing bottles in wantonly breaking all bottles of the rival which he finds. Deith v. Ottenville (1864) 14 Lea, 191. In that case the court says, the master ought not to be held responsible for such wrongful conduct of the servant as he had never directed him to do nor could be supposed to have authorized or expected the servant to do. A liability so extensive would make the master a guarantor of the servant's good conduct and would impose responsibility which prudent men would hesitate to assume.

The reasoning of the last two cases has met with some favor, but it would seem that it has no place in any system of law. If a trustworthy servant cannot be found it is far better that the master's business should go undone than that an entire community should be placed in peril for the master's benefit. In most instances the master is entirely to blame, because of carelessness or penuriousness, for having an untrustworthy servant, and he should answer for his fault if not for his servant's.

Railroad cases.

The principle of making the master guarantee the conduct of servants in whose hands dangerous machines are placed, which is developed infra, V., found an early application in railroad cases although it was not at first clearly stated.

Some courts still adhere to the old rule even in these cases. Thus it has been held that—

A railroad company is not liable for the willful act of its engineer in running over cattle on the track. Danner v. South Carolina R. Co. (1861) 4 Rich. L. 329; DeCamp v. Mississippi & M. R. Co. (1861) 12 Iowa, 248; Cooke v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. (1870) 30 Iowa, 232.

Moving a railroad engine simply to frighten passengers in a street-car at a crossing is not within the scope of the employment of the engineer so as to make the company liable for the injuries received by a passenger in the street-car by jumping therefrom on account of fright. Stephenson v. Southern Pac. R. Co. (1895) 15 L. R. A. 475, 38 Cal. 558.

Where plaintiff's team was run over by defendant's train and case was brought to recover their value, the court said if the injury was caused by the mere willful act of the company's servants and not in execution or furtherance of the business in which they were employed, the company is not liable in this form of action. Case cannot be maintained against a company for injuries willfully and intentionally committed by its servants and not produced in the course of their employment in doing the business for which they were employed. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Downey (1897) 18 Ill. 259.

Now under the Iowa code railroad companies are liable for the willful acts of their servants connected with the use and operation of the road on or about which they are employed. Marion v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1884) 64 Iowa, 509.

But in other jurisdictions it is held that—

The rule with respect to railroads has been modified so that if the servant, while acting within the scope of his employment, does an act injurious to another, either through neglect, wantonness, or intention, then for such abuse of authority the

R. Co. v. Harmon, 47 Ill. 298. 'Sic utere tuo ut alienum non ladas' regulates the conduct and determines the liability of corporations, as of individuals."

In the case cited by Judge Brewer the trial court had charged the jury:

"If defendants' engineer, with intent to frighten plaintiff's horses, unnecessarily and wantonly let off steam or blew a whistle, so that plaintiff's horses ran off and injured him, defendants are guilty. Malice in the engineer need not be proved positively, but may be inferred."

—And refused the defendant's request to charge:

"If the injury was caused by the willful and malicious act of the agent of the defendants, the defendant is not liable."

There was a verdict and judgment for plaintiff, which was affirmed on appeal. In a well-considered opinion, replete with sound reasoning, that court, in conclusion, uses this language:

master is responsible to the person injured. Gilliam v. South & North Ala. R. Co. (1881) 70 Ala. 288.

In Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Middlesworth (1888) 48 Ill. 484, the court in holding a railroad company liable for the act of its engineer in running upon and killing some stock upon the track said: "It is not infrequent that . . . they (engineers) rush their machines into a crowd of animals with no other thought than to see how many they can kill, like a sportsman shooting into a flock of quails, and boast of their skill afterwards. . . . A spirit of recklessness seems to have been engendered among them. . . . It may be said these companies must take men as they find them and none are perfect; yet there is a vast difference in the qualities of men engaged in the same pursuit and all proper means should be used to provide the best. There is always a choice and it ought to be incumbent on railroad companies to make the best choice without regard to compensation of men to whom the public are obliged to entrust their property, lives, and all that is dear to them."

Railroads may and ought to be liable for malicious mischief or willful injuries in running upon and injuring persons or stock trespassing upon the road. Chicago & M. R. Co. v. Patchin (1884) 16 Ill. 208, 61 Am. Dec. 65.

A railroad company is liable for the act of its engineer in willfully running the engine against a person walking on the track. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Graham (1874) 46 Ind. 236; Indianapolis & V. R. Co. v. McClaren (1878) 68 Ind. 568.

The company is liable for the willful killing of a mule by running a train over it. Banister v. Pennsylvania Co. (1884) 98 Ind. 220.

A railroad company is responsible for the willful act of its engineer in running upon stock on the track. Vicksburg & J. R. Co. v. Patton (1856) 81 Miss. 196, 66 Am. Dec. 552.

A railroad company is liable for the act of its engineer in putting on steam and increasing the speed of his train when he sees a horse on the track in front of his engine, whereby the horse is killed. Pritchard v. LaCrosse & M. R. Co. (1868) 7 Wis. 232.

In Detroit, E. R. & I. R. Co. v. Barton (1878) 61 Ind. 236, a recovery was sustained upon a complaint which charged the willful and malicious killing of plaintiff's cow by defendant's servants.

Under the Georgia code a railroad company is liable for the killing of a customer who has gone to its office for the transaction of business by a clerk who has a homicidal mania. Christian v. Columbus & R. R. Co. (1867) 79 Ga. 460.

37 L. R. A.

"When employed in the discharge of his duty, or while engaged in operating their engines and machinery on their road, if he uses such agencies in an unskillful manner, or so negligently as to occasion injury to another, or even if, while so engaged, he willfully perverts such agencies to the purpose of wanton mischief and injury, the company should respond in damages."

In the case brought to us by this writ of error the engineer and fireman in charge of the locomotive engine were driving it on the tracks of the company, pulling a regular train of cars, running on schedule time, charged to sound the whistle frequently, with blasts differing in time and tone, according to the signal to be given or the purpose served. If injury had resulted from failure to sound it at the required times and in the required way, the company might have been held liable. If unnecessarily and negligently sounded,—as, for instance, when the train was standing where it should be,

Use of whistle.

In an action to recover for the death of a horse frightened by a whistle blown by defendant's engineer, one of the judges said, if while in defendant's employ and in the exercise of the duty for which he was employed, the engineer maliciously, willfully, and wantonly performed those duties, either with an intention to injure plaintiff or with a reckless disregard of the safety of plaintiff's property, the employer is liable. Cobb v. Columbia & G. R. Co. (1892) 37 S. C. 194.

Where an injury was caused by the willful act of an engineer in blowing a whistle to frighten a horse the company was held liable, the court saying, the master is liable for the act of his servant within the general scope of his employment, although the special act be done at a time and in a manner contrary to an express order of the master. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Brannen (1886) 17 W. N. C. 227.

The willful sounding of a steam whistle by the engineer for the purpose of frightening a horse may render the company liable. Hillman v. Indianapolis, C. & L. R. Co. (1881) 76 Ind. 176, 40 Am. Rep. 230; Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Starnes (1871) 9 Heisk. 52, 24 Am. Rep. 297.

If the engineer uses the engine which has been placed under his charge for the purpose of inflicting wanton injury on another, as by making steam escape so as to frighten horses on a highway, the company will be liable. Toledo, W. & V. R. Co. v. Harmon (1888) 47 Ill. 298; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Dickson (1871) 63 Ill. 151, 14 Am. Rep. 114.

On the other hand, in Hahn v. Southern Pac. R. Co. (1871) 61 Cal. 606, the court says if the opening of cocks, which caused the frightening of the horses, for which the action was brought, was a willful and malicious trespass on the part of the engineer a grave doubt would be suggested as to whether the verdict in favor of plaintiff should be permitted to stand.

Willfulness within and without the scope of employment.

A large line of cases has abandoned the ground that willfulness or malice alone is the dividing line, and have advanced to the position that willfulness will not relieve the master if it was manifested for the purpose of effecting the master's business. Of this class are assaults on passengers in attempting to eject them from the cars. See note to Davis v. Houghtellin (1891) (Neb.) 14 L. R. A. 737. Those cases are, however, controlled by the master's con-and was not about to start, or the time had not arrived for giving the signal to start,—and an injury had resulted from such act or omission, for such negligence the company would be liable. As was aptly said by the supreme court of Illinois, the result to the party injured is the same whether it is the effect of negligence, or from wanton and willful purpose. The malice pleaded in this case is only that which the law implies from an act of wanton cruelty. We are in danger of refining too much when we attempt to distinguish between a negligent and a wanton or malicious use of the steam whistle of a locomotive engine in charge of the proper servants of the company, while engaged in pulling its regular trains, moving at scheduled rate, on schedule time, under direct, constant telegraphic orders. If it is contended that in this act the servants were not in the master's service, because not employed to blow the whistle wantonly and maliciously to frighten travelers or their horses, that contention is fully answered by the supreme court of Illinois,—that these servants are not employed to do any negligent or unlawful act, and such a test would exempt the company from liability from all affirmative acts of these servants violating the rights of others. Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Harmon, 47 Ill. 298; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Dickson, 68 Ill. 151, 14 Am. Rep. 114. It is conceded that, in case of passengers receiving injury from the action of the servants of the railroad company, no such distinction between negligent and wanton and malicious conduct obtains. It is contended that in such cases the corporation is held because of its contract to carry safely. That is one reason, and a cogent one, for holding the company in such cases, but it is only one of the grounds for so holding. If public policy and safety require that carriers who undertake to convey persons by the powerful, but dangerous, agency of steam, shall be held to the greatest possible care and diligence, and, tract with the passenger and depend upon different principles from those which control here.

Ejecting trespassers.

But in cases where the employé is attempting to eject a trespasser the principle directly applies.

Where a child was injured by jumping off from a car in obedience to the command of the driver, defendants requested the court to charge that the owners of the car were not liable for the injury, if it was caused willfully by the acts of their servant. The court refused to give this instruction and the appellate court affirmed the judgment, but there is no discussion of this branch of the case. Bay Shore R. Co. v. Harris (1890) 67 Ala. 6.

The fact that the conductor acts wantonly and maliciously in putting a trespassing boy off from a moving train will not relieve the master from responsibility if it was part of the conductor's duty to remove trespassers from the train. The court says the relation (of master and servant) being established all else is mode and manner and as to that the master is responsible. Kline v. Central Pac. R. Co. (1899) 37 Cal. 400, 99 Am. Dec. 282.

A railroad company which instructs its conductor not to allow persons to ride on freight cars is responsible for the act of one of its conductors in improperly putting a person off from a freight car while the train was in motion. The court says that the rule of law is that where a master employs a servant to do an act which involves the use of force against the person or property of another, and the servant in the course of his employment uses force in a manner or to an extent unlawful and unjustifiable, the master is liable. Holmes v. Wakefield (1886) 12 Allen, 580, 30 Am. Dec. 171.

A railroad company is liable for the act of its servant in using unnecessary force in ejecting a trespasser from a moving train either from misjudgment, negligence, or violence of temper. Harlinger v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. (1882) 15 N. Y. Week. Dig. 362.

The tortious act of a brakeman in driving a trespasser from a moving train will be assumed to have been within his authority. Farber v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (1893) 20 L. R. A. 350, 116 Mo. 81.

The master is liable for unnecessary violence in the expulsion of a trespasser by a servant acting within the scope of his authority. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Kirkbride (1891) 79 Tex. 459.

A railroad company is liable for wrongful force in expelling a trespasser from a train. Clark v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1886) 40 Hun, 605.

If persons employed by a conductor to expel a trespasser from a train strike him unjustifiably in expelling him, the company is liable although the blow was struck against the conductor's orders. Coleman v. New York & N. H. R. Co. (1870) 100 Mass. 160.

The master is liable for the malicious act of an employé in forcing a trespasser off from a moving train causing injury to him in case the servant is acting within the scope of his employment. Bees v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1891) 35 W. Va. 492.

A railroad company is liable for an unjustifiable assault by a brakeman on a trespasser to compel him to leave the train. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Frazier (1890) 93 Ala. 45.

In Sanford v. Eighth Ave. R. Co. (1861) 23 N. Y. 344, 80 Am. Dec. 283, where a conductor ejected a person from a car for refusing to pay fare, the court said the company was liable for an attempted expulsion at a wrong time, but it was insisted that since in the expulsion the conductor used unnecessary force and wantonly injured the deceased the company was not liable for the excess, but the court refused to allow that contention on the ground that the assault itself was unjustifiable and the company being liable for that as principal it was also answerable for any excess and aggravation which attended the wrong.

In Higgins v. Watervliet Turnp. & R. Co. (1871) 46 N. Y. 22, 7 Am. Rep. 293, a case in which the question of liability for ejection of a passenger was involved, the court said: "It is sufficient to make the master responsible civiliter if the wrongful act of the servant was committed in the business of the master although the servant in doing it departed from the instructions of the master. The rule is founded upon public policy and convenience. Every principal is bound to use due care in the conduct of his business. If the business is conducted by an agent or servant the obligation is not changed. The omission of such care by the latter is the omission of the master. . . . If he employs incompetent or unworthy agents it is his fault; and whether the injury of third persons is caused by the negligence or positive misfeasance of the agent, the maxim respondet superior applies provided only that the agent was acting at the time for the principal and within the scope of the business intrusted to him."

In Jackson v. Second Ave. R. Co. (1872) 47 N. Y. 274, 7 Am. Rep. 448, where there was a mistaken ejection of a passenger, the court held that where the company has the right to authorize the use of force and their agents acting in the pursuit of his whether the consideration for such transportation be pecuniary or otherwise, the personal safety of the passengers should not be left to the sport of chance, or the negligence of carriers' agents, or their wanton malice, the same public policy and safety demand that these all-pervading corporations, who commit to the custody and use of their servants, in such great numbers, these terrible expressions of the powerful and dangerous agency of steam, shall maintain discipline in their ranks, and, by the utmost care and diligence, protect the public, not only from its negligent use, but from its wanton or malicious use, by these servants, to the hurt of any one in the lawful enjoyment of the state's peace. To say the engineer and fireman who have charge of the locomotive on a regular run may, while so running it, so blow the whistle, wantonly and maliciously, that by their manner of blowing it and motive for blowing it, in the indulgence of their love of mischief or other evil motive, they separate themselves, in and by that act, and for that instant, from the company's service, is to refine beyond the line of safety and of sound reason. Public policy and safety require that the use of the steam whistle by those servants who are in charge of the locomotive, and while the locomotive is in motion on its regular or authorized runs, should be held to be done within the scope of the employment of those servants, so far as to charge the company with liability therefor. The rule propounded by the plaintiff in error, so far as it is sound, does not reach the case. In my opinion the judgment of the Circuit Court should be affirmed.

Pardee, Circuit Judge, being recused, this case was heard by Judges McCormick and Locke, who differing in opinion as to the law of the case, the judgment of the circuit court is affirmed by a divided court.

duty to them and under authority which they have given exceeds through zeal or impetuosity of temper the degree of force necessary and proper to accomplish the purpose, and injury or damage ensue, the master is responsible.

A street-railway company is liable for the act of its driver in forcibly throwing from the platform of the car a person who when the car is obstructing a crossing is attempting to pass over the platform for the purpose of avoiding the obstruction. Shea v. Sixth Ave. R. Co. (1875) 82 N. Y. 180, 20 Am. Rep. 480. In that case the court says if the act was a mistake committed in the course of the servant's employment, the company is liable and also if it was an abuse of authority conferred upon him, the same rule is applicable.

In an action by a newsboy to recover damages caused by being driven off from a street-car by the conductor, the defense was that the act was the malicious personal act of the conductor. The court said if the conductor in the discharge of his duty as manager of the car undertook to put the boy off, the law required him to act in a prudent manner and exercise due care for the safety of the boy, and if he failed to do so and in consequence the boy was injured, the master is liable. North Chicago City R. Co. v. Gastka (1889) 4 L. R. A. 481, 128 Ill. 612.

A railroad company is liable for the act of one employed to clean the cars and remove trespassers from them in breaking the hold of a boy upon the rail of the car while it is in motion, thereby injuring him. Northwestern R. Co. v. Hack (1872) 66 Ill. 228. In that case the court says it is true that the act of itself was not in the line of duty of any employé of the company, but the question is whether or not the act was done whilst in the discharge of his duty, not in the precise manner in which it was done, but was it his duty to require persons to leave the cars and prevent their remaining thereon.

A railroad company is liable for the excessive force with which a trespasser is ejected from its station. Johnson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1882) 58 Iowa, 348.

A master who puts a servant in a place of trust or responsibility or commits to him the management of his business or the care of his property is justly held responsible when the servant through a lack of judgment or discretion, or from infirmity of temper, or under the influence of passion aroused by the circumstances and the occasion, goes beyond the strict line of his duty or authority and inflicts an unjustifiable injury upon another. 27 L. R. A.

Cohen v. Dry Dock, R. B. & R. R. Co. (1877) 69 N. Y. 170.

If the removal of trespassers is not within the duties generally pertaining to the position filled by the servant the master will not be liable for his act because he is not acting in his capacity as servant.

Unless it is shown to be within the authority of a brakeman to remove trespassers from the cars the company is not liable for his wilful act in kicking a boy from the train. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Mother (1896) 6 Tex. Civ. App. 87.

If a brakeman has no authority to remove trespassers from a train, the railroad company is not liable for his act, compelling a boy to leave a train while in motion, by reason of which the boy is injured. Farber v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (1888) 32 Mo. App. 381.

To hold the master liable for the ejection of a trespasser from a moving train, the one who did it must be shown to have been acting within the scope of his employment. Bess v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1891) 35 W. Va. 492.

A trespasser who seeks to hold a railroad company liable for wrongful expulsion from a train by a brakeman must show that the acts of the brakeman were within the scope of his authority. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Mother (1896) supra; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Anderson (1891) 82 Tex. 520; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Black (Tex.) June 18, 1894.

In Planz v. Boston & A. R. Co. (1892) 17 L. R. A. 837, 157 Mass. 377, the court in holding that a trespasser on a train suing for injuries caused by the fault of the brakeman in compelling him to get off when the train was in motion was precluded from recovery because of contributory negligence, says that we prefer to assume without deciding that it was a question of fact whether or not the brakeman, from his general employment, had authority to represent the company in ordering a trespasser to leave the train. "If he had the defendant is liable for his negligence or misconduct in regard to the time or manner of doing it."

So where a brakeman has no authority to remove trespassers a railroad company is not liable for the act of a brakeman on a freight train in throwing coal at boys trespassing on the train by reason of which one of them is caused to fall under the cars and receive an injury. Towanda Coal Co. v. Heeman (1878) 86 Pa. 418.

But where he has a railroad company is liable for the injuries caused by the act of its brakeman in driving a trespassing boy from the train by throwing coal at him, by reason of which he falls under

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

HOUSTON, CENTRAL ARKANSAS &
NORTHERN R. CO., Appl.,

v.

Falls BOLLING, by Next Friend.

(.....Ark.....)

A railroad company is not liable for an injury to a child riding on a hand-car on invitation of its employes contrary to the rules and not in accordance with any custom acquiesced in by the officers of the company.

(July 14, 1894.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Drew County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant's servants. Reversed.

the car and loses a leg. Lang v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1889) 51 Hun, 603.

Other cases.

The master is liable for the tortious act of his servant engaged in his employment, though done willfully without orders, or even against orders. So the owner of a steamboat is liable for the acts of its officers in tortiously colliding with and sinking another boat. Duggins v. Watson (1854) 15 Ark. 118, 60 Am. Dec. 560.

A collecting agent of a credit company who goes to a house to make a collection, and failing to get the money assaults the occupant in attempting to take away the property for which the credit was given is acting within the scope of his employment so as to render his employer liable for his act, although he may never have been instructed to take such action, and although his act may have become willful before his purpose is accomplished. O'Connell v. Samuel (1894) 81 Hun, 387.

In holding the master liable for an attempt by his servant to bribe a witness the court said: "In this case the clerk had consigned to him the general and special duty of looking for and arranging the evidence in cases where the company was sued by persons injured. . . . His legal authority of course but extended to lawful acts. So it is true of all agencies as they are not appointed for the purpose of committing wrongs or the performance of illegal acts except in rare cases. . . . In this state . . . it has been repeatedly held that when acting in the scope of his duty acts of the servant not merely careless or negligent, but willful or malicious acts are embraced. . . . He was engaged in the performance of a duty for the company. He did the act as part of that duty although unauthorized. We are therefore of the opinion that he performed the illegal and unauthorized act while acting in and as a part of his employment, and we must hold the company responsible for his act." Chicago City R. Co. v. McMahon (1882) 108 Ill. 485, 42 Am. Rep. 29.

A willful act which will exempt a master from liability for the tort of his servant must be done outside of his duty and his master's business. Rounds v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (1876) 64 N. Y. 129, 21 Am. Rep. 597.

In Gleadell v. Thomson (1874) 58 N. Y. 194, the carrier had placed the cargo on the wharf, where it was likely to be injured by rain. The owner went to the wharf with tarpaulins for the purpose of covering it, but the servants of the carrier took

Statement by Hughes, J.:

The appellee, a boy about four years old, while riding on a hand-car of appellant, had his hand crushed in the cogs by which it was operated, and for the injury recovered damages in this action in the sum of $5,000, to reverse the judgment for which the appeal in this case was taken. The facts in the case are substantially as follows: Parkdale is the center of a section of defendant's railway in Ashley county, Ark. The section was about six miles long, and Parkdale was situated about the center. At Parkdale was located the railway company's section house, at which the laborers and foreman resided. On March 29, 1892, one Bolling was foreman of that section (No. 6), and had charge of all the work thereon. He lived at the section house at Parkdale, with his wife and child, Falls Bolling, who was at that time about one of them away to cover the hatch of the vessel by reason of which the cargo was injured. The court held that although the act of the servants was wrongful and was not authorized by the master, yet he was liable for the injury. But in that case the fact of the carrier's duty to protect the cargo until delivered entered into the decision to some extent.

By the Georgia code, the master is liable for all torts of the servant in the prosecution and within the scope of his business, whether the same are done by negligence or are voluntary. Lindsay v. Central R. & Bkg. Co. (1872) 48 Ga. 447.

The owner of a race-horse is liable for the act of his jockey in willfully and intentionally fouling and injuring another horse in the race. McKay v. Irvine (1882) 11 Biss. 168.

The question is not whether the servant was negligent or willful but whether the act was done in the course of the servant's employment. The argument that when the servant acts willfully he pro facto leaves the employment of the master for the moment or so long as his passion rages, is a specious fallacy. Eckert v. St. Louis Transfer Co. (1876) 2 Mo. App. 36.

The master is liable for the willful acts done in the course of the employment. Garretsen v. Duerckel (1872) 60 Mo. 104, 11 Am. Rep. 405.

The principal is civilly responsible in damages for the acts of his agent, whether negligently or willfully done in his employment, to the same extent as if the principal himself were the actual wrongdoer. New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Bailey (1866) 40 Miss. 386. In that case the court says: "If it be positively certain that somebody must suffer from the wrongful acts or neglect of those employes, as is urged, and that without the positive fault of their principal, upon whom should the calamity fall—upon him who trusted the wrongdoer for his own gain or upon the stranger? If idle capital in search of splendid investments must do its work by agents who 'it is positively certain' will prove negligent or abuse their trust, upon what principle of legal right or ethical rule can it demand of the public to bear the wrongs and injuries it originates?"

In New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Allbritton (1859) 38 Miss. 242, 75 Am. Dec. 98, with reference to railroad companies it is stated that the foundation of the rule upon this subject is that the agent is but an instrument. That one having authority over the actions of another—who, for his own benefit, places him in a condition to injure others by the four years old, and who is the real plaintiff in this suit. On March 29, 1892, Section Foreman Bolling was very ill, and one Mike O'Connor, one of the regular section hands, was presumably acting as temporary foreman. The duties of these section hands were to keep the track of their section in repair, and do all things necessary to that end. Their working hours were from 7 o'clock A. M. to 6 o'clock P. M. each day, and, except in an emergency, the foreman and laborers were not required to be on the track outside of these hours. In order to enable this section crew to do its work, all the tools necessary were furnished them by the railway company, and among these tools was a hand-car. This hand-car was furnished them for the express purpose of transporting the section laborers, with the tools, implements, and materials, to and from the several places on the line of road within the section, wherever needed, and for no other purpose. Indeed, the rules and regulations of the defendant railway company forbade the section foreman or any one of the section men allowing any one to ride on the hand-car except the laborers on the section. They were forbidden to use the hand-car except in their work, and the proofs show that the hand-car was never intended for, nor was it ever used for, the transportation of passengers. On the contrary, the use of the hand-car was, for this purpose, positively and affirmatively prohibited. The section foreman and his men had absolutely nothing to do with the transportation of passengers. On the contrary, they were forbidden to do such work, or to carry passengers on the hand-car or in any manner. The proof was clear and undisputed that Section Foreman Bolling had knowledge of these rules, and that he had repeatedly imparted his knowledge to O'Connor and his crew. On March 29, 1892, the section hands came in early from work,—between 5 and 6 o'clock—at the express orders of Bolling, for the purpose of taking two ladies on the hand-exercise of the power conferred,—should be responsible for the abuse of that power by his agent, as if it were the act of himself, whether such abuse be the result of negligence or willfulness.

Where a servant is engaged in accomplishing an end which is within the scope of his employment, and while so engaged adopts means reasonably intended and directed to the end which result in injury to another, the master is answerable for the consequence, regardless of the motives which induced the adoption of the means; even though the means employed were outside of his authority and against the express orders of the master. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Kirk (1885) 102 Ind. 309, 63 Am. Rep. 675.

The master is liable for a willful act done in the scope of the employment and bona fide for the furtherance of the master's business. Aramith v. Temple (1882) 11 Ill. App. 39.

The master is liable for willful acts done in the scope of the servant's business. Lee v. Nelms (1876) 57 Ga. 258.

Under the Georgia code making a railroad company liable for damages done by the running of its trains without reasonable care and for injuries done by the carelessness or improper conduct of the company or its agent, the company is liable for injuries caused by the improper use of the whistle, although the engineer acted from personal malice and revenge toward the injured person. Georgia R. Co. v. Newsome (1873) 60 Ga. 492.

Distinction between malice and willfulness.

After it became settled that mere willfulness would not take the servant out of his employment, a further distinction was made upon malice, and it was held that as soon as malice intervened the servant was no longer within his employment.

A railroad company is liable for the act of its brakeman in kicking a trespassing boy from the platform of a moving car, unless the brakeman was merely using his authority as a cover for accomplishing an independent and wrongful purpose of his own. Hoffman v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. (1881) 87 N. Y. 28, 41 Am. Rep. 337.

If the servant under guise and cover of executing his master's orders and executing the authority conferred upon him, willfully and designedly for the purpose of accomplishing his own independent malicious or wicked purposes does an injury then the master is not liable. Cohen v. Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co. (1877) 69 N. Y. 170.

Where an action was brought for driving dependant's sheep on plaintiff's land it was found that the sheep were in charge of the herdsman who acted willfully in the matter, and the court said: "It was his duty to keep the sheep off from plaintiff's land and whether he negligently or willfully violated it, cannot shield defendant from liability for the damages done plaintiff so long as the act was within the course of the herder's employment. . . . I distinguish between the willful doing an act in such case and doing it maliciously. The former may imply that it was done through stubbornness and obstinacy, but not necessarily for an ulterior purpose, while the latter implies that it was done with an intent to injure. It was the duty of defendant to keep his sheep off from plaintiff's land. . . . If he employed ineffectual means he should be responsible unless he were prevented by means over which he had no control. French v. Crosswell (1886) 18 Or. 418.

A railroad company is liable for the act of its conductor in putting a trespasser off from the train in a careless, negligent, or reckless manner, but not for a willful, wanton, or malicious trespass on his part in so doing. Pennsylvania Co. v. Toomey (1879) 91 Pa. 256.

The owner of a street-car is not liable for the act of its driver in needlessly striking a boy with an iron bar for the purpose of driving him off from the car, because such act is not within the scope of his employment, but it may be liable in case the driver then negligently drives over the boy's foot causing injury. Pittsburg, A. & M. Pass. R. Co. v. Donahue (1871) 70 Pa. 119.

A railroad company is liable for the act of a brakeman having authority to eject trespassers from the train in kicking a boy off for refusal to pay fare if his act was to subserve the interests of the company and not to accomplish his own ends. The court says: "Undoubtedly where the object of the servant—the end sought to be reached by him—is the intentional or malicious infliction of an injury upon the person of the trespasser, the company is not liable for the deed and the existence of malicious or intentional and willful design is a question of fact to be determined from all the circumstances of the case. If the end sought by the employé was the infliction of injury,—if the purpose he had in view when he kicked the plaintiff from the train was to injure him,—then the company is not liable because the act would be malicious and willful. But if the end sought was the ejection of the intruder,—if his purpose was devoid of evil design and merely to protect the interests car up to Mr. Kinnebrew's residence, which was about a quarter of a mile beyond the end of the section, and off of section 6. Kinnebrew was very ill. His wife desired Mrs. Meyer to come and sit up with her. Mrs. Meyer had asked Mrs. Maxwell to go with her, and Mrs. Maxwell had consented. So, in order to get to Kinnebrew's, these ladies asked either Mr. Bolling or his wife or both to let the section men carry them up to that point on the hand-car. Mr. Bolling consented, and ordered the men to come in early from work, and carry the ladies to Kinnebrew's. One of the section men testified: "We were employed on that section (No. 6), and it was the duty of the hands on that section to see every part of the road on that section every day. When we got ready to start over the north end of the section, on said March 29, 1893, Falls Bolling, a child about four years old, began to cry, and wanted to go with us," etc. At 5:20 P. M. the section men quit work, and came into the section house. On their arrival, Mrs. Bolling, who knew the purpose for which they had come in so early, sent word to the ladies that the men had come, and would take them at once. In the meantime Falls Bolling, the child of Mrs. and Mr. Bolling, and plaintiff in this case, was standing near the hand-car, crying to take a ride on it. Mike O'Connor—who, the testimony shows, was much attached to the child, and made a pet of it—asked its mother to let it go with them on the hand-car, and Mrs. Bolling consented, saying, "Take good care of my boy, and bring him back safe." To this O'Connor replied, apparently in a joking manner, "Yes, we will bring him back safe, or we will bring him back a corpse." Upon this reply being made, Mrs. Bolling then told the men "to leave her boy alone, and not to take him." The men made no reply to this, but simply laughed. As to whether or not this conversation actually took place the proof was contradictory. After this conversation, Mrs. Meyer and Mrs.

of his employer,—then, however careless or reckless the means employed, the company is liable." Smith v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1893) (Ky.) 22 L. R. A. 72.

A railroad company cannot be held liable for the act of a brakeman in shoving a trespasser off from a moving train after he has failed to compel him to give a small sum for the privilege of remaining. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Latham (Miss.) Dec. 10, 1894. In that case the court said the question here is whether the brakeman in doing what he did, as he did it, was acting for the company, or in the accomplishment solely of his own independent, willful, malicious and wicked purposes, using his authority to eject passengers as a mere cover under which to extort money not for fare but for his own pocket.

It is not clear upon what principle a distinction can be made as to the purpose of abuse of authority. If a brakeman is given authority to remove trespassers and he uses his authority to extort perquisites for himself and causes injury in attempting to enforce his authority, the cause of the injury is such attempt and it can make no difference what brought about his determination to make the attempt. So long as he is acting under and in accordance with his authority his master is responsible and the more outrageous the abuse he is capable of the greater the responsibility of the master for his negligence in entrusting such a person with such authority.

The distinction upon malice has not, however, been universally adopted. In regard to the case of Isaacs v. Third Ave. R. Co. (1871) 47 N. Y. 123, 7 Am. Rep. 418, a case in which this distinction was made in case of assault on a passenger, a subsequent case says: "Isaacs v. Third Ave. R. Co. is not to be interpreted as holding that a defendant is to be exonerated from liability for injuries occasioned by the errors and negligence of his reckless, careless, or unskillful servant because the driver manifests at the same time that he is ruffianly and brutal. It is nowhere intimated that the employment of car drivers or conductors of this latter class would benefit their masters when questions of pecuniary responsibilities for injuries arise." Cohen v. Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co. (1876) 8 Jones & S. 374.

The reasoning of Wright v. Wilcox, 19 Wend. 343, 32 Am. Dec. 597, that the law holds a willful act a departure from the master's business, seems to be inconclusive and unsatisfactory. The same act is held to be within the master's service when performed with a good motive and a departure from this service in a new and independent business of the servant when performed with a bad motive. How can an act of an agent resulting in injury to another, which is within the line of his duty when carelessly or recklessly performed, be taken out of such business or employment when repeated under the same circumstances with a similar result by the mere fact that it was performed from a malicious motive. If a principal will employ an agent of reckless disposition, irascible temper or ungovernable passion, in a responsible position requiring intelligence, tact, and judgment, he should be answerable for his willful or malicious conduct as well as negligence, especially to those with whom he is brought in contact solely by means of such employment, and while directly engaged in performing his duties. And to the same extent as if he himself were possessed of the same temperament and while performing the services had committed in person the identical injury. Rounds v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (1874) 3 Hun, 329.

The fact that the conduct of the servants constituting the negligence complained of was a violation of their duty to the employer or was needless, reckless, or wanton, does not exonerate the master. Reasonable care and fidelity in his employment is a part of the servant's engagement; and every act of negligence on his part is in some sense a violation of his duty to his master and a deviation from his authority, nevertheless while so deviating and disregarding their instructions, they are still doing their employer's work though not according to their instructions. Harriman v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. (1887) 45 Ohio St. 11.

The true criterion of the master's liability should be whether or not the act of the agent was performed in the course of his employment or while he was engaged in the business of his employer. The act and not the manner in which it was performed, or the mental condition of the actor, should determine its relation to the service in which he is employed. If the act itself be in the line of his duty and result in injury to another, the principal should be responsible whether the agent was acting in good or bad faith, negligently or willfully. Rounds v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (1874) 3 Hun, 329.

The liability of the master "is to be attributed to the fact that the master has placed the servant in a position where he may do unauthorized acts. On what principle of fairness could it be contended that either the error or folly of employing an in-

Maxwell (or about that time) arrived, and got upon the hand-car, the plaintiff being taken charge of by Mrs. Maxwell, who held him in her arms while riding on the hand-car up to Mr. Kinnebrew's. After Mrs. Maxwell, Mrs. Meyer, the plaintiff, Falls Bolling, and the crew had got themselves upon the hand-car, they then proceeded up the road a distance of about three and one half miles, to Kinnebrew's, and on arriving there the ladies got off the car, O'Connor going with them up to the house. After sitting for a while in social conversation with the ladies, O'Connor returned to the hand-car, and started back to the section house. On its way back it overtook one Grant Johnson, a negro man, walking along the track. The hand crew, in the goodness of their heart, stopped it, and took Johnson aboard. Up to this time the child, Falls Bolling, had been riding on the front of the car, and was safe and sound. But shortly after Johnson had boarded the car the little fellow commenced to grow sleepy, and began to nod. O'Connor and the crew observed this, and fearing the child might fall off the front of the car, O'Connor moved him back from the front to the side, close to the standards where the cog wheels work. The car continued on its journey, but shortly thereafter the boy fell asleep, and in some unexplainable manner got his hand caught in the cog wheel and crushed. In the court below it was contended by appellant that Mike O'Connor and his section men were acting wholly and entirely without the scope of their employment when they undertook to carry these ladies, the plaintiff, or the colored man upon the hand-car; that it was not a part of defendant's duty to carry passengers, either for hire or for pleasure, upon hand-cars; that such means for the transportation of passengers was unknown to defendant's system of business; that it was contrary to the usual mode of doing business upon this, as well as other, railroads; that the rules and regulations of the railway company forbade competent or careless servant should bring damage on a stranger while the master who put him in a position where he might commit the wrong should be free from all obligation to respond for the injury? The appointment of such improper person by the master induced the wrong and if it was committed in the course of his employment, that is while the relation of master and servant actually existed in the particular service in the discharge of which the servant was engaged, the master is held to answer. Every act is willful which is the result of volition. The principle proceeds upon the ground that the injury by reason of the willful act is to be attributed to the negligence and want of care of the master in the selection of an improper servant for a particular charge. Redding v. South Carolina R. Co. (1871) 3 S. C. N. S. 1, 16 Am. Rep. 661.

Exemplary damages.

While the subject of exemplary damages is not included in this note, yet some of the cases which apparently hold against a liability in case of malice in fact merely refuse to add exemplary damages because of such malice.

Thus a principal is not responsible for the malice, vexation, or wantonness of his agent in suing out garnishment proceedings unless he authorized or participated in it or subsequently ratified it. Alabama State Land Co. v. Reed (1891) 99 Ala. 19.

But from the authorities cited in that case the meaning of the court evidently is that the malice of the agent will not subject the master to exemplary damages, for the Alabama rule is that the principal is not liable for vindictive damages because of the malice of the agent. Pollock v. Gantt (1891) 99 Ala. 97, 44 Am. Rep. 519. While in Jackson v. Smith (1893) 75 Ala. 97, it is said the principal is liable if his agent maliciously sues out an attachment without legal cause for the actual damages done but cannot be made liable for exemplary damages unless he authorized the attachment.

In another case where the action was for negligence in allowing wires to become dangerous whereby plaintiff was injured, the court says: "If the action on the part of the persons employed by the telegraph company was conceived in a spirit of mischief or criminal indifference of civil obligations, and this was brought home to the managers of the company, or if the managers did not exercise proper care in the selection of the agents, or if they had reason to know or the means of being informed that they were not skillful, prudent, or careful, then the jury can add exemplary damages." Henning v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1890) 41 Fed. Rep. 864.

Malice as preventing defenses.

An interesting fact about this question of malice is that when approached from another direction it not only ceases to be a defense to the master but also aids an injured person in maintaining an action which his own negligence would otherwise bar. Cases of this class are numerous, but since most of them do not discuss the subject from the point of view of this note they are not collected here. As illustrations it may be stated that—

Willful or reckless misconduct by the employees of a railroad company may give a right of action to a trespasser injured on the railroad track, when he could not have had a remedy except for such willfulness or recklessness. Wright v. Boston & A. R. Co. (1896) 142 Mass. 296.

Recklessly and wantonly driving a street-car against a wire which a telegraph company is wrongfully stringing along the public street will prevent the fact that the injured person was injured in an unlawful act from being a defense to an action for the injury caused thereby. Banks v. Highland Street R. Co. (1884) 136 Mass. 485.

So maliciously running against a pleasure yacht sailing on the Lord's Day will prevent the fact that the owner of the yacht was violating the law from being a defense to an action for the injury. Wallace v. Merrimack River Nav. & Exp. Co. (1893) 134 Mass. 95, 45 Am. Rep. 301.

The very fact that the presence of malice benefits the injured person whenever the attention of the court is not called to the fact that the malice has taken the servant out of the scope of his employment shows the injustice of the latter rule and also shows that such rule has no place in the legal thought of this age unless placed there by the binding force of a precedent based upon a legal action which never should have had existence.

The application of the malice doctrine to drivers of horses.

Almost all the shades of distinction noted above are illustrated by cases in which injuries have been done by drivers of horses.

Willfulness relieves master.

The master is not liable for the injuries caused by the willful act of his servant in whipping up his horse for the purpose of throwing a boy who had attempted to get into the wagon. Wright v. Wilcox (1898) 19 Wend. 342, 33 Am. Dec. 507.

it; that no employé had authority, power, or right to involve the defendant in such a manner. Defendant further contended, and evidence was introduced to show, that the printed rules and regulations of the defendant company positively forbade the section foreman, or any and all of his section hands, from using the hand-cars in their possession for any other purpose than doing work upon the road.

Messrs. Dodge & Johnson, for appellant:

It was not the duty of the defendant's employés to carry plaintiff and these ladies upon this hand-car; their acts in so doing were voluntary on their part, as an accommodation to the parties, and in direct and positive violation of the rules of the company; having done so it was outside the scope of any delegated and designated authority, and for the results of their action, the defendant was not answerable.

Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Dawkins, 77 Tex. 228; Files v. Boston & A. R. Co. 149 Mass 205; Powers v. Boston & M. R. Co. 153 Mass 191; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. West, 125 Ill. 820; Morris v. Brown, 111 N. Y. 828; Keating v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 97 Mich. 154; Willies v. State Road Bridge Co. 63 Mich. 644; 1 Parsons, Cont. 102; Cooley, Torts, 533; 1 Addison, Torts, § 550, note 1; 2 Hilliard, Torts, 432; Story, Ag. § 452; Paley, Principal & Agent, 296-298; Smith,

In that case the court says the dividing line is the willfulness of the act. The line where the master's liability shall terminate must be placed somewhere, and the acquiescence of Westminster Hall for many years in the rule laid down by Lord Kenyon in McManus v. Crickett (1800) 1 East, 106, is an evidence of the common law not to be resisted especially as it will not be found to conflict with any general principle of that law.

The master is not liable if his servant in charge of a horse and carriage willfully runs over a person in the highway, but is liable if he does so recklessly. Cleveland v. Newsom (1890) 45 Mich. 62.

A street railway company is not liable for the willful act of its driver in running upon a traveler upon the highway. Whitaker v. Eighth Ave. R. Co. (1873) 51 N. Y. 295, rev'd 5 Robt. 650.

A street-car company is not liable for the willful act of its driver in running against a vehicle which is obstructing the track. Wood v. Detroit City Street R. Co. (1884) 53 Mich. 402, 30 Am. Rep. 258.

The master is not liable for his servant's willfully driving against a person and injuring him. Cleveland v. Newsom, supra.

Case will not lie against the master if the servant willfully drives against a third person causing injury. Savignac v. Roome (1795) 6 T. R. 125.

Case will not lie against a master whose servant willfully drives against the carriage of another person, whereby it is broken. Barnes v. Hurd (1814) 11 Mass. 57.

Where plaintiff's and defendant's carriages became entangled and defendant's coachman struck plaintiff's horses with a whip, causing them to spring forward and injure plaintiff's carriage, the court says: "If a servant driving a carriage in order to effect some purpose of his own wantonly strikes the horses of another person, and produces the accident, the master will not be liable, but if in order to perform the master's orders he strikes, but injudiciously and in order to extricate himself from a difficulty, that will be negligent and careless conduct, for which the master will be liable, being an act done in performance of the servant's employment. Croft v. Allison (1831) 4 Barn. & Ald. 590.

Willfulness to effect object of master.

If the driver of an omnibus turns across the path of a rival so as to obstruct the road, and injury results, the master will be liable although the act was willfully done, if it was done for the purpose of advancing the master's interests. Limpus v. London General Omnibus Co. (1862) 1 Hurlst. & C. 523, 32 L. J. Exch. 34, 11 Week. Rep. 147, 7 L. T. N. S. 641.

Where an injury was caused by the driver of a runaway team intentionally guiding them against a wagon to stop them, the court held that although he did so to save himself from peril, the master would be liable if the runaway was caused by the 27 L. R. A.

servant's negligence, and the act of stopping them in that manner was a prudent one under the circumstances and one calculated to be to the pecuniary advantage of the master. Wolfe v. Mercereau (1855) 4 Duer, 473.

In a case brought to recover for injuries inflicted by defendant's servant driving an ice wagon against plaintiff's carriage, the court says, for the acts of the servant within the general scope of his employment while engaged in his master's business and done with a view to the furtherance of that business and the master's interests, the master will be responsible whether the act be done negligently, wantonly, or even willfully. The acts for which the master will be liable are such as were not done in the course of the service and were not such as the servant intended and believed for the interest of the master. Mott v. Consumers' Ice Co. (1878) 73 N. Y. 543.

Malice.

In a case in which the servant in delivering bread from house to house drove his horse upon the sidewalk and when plaintiff remonstrated drove against plaintiff and injured him, the court said: "The rule may be stated thus: The master is not responsible as a trespasser, unless by direct or implied authority to the servant he consents to the wrongful act. But if the master give an order to a servant which implies the use of force and violence to others, leaving to the discretion of the servant to decide when the occasion arises to which the order applies, and the extent and kind of force to be used, he is liable, if the servant in executing the order makes use of force in a manner or to a degree which is unjustifiable. And in an action of tort in the nature of an action on the case, the master is not responsible if the wrong done by the servant is done without his authority, and not for the purpose of executing his orders, or doing his work. So that if the servant, wholly for a purpose of his own, disregarding the object for which he is employed and not intending by his act to execute it, does an injury to another not within the scope of his employment, the master is not liable. But if the act be done in the execution of the authority given him by his master, and for the purposes of performing what the master has directed, the master will be responsible, whether the wrong done be occasioned by negligence, or by wanton or reckless purpose to accomplish the master's business in an unlawful manner." Howe v. Newmaroh (1866) 12 Allen, 49.

But other courts have taken a different view of this question.

If a coachman sees his enemy sitting on the box of another carriage driving along the same highway and he so guides his own team as to bring the carriages into collision whereby injury is done, the master is liable. McClung v. Dearborne (1890) 9 L. R. A. 204, 134 Pa. 393.

Mast. & S. 322; Baker v. Kinsey, 88 Cal. 681, 99 Am. Dec. 438; Wright v. Wilcox, 19 Wend. 343, 33 Am. Dec. 507; Hoar v. Maine Cent. R. Co. 70 Me. 65, 35 Am. Rep. 299; Gardner v. New Haven & N. Co. 51 Conn. 150, 50 Am. Rep. 12; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Michie, 83 Ill. 429.

Where there is a division of the freight and passenger business of a railroad, the common presumption is, that a person found on a freight train is not legally a passenger.

Hobbs v. Texas & P. R. Co. 49 Ark. 860; Jones v. St. Louis, N. & P. Packet Co. 43 Mo. App. 410; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. West, supra.

The act of a servant of a railway company in inviting a passenger to ride on a "handcar" cannot be assumed to be the company's act, unless the servant's authority to thus use the hand-car is shown.

International & G. N. R. Co. v. Cock, 68 Tex. 713; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Prines, 77 Tex. 560.

A railway company owes no duty to an intruder upon one of its timber trains, upon which passengers are not carried, except not to wantonly and willfully injure him.

Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Meacham, 91 Tenn. 428; Snyder v. Natchez, R. R. & T. R. Co. 42 La. Ann. 302; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Ledbetter, 45 Ark. 250; Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co. v. Haynes, 47 Ark. 502; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Monday, 49 Ark. 264.

A master is liable for the act of his servant in whipping up his horse after the wagon is caught in a wire which a telegraph lineman is engaged in stringing and injuring the lineman, although he was notified to stop after the wagon was caught and refused to do so. Clark v. Koehler (1887) 48 Hun, 536.

Under the Illinois statute the owner of a stage-coach is liable for the willful acts of his servant the driver. Fuller v. Voght (1851) 13 Ill. 277.

In Schaefer v. Osterbrink (1886) 67 Wis. 495, 58 Am. Rep. 875, where it was contended that the liability of the master for willful acts of his servant which had been established in case of the relation of passenger and carrier did not extend to the case of driving on the highway, the court says: "Two teams upon the highway each with a sleigh or vehicle coming in close proximity to each other, the driver of each most certainly owes a duty to those riding with the other. That duty is created by law and requires each driver to proceed with care and circumspection and with reference to the shifting situation of the other. When such driver is a servant acting within the course and scope of his employment then such duty rests upon the master as well as the servant. The employer in such case being responsible for the performance of such duty by his delegated agency can no more escape liability for such failure when it occurs through the agent's gross negligence or willful misconduct than he can when it is by reason of his agent's want of ordinary care."

Additional damages.

If there is wantonness or mischief causing additional damages in the injurious act of a servant within the scope of his employment as where his servant drives against the carriage of another person wantonly as well as carelessly and negligently, the conduct will enhance the damages against the master. Hawes v. Knowles (1874) 114 Mass. 518, 19 Am. Rep. 363.

Arrest and malicious prosecution.

The master is liable for the act of his servant in unlawfully arresting a person whom it is the master's duty to protect. See note to Mulligan v. New York & R. B. R. Co. (1892) (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 791.

In Mall v. Lord (1868) 39 N. Y. 381, 100 Am. Dec. 448, it was held that the owner of a store was not liable for an arrest of a suspected shoplifter by his superintendent, but in the later case of Mallach v. Ridley (1888) 15 N. Y. S. R. 4, a lower New York court held that the principles of Mall v. Lord had been departed from in later cases and that the proprietor of a store owed a duty to customers which would render him liable for a false arrest of them by his servants.

An express company is liable for the act of its agent in causing the arrest of one from whom he 27 L. R. A.

is attempting to collect charges on property taken without payment of charges, although it would not be if he was acting in the interests of the public in causing the arrest. Cameron v. Pacific Exp. Co. (1892) 48 Mo. App. 99.

A railroad company is liable for the act of its agent in making an arrest when he is acting within the scope of his employment. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. King (1892) 69 Miss. 352.

5 Mews' Digest, p. 237, cites a case (Vanden Eynde v. Ulster R. Co. 5 Ir. C. L. Rep. 4, affirmed, 5 Ir. C. L. Rep. 323), in which the master was held liable for the act of a ticket agent and station master in arresting and searching one who went to the ticket office to purchase a ticket, because they thought he had stolen one.

A person is liable for the act of his attorney in unlawfully suing out process and causing the arrest of a person against whom suit is brought. Collett v. Foster (1857) 8 Hurlst. & N. 356, 26 L. J. Exch. 412.

It is within the scope of the employment of a salesman to cause the arrest and search of a person whom he believes to have stolen property from his custody. Staples v. Schmid (1893) 19 L. R. A. 824, 18 R. I. 207.

In that case the court in commenting upon the case of Mall v. Lord, supra, says: "It is true the master would have had no right to arrest and search an innocent person. But it is equally true that he would have had the right to detain a thief. The case therefore was one where the act aside from any excessive force might be lawful or unlawful according to whether the supposed circumstances were real or unreal. The servant was left in a situation where he was obliged to determine the fact and where his duty to his master depended upon his decision. The decision was his and the act was one intended by him for the benefit of his master and which his duty required, if the fact was as supposed, hence as to third persons it was his master's act. The criterion of the master's liability can never be whether the act would have been lawful for the master to have done in the circumstances as they actually existed.

Where the porter at a railroad station got into an altercation with certain persons who were there waiting for the train, and finally gave them and plaintiff, who was also at the station, into custody under the charge of obstructing and assaulting him in the discharge of his duty, the court ruled that he acted without the slightest authority and that the railroad company was not liable. Lumsden v. London & S. W. R. Co. (1897) 16 L. T. N. S. 609.

In a case where a bank was held not liable for the arrest of a person to whom the runner had been sent to collect a draft with whom a police officer had gone to protect him, who made the arrest at his request, the court said that in order to make the

To render the master liable for the acts of the servant the servant must be at the time employed in the business of the master.

Whart. Neg. §§ 157, 162, 168; Whittaker's Smith, Neg. p. 154, note, pp. 155, 156, 162, 163; 2 Thomp. Neg. p. 885, and cases cited; N. Y., T. & M. R. Co. v. Sutherland, 8 Willson, Civ. Cas. (Tex.) § 140, p. 177; Herlihy v. Smith, 116 Mass. 265; Bard v. John, 26 Pa. 482; Sheridan v. Charlich, 4 Daly, 838; Morier v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 81 Minn. 351, 47 Am. Rep. 793; Stons v. Hils, 45 Conn. 44, 29 Am. Rep. 635; Maddox v. Brown, 71 Me. 432, 36 Am. Rep. 336; Storey v. Ashton, L. R. 4 Q. B. 476; Rayner v. Mitchell, L. R. 2 Q. P. Div. 857.

Though the servant be at the time in the general course of his employment, yet if the particular act complained of is not a part of the duty which the servant is employed to perform, and has not been authorized by the master, the latter is not liable.

Whart. Neg. § 177; Eaton v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 57 N. Y. 382, 15 Am. Rep. 513; Robertson v. New York & E. R. Co. 22 Barb. 91; Flower v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 69 Pa. 210, 8 Am. Rep. 251; Duff v. Allegheny Valley R. Co. 91 Pa. 458, 36 Am. Rep. 675; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Langdon, 92 Pa. 21, 37 Am. Rep. 651; Towanda Coal Co. v. Heeman, 86 Pa. 418; Higgins v. Chesapeake & D. Canal Co. 8 Harr. (Del.) 411; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Michie, 83 Ill. 427; Lygo v. Newbold, 9 Exch. 802.

bank liable there must have been express precedent authority or subsequent ratification. National Bank of Commerce of Baltimore v. Baker (1898) 77 Md. 463.

The principal will not be liable for additional damages because of the malice of his agent in suing out an attachment although he may be liable to make compensation for the bad judgment of his agent in suing it out wrongfully. Wallace v. Finberg (1876) 46 Tex. 38.

Assault.

In this case also the master is liable for an assault upon a person whom it is his duty to protect. See note to Davis v. Houghtlin (1891) (Neb.) 14 L. R. A. 737. See also Ejection from cars, supra.

The master is liable for an assault by his servant in guarding an orchard in charge of which he has been placed. Ward v. Young (1884) 42 Ark. 553.

The master is responsible for the assault of the foreman of his shop having authority to discharge employes, in attempting to remove from the premises an employe, whom he has discharged. Bogahn v. Moore Mfg. & Foundry Co. (1891) 79 Wis. 573.

A master who sends his servant to remove certain furniture from a house is liable for a willful assault committed by the servant in executing the order. Levi v. Brooks (1877) 121 Mass. 501.

One who employs a servant to aid him in maintaining forcible possession of property, is liable for an unlawful assault committed by the servant while so engaged, although it is contrary to his employer's orders. Barden v. Felch (1872) 109 Mass. 154.

Taking a garment off from a woman who had gone into a store to purchase it, because the employe thought she was a spy from a rival house is within the scope of their employment so as to render their employer liable for the assault. Geraty v. Stern (1886) 30 Hun. 426.

A master who sends his servant to get an article of furniture belonging to the master but which is in possession of a third person is liable for an assault committed by the servant upon such third person in getting possession of it, although he had given instructions not to use force and violence. McClung v. Dearborne (1890) 8 L. R. A. 204, 124 Pa. 393.

The proprietor of a hotel is liable for the injuries caused by an assault upon a person who in a state of intoxication has taken possession of one of the rooms, which is made in the endeavor by the clerk and porter to eject him therefrom. Wade v. Thayer (1871) 40 Cal. 573.

But an inn-keeper is not liable for an injury inflicted by his servant upon a guest during a personal altercation between them about a matter not within the scope of the servant's employment. Curtis v. Dinneen (1896) 4 Dak. 245.

A master is not liable for an assault by its servant unless at the time of making it he was acting within the scope of his employment. McCann v. Tillinghast (1886) 140 Mass. 327.

A master is not liable for an assault by his servant entirely outside of the scope of his employ. Coffield v. McCabe (Minn.) July 12, 1894.

A store keeper by reason of the invitation to the public to come to his store and trade undertakes to keep the premises safe and will be liable in case he permits cash boys to acquire the habit of snapping pins about the store in consequence of which a customer is hit in the eye and injured. Swinarton v. Le Boutilier (1894) 81 Abb. N. C. 231.

But there is an early English case which is not in harmony with the principles of later cases which held that where a person entered a shop to purchase some goods that are displayed in the window and the clerk refused to let him have them at the prices marked and after some words committed an assault on him, the court held that the owner of the shop was not liable for the assault, not having been present at the time. Timothy v. Simpson (1884) 6 Car. & P. 499, 1 Crompt. M. & R. 757, 5 Tyrw. 244.

In the following cases it would seem that the scope of the servant's employment covered the act.

The person in charge of a freight house is not acting within the scope of his authority in making an assault on a person who comes to the freight house to get a consignment of goods. Hudson v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. (1876) 16 Kan. 470.

A sleeping-car company is not liable for the act of its porter in assaulting and throwing out of the car one who goes to the door to ask permission to wash his hands. Williams v. Pullman Palace Car Co. (1888) 40 La. Ann. 87.

Where the lock-tender of a canal, whose duty was to open and close the locks and receive tolls, assaulted a boatman, it was held that he was not acting within the scope of his employment, and the master was not liable for his act. Ware v. Baratania & L. Canal Co. (1840) 15 L. 189, 35 Am. Dec. 189.

A railroad company who has stationed an agent at the entrance of cars to prevent persons entering who have not procured tickets, is not liable for an assault and battery committed by the agent upon one who persisted in entering the car without a ticket. Priest v. Hudson River R. Co. (1875) 65 N. Y. 599.

It is not within the scope of the employment of the foreman of a warehouse whose duty is to deliver property to consignees when they come for it, to assault a person for refusing to take a package because it is in bad condition and the master will not be liable for his act in so doing. Meehan v. Morewood (1890) 52 Hun. 568.

The owner of a boat is not liable for the act of a mate in striking an employe to compel him to work faster in carrying freight on board. Smith v. Mem-

The affirmative evidence of appellant showing that the superior officers of the section foreman had no notice, information, or knowledge of the violation of the rule forbidding the carriage of third parties on the hand-car, and there being no evidence to the contrary, and such violation not being of such nature as to make it known to such superior officers, and there being nothing in the character of a hand-car, or the work which a section foreman was employed to perform, to induce people to believe that it was intended by appellant for the carriage of passengers, especially to points beyond the section to which it belonged, the mere fact of such disregard of the rule by the section foreman is not sufficient to show that the rule had been waived by the company, or that the foreman had authority to carry the plaintiff.

Prince v. International & G. N. R. Co. 64 Tex. 144; Hull v. East Line & R. R. Co. 66 Tex. 619; Eaton v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 57 N. Y. 383, 15 Am. Rep. 513; Robertson v. New York & E. R. Co. 22 Barb. 91.

Messrs. Wells & Williamson and Dan. W. Jones & McCain, for appellee:

We do not contend that a grown person riding upon a hand-car as a passenger could recover for any injury he might sustain while so riding.

Of course the child could not be guilty of negligence, and the negligence of the mother phis & A. C. Packet Co. (Tenn.) June 6, 1886; Jones v. St. Louis, N. & P. Packet Co. (1891) 43 Mo. App. 411.

But the mere fact that a trespasser on a train is assaulted by a servant of the company is not sufficient to charge the company with liability unless it is shown that at the time of the assault the servant was acting within the scope of his employment. Smith v. Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. (1890) 124 Ind. 394.

Striking or whipping slave.

The master is not liable for the act of his overseer in so cruelly whipping a slave that death results. Harris v. Nicholas (1817) 5 Munf. 453.

A master is not liable for the death of a negro whom he has directed his overseer to whip until he is humbled, if he maliciously kills him, but he is liable if he negligently or carelessly punishes him until he dies. Puryear v. Thompson (1844) 5 Humph. 307.

A master is not responsible for the act of his overseer whom he has sent to call a slave belonging to a third person, in striking the slave on the head so as to inflict a mortal wound, there being nothing to show that he anticipated that such an act would be necessary. McCoy v. McKowen (1853) 26 Miss. 497, 59 Am. Dec. 234.

Shooting.

A railroad company is liable for the shooting of a passenger by a conductor in attempting to expel him from the train, although at the time of the shooting the trespasser was obeying the conductor's orders and there was no further necessity of any act of violence to effect the expulsion. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Kennedy (Tex.) Dec. 12, 1894.

A bridge company is liable for the act of a watchman charged with keeping trespassers off from the bridge who shoots a person whom he is attempting to put off. Haebl v. Wabash R. Co. (1896) 119 Mo. 325.

In a case where a brakeman who had been directed to remove a trespasser from a train, fired a pistol at him causing him to fall under the car, the court held that he could recover for the reckless and willful act of the brakeman within the scope of his authority. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Seales (1898) 100 Ala. 363.

A railroad company is liable for the act of its watchman in shooting a person whom he suspects of having attempted to break into a car, although in so doing he may exceed his authority. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Hackett (1894) 58 Ark. 381. In that case the court says the better opinion seems to be, that the master is liable for the willful and malicious acts of the servant if they were performed about the master's business in the course of the servant's employment.

Persons who employ a watchman to guard a building are not liable for his act in shooting a person who is running away from it. Golden v. Newbrand (1879) 53 Iowa, 59, 35 Am. Rep. 267. 27 L. R. A.

A railroad company is not liable for the act of its conductor in shooting a man whom he supposes has broken into one of the cars for the purpose of stealing from it. Candiff v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. (1890) 42 La. Ann. 477.

A master who employs a person to guard feed is not liable for his act in shooting another person lawfully on the premises while attempting to seize and detain him. Davis v. Houghtelin (1891) 14 L. R. A. 737, 33 Neb. 582.

The master is not liable for the shooting of a person where the servant does the act in attempting to maintain unlawful possession of land. Sagers v. Nuckolls (1896) 3 Colo. App. 95.

So where a servant engaged to aid in effecting a forcible entry upon certain real estate shot and killed a person resisting the entry, the court in holding that if the shot was fired with a premeditated design to effect the death then defendant would not be liable unless he directed or authorized the firing, said: "The principal putting the others in motion is answerable for all the necessary or legal and natural consequences that ensue, such as might in the ordinary and natural course of events follow. To this extent he must be regarded as intending all the consequences of the proceeding instituted and carried on by him. The acts of the agent are his acts. The law holds that he ought to have foreseen whatever results naturally or necessarily follow from his unlawful act and he will be liable for all that is done by his agents in furtherance of the general design, for acts within the general scope of the design or which legitimately or naturally result from the purpose. But the principal is not liable for the malicious and willful act of the servant done without his direction or authority," and it was held that the willful killing of a person could not be regarded as within the intention of the undertaking. Fraser v. Freeman (1871) 43 N. Y. 566, 8 Am. Rep. 740.

In the lower court in which it appeared that defendant had invited the servant to go in with him and fight it out, and that defendant knew that the servant was armed, the court says: "If a person therefore asks another already in his service to assist him and to do it by fighting an adversary in order to accomplish some purpose though lawful in itself and connected with the services, he must be responsible for the act of the servant because he has enlisted him to commit acts which otherwise would be held to be willful and without the line of duty or the service for which he was employed." Fraser v. Freeman (1870) 56 Barb. 234.

It is difficult to understand how that decision by the court of appeals can be justified.

Distinction between trespass and case.

Much confusion has been thrown around this question of liability for willful acts by the attempt to maintain the distinction between trespass and case. Cases which decided nothing more than that could not be imputed to the child. The doctrine of imputed negligence has been entirely exploded.

Bishop, Non-Cont. L. 583; Chicago City R. Co. v. Wilcox, 21 L. R. A. 76, 188 Ill. 870; Newman v. Phillipsburg Horse Car R. Co. 8 L. R. A. 842, 52 N. J. L. 446; Chase, Torts, 281.

In case of an injury to a child, two causes of action arise—one in favor of the infant for his personal injuries, and one in favor of the parent for losses suffered by him or her.

Sibley v. Ratliffe, 60 Ark. 480.

Whether the father's action would have been barred by the negligence of the mother we need not discuss. It is certain that this did not bar the child.

A child of tender years, having no discretion, must be supposed to be riding in invitum. When taken aboard a hand-car he is in no sense a passenger. If an engineer or conductor should tie a man and by sheer physical force put him aboard the engine or the coach of a passenger train, and carry him against his will, could the victim in such case be called a passenger?

If while being carried such a person were injured, he would be entitled to his redress, but he would not sue as a passenger.

Appellee's case is the ordinary one of a person injured by a dangerous piece of machinery, where the injury is caused by the negligence of those having the machinery in charge.

The "turn-table" cases furnish an analogy.

trespass was not the proper form of action have been subsequently cited as holding that no action would lie.

In McManus v. Crickett (1800) 1 East, 106, it was held that if the servant willfully drives against a third person and injures him, the master is not liable in trespass. The court says that the servant by willfully driving against plaintiff without his master's consent gains a special property for the time and so for that purpose the vehicle was the servant's. The language of that case is broad enough to hold that there is no liability in any form of action, but the case in reality seems to have turned upon the distinction between trespass and case.

Where defendant had instructed his servant to deposit some rubbish near but not to let it go against plaintiff's wall and by reason of the character of the rubbish some of it did go against the wall, the defendant was held liable. Bailey, J., said: "If in execution of the order it was the necessary or natural consequence of the act ordered to be done, that the rubbish should go against the wall, the master is answerable in trespass." Little-dale, J., said: "Where a servant does work by order of his master and the latter imposes a restriction in the course of executing his order, which it is difficult for the servant to comply with, and the servant in executing the order breaks through the restriction, the master is liable in trespass. But if the injury arises from want of ordinary care in the servant, the master will only be liable in case." Gregory v. Piper (1839) 9 Barn. & C. 561, 4 Mann. & R. 500.

In McLaughlin v. Pryor (1842) 4 Mann. & G. 53, 4 Scott, N. R. 655, Car. & M. 354, it is said that a servant cannot make his master a trespasser against his will. But in that case the master sat upon the box of the carriage and saw the postboys attempt to force their way into a line of carriages without remonstrance, and he was held liable in trespass for the injury done by them.

As to liability for acts done in the presence of the master generally, see L.

A landlord is not liable in trespass for the act of the bailiff in wrongfully seizing property for rent unless he authorized or ratifies the act. Freeman v. Rosher (1849) 13 Q. B. 730, 18 L. J. Q. B. 340, 13 Jur. 881.

If a servant is commanded to pull down a little wooden house, in which plaintiff was and would not come out, and the servant is told to take care not to harm plaintiff, and if in pulling down the house the plaintiff is wounded, the master is not liable in trespass. Kingston v. Booth (1885) Skin. 223.

Trespass will not lie against a master for the acts of his servant in cutting timber on the land of a third person without the consent or approbation 27 L. R. A.

of the master and contrary to his express directions, as where the servant was sent to cut timber on land adjoining that where the trespass was committed. Blackburn v. Baker (1840) 1 Ala. 173.

Trespass will not lie against a railroad company for the killing of stock on the track by the negligence of persons in charge of the train. Selma R. & D. Co. v. Webb (1873) 49 Ala. 240.

A master cannot be held liable in trespass for an act committed by his servant in the ordinary course of his business unless the act was done by his authority or command or he assented to it or it was a necessary incident to the discharge of the business which the servant was set to do. Fergusons v. Terry (1840) 1 B. Mon. 93.

A railroad company is not liable in trespass for the act of its servant in running an engine over a wagon at a highway crossing. Philadelphia, G. & N. R. Co. v. Wilt (1839) 4 Whart. 143.

Trespass will not lie against the master for the act of his servant. Yerger v. Warren (1858) 31 Pa. 319; Lindsay v. Griffin (1853) 22 Ala. 629.

Trespass will not lie against the master for the acts of his servants in driving cattle out of a field of which acts he was ignorant. Lindsay v. Griffin (1853) 22 Ala. 630.

Case and not trespass is the proper form of action against the master for the acts of his agent. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Reed (1856) 17 Ill. 582.

Case and not trespass is the proper action against the master for an injury caused by the negligent driving of his servant. Morley v. Galsford (1795) 3 H. Bl. 442.

If the servant in the performance of the master's work uses the property of another and injures it, the master is not liable in trespass unless he directed the servant to use the property. Gordon v. Rolt (1849) 7 Dowl. & L. 87, 4 Exch. 365, 18 L. J. Exch. 432. In that case the court makes a distinction between trespass and case and during the argument says: "If your servant is driving your cart for you, he is engaged in an occupation for your benefit, yet if he were to run over a man you would not be liable in trespass but case, unless you gave the order from which the accident resulted.

In Bath v. Caton (1877) 37 Mich. 199, in which servants had ignorantly committed a trespass because they had not been instructed as to the true boundaries of the land on which they were at work, the court says: Conceding that the negligence would render the one falling to give the information liable in point of law for the damage, a proposition not free from question, still his liability will be in case for the negligence and not in trespass for the act of force committed by others. The damage by the trespassers might give the measure of the amount recoverable of him but his being liable through his neglect alone for the damage consequent on the trespass of others could not

In Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745, the court held that a railroad company was liable for injuries suffered by an infant while playing on a turn-table negligently left unfastened.

See also Barrett v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 91 Cal. 296.

So far from the appellee being a passenger, his rights are precisely the same as if he had been hurt by the car without being aboard of it.

The true test of the master's liability is that laid down by Blackstone, bk. 1, p. 481, "The damage must be done while he (the servant) is actually employed in the master's service."

Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Derby, 55 U.

S. 14 How. 468, 14 L. ed. 503; Duggins v. Watson, 15 Ark. 118, 60 Am. Dec. 560; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Rahn, 132 U. S. 518, 33 L. ed. 440; Ward v. Young, 42 Ark. 553; Cooley, Torts, § 538; Ritchie v. Walker, 63 Conn. 155; Wilton v. Middlesex R. Co. 107 Mass. 108, 9 Am. Rep. 11.

In cases of injury done by servants in the performance of their master's business, it can never be a matter of any interest or importance to know what private instructions they had as to how they should or should not conduct themselves in their business.

Wood, Mast. & S. § 283, et seq.

Hughes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

confound the ground of his liability with that of theirs. His wrong would not be theirs. His non-feasance, his mere omission to keep others from future trespass would be distinct from their act of trespass and not of the same actionable nature. The fact of his being liable will not make the direct act of force of the workman his direct act of force and hence his trespass.

In Thames S. B. Co. v. Housatonic R. Co. (1855) 24 Conn. 40, 63 Am. Dec. 154, the watchman on a wharf cut loose a steamboat which had taken fire and let it drift away and consume, whereas it might have been saved if he had not done so. Trespass was brought against the owners of the wharf and the court after arguing the presumption that the act was not within the scope of the servant's business said: "The principle that subjects a master for the tortious act of the servant done in the performance of the master's business and within the scope of the general authority conferred, is the same as that which subjects him for the act of his servant done by his express direction given at the time . . . the master should be responsible for the acts of the agent to the same extent that he would be if he personally committed the wrong. But the remedies applicable to these several injuries are entirely different. In the former case he is liable only in an action on the case founded upon the negligence of the servant in the performance of the master's lawful business. Whereas in the latter case he is liable in an action of trespass caused by the act of the servant. But his liability to be sued in trespass does not rest at all upon the relationship of master and servant which exists, but upon the fact that the act complained of was done by his express direction and command and so in reality as well as in law is his own act, though done through the instrumentality of another. A man should not be made a trespasser against his will, though he may be made liable in an action on the case for the negligence of the servants while engaged in the business of the master, however contrary to the master's wishes such negligence may be: and the reason is because he who is damaged ought to be recompensed and a man must so use his own as to do no injury to another, and where one or two innocent persons must suffer it is the more reasonable that he should suffer whose act of employing an unskillful or negligent servant was the cause of the injury, than that the other who has been wholly in the right should be compelled to bear the loss brought upon him through another's want of care in not attending to his own business, and in entrusting it to the carelessness of his servant." And it was held that in that case trespass would not lie.

In Vermont it is held that the master is liable in trespass for the negligent act of his servant which constitutes a trespass. Andrus v. Howard (1863) 28 Vt. 248, 84 Am. Dec. 680.

37 L. R. A.

V. WHEN THE RESULT OF ABUSE OF AUTHORITY WILL BE SERIOUS OR THE TEMPTATION TO ABUSE IS STRONG.

There have always been cases in which the question of the servant's authority has been ignored and the liability of the principal placed on its true ground, that is his duty to prevent injury to third persons by the use or abuse of a commission which he has given to another to act for him. Such is the case of newspaper publication of libels. In such case the employer must make compensation for injury done regardless of the character of the employé's act. See note to State v. Mason (1894) (Or.) 26 L. R. A. 779.

So in other cases.

The master is liable for the publication by his agent of a libel. Pollasky v. Minchener (1890) 9 L. R. A. 103, 81 Mich. 230.

A master is responsible for the acts of his agent in circulating slanders among customers about a business rival, which was directly within the line of the agent's business, whether the acts were done negligently, wantonly, or even willfully. Buffalo Lubricating Oil Co. Limited v. Standard Oil Co. of New York (1896) 3 N. Y. S. R. 450.

One who writes a libel and employs another to translate it into another language in which it is published, is liable for the act of the latter. Wilson v. Noonan (1871) 27 Wis. 568.

But in Henry v. Pittsburgh & L. E. R. Co. (1891) 130 Pa. 239, it is intimated that a railroad company will not be liable for a libel on one of its employés published by its superintendent.

So an express company is not liable in damages for a libel written by its local agent in regard to a matter over which he had no authority. Southern Exp. Co. v. Fitzner (1882) 59 Miss. 581, 42 Am. Rep. 379.

So in the case of the sale of food and drugs, the master is responsible for injury done by impure articles furnished by his clerk. See note to Craft v. Parker (1893) (Mich.) 21 L. R. A. 139.

A druggist is liable for the negligent act of his clerk in putting wrong labels on a poisonous medicine which has been put up by him, by reason of which injury is done to a customer. Thomas v. Winchester (1835) 6 N. Y. 397, 67 Am. Dec. 455.

The master is liable for the neglect of his servant to comply with the statute requiring poisons sold by druggists to be labeled. Osborne v. McMahers (1890) 40 Minn. 108.

The courts have from time to time placed the liability directly upon this ground. See supra, IV. h, Railroad cases; IV. e; subd. Servant in charge of horse, under IV. b, and IV. h.

In a case where a railroad company was held liable for the action of its section foreman in dumping dirt on the house of a third person, which was located partly on the company's right of way, the court says: "Where a master appoints a ser-

In Flower v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 69 Pa. 210, 8 Am. Rep. 251, the facts were as follows: A train of defendant, coming into the city, the engine, tender, and one car were detached from the remainder, and were, under the charge of the fireman in the engineer's place, sent to a water station belonging to the defendants. At the station, the fireman asked a boy, ten years old, standing there, to turn on the water. While he was climbing the tender to put in the hose, the remainder of the train came down with their ordinary force, and struck the car attached to the engine; the jar threw the boy under the wheels, and he was killed. In an action by the parents for his death it was held that, it not being in the scope of the engineer's or fireman's employment to ask any one to come on the engine, the defendants were not liable; that the boy, in climbing on the tender at the request of the fireman, did not come within the protection of the defendants, and they therefore owed no duty to him. The appeal in this case was before Justices Agnew, Sharswood, and Williams. Judge Agnew delivered the opinion of the court. He said: "Whether the boy could be treated as a mere trespasser is scarcely the question. His youth might possibly excuse concurrent negligence, when there is clear negligence on the part of the company. The true point of this case is that, in climbing the side of the tender or engine at the request of the fireman, to perform the fireman's duty, the son of the plaintiffs did mean to discharge a particular work, the duty by virtue of an implied contract is thereby devolved upon the master to see that the servant in the discharge of the work allotted to him shall properly respect the persons and property of others; and if in the performance of the appointed labor, the servant shall injure the person or property of third persons, the master is liable whether the trespass is due to the malice or the simple negligence of the servant. It becomes the duty of the master to protect such third persons from violence and insult on the part of the employé. Ft. Worth & N. O. R. Co. v. Smith (Tex.) March 21, 1894.

In Lane v. Cotton (1702) 12 Mod. 478, 1 Ld. Raym. 646, Lord Holt against the opinion of the other judges thought that the postmaster should be liable for a letter taken by his servant on the ground that the office was for the public good and that he ought to be required to take such care of the letters that the servant could not abstract one.

The principal must necessarily be answerable within reasonable limitations for the manner in which his instructions are carried into effect. This responsibility does not rest in a case of this character in any special relation, the principal has assumed to the other party by virtue of an agreement between them express or implied, but is founded on that primary obligation which every person in society owes to every other person to inflict as little injury upon an aggressor as is consistent with the preservation of one's own rights. Rounds v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (1874) 3 Hun, 839.

The master owes the duty of abstention from wanton and willful injuries in the use of his property and will be liable for the act of his servant in the scope of his employment, but not for those done outside of it. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Harris (1898) 71 Miss. 74.

In all cases where it appears that the employment of the person supplied the agent the means or opportunity which he used while so employed in committing an injury on a third person, the person must be held responsible. The willful trespass or injury of the agent derived from the authority confided to him by the principal as the source of power in the exercise of his master's employment will make the principal responsible. And this upon the reason that he who employs and confides shall be the loser rather than the stranger. New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Allbritton (1890) 38 Miss. 242, 75 Am. Dec. 98.

In Smith v. Webster (1871) 23 Mich. 238, where the employés were found to have been acting within the scope of their employment and that therefore the master was liable for their acts, the court said: "That there are many cases of willful misconduct for which an employer will not be liable. Yet even for willful misconduct there are some instances of liability where the employer has furnished peculiar means whereby the employé is enabled to do the mischief."

Custody of dangerous agencies.

When the courts came to consider accidents resulting from the wrongful use of the more dangerous agencies employed in modern life the discussion quickly reached the true ground.

If a master entrusts the custody of dangerous agencies to his servants the proper custody as well as the use of them becomes a part of the servant's employment by the master and his neglect in either regard is imputable to the master in an action by one injured thereby. And where the injury results from the negligence of the servant in the custody of the instrument it is immaterial so far as the liability of the master is concerned as to what use may have been made of it by the servant. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Shields (1890) 8 L. R. A. 464, 47 Ohio St. 387.

In that case an injury was caused by the explosion of a torpedo left exposed by a trainman. The court says: "The duty entrusted by the company to the conductor in regard to these torpedoes was not only to use them as signals with the requisite care and caution but to observe like care and caution in the custody of them when not in use. . . . And in taking them from the place where they were kept when not in use and in mere caprice, placing them on the track for the purpose of frightening ladies, he was not within his employment as to the use of them; but in so doing he violated the duty connected with his employment as custodian of them and thereby made his master liable for the consequences of his negligence." "It is necessary in this and all similar cases to distinguish between the departure of a servant from the employment of the master and his departure from or neglect of a duty connected with that employment. A servant may depart from his employment without making his master liable for his negligence when outside of his employment of the master, and he so departs whenever he goes beyond the scope of his employment and engages in affairs of his own, but he cannot depart from the duty entrusted to him when that duty regards the rights of others in respect to the employment of dangerous instruments by the master in the prosecution of his business without making the master liable for the consequences. Suppose a servant employed with a construction train repairing track for his master. He may for a time quit his employment and go on affairs of his own. Whilst thus out of the master's employment he may build a fire which may consume property of a third person; and in the meantime loss of life and property may result from a collision with the train negligently left standing on the track. The master will not be liable for the result of the fire but it is equally cernot come within the protection of the company. To recover, the company must have come under a duty to him, which made his protection necessary. Nor can the mere youth of the boy change the relations of the case. That might excuse him from concurring negligence, but cannot supply the place of negligence on the part of the company, or confer an authority on one who has none. It may excite our sympathy, but cannot create rights or duties which have no other foundation." In Eaton v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 57 N. Y. 382, 15 Am. Rep. 513, it is said that: "Railroad companies have the right to make a complete separation between their freight and passenger business. When this is done, the conductor of a freight train has such general authority only as is incidental to the business of moving freight, and no power whatever as to the transportation of passengers; and notice of this limited authority will be implied from the natural and apparent divisions of the business. . . . In the great transactions of commercial cor-tain that for the loss occasioned by the servant's negligence in leaving the train on the track, the master will be liable in damages; for the plain reason that in abandoning the custody of the train he was guilty of negligence in the employment of the master whilst in building the fire he was not. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Shields (1890) 8 L. R. A. 464, 47 Ohio St. 387.

A railroad company which entrusts its servants with the management of a train of its cars and the custody of torpedoes to be used as signals in such management is liable for their negligence in leaving the torpedoes in a public place where they are likely to cause injury to passers-by, and which in fact do cause such injury. Harriman v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. (1887) 45 Ohio St. 11.

The common-law rule that the master is not liable for the tortious acts of his agent committed without the scope of his employment does not apply to railroad companies because absolute necessity requires more stringent rules in regard to them. Having placed under the control of its agent an instrument of so much power to injure as a steam engine it is but reasonable that the law should demand the utmost caution in the selection of its agents and hold the company to strict accountability for injuries which inflict the citizen for the want of such caution. If in the conduct of his engine and while at his post in the line of his employment the servant wantonly uses his engine for purposes of sport or malice to another's injury, as where he blows the whistle to frighten a horse, the master will be liable. Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Starnes (1871) 9 Heisk. 52, 24 Am. Rep. 297.

The same principle was applied in another connection in a New Hampshire case.

In Page v. Hodge (1886) 68 N. H. 610, the servant was in charge of a mowing machine, he left the horses attached to it standing in the road while he engaged in a personal encounter with a third person. The horses ran away and injured the mowing machine. The master sued the third person for the damage and the court held that he could not recover, saying: "By entrusting his team to the servant for the purpose of driving it home the plaintiff put it in the servant's power to manage the team negligently and must be deemed to have assumed the risk of the servant's negligence in the execution of the trust so committed to him, and moreover as in the contemplation of the law, he who does a thing by the agency of another does it by himself. The case further stands in respect to the servant's negligent act in leaving the team unhitched and unattended in the public highway, precisely as it would if that act had been done by the plaintiff himself."

Similar statements have been made in other connections.

Wherever the master entrusts a horse and carriage or anything which may readily be made an implement of mischief to his servant to be used by him in furtherance of his master's business, or for the execution of his orders, the master will be responsible for the negligent management of the thing entrusted to the servant, so long as the latter is using it or dealing with it in the ordinary course of his employment. Rayner v. Mitchell (1877) L. R. 2 C. P. Div. 337, 23 Week. Rep. 688.

Where the owner of a toll-gate was held liable for an injury inflicted on a traveler by the negligent management of the gate-beam by the keeper after the hours during which toll was collected, it was insisted that the liability of the owner for the acts of the servant ceased with the close of toll hours, but the court said: "The gate was entrusted to his management at all times and he was therefore at all times the servant of the company so far as the care and management of the gate was concerned." Noblesville & E. Gravel Road Co. v. Gause (1891) 76 Ind. 142, 40 Am. Rep. 224.

So if the master entrusts the keeping of a mischievous dog to a servant, the negligence of the servant will be that of the master. Baldwin v. Cassella (1872) L. R. 7 Exch. 326, 41 L. J. Exch. 187, 20 L. T. N. S. 707, 21 Week. Rep. 16.

Injuries by guns.

In a case where the master sent his servant, a young mulatto girl, to bring his gun, which she negligently discharged injuring a third person, the master was held liable, the court saying the owner of an instrument of mischief must keep it from the reach of doing injury, and if he chooses to remove it he must do so with due precaution and by a safe conveyance. Dixon v. Bell (1818) Holt, N. P. 233, note.

A master who sends his servant with a gun to drive away a negro who is wrongfully taking his sugarcane is liable for the act of the servant in shooting the negro. Priester v. Augley, 5 Rich. L. 44.

But in New York this principle does not appear to be recognized. Thus it was held that the owner of a yacht is not liable for the act of its master in firing a salute at a time when he had been commanded not to do so, merely because he had been placed in charge of the means to do so. Haack v. Fearing (1867) 5 Robt. 523, 4 Abb. Pr. N. S. 297, 35 How. Pr. 459.

VI. NEGLIGENCE OR DISOBEDIENCE OF STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS.

The fact that the master of a vessel stows cargo on deck contrary to the provisions of a statute even if it is for the benefit of the owner, will not, if the owner is ignorant of it, avoid his policy of insurance on the cargo. Wilson v. Rankin (1865) 34 L. J. Q. B. 62, 41 Jur. N. S. 173, 12 L. T. N. S. 20, 13 Week. Rep. 404, 6 Best & S. 208.

Under a penal statute against cutting timber on another's land, a person cannot be made liable for the acts of his servants, done contrary to his instructions. Cushing v. Dill, 3 Ill. 460; Satterfield v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1897) 23 Ill. App. 446.

The fact that the injury is caused by the servant's failure to obey the law of the road, violation of which is made a criminal offense, will not prevent the maintenance of a common-law action against his master for the damage caused by the accident. Reynolds v. Hanrahan (1868) 100 Mass. 312.

porations convenience requires a subdivision of their operations among many different agents. Each of these may have a distinct employment, and become a general agent in his particular department, with no powers beyond it." Page 389. In Stone v. Hills, 45 Conn. 47, 29 Am. Rep. 635, it is said: "The rule is that for all acts done by a servant in obedience to the express orders or directions of the master, or in the execution of the master's business, within the scope of his employment, and for acts in any sense warranted by the express authority conferred upon him, considering the nature of the services required, the instructions given, and the circumstances under which the act is done, the master is responsible. For acts which are not in these conditions, the servant alone is responsible." In Storey v. Ashton, Cockburn, Ch. J., said: "We cannot adopt the view of Erskine, J., in Sleath v. Wilson, 9 Car. & P. 607, that it is because the master has intrusted the servant with the control of the horse and cart that the master is responsible. The true rule is that the master is only responsible so long as the servant can

The master is not liable to the statutory penalty for failure to drive to the proper side of the road upon meeting a vehicle, if his vehicle at the time is in charge of his servant. Goodhue v. Dix (1854) 2 Gray, 181.

The act of a servant not done by the master's command cannot impose liability upon the master under the Georgia statute providing a penalty for the killing or injuring of animals. Smith v. Causey (1853) 22 Ala. 568.

VII. QUESTION FOR JURY.

The question whether or not the employé was within the scope of his employment is for the jury. Hoffman v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. (1880) 14 Jones & S. 536; Rounds v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (1876) 64 N. Y. 123, 21 Am. Rep. 597; Brunner v. American Teleph. & Teleph. Co. (1894) 180 Pa. 300.

It is for the jury to say whether or not a ticket agent is acting within the scope of his employment in attempting to compel a person whom he takes to be drunk to leave the waiting room of the station. McKernan v. Manhattan R. Co. (1887) 22 Jones & S. 854.

The question is for the jury whether or not a person employed to attend to the ladies waiting room in a railroad station is acting within the scope of his authority in attempting to eject a supposed negro from it. Redding v. South Carolina R. Co. (1871) 3 S. C. N. S. 1, 18 Am. Rep. 681.

Whether or not a brakeman is acting within the line of his duty in ejecting a trespasser from a train is a question for the jury. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Hendricks (1886) 48 Ark. 177.

Where a foreman of a wharfinger who was engaged in loading iron on a boat was dissatisfied with the way in which the cartmen were unloading it and jumped upon the cart and himself threw off some of the iron, causing injury to plaintiff, the court said it was for the jury to say whether or not he was acting within the scope of his employment, so as to render the wharfinger liable for the injury. Burns v. Poulson (1873) 42 L. J. C. P. 302, L. R. 8 C. P. 563, 20 L. T. N. S. 329, 22 Week. Rep. 20.

Where a flagman had for a long time been in the habit of warning persons approaching a crossing, of the approach of trains, although he testified that it was not his duty to do so, but that he did it to prevent accidents, and on one occasion he motioned a person forward at the wrong time, so that injury occurred, the court held that it was for the jury to say whether or not he was acting within the scope of his employment. Peck v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. (1886) 57 Mich. 8.

Where the conductor of a car kicked a boy from the steps of a moving train, the court held that the question whether the conductor was acting within the scope of his authority was for the jury. Hoffman v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. (1878) 12 Jones & S. 1.

Where the driver of a street-car, finding plaintiff's carriage obstructing the tracks because of a jam of vehicles which made it impossible for him to drive on, after some violent language drove the car against the carriage and injured it, the court held that it was for the jury to say whether or not he was acting within the scope of his employment. Cohen v. Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co. (1876) 8 Jones & S. 874.

Upon the question whether or not the servant was acting within the scope of his employment, the finding of the jury is conclusive. Schulte v. Holliday (1884) 54 Mich. 73.

Whether or not what the brakeman did (in ejecting a trespasser from a train) was in the scope of his authority or in the line of his employment is a question of law or of mixed law and fact to be determined by the court alone from the proof, if indeed that were required, and from common observation and experience and from knowledge of the nature of the business and the daily practice which is obtained in its exercise. Smith v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1886) (Ky.) 22 L. R. A. 72.

VIII. CONTRIBUTION TO INJURY.

A branch of the general subject of liability of a master for the acts of his servant which has never been much discussed as yet, is the question of inciting the servant to commit the wrong. For example if a trespasser on a railway train tantalizes or incites the conductor for the purpose of making him lose his temper and use unnecessary violence in ejecting him, he should not be permitted to hold the master responsible. So one who causes a servant to disobey his master's instructions should not be permitted to recover for injuries caused by such disobedience.

Thus a person injured through the negligence of employes while riding on a switch engine by permission of a brakeman cannot hold the company liable for the injury. Stringer v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (1888) 96 Mo. 299.

So if a third person is injured by the negligent act of the servant in carrying out a special arrangement between them which is contrary to the instruction of the master, he cannot recover. Snider v. Crawford (1891) 47 Mo. App. 8.

And there is an Illinois case which though perhaps correctly decided upon the principle upon which it was placed might properly have been placed upon the doctrine of contribution.

A flagman of a railroad company who in attempting to compel boys to desist from playing on the right of way of the company incurs their ill will by reason of which they bedaub his watch house and he in attempting to punish one of them gets into an altercation with him and after being threatened with stones and called names loses his temper and throws a lump of coal at one of them injuring him, is not acting within the scope of his authority, and the railroad company is not liable. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Ross (1886) 81 Ill. App. 170.

It certainly cannot be law that a person can interfere with and obstruct a servant in the discharge of his duties and then hold the master responsible for injuries which are more the result of his own wrongful act than of the master's negligence.

H. F. F.

be said to be doing the act, in the doing of which he is guilty of negligence in the course of his employment as servant. L. R. 4 Q. B. 476. Thus it will be seen that, in the absence of express orders to do an act, in order to render the master liable the act must not only be one that pertains to the business, but must also be fairly within the scope of the authority conferred by the employment." Wood, Mast. & S. 546. In the case at bar the section foreman was not only not authorized, expressly or by implication, to permit persons to ride on the hand-car, but had been expressly forbidden by the rules of the company and otherwise to permit it, and there was no custom to permit persons to ride on the hand-car shown to have been known to or acquiesced in by the officers of the railroad company. "In order that the railroad company should be made responsible by reason of such a custom, it was necessary to show that it was actually known to the officials who conducted its business, or that it was so general, and of such long continuance, that it must be fairly inferred that it was known and assented to by them." Taunton v. Wareham, 158 Mass. 191. Such is not shown to have been the case here. The court deems it needless to set out or discuss the instructions.

The court is therefore of the opinion that there is a total failure in this case of evidence to show any liability upon the part of the railroad company, wherefore the judgment is reversed, and the cause is dismissed.

The Honorable Carroll D. Wood, being disqualified, did not participate in the determination of this cause.

Rehearing denied October 6, 1894.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

PEOPLE of the State of California, ex rel.
Henry N. HOFFMAN, Appt.,

v.

M. H. HECHT et al., Respts.

(.....Cal.....)

1. A majority may organize and act where a majority of the body may act after organization.
2. The disqualification of two out of fifteen freeholders elected to prepare a city charter under Const., art. 11, § 8, which does not in terms require the joint action of all the members of the board, but does provide that it shall be signed by the members or a majority of them, does not prevent the lawful organization and action as a board by the other members.
3. Disqualification of freeholders elected to prepare a city charter, based on their lack of five years' residence in the city, does not prevent them from being de facto officers.

(January 16, 1895.)

A PPEAL by relator from a judgment of the Superior Court for the City and County of San Francisco in favor of defendants in a quo warranto proceeding to determine the question of the validity of the organization of defendants as a board which had been elected to prepare a charter for the city of San Francisco. Affirmed in part; reversed in part.

The facts are stated in the commissioner's opinion.

Mr. Robert Ash, for appellant:

The qualification of members of this board is a condition precedent and necessary to legislation, which they must propose.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 78.

It must be the board provided by the constitution, or it is not a constitutional body and its acts are illegal.

People v. Hoge, 55 Cal. 612.

Two of the members were not qualified and this fact is admitted, and under the constitution there is no constitutional board.

People v. Gunn, 85 Cal. 238.

Messrs. Henry N. Clement and William F. Gibson, with Mr. Harry T. Creswell, for respondents:

When one acts under color of office his acts are binding, though not legally qualified.

Whipley v. McKune, 12 Cal. 361; McCrary, Elections, § 216.

A person indisputably ineligible may be an officer de facto by color of election.

Baird v. Bank of Washington, 11 Serg. & R. 411; Prichett v. People, 6 Ill. 529; St. Louis County Ct. v. Sparks, 10 Mo. 117, 45 Am. Dec. 385; Mechem, Pub. Off. § 26; State v. Carroll, 38 Conn. 449, 9 Am. Rep. 409; People v. Cook, 8 N. Y. 67, 59 Am. Dec. 451; Taylor v. Taylor, 10 Minn. 107; Tower v. Du-rell, 9 Mass. 381; Lovell v. Flint, 20 Ma. 404; Keyser v. McKissan, 2 Rawle, 189.

The thirteen eligible defendants are a legal board of freeholders, with or without the two ineligible.

Searls, C., filed the following opinion:

This is a proceeding by quo warranto, brought in the superior court, to determine by what authority the defendants, as individuals or as a board, are acting as a board of fifteen freeholders to prepare and propose a charter for the city and county of San Francisco. Two several demurrers were interposed to the complaint; one by and on behalf of William B. Bourn and I. W. Hellman, two of the defendants, and the other by all the defendants. The demurrers and each of them were sustained by the court, and, the relator declining to amend, final judgment went for the defendants, from which judgment the plaintiff appeals.

The complaint, which, for the purposes of this case, is to be taken as true, avers in substance as follows: (1) The city and county of San Francisco is, and at all the times herein mentioned has been, a municipal corporation, duly organized and existing under and by virtue of an act of the legislature of the state of California approved April 19, 1856, and the several acts of said legislature amendatory thereof, and supplementary thereto, and contains a population of 800,000 inhabitants. (2) On the 11th day of September, 1894, the properly constituted authorities of said city and county of San Francisco, by due proceedings, ordered that a board of fifteen freeholders, who shall have been at least five years qualified electors thereof, should be elected by the qualified voters of said city and county, at the general election on the 6th day of November, 1894, whose duty it should be to prepare and propose, within ninety days after such election, a charter for such city and county, under and by virtue of section 8 of article 11 of the Constitution of the state of California. (3) Thereafter, and in due time, forty-three persons were regularly nominated as candidates for the said offices of board of freeholders, certificates of such nominations duly filed as required by law, all of whom were believed to possess the qualifications required by law to fill said offices. (4) The names of the persons so nominated were placed upon the ballots as candidates for said office. (5) On the 25th day of October, 1894, a proclamation was duly made, issued, and published by the proper officers, as required by law, that there would be chosen and elected on the 6th day of November, 1894, a board of fifteen freeholders. (6) At the general election of November 6, 1894, the said persons so nominated were voted for by the qualified voters of said city and county, each receiving the number of votes mentioned in the complaint. (7) The vote was duly canvassed, and the defendants herein declared duly elected to fill said office. (8) Thereafter defendants, and each of them, received certificates of election, duly qualified, and organized as a board of fifteen freeholders, and entered upon the discharge of their duties as such board, and are still so acting, and preparing a charter. (9) The defendants are not now, and never have been, a legally constituted board of fifteen freeholders, but have usurped the functions of said board, without authority or right. That no board was chosen by the voters, as required by the election and article of the constitution referred to herein, for the reasons: (a) Defendant I. W. Hellman was ineligible to said office in that he had not been for at least five years a qualified elector of said city and county; that he had been such qualified elector for but three years, and that prior to said three years he had been resident and elector of the city of Los Angeles, Cal. (b) The defendant W. B. Bourn was ineligible because he had not been for five years a qualified elector of the city and county of San Francisco, as required by the constitution; that he had been an elector but two years, and that prior thereto he was a resident and elector of the county of Napa, Cal. (c) The remaining defendants and members of the board are but thirteen in number, and do not constitute a board of fifteen freeholders. (d) The above-named thirteen defendants are all eligible and qualified to hold the office as members of the board aforesaid, and have accepted the certificates and acknowledged the right of said defendants Bourn and Hellman as members of said board, and are sitting with said Bourn and Hellman as members of said board, and claim that said persons are and constitute a board of fifteen freeholders.

NOTE.—As to quorum in general, see note to Lawrence v. Ingersoll (Tenn.) 6 L. R. A. 308.
27 L. R. A.

27 T. R. A.

The general demurrer of all the defendants is upon the ground "that said complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action." The separate demurrer of Hellman and Bourn is upon the ground that the "said complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against these defendants, or either of them." Section 8 of article 11 of the Constitution of the state of California, as amended, and the ratification thereof declared December 30, 1892, is in part as follows: "Any city containing a population of more than three thousand five hundred inhabitants may frame a charter for its own government, consistent with and subject to the constitution and laws of this state, by causing a board of fifteen freeholders, who shall have been for at least five years qualified electors thereof, to be elected by the qualified voters of said city at any general or special election, whose duty it shall be, within ninety days after such election, to prepare and propose a charter for such city, which shall be signed in duplicate by the members of such board, or a majority of them," etc.

The first question for consideration relates to the eligibility of the defendants I. W. Hellman and William B. Bourn as freeholders under the constitutional provision. They had not been for at least five years qualified voters of the city and county in which the election was held, and for which the charter was to be prepared. The language used by the framers of the constitution in relation to the qualification essential to eligibility to the office or position of a freeholder is plain and unequivocal, and the authority to prescribe the qualification is not open to doubt. The reason of the rule is apparent, and need not be stated. The defendants Hellman and Bourn, not having been for at least five years qualified electors of the city and county of San Francisco, were ineligible to the office of freeholder, and their separate demurrer should have been overruled.

2. Do the remaining thirteen members who were regularly elected constitute a legal board, with authority to act? The contention of appellant is that in order to constitute a valid board it is essential that fifteen qualified members be elected, and that without such number thus qualified there can be no constitutional board, and hence that the thirteen members should be inhibited from acting, either with or without the two who are disqualified. We think this position is unwarranted under the language of the constitution, and not in consonance with public policy or the analogies in similar cases. It is true the constitution provides for the election of a board of fifteen freeholders; but the persons who are, when elected and qualified, to constitute such board, are elected and must qualify as individuals, and the entity known as the board has no legal exist-tence until it is organized by the individuals who come clothed with the insignia of authority afforded by a certificate or other adequate proof of an election. The electors select the persons who are to constitute the board, but do not create the board. That is done by the organization of the members. When the electors have elected, by a plurality of all the votes cast, fifteen members to constitute the board, and furnished them with the evidence of said action, their power in the premises is exhausted, and the requirement of the constitution is so far complied with that it only remains for the persons so selected, or a majority of them, to organize and exercise the power which by virtue of their election is vested in them. An interpretation which holds that the ineligibility or death or unwillingness to act of a single member thus selected invalidates the entire election would work great hardship, and tend to thwart the will of the electors in many instances, and should not be indulged unless rendered imperative by the mandate of the constitution. The same constitution (section 5, article 11) provides that the legislature, by general and uniform laws, shall provide for the election or appointment in the several counties of "boards of supervisors," etc. Other portions of the constitution provide for a supreme court, "which shall consist of a chief justice and six associate justices." Again, "the senate shall consist of forty members and the assembly of eighty members." It would, we think, hardly be contended that, because the constitution provides for a board of supervisors, an election for supervisors, in which a single member elected was disqualified would either invalidate the election of other members, or prevent their organizing and acting as a board. Like considerations apply to the election of members of the senate and assembly, and to the election, organization, and action of the supreme court. The code provides that "words giving a joint authority to three or more public officers or other persons are construed as giving such authority to a majority of them, unless it is otherwise expressed in the act giving the authority." Pol. Code, § 15. The earlier doctrine was that where a board of commissioners was created by the legislature, and discretionary powers conferred upon them to decide upon matters of public interests, and the law had made no provision that a majority should constitute a quorum, all must be present and consult, though a majority might decide. People v. Coghill, 47 Cal. 863, and cases cited. The rule prior to its modification by the code may be stated thus: The power or authority given to public officers, commissioners, or committeemen was a joint authority to be exercised by all of them, and (except as provided by statute) all must meet and deliberate; but, this done, a majority could decide. To the exercise of this joint authority it was sometimes held, and it would seem logically, that the existence of a full board was necessary. If the authority was, in contemplation of law, to be exercised by all the members, then there should be members capable and competent to its exercise; but under our codes this authority, although joint where given to three or more, is to be "construed as giving such authority to a majority of them," unless it is otherwise expressed in the act giving the authority. If a majority possesses all the authority of the whole, then such majority must be competent to its exercise. For all practical purposes, the majority becomes the full board. It is the receptacle—the reservoir—of all the authority conferred upon the whole, and its action, it is submitted, cannot be stayed by the nonaction, failure to qualify, absence, death, or want of eligibility of the minority. These were the very obstacles intended to be surmounted by the statute.

Since the enactment of the code it was held in People v. Harrington, 63 Cal. 257, that the action of a quorum was the action of the board of supervisors, and that the action of a majority of such quorum, though not constituting a majority of the board, was valid and binding. In State v. Huggins, Harp. L. 139, court of appeals of South Carolina, the facts were that of eighteen managers of elections appointed by the legislature two had refused to qualify, one was dead, and one disqualified to serve, and the court held that a majority, viz., eight of the remaining fourteen, properly formed a board to determine on the validity of a contested election; a majority of the managers qualified to serve being all that is required by the legislature. Colcock, J., in the course of his opinion, said: "Now, if necessity and public convenience may require that, where all the managers of these elections are alive, and have qualified, a majority may act, does not the same reason operate to authorize the managers of an election to act where some of those who have been nominated are dead or have not qualified?" Words giving a joint authority to three or more public officers will be construed as giving it to the majority, unless otherwise expressed. Talcott v. Blanding, 54 Cal. 289. If the authority is given to and may be exercised by the majority, and the minority, if present and acting, cannot defeat it, it must follow that such minority cannot, by absence or failure to qualify, defeat the will of the majority. This doctrine was illustrated in Oakland v. Carpenter, 18 Cal. 540, where it was argued that, as the charter provided that a board of five trustees should be elected, etc., and as only four qualified, their acts were void for want of a legal organization. The court disposed of the question by saying: "We can see no reason for holding that a majority of the members elected to this board should not as well be held empowered to act at the first as at any subsequent meeting of it." There is nothing inherent in the duties to be discharged by the freeholders to invoke a more strict rule of construction against them than would be called for in the case of other boards or bodies invested with public functions. The provision of the constitution is self-acting. People v. Hope, 55 Cal. 612. The constitution does not in terms require the joint action of all the members of the board of freeholders. It does provide that the charter prepared by them must be "signed in duplicate by the members of such board or a majority of them."

Under the doctrine which was formerly upheld by many of the courts, that all the members of a board, committee, or commission must meet and deliberate, though a majority could decide, the contention of appellant in support of the theory that the presence and action of all the members is necessary to an organization may be upheld. The consensus of modern opinion, however, is believed to be that, where a majority may act, such majority may organize and act. This is believed to be the very object of the fifteenth section of the Political Code. Again, the office of freeholder is created by the constitution. It is a de jure office. When Hellman and Bourn were elected by a plurality of the qualified electors, received their certificates of election, and qualified and participated in the action of the board, they were there under color of office, and presumptively entitled to the office. They were de facto officers in the discharge of the duties of a de jure office, and as such their acts while they remained such were as valid and binding as those of de jure officers. There must be a de jure office to be filled, before there can be a de facto officer. If the former exists, and the latter holds it under and pursuant to a regular commission purporting to empower him to act, his acts in such office, until his right thereto is judicially determined, the law holds, upon principles of policy and justice, to be valid, so far as they involve the public and third parties notwithstanding the personal liability of the incumbent for intruding into such office. A leading case upon the subject of officers de facto is that of State v. Carroll, 88 Conn. 449, 9 Am. Rep. 409, in which Butler, Ch. J., after an exhaustive discussion of the doctrine, and a review of the English and American cases, uses the following language: "A definition sufficiently accurate and comprehensive to cover the whole ground must, I think, be substantially as follows: An officer de facto is one whose acts, though not those of a lawful officer, the law, upon principles of policy and justice, will hold valid, so far as they involve the interests of the public and third persons, where the duties of the office were exercised: First. . . . Second. . . . Third. Under color of a known election or appointment, void because the officer was not eligible, . . . such ineligibility . . . being unknown to the public."

We reach the following conclusion:

1. The thirteen freeholders, constituting as they do a majority of all the members of the board, were competent to organize and act as a board of freeholders under the constitution and law, and may lawfully prepare and propose a charter for the city and county of San Francisco.

2. I. W. Hellman and William B. Bourn were not eligible to the office of freeholder, and, although regularly elected and commissioned, are not de jure officers of the board.

3. Said Hellman and Bourn, having been elected and commissioned, became de facto members of the board, and as such their acts were and are valid as to the public and third parties.

We are asked by the counsel, in the event of holding that Bourn and Hellman are not entitled to their seats, to indicate: (1) Whether or not Patrick Reddy and J. C. Whiting, who received the next highest number of votes, are entitled to demand and receive certificates of election; and, if not, then (2) how shall the vacancies be filled? The first query seems to be settled in this state. Saunders v. Haynes, 18 Cal. 145; Crawford v. Dunbar, 52 Cal. 86. We must, however, decline to pass upon either of the foregoing propositions, for the reason that they are not involved in the issues presented in the case, and anything which might be said would be mere obiter dictum, and of no binding force should the same questions again arise.

The judgment appealed from should be affirmed as to all the defendants except I. W. Hellman and William B. Bourn, and reversed as to said two last-named defendants, with directions to the court below to overrule the separate demurrer of said I. W. Hellman and William B. Bourn, with leave to answer.

I concur: Haynes, C.

Per Curiam: For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed as to all the defendants except I. W. Hellman and William B. Bourn, and reversed as to said two last-named defendants, with directions to the court below to overrule the separate demurrer of said I. W. Hellman and William B. Bourn, with leave to answer.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

City of PEKIN, Appt.,

v.

Patrick McMAHON, Admr., etc., of Frank McMahon, Deceased.

(.....III.....)

1. Unguarded premises supplied with dangerous attractions are regarded as

NOTE.—As to liability for dangerous condition of private grounds lying open beside a highway or frequented path see note to Lepnick v. Gaddis (Miss.) 26 L. R. A. 686.

27 L. R. A.

holding out implied invitation to children which makes the owners responsible for injuries to them.

2. A pond or pit in a populous city in which the water is from five to fourteen feet deep, with logs and timber floating therein on which children are in the habit of playing, near a driveway across vacant lots but partially enclosed from the streets on the sides thereof, renders the city which owns them liable for the drowning of a child playing there if the premises are found by the jury sufficiently attractive to entice children into danger and to suggest the probability of such an accident.

See also 32 L. R. A. 825; 33 L. R. A. 755; 38 L. R. A. 573; 39 L. R. A. 112; 40 L. R. A. 531; 42 L. R. A. 288; 43 L. R. A. 148; 44 L. R. A. 655; 45 L. R. A. 591; 48 L. R. A. 291.

3. The attractiveness of dangerous premises for children which will render the owner liable for accidents to them is a question for the jury.
4. A child eight years of age is bound to use such care as children of his age, capacity, and intelligence are capable of exercising.
5. A municipal corporation owning vacant lots is chargeable with the same duties and obligations which devolve upon individuals in respect to their condition.
6. A city is estopped from denying its duty as to a dangerous pit where it has passed an ordinance declaring such pits to be a nuisance.
7. Execution cannot be ordered to issue against a city in an action for damages.

(January 14, 1895.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Court, Third District, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for Tazewell County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate which was alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

Statement by Magruder, J.:

This is an action on the case, brought by appellee, administrator of the estate of his deceased son, Frank McMahon, against appellant, the city of Pekin, to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of said city. Verdict and judgment in the circuit court were in favor of the plaintiff. The appellate court has affirmed the judgment, and the present appeal is from such judgment of affirmance.

The declaration alleges that on April 12, 1892, the city owned lots 7, 8, 9, and 10, in block 11, in Bailey's addition to Pekin; that for a long time before that date it had caused a dangerous hole or pit to be made in said lots, by digging thereon, and removing sand and gravel therefrom; that it permitted water to accumulate and remain in said hole or pit, so that it became a nuisance, and dangerous to the lives of citizens, and "of children of tender years, incapable of exercising ordinary care or discretion, who might be attracted thereto;" that it was defendant's duty to cause the same to be drained, so as to remove the water therefrom; that the deceased, a child of tender years, and incapable of exercising ordinary care or discretion, was attracted thereto, and, necessarily and unavoidably, on account of defendant's failure to drain the water from said pit, without fault on his part or on the part of his parents, fell into the said pit, and was drowned. The plea was the general issue, with notice of special matter of defense to the effect that the premises were the property of the city; that it was incorporated under the general act of incorporation; that the lots were inclosed by a fence on the east and west sides thereof, and nearly inclosed on the south and north sides thereof; that the deceased entered and remained upon the premises as a mere trespasser, and engaged in play, without the knowledge, permission, or invitation of defendant, and carelessly, accidentally, or neg-ligently fell into a pool of water thereon, and was drowned. The proof tends to show that the city became the owner of the lots in 1887; that they constituted about half a block in size; that they were bounded on the north by a public alley 10 feet wide, on the west by Capitol street, on the south by St. Julien street; that these streets were each 60 feet wide, and improved, and open to public travel; that there had originally been a natural watercourse across the lots from northeast to southwest, sufficient to carry off the surface water accumulating to the northeast, and southeast over an area of 200 or 300 acres; that this water had passed through said watercourse across said lots to the Illinois river; that the lots were in the thickly settled limits of the city; that, before its taking possession of the lots in 1887, the city had built a sewer, with an aperture of four feet, at the southwest corner thereof, under the junction of Capitol and St. Julien streets; that thereafter it dug into the watercourse, to get gravel to improve its streets; that the excavation thus made was some 200 feet long and 100 feet wide; that its banks were steep; that the depth was about 10 feet below the mouth of the sewer, so that the water could not run off; that the deepest water was over 14 feet; that the city stopped taking out gravel in 1890 or 1891 that the fence along the west side on Capitol street was bad, and caved in somewhat; that there was a gap or opening in the fence, more than 40 feet wide, on the south side on St. Julien street, and another gap in the fence, 30 or 40 feet wide, upon the alley near the northeast corner; that, with a view of filling up the pit, a causeway or driveway had been thrown up across from the north gap southwesterly to the south gap by the dumping in of rubbish and cinders; that parties had been in the habit of passing along this causeway for a year before April 12, 1892, when deceased was drowned, using it to go across the lots, instead of going round the corner; that this driveway was open, so that the public could use it; that the boys had been in the habit of playing upon planks and logs in the water in the pit, and had fallen into the water; that the city authorities had been notified by parents of the danger, and requested to remove it; that the dangerous condition continued a year before the accident; that, after building the roadway, there were two bodies of water; that the deceased was eight years and two months old; that his father was a laboring man, and had gone to his work at 6 o'clock A. M. on April 12, 1892, and did not return until a quarter past 6 P. M.; that the mother had been doing washing on that day; that she had four children besides the deceased, the youngest being eight months old; that she had heard of the pit, but had never visited it; that deceased came home from school at 4 P. M., and was given permission by his mother to play; that he and a boy named Harry Evans met one Soady, driving a wagon, who allowed them to get in and ride; that Soady drove to his barn, on the north side of said alley, opposite the opening or gap in the north fence; that there the boys dismounted from the wagon; that deceased went through the opening onto the causeway, and stepped upon a log in the water, which rolled, and threw him into the pond, and he was drowned at a point a few feet south from Soady's barn, near the northeast corner of the lots.

Messrs. G. W. Cunningham, W. L. Prettyman, and William Don. Maus for appellant.

Messrs. T. N. Green and W. R. Curran, for appellee:

If the land of a private owner is situated in the midst of a populous city or in a public place, adjacent to public streets or roads and alleys, and he keeps and maintains thereon dangerous machinery, gates or turntables, dangerous pits or ponds of water, which he has made and excavated for his own use, adjacent to such public streets and alleys and which he has notice are attractive to children of tender years, incapable of exercising ordinary care or discretion, and which do attract children of that character, then the law is that such private owner must use reasonable care and diligence to protect such children from harm in coming on his premises, without fault on the part of their parents; and the fact that such children are technically guilty of trespass in coming on his premises will not defeat an action for damages sustained by them in meddling with his machinery, gates or turntable, or falling into the water in such excavations and being drowned.

Stout City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Dundan, 87 Kan. 1; Evansich v. Gulf, O. & S. F. R. Co. 57 Tex. 128; Kansas Cent. R. Co. v. Fitzsimmons, 22 Kan. 686, 31 Am. Rep. 208; Ferguson v. Columbus & R. Railway, 75 Ga. 487; Keffe v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 21 Minn. 207, 18 Am. Rep. 893; Daley v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 26 Conn. 591, 68 Am. Dec. 413; O'Mara v. Hudson River R. Co. 38 N. Y. 445, 98 Am. Dec. 61; St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co. v. Bell, 81 Ill. 78, 25 Am. Rep. 269; Birge v. Gardiner, 19 Conn. 509, 50 Am. Dec. 261; Smith v. O'Connor, 48 Pa. 218, 86 Am. Dec. 582; Schwartz v. Gilmore, 45 Ill. 455, 92 Am. Dec. 227; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. McWhirter, 77 Tex. 356; Loomis v. Terry, 17 Wend. 497, 81 Am. Dec. 306; Townsend v. Wathen, 9 East, 277; Hydraulic Works Co. v. Orr, 83 Pa. 332; Powers v. Harlow, 53 Mich. 515, 51 Am. Rep. 154; Bransom v. Labrot, 81 Ky. 643, 50 Am. Rep. 193; Whirley v. Whiteman, 1 Head, 610; Sanders v. Reister, 1 Dak. 146; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. §§ 73, 97, 98, note 1; 1 Thomp. Neg. pp. 804, 805, note; Whart. Neg. §§ 250, 265; Mackey v. Vicksburg, 64 Miss. 777; Harris, Damages by Corporations, §§ 465, 466; Jones, Neg. of Mun. Corp. 286, § 150; Joliet v. Verley, 35 Ill. 58, 85 Am. Dec. 842.

A municipal corporation, in its private character as the owner, lessee, or controller of lands, houses, public docks, piers, water and gas works, etc., is to be regarded in the same light as an individual and dealt with accordingly.

15 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 1155; Cooley, Torts, 619, 620; Clark v. Peckham, 9 R. I. 455; Pennoyer v. Saginaw, 8 Mich. 534; Cumberland & O. Canal Corp. v. Portland, 62 27 L. R. A.

Me. 504; Hannon v. St. Louis County, 62 Mo. 813; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. p. 1310; Thayer v. Boston, 19 Pick. 516, 81 Am. Dec. 157; Bailey v. New York, 8 Hill, 531; Allen v. Decatur, 23 Ill. 382, 76 Am. Dec. 692; Chicago v. Joney, 60 Ill. 383; Chicago v. Dermody, 61 Ill. 481; Chicago v. McGraw, 75 Ill. 566; Joliet v. Shufeldt, 18 L. R. A. 750, 144 Ill. 403; Gregsten v. Chicago, 145 Ill. 464.

Magruder, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. The main question in the case arises out of the refusal of the trial court to give the second and third instructions asked by the defendant. Is an individual landowner obliged to respond in damages for the death of a child occurring upon his premises under such circumstances as are developed by the testimony in this case? The general rule is well settled that the private owner or occupant of land is under no obligations to strangers to place guards around excavations upon his land. The law does not require him to keep his premises in safe condition for the benefit of trespassers, or those who come upon them without invitation, either express or implied, and merely to seek their own pleasure, or gratify their own curiosity. 1 Thomp. Neg. p. 308; 2 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 4th ed. § 715. An exception, however, to this general rule exists in favor of children. Although a child of tender years, who meets with an injury upon the premises of a private owner, may be a technical trespasser, yet the owner may be liable, if the things causing the injury have been left exposed and unguarded, and are of such a character as to be an attraction to the child, appealing to his childish curiosity and instincts. Unguarded premises, which are thus supplied with dangerous attractions, are regarded as holding out implied invitations to such children. "The owner of land where children are allowed or accustomed to play, particularly if it is unfenced, must use ordinary care to keep it in safe condition; for they, being without judgment, and likely to be drawn by childish curiosity into places of danger, are not to be classed with trespassers, idlers, and mere licensees." 2 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 4th ed. § 705; 4 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 58, and cases cited in note. In such case the owner should reasonably anticipate the injury which had happened. 1 Thomp. Neg. p. 804.

There is a conflict in the decisions upon this subject, some courts holding in favor of the liability of the owner, and others ruling against it. Where the land of a private owner is in a thickly settled city, adjacent to a public street or alley, and he has upon it, or suffers to be upon it, dangerous machinery, or a dangerous pit or pond of water, or any other dangerous agency, at a point thereon near such public street or alley, of such a character as to be attractive to children of tender years, incapable of exercising ordinary care, and he is aware or has notice of its attractions for children of that class, we think that he is under obligations to use reasonable care to protect them from injury when coming upon said premises, even though they may be technical trespassers. To charge him with such an obligation under such circumstances is merely to apply the well-known maxim, "Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas." It is true, as a general rule, that a party guilty of negligence is not liable if he does not owe the duty which he has neglected to the person claiming damages. Williams v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 135 Ill. 491, 11 L. R. A. 353. But, although the private owner may owe no duty to an adult under the facts stated, the cases known as the "Turntable Cases" hold that such duty is due from him to a child of tender years. The leading one of the turntable cases is Stout City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745. There the company was held liable in an action by a child about six years old, who had injured his foot while playing with a turntable belonging to the company, although it was contended that he was a trespasser, and had received the injury because of his own negligence, and that the company owed him no duty; it appearing that the turntable was located upon the private grounds of the company, in a settlement of from 100 to 150 persons, about 80 rods from the depot, near two traveled roads, and was a dangerous machine, and was not guarded or fastened, and that a servant of the company had previously seen boys playing there, and had forbidden them to do so. And it was further held that the care and caution required of a child is according to his maturity and capacity, and is to be determined by the circumstances of each case; that the fact of the child being a technical trespasser made no difference in his right of recovery; that the question of the defendant's negligence was one for the jury to determine; and that the jury were justified in believing that children would probably resort to the turntable, and that the defendant should have anticipated their resort to it from the fact that several boys were at play there when the accident occurred, and had played there on other occasions within the observation and to the knowledge of defendant's employees. To the same effect are the following cases: Keffe v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 31 Minn. 207, 18 Am. Rep. 398; Kansas Cent. R. Co. v. Fitesimmons, 22 Kan. 686, 81 Am. Rep. 208; Koons v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 65 Mo. 593; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Dunden, 87 Kan. 1; Evansich v. Gulf, O. & S. F. R. Co. 57 Tex. 128; Ferguson v. Columbus & R. Railway, 75 Ga. 637, 77 Ga. 102; St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co. v. Bell, 81 Ill. 76, 25 Am. Rep. 269.

In many, if not all, of the foregoing turntable cases, stress is laid upon the facts that the turntable was in a public or open and frequented place; that it was dangerous, and left unfastened, and, when in motion, was attractive to children by reason of their love of motion "by other means than their own locomotion"; and that the servants of the railroad companies knew, or had reason to believe, that it was attractive to children, and that children were in the habit of playing on or about it. The doctrine of the cases is that the child cannot be regarded as a voluntary trespasser, because he is induced to come upon the turntable by the defendant's own conduct. "What an express invitation would be to an adult, the temptation of an attractive plaything is to a child of tender years." Keffe v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. supra; Union Stock Yards & Transit Co. v. Rourke, 10 Ill. App. 474. We are unable to see any substantial difference between the turntable cases and the case at bar. Here was a half block of ground in a populous city, bounded on two sides by public streets, and on the third side by a public alley, with an opening of some 40 feet in the fence, upon the street, on the south side, and an opening of equal dimensions in the fence upon the alley on the north side, with a causeway running from one opening to the other diagonally across the premises, inviting approach, and actually used for passage by men and teams. Upon this half block was a dangerous pond or pit, in which the water was always 5 or 6 feet deep, and sometimes 14 feet deep. Logs and timbers floated about in this pond, and boys had for some time been in the habit of playing upon them in the water. The city authorities had been notified of its attractiveness to children, and of its dangerous character. They not only suffered the pond to remain undrained, but the fences around it to be broken down in some places, and to be actually removed in others. The deceased boy, Frank McMahon, is proven to have entered the premises at the opening in the fence on the alley. This opening was only 17 feet from the barn of Soady, where he dismounted from the wagon on which he had been riding. The place where he was seen playing in the water was only a few feet from this opening on the public alley. The love of motion, which attracts a child to play upon a revolving turntable, will also attract him to experiment with a floating plank or log which he finds in a pond within his easy reach. The doctrine of the turntable cases is sustained by other cases where the injuries complained of were caused by agencies of a different character. Such are Mackey v. Viehoburg, 64 Miss. 777; Birge v. Gardiner, 19 Conn. 507, 50 Am. Dec. 261; Daley v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 26 Conn. 591, 68 Am. Dec. 418; Bransom v. Labrot, 81 Ky. 638, 50 Am. Rep. 193; Powers v. Harlow, 53 Mich. 507, 51 Am. Rep. 154; Hydraulic Works Co. v. Orr, 83 Pa. 382; Whirley v. Whiteman, 1 Head, 610.

There are very respectable authorities on the other side of the question here under consideration. Such are Gillespie v. McGowan, 100 Pa. 144, 45 Am. Rep. 865; Hargreaves v. Deacon, 25 Mich. 1; Kiss v. Nieman, 68 Wis. 271, 60 Am. Rep. 854; Schmidt v. Kansas City Distilling Co. 90 Mo. 284, 59 Am. Rep. 16; Indianapolis v. Emmelman, 108 Ind. 530, 58 Am. Rep. 65; Clark v. Richmond, 83 Va. 355; Clark v. Manchester, 63 N. H. 577; Frost v. Eastern Railroad, 64 N. H. 220. Some of these cases are distinguishable from the case at bar. In the Pennsylvania case, a child seven years and ten months old fell into a well in the field of a private owner 100 feet from the public highway and 300 feet from the nearest house, and not concealed in any way so as to escape notice. The scene of the accident was at a comparatively remote point, and the court below had held that the plaintiff could not be guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law, instead of submitting the question to the jury. Moreover, the case is inconsistent with the ruling of the same court in the previous case of Hydraulic Works Co. v. Orr, supra. In the Michigan case, a child of tender years fell into a cistern on property "immediately adjoining a highway; and it is expressly said: "We express no opinion concerning cases where the nature of the business is such as to present peculiar attraction to children," etc. So in the Missouri case it was expressly stated that the agency causing the accident was not shown by the evidence to be "attractive to children." The supreme court of New Hampshire expressly repudiates the doctrine of the turntable cases. Such, also, seems to be the position of the court in the Wisconsin case. In the Indiana case, the excavation into which the child fell was in a shallow stream, which was part of a public street, and it was held that the city was liable for that reason; and, consequently, what was said as to excavations upon private property was not necessary to the decision of the case. It was said, however, that "whoever does anything . . . immediately adjacent to a public street to attract children of the vicinity into danger, which they cannot appreciate, owes the duty of protecting them by suitably guarding the source of danger." In the Virginia case, where the action was against the city of Richmond, the city was held not to be liable, because the child climbed up from the sidewalk upon a brick wall, and fell into the area beyond it, thereby receiving the injuries complained of. But, whether the cases which hold to the rule of nonliability under such facts as appear in this record can be clearly distinguished from the case at bar or not, we are not disposed to follow them in view of the authorities on the other side. We do not regard the case of St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co. v. Bell, 81 Ill. 76, 25 Am. Rep. 269, as opposing, but rather as indorsing, the doctrine of the turntable cases. That case was decided when this court so far considered questions of fact as to determine whether the verdict of a jury was contrary to the weight of the evidence or not; and we held that, "in view of the isolated portion in which the turntable was located, the proofs fail to show that appellant was guilty of such want of care as could lawfully charge it with damages for this accident." The question whether the defendant has or has not been guilty of negligence in case of such an accident upon his land to a child of tender years is for the jury. Involved in this question is the further question whether or not the premises were sufficiently attractive to entice children into danger, and to suggest to the defendant the probability of the occurrence of such accidents, and therefore such further question is also a matter to be determined by the jury. Mackey v. Vicksburg, and Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, supra. The subject of the attractiveness of the premises was submitted to the jury by the instructions given for the plaintiff in the case at bar.

It was also submitted to the jury by such instructions to determine whether the plaintiff or his parents were guilty of contributory negligence. In answer to special interrogatories submitted by the city, the jury found specially that the deceased, Frank McMahon, at the time of his death, was not of sufficient age and ability to exercise ordinary care and discretion in taking care of himself, and was without fault on his part, and did not at that time have discretion, intelligence, information, and knowledge sufficient to enable him to know that it was dangerous for him to play in the water upon the premises and to be at the place of drowning; that he necessarily and unavoidably fell into the pit, and was drowned; that the premises were not sufficiently fenced to warn him of his danger in entering thereon; and that his parents, at the time of his drowning, were without fault in respect to the same. In Chicago City R. Co. v. Wilcox, 188 Ill. 870, 21 L. R. A. 76, we held that where a suit for damages caused by the negligence of the defendant is brought by a child of tender years, the negligence of his parents cannot be imputed to him in support of the defense of contributory negligence. Here, however, the suit is brought by the father as administrator of a deceased child. In such case the contributory negligence of the parent, if it exists, may be shown in bar of the action. Chicago City R. Co. v. Wilcox, supra. The question whether the parents were guilty of such contributory negligence, having been fairly left to the jury, has been decided adversely to appellant, and cannot be reviewed here. Whether, as matter of law, a child seven years old, or under that age, can be justly held to be incapable of negligence, it is not necessary to decide. But where a child has passed the age of seven years, as was the case with appellant's deceased intestate, we are of the opinion that he is bound to use such care as children of his age, capacity, and intelligence are capable of exercising, and that the question whether he has done so or not should be submitted to the jury. Kerr v. Forgue, 54 Ill. 482, 5 Am. Rep. 146; Chicago City R. Co. v. Wilcox, supra; 2 Thomp. Neg. pp. 1181, 1182; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, Birge v. Gardiner, Daley v. Norwich & W. R. Co., Union Stock Yards & Transit Co. v. Rourke, Ewanich v. Gulf, O. & S. F. R. Co., and Kansas Cent. R. Co. v. Pitesimmons, supra. It was so submitted here, and the instructions given for the plaintiff are in accordance with these views.

2. A municipal corporation, holding property as a private owner, is chargeable with the same duties and obligations which devolve on individuals. Where it owns, leases, or controls lands, houses, docks, piers, water and gas works, it is liable, in respect to the care of the same, for injuries arising from neglect, in the same manner as an individual owner is liable, and must respond in the same way for creating or suffering nuisances. Cooley, Torts, marg. pp. 619, 620; 15 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 1155, and cases cited; Mackey v. Vicksburg and Clark v. Manchester, supra.

8. The plaintiff introduced in evidence on the trial below section 8 of the city ordinances of the city of Pekin, which is as follows: "8. Any owner, or occupant, or person, in possession of any uninclosed lot or parcel of land in said city, who shall, by digging or removing earth, sand or gravel from any such lot or parcel of land make or cause to be made in such uninclosed lot or parcel of land any pit or hole of such depth and character as to be considered dangerous, unsightly or a source of annoyance to the persons residing in the vicinity thereof or adjacent thereto shall be deemed guilty of creating a nuisance, and any owner, occupant, or possessor of any such uninclosed lot or parcel of land who shall refuse or neglect to remedy or abate said nuisance by filling up or covering or securely fencing the same after being notified so to do by the superintendent of police, or by any member of the police force, or any person aggrieved thereby, shall be subject to a penalty of not less than five dollars nor more than fifty dollars and a further penalty of two dollars for every day after the first conviction that said nuisance shall by him be continued." It is claimed that the court erred in admitting this ordinance in evidence. The declaration alleged that defendant had negligently permitted large quantities of water to accumulate in the pit upon the lots in question, "so that the same became a nuisance, and dangerous to the lives . . . of children of tender years," etc. The plea of the general issue had the effect of putting it at issue whether the excavation was a nuisance or not, and the ordinance was to some extent evidence of the affirmative of such issue. Moreover, in its notice of special matters of defense, the defendant had stated that the premises "were nearly inclosed upon the north and south sides thereof." Under the ordinance, it was an owner's duty, after notice, to "securely, and not partially or ineffectually," fence the same. We are not satisfied that the admission of the ordinance injured the defendant. In connection with the other proof as to the character and condition of the excavation upon the lots, it had a tendency to show what the character and condition of the excavation ought to have been under the requirements enacted by the city itself of private owners of land. The city was therefore estopped from denying its duty under the circumstances.

4. The judgment of the circuit court was unquestionably erroneous in ordering execution to issue against the city. The appellate court has found that this order was a mistake of the circuit clerk, and has entered an order making the necessary correction, and directing the circuit court to amend its record accordingly. The final judgment of the appellate court affirms the judgment of the circuit court as thus modified. We do not think that there was any error in such action of the appellate court.

The judgment of the Appellant Court is affirmed.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

City of DETROIT et al.

v.

Adolphus A. ELLIS, Attorney-General.

(.....Mich.....)

A decision against a city by a court of competent jurisdiction as to the validity of consent to the use of streets by a street railway company in the exercise of its franchise is a bar to proceedings against the company by quo warranto in the name of the attorney-general based on a denial of the right upheld in the former action.

(January 22, 1895.)

APPPLICATION by the City of Detroit and certain of its citizens for an order requiring the Attorney-General to show cause why he should not file an application in the nature of a quo warranto to oust the Detroit Citizens' Street Railway Company from the privilege of maintaining its tracks in certain streets of the city. Denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—On the merits of the question sought to be raised by the above suit, see Detroit v. Detroit City Railway (U. S. C. C. A. 6th C.) 26 L. R. A. 687.

The phase of the subject of res judicata presented in the above case seems to be an entirely novel one.

27 L. R. A.

Messrs. C. A. Kent and Burton Hanchett for relators.

Mr. Ashley Pond, with Messrs. Russell & Campbell, for respondent:

The matter is res judicata as against the relator.

Quo warranto against a private corporation is in effect a private action, although conducted in the name of the people.

High, Extr. Legal Rem. § 605; People v. Atty. Gen. 41 Mich. 728.

Where a municipality has power to make a grant to a street railway company for the full term of thirty years, and the municipality makes no objection, the state is not interested in the validity or regularity of the proceedings taken in exercise of that power.

Atty. Gen. v. Detroit Suburban R. Co. 96 Mich. 65.

Messrs. F. A. Baker, Henry M. Duffield, and Sidney T. Miller also for respondent.

McGrath, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an application for an order to show cause why the attorney-general should not file an application in the nature of a quo warranto to inquire by what right the Detroit Citizens' Street-Railway Company claims to exercise, and does exercise, in certain streets of the city of Detroit, the right of maintaining and using street-railway tracks in said streets. Petitioners allege that in November, 1863, the common council of the city of Detroit passed an ordinance whereby consent was given to one Bushnell and his associates, who were about to organize as a corporation, to lay street-railway tracks, and to operate a street-railway system in and upon certain streets in the city of Detroit; that afterwards, on the 9th day of May, 1868, said Bushnell and his associates organized into a corporation which, by its articles, was to continue for thirty years, under the name of the Detroit City Railway, which entered into possession of said streets, and built and maintained street-car lines and exercised all the usual franchises connected therewith; that November 14, 1879, another ordinance was made, adding other provisions to the agreement between the street-railway company and the city, and providing that "the powers and privileges conferred and obligations imposed on the Detroit City Railway Company by the ordinance passed November 24, 1863, and the amendments thereto, are hereby extended and limited to thirty years from this date;" that in 1891 the Detroit Citizens' Street-Railway Company was organized for a period of thirty years, and, soon after its organization, received a conveyance of all the property rights and franchises of said Detroit City Railway Company, and under such conveyance the Detroit Citizens' Street-Railway Company claims the right to operate, and is now using, all the franchises in said streets; that the value of the franchises and rights in said streets occupied and claimed by said Citizens' Street-Railway Company is very great, and that its claims are a great obstacle, as your petitioners are informed and believe, and therefore aver, to the making of the best terms which the city can make for the public accommodation by the establishment and maintenance of improved street-car lines on said streets, and are therefore injurious to the city and all residents; that, if the claims of said Citizens' Company are declared void, arrangements can readily be made with other street-car companies by which the car service can be greatly improved, and either the fares much reduced, or the amount paid to the city be greatly increased, or both; that the said ordinance of 1879, attempting to extend the franchises and rights of said Detroit City Railway thirty years from November 14, 1879, was void after May 9, 1893, because the life of said grantees expired at that time. In 1893 the city of Detroit filed its bill in the circuit court for the county of Wayne, in chancery, against the Detroit City Railway, Detroit Citizens' Railway Company, and others, setting forth at length the matters which are substantially set forth in the petition herein, and praying that defendants might be enjoined from operating street-railways in said streets after the 9th day of May, 1893. The said cause was afterwards removed to the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Michigan, in equity, where a decree was finally entered in accordance with the prayer of the bill. Detroit v. Detroit City R. Co. 60 27 L. R. A.

Fed. Rep. 161. Defendants took the case to the court of appeals, where it was heard upon its merits; and in October, 1894, a decree was entered reversing the decree of the circuit court, and dismissing the bill. Id. 64 Fed. Rep. 638, 28 L. R. A. 667.

Why must not the question here sought to be raised by quo warranto be regarded as res judicata against the moving parties, the city of Detroit and certain of its citizens? Under its charter, the city of Detroit has the charge and supervision of the streets of that city. It has the power to establish, open, widen, extend, straighten, alter, vacate, and abolish streets; to clean, grade, pave, repair, and improve the same; to protect and prevent incumbering or obstructing highways; to remove incumbrances from such streets; and to control, prescribe, and regulate the manner in which streets within the city shall be used and enjoyed. In the very act containing the grant to the street-railway company, the supervision and control, by cities and other local municipalities, over streets and highways, is recognized, and the exercise of the right granted is made dependent upon the consent of the local entity. If a street-railway company is operating its system upon the streets of the city of Detroit in the absence of a valid and binding consent granted by the city, the municipality is certainly a proper party, if not the proper party, to take proceedings to enjoin such operation, not only by virtue of its control over the streets, but also because the power to consent involves the authority to prevent. The municipality moves in such case, not as a proprietor, but in its representative capacity,—as the representative of the public,—as the proper party to complain of the unauthorized use of such streets. The only question in issue is as to the validity of the consent granted.

Counsel for the petitioners say in their brief that "this application is made by the municipal authorities of the city, who are the trustees of the public, for the protection of the interests of the public in the streets." Again they say: "In this case the municipality itself makes the complaint. It is vested with the control of the streets in the interest and for the protection and benefit of the public. It is hindered and prevented from the exercise of such control by the acts of defendant. The bill in the case in the United States was filed by the same authorities, in precisely the same capacity, and to reach the same result. Can the adjudication, then, be avoided by the simple addition of individual members of the body comprising the beneficiaries? If so there will be no end to the litigation. In the case of Clark v. Wolf, 29 Iowa, 197, cited in Wells on Res Adjudicata (sec. 186), it was held as to a county—and the same principle would apply to a city—that a judgment against it, or its legal representatives, in a matter of general interest to all the people thereof, as one respecting the levy and collection of a tax, is binding, not only on the official representatives of the county named in the proceeding as defendants, but upon all the citizens thereof, though not made parties defendant by name. This must be the true rule as to matters of public concern, when the proper representative of the public has moved or has been made a party to the proceeding. If the authority to consent to the use of its streets be regarded as a delegation of power to the municipality, and the authority over the streets be also considered as a delegation of power to the city, the municipality must be regarded, as is said in Citizens' Horse R. Co. v. Belleville, 47 Ill. App. 888, as "related to the state as its agent," in so far, at least, as to conclude the state by litigation had in good faith, respecting the subject-matter. Again, the state has regarded the matter of consent as one of purely local concern. A controversy arose between the city of Detroit and the Citizens' Railway Company as to whether the consent of the city had been given in such a manner as to be available to the present company and binding upon the city, and the city appealed to the courts, where the matter has been determined. The only question litigated was whether the consent given survived to the present company. In a proceeding instituted by the municipiality, a court of competent jurisdiction has determined that matter in favor of the company, and that determination is conclusive upon all parties concerned.

The order to show cause must be denied.

Long, Grant, and Montgomery, JJ., concurred with McGrath, Ch. J.

Hooker, J.:

Without dissenting from the views expressed by my brother, I prefer to concur in the result reached in the case upon other grounds.

It is nowhere shown that this proceeding is of concern to the state. Indeed, counsel say that all that is asked is that the attorney-general shall permit the use of his name to the relators, thus practically confirming the already obvious fact that the city of Detroit wishes to be allowed to continue a litigation in the name of another which it cannot lawfully do in its own, being foreclosed by an adverse decision from a court of competent jurisdiction in a suit instituted by itself. It would be anomalous to grant a discretionary writ for such a purpose.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

Anna E. BULLOCK, Appt.,

v.

Thomas O. BULLOCK et al., Respts.

(.....N. J. ....)

1. The jurisdiction acquired by the courts of one state over parties to an action incidentally affecting lands in another state is a jurisdiction purely in personam; the decree or judgment in such action cannot have any extra-territorial force in rem.

2. A decree or judgment of the courts of one state requiring and directing lands in another state to be conveyed or charged or otherwise disposed of may be enforced by their process, and when enforced or submitted to, by the execution of a conveyance, mortgage, or other instrument, as directed, such conveyance, mortgage, or other instrument is effective in the situs rei, but not the decree.

3. The courts of the situs of lands are not bound by the decree or judgment of the courts of another state affecting such lands, made in an action in which their jurisdiction is purely in personam; for, their jurisdiction being limited, their decree and judgment can extend no further. Full faith and credit will be given to such decrees and judgments, under section 1 of article 4 of the Constitution of the United States, by according to them a force merely personal upon the parties, and enforceable alone by their process.

4. Such decrees and judgments do not create a personal obligation upon the party which the courts of another state are bound *Headnotes by MAGIE, J.

NOTE.—On the important question involved in the above case, as to the effect of a decree attempting to charge alimony upon lands in another state, no attempt at annotation will be made in view of the extensive briefs and discussion by the court. 27 L. R. A.

to compel him to perform. At the most, they impose a duty, the performance of which may be enforced by the process of the courts pronouncing them.

5. The courts of the situs of lands cannot be compelled to issue their decrees to enforce the process of the courts of another state, or the performance of acts required by the decree of such courts, ancillary to the relief thereby granted, affecting such lands.

6. A court of New York, having jurisdiction over the action and parties, dissolved the bonds of matrimony between them, fixed the amount, and directed the payment of alimony, and ordered the husband to execute and deliver to the wife a mortgage upon lands in New Jersey, to secure the payment of the alimony. Held, that a bill founded upon the order requiring such a mortgage to be given, and praying a decree that the mortgage should be given in conformity to the order, disclosed no equity, and was properly dismissed.

(Van Syckel, Dixon, Lippincott, Reed and Bogert, JJ., dissent.)

(November 23, 1894.)

A PPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Chancery Court in favor of defendants in a proceeding brought to set aside certain mortgages and conveyances and to compel defendant Bullock to execute to complainant a mortgage upon the property pursuant to a decree of a New York court. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Edward Q. Keasbey, for appellant:

The subject-matter of the suit was within the jurisdiction of the supreme court of New York, and the court, acting as a court for the adjudication of questions of divorce, had undoubted power to decree the payment of alimony and make an order upon the defendant directing him to secure the payment thereof.

N. Y. Const. 1846, art. 6, §§ 3, 6; Code Proc. 1848, § 69; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1772, 2839; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 171; Willard, Eq. Jur. p. 654; Forrest v. Forrest, 25 N. Y. 501.

The obligation is one affecting the person of the defendant, and the court of New York has not attempted to affect the title to lands in New Jersey.

This duty being created by a court having jurisdiction of the person and of the subject-matter of the litigation, is binding upon the person of the defendant everywhere, and he carries it with him wherever he goes.

This court is required by the Constitution of the United States to give full faith and credit to the order of the court of the state of New York which imposed the obligation upon the person of the defendant.

U. S. Const. art. 4, § 1.

It is true that the courts of one state cannot adjudicate directly upon the title to lands in another state.

Story, Conf. L. § 591; Davis v. Headley, 22 N. J. Eq. 115; Lindley v. O'Reilly, 1 L. R. A. 79, 50 N. J. L. 686.

But where the question changes its character, where the defendant in the original action is liable to the plaintiff, either in consequence of contract, or as trustee, or as the holder of a legal title acquired by any species of mala fides practiced on the plaintiff, the principles of equity give a court jurisdiction wherever the person may be found, and the circumstance, that a question of title may be involved in the inquiry, and may even constitute the essential point on which the case depends, does not seem sufficient to arrest that jurisdiction.

Massie v. Watts, 10 U. S. 6 Cranch, 148, 3 L. ed. 181; Penn v. Lord Baltimore, 1 Ves. Sr. 444; Earl of Kildare v. Eustace, 1 Vern. 419; Toller v. Carteret, 2 Vern. 494; Lord Portarlington v. Souby, 3 Myl. & K. 104; Sutphen v. Fowler, 9 Paige, 281, 4 L. ed. 701; Vreeland v. Vreeland, 49 N. J. Eq. 322.

The courts of a state where a man lives can give personal rights and impose personal duties which can be enforced by the courts of other states with respect to lands within their borders.

Companhia de Moçambique v. British South African Co. [1893] 3 Q. B. 358; Elizabethtown Sav. Inst. v. Gerber, 35 N. J. Eq. 158; Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 36 L. ed. 1123; McKinnoyle v. Cohen, 88 U. S. 13 Pet. 812, 325, 10 L. ed. 177, 188; Carpenter v. Strange, 141 U. S. 87, 35 L. ed. 640; Sutphen v. Fowler, supra; Gardner v. Ogden, 23 N. Y. 827, 78 Am. Dec. 192; Lewis v. Darling, 57 U. S. 16 How. 1, 14 L. ed. 819; Cheever v. Wilson, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 108-121, 19 L. ed. 604-607; McLean v. Lafayette Bank, 3 McLean, 587; MacGregor v. MacGregor, 9 Iowa, 65.

"Equity regards as done that which ought to be done," and the court considers that upon the execution of a contract the person in whose favor it is made obtains in equity an interest in the thing which is the subject of the contract.

1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 865; Crawford v. Bertholf, 1 N. J. Eq. 460; Hoagland v. Latourette, 2 N. J. Eq. 254; Huffman v. Hummer, 17 N. J. Eq. 264; King v. Ruckman, 21 N. J. Eq. 599.

An agreement, on a sufficient consideration, to give a mortgage on specific property, creates an equitable lien upon such property, which 37 L. R. A.

takes precedence of the claims of the promisor's general creditors, and of the claims of subsequent purchasers and incumbrancers with notice of the lien.

Jones, Liens, § 77; Jones, Mortg. §§ 163-167; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1237.

Mr. James Buchanan for respondents.

Magie, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant in this cause was the complainant below. Her bill of complaint stated the following facts, viz.: That she had commenced an action in the supreme court of the state of New York, which court had "jurisdiction in the case," against respondent, her former husband, for the purpose of dissolving the marriage previously entered into by them; that respondent was personally served with process, and duly appeared in said action; that such proceedings were had thereon that a judgment was rendered in her favor, whereby it was adjudged that said marriage should be dissolved, that respondent should pay to her, as alimony, $100, on the 1st day of each month, commencing June 1, 1892, and should execute a mortgage, as security for such payments, upon lands in the state of New Jersey, of such form and containing such provisions as the court should subsequently direct and approve; that said court, by a subsequent order, directed respondent to execute, acknowledge, and deliver to appellant a mortgage of a specified form, and containing specified provisions upon lands in this state, which were particularly described in the order; that respondent had failed and refused to execute and deliver the mortgage as directed, and made various mortgages and conveyances of said lands without consideration, and with the fraudulent purpose of defeating appellant's rights. It was charged in the bill that appellant, by virtue of the decree and order of the New York court, acquired an equitable lien on said lands, prior to the lien and interest of the mortgagees and grantees of respondent, and an equitable right to a mortgage on said lands, in accordance with the decree and order. Upon these statements and charges, the prayers of the bill were for answer and discovery, for a decree setting aside the mortgages and conveyances of respondent, and that he be "decreed, pursuant to the said decree and order of the New York supreme court, to execute and deliver" to her "the mortgage on said premises, therein directed to be made and delivered, according to the form therein provided." There was a general prayer for relief. Respondent moved the court of chancery to dismiss the bill, pursuant to the practice established by rule 215 of that court, upon the ground that the bill exhibited no equity entitling appellant to the relief she prayed for. The notice of the motion specifically set forth the grounds of objection. The motion was heard by Vice Chancellor Bird, and, upon his advice, a decree was made dismissing the bill. The opinion of the vice chancellor is reported in 51 N. J. Eq. 444. From this decree appellant has prosecuted the appeal which is now to be decided.

A motion to dismiss a bill, under chancery rule 215, is a substitute for a demurrer. The rule was designed to furnish a speedy mode of bringing to adjudication questions which, before its adoption, could only be raised by demurrer. Obviously, all facts stated in the bill which are relevant and well pleaded must be deemed to be admitted to be true upon such a motion, as upon a demurrer, of which it is the substitute. Looking at the bill to discover what facts must have been taken to be true upon the hearing of the motion to dismiss, I find difficulty in determining how extensive a jurisdiction is thereby asserted to have inhered in the supreme court of New York. It is expressly stated that the action commenced in that court was for the purpose of dissolving the marriage of the parties, and there is a conjoined statement that the court had jurisdiction of the case. From these statements it was obviously to be assumed that the court in question had jurisdiction to decree a divorce and annul a marriage. But is it to be inferred—for there is no express averment of it—that the same court possessed jurisdiction to fix the amount and require payment of alimony, and especially to require a defendant to secure the payment of alimony by a charge upon lands lying beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the court? Alimony is, in general, an incident of divorce. It may be justifiable to infer that a court empowered to dissolve the bonds of matrimony would also be clothed with authority to determine on the amount of alimony, and to render judgment therefor. But how, without some further averment, is an inference to be drawn that the same court was authorized to require security for the payment of alimony to be given by the mortgage of lands, and of lands beyond its jurisdiction? If, however, the bill is defective in the respect suggested, the defect was not included in the causes set out in the notice of the motion to dismiss, and no objection upon that ground was made in the court below or here. From this I think we must deem it to have been conceded that the bill properly averred the jurisdiction of the supreme court of New York to make the decree and order mentioned in the bill, and copies of which were annexed to and made a part thereof. The decree, in this respect, ordered respondent to pay to appellant the alimony, from time to time, during her natural life, and to execute and deliver to her a mortgage on his real estate, and particularly that located in the state of New Jersey, to secure such payments. The order simply required respondent to perform the decree by executing, acknowledging, and delivering to appellant a mortgage on particular lands in New Jersey, of a form shown in a schedule annexed to the order. The order and requirement of the court was therefore directed in personam, and there was no attempt to adjudicate or enforce an adjudication in rem.

It is scarcely necessary to observe that a court of New York could not have been empowered to affect, by its decree of judgment, lands lying within another state; for no principle is more fundamental or thoroughly settled than that the local sovereignty, by itself or its judicial agencies, can alone adjudicate upon and determine the status of lands and immovable property within its borders, including their title and its incidents and the mode in which they may be charged or conveyed. Neither the laws of another sovereignty, nor the judicial proceedings, decrees, and judgments of its courts, can in the least degree affect such lands and immovable property. Story, Conf. L. §§ 543, 591. The concession as to the jurisdiction of the supreme court of New York in this case must therefore be deemed to be limited to a jurisdiction to proceed in personam, and not to extend to a determination, adjudication, or decree in rem. The jurisdiction thus conceded to the supreme court of New York is exactly analogous to the jurisdiction which, since the decision of Penn. v. Lord Baltimore, 1 Ves. Sr. 444, has been universally recognized as inherent in courts administering equity. This recognized jurisdiction extends to making decrees in cases of equitable cognizance, such as fraud, trust, and specific performance against persons brought into those courts, notwithstanding such decrees incidentally affect lands beyond the court's jurisdiction. But the exercise of this jurisdiction has been supported solely on the ground that it operated in personam only, and did not extend to the utterance of decrees in rem. In the leading American case, Chief Justice Marshall declared that the question was whether the question presented was an unmixed question of title, or a case of fraud, trust, or contract. Massie v. Watts, 10 U. S. 6 Cranch, 148, 8 L. ed. 181. If relief cannot be effectively given by the decree in personam, such courts will not retain the bill. Morris v. Remington, 1 Pars. Sel. Eq. Cas. 387; Lindley v. O'Reilly, 50 N. J. L. 636, 1 L. R. A. 79. Nor will the power be exerted in personam to compel an act affecting lands in another jurisdiction of doubtful legality. Blount v. Blount, 8 N. C. 365. The power of such courts to make effective such decrees is limited to its process operating upon the party, such as sequestration of property within jurisdiction, attachment for contempt, and the like; it will not extend to validating a conveyance of the foreign lands, made by its master or commissioner, in default of the performance of the decree by the party. Watts v. Waddle, 31 U. S. 6 Pet. 390, 8 L. ed. 433; Burnley v. Stevenson, 24 Ohio St. 474, 15 Am. Rep. 621. When, by the process of the court acting upon the party, obedience to the decree is enforced as by the conveyance, it is the conveyance, not the decree, that affects the lands in the foreign jurisdiction. Davis v. Headley, 23 N. J. Eq. 115. The long line of cases illustrating this doctrine and its limitations is collected in 23 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 918. Nowhere has the doctrine been more clearly stated than in our own courts. Wood v. Warner, 15 N. J. Eq. 81; Davis v. Headley, supra; Potter v. Hollister, 45 N. J. Eq. 303, 46 N. J. Eq. 609; Lindley v. O'Reilly, 50 N. J. L. 636, 1 L. R. A. 79. In my judgment, it does not admit of doubt that the jurisdiction of the supreme court of New York, if properly averred in the bill, was a jurisdiction to make a decree as to alimony, and its being secured by mortgage on lands in New Jersey, only in personam, and to enforce it by any process against respondent which is proper in that state. Nor was the decree which was pronounced by that court capable of any other construction than one which shows it to have been within such conceded jurisdiction. From these considerations, I deem it evident that the theory of this bill that, by virtue of the decree and order of the supreme court of New York, appellant acquired an equitable lien on lands in New Jersey, and a right to have such lands disposed of in a certain manner, cannot be sustained without a disastrous violation of fundamental principles. The decree and order of that court do not pretend to have any such purpose or effect, nor could that court be empowered to make a decree having such an effect.

But it is ingeniously contended in this court that the decree and order of the supreme court of New York imposed upon respondent a personal obligation to do what that decree and order had directed him to do, and that a court of equity in New Jersey ought to compel him to perform that obligation, as it would compel him to perform his contract to convey or mortgage lands, in its jurisdiction. Moreover, it is contended that the provisions of section 1 of article 4 of the Constitution of the United States, requiring full faith and credit to be given in each state to the records and judicial proceedings of every other state, impart to this decree and order a conclusive force, with respect to the mortgage directed to be given on lands here, which compels our courts to enforce it by decrees in conformity therewith. Doubtless, the judgment of the New York court must be accorded in our courts a conclusive effect in certain respects. Thus, it has conclusively determined the status of the parties to that action, and that the marital relation previously existing between them has been absolutely dissolved. If, by the direction to pay alimony, an indebtedness arises from time to time as such payments become due, an action at law would lie thereon, and the decree would furnish conclusive evidence of such indebtedness.

But the question upon the solution of which this case must turn is whether the courts of New Jersey must give conclusive effect to the decree or judgment of the courts of New York made in a case where they had acquired jurisdiction of the parties, but affecting lands situated here, and disposing of the title thereto in whole or in part. If this question is to be answered in the affirmative, it seems evident that we accord jurisdiction over lands in New Jersey to the courts of other states, and as was said by Chancellor Zabriskie in Davis v. Headley, supra, "leave to the courts of this state only the ministerial duty of executing their decree;" for the doctrine that jurisdiction respecting lands in a foreign state is not in rem, but only in personam, is bereft of all practical force if the decree in personam is conclusive, and must be enforced by the courts of the situs. If such is the effect which must be given to the judgments and decrees of the courts of a sister state respecting lands situated here, it is extraordinary that no trace of the doctrine can be found in text-books or in adjudicated decisions. My researches have not disclosed any support of the doctrine by any text-writer of repute or by any decision in point. The very industrious counsel who maintained this view in argument has produced no authority which, in my judgment, sustains his position. In Elizabethtown Sav. Institution v. Gerber, 35 N. J. Eq. 158, the question was as to the effect to be attributed by our courts to an order of a court of New York directing a New Jersey corporation to pay money due from it to one Ahern, in part satisfaction of a judgment which the savings institution had recovered against Ahern in New York. The decision of this court went upon the ground that the New York court had not acquired jurisdiction of the New Jersey corporation which had been ordered to pay, and that its order was consequently void. What was said by the learned chief justice who wrote the opinion respecting the power of our court of chancery to enforce a right to money under such an order was unnecessary to the decision, but can doubtless be supported, because the New York order was for the payment of money raising an indebtedness, which in that case required to be enforced in the court of chancery as the debt, which was the subject of the order had then been paid into that court. But the effect of a foreign judgment or decree as to money in another state must differ from the effect of such a judgment and decree as to lands in another state. Chester v. Wilson, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 108, 19 L. ed. 604, presents a closer parallel to the case in hand. In that case a divorce court in Indiana made an order that one of the parties to an action for divorce should pay to the other party a certain proportion of the rents to accrue from real estate situated in the District of Columbia, and should execute to him a sufficient power to collect such rents. She executed the power as prescribed, and the question before the court was what interest in the rents passed thereby. Mr. Justice Swayne, delivering the opinion of the court, incidentally said that the order "could have been enforced in the situs rei by proper proceedings, conducted there for that purpose." But this statement is not supported by the cases cited, and was unnecessary to the decision, as the learned judge immediately pointed out, by showing that the party had executed an assignment which vested in the other party the interest in the rents which she had been ordered to convey. The whole question was as to the effect of that assignment.

The contention that such an order requiring lands in New Jersey to be charged with alimony created a personal obligation on respondent is, in my judgment, without force. It is a misuse of terms to call the burden thereby imposed on respondent a "personal obligation." At the most, the decree and order imposed a duty on him, which duty he owed to the court making them. That court can enforce the duty by its process, but our courts cannot be required to issue such process, or to make our decrees operate as process. Moreover, the substantial part of the decree is comprised in the dissolution of the marriage and the direction to pay alimony. The charge of the alimony upon lands is rather in the nature of process to enforce the substantial decretal order for alimony. The establishment of the contrary doctrine would result in practically depriving a state of that exclusive control over immovable property therein which has always been accorded. For example, by our statutes, contracts respecting lands to be enforceable must be entered into and evidenced in a particular mode; but our courts, upon equitable grounds, sometimes enforce contracts that are without the statute. It is the province of our legislature to prescribe the rule for such contracts, and for our courts to construe the rule so prescribed, and to determine when such contracts, whether within or without the statute, may be enforced. It is true that the courts of another state, proceeding in personam to enforce a contract for lands in New Jersey, would be bound to determine whether the contract was enforceable under our laws. But they would construe those laws, and if their decree in personam may and must be conclusive in our courts, and compel a decree in conformity therewith, it is obvious that the contract will be enforced according to whatever construction the foreign court put upon our laws, and not according to the construction of our own courts. Other examples will occur to any one considering the subject. For these reasons, I shall vote to affirm the decree below.

Garrison, J., concurring:

I concur in the result announced by Mr. Justice Magie, but not for the reasons contained in the opinion just read, nor for those stated in the conclusions of the learned equity judge who heard the cause in the court of chancery.

The object of the complainant's bill is to execute, through the medium of our court of chancery, an order made by the supreme court of New York upon the defendant to secure his performance of a decree rendered therein against him by mortgaging his lands in New Jersey. The procedure in this state is justified under that provision of the federal law that gives conclusive force in one state to the records and judicial proceedings of another. The vice of this deduction in the case before us is that it assumes that the order made by the New York court to secure the performance by the defendant of its decree against him is a "judgment" of that state, within the meaning of the Federal Constitution and the act of congress.

The transcendent force given by the federal law to the judicial proceedings of sister states is confined to such judicial determinations as possess the quality of judgment; it does not extend to proceedings in the nature of execution, or to orders merely ancillary to some special form of relief.

In cases that proceed to judgment in common-law form this distinction is well marked, but it is liable to be lost sight of in decisions rendered in equity causes, where judgment, in decretal form, is often accompanied by special orders for particular forms of relief, or for the enforcement or securing of the execution of the decree pronounced. The distinction, however, is always a substantial one, that must not be overlooked because of the form in which the decretal order may be framed.

That only is judgment that is pronounced between the parties to the action upon the matters submitted to the court for decision. To judgments thus rendered, the federal law accords in every state the same conclusive force possessed in the state where they are rendered. After judgment in a state court, all that follows for the purpose of enabling the successful party to reap the benefits of the determination in his favor is execution, or in aid of execution. No interpretation has ever been placed upon the Federal Constitution giving conclusive effect, or, indeed, any effect at all, to the executions of the judgments rendered in sister states, or to any order merely in aid thereof. Such orders lack the quality of judgment, and must be differentiated from judgments, even though embodied in the same decretal orders that pronounce the judgment of the court. These decretal orders may be defined to be decisions made touching some matter collateral to the issue presented in the record, or required to be passed upon in order to carry into execution the judgment of the court. To these determinations ancillary to execution no extraterritorial force is given by the federal law.

That the order in the present case touching the defendant's land in New Jersey is of this nature clearly appears in the case before us. Upon this demurrer it is established that the New York suit was instituted for the sole purpose of dissolving the marriage of the complainant with the defendant. Upon the record thus submitted, the supreme court of New York pronounced as its judgment that the marriage should be dissolved with the incident of alimony to the complainant. Here the sentence of the law upon the record ceases. The order of the court then proceeds in these words: "And it is further adjudged and decreed that the said defendant, within ten days after the entry of this judgment and service thereof on the attorney for the defendant, execute and deliver unto the plaintiff a mortgage covering the real property owned by the defendant, and particularly located in the state of New Jersey, which mortgage shall be of such form and contain such provisions as shall be sufficient and requisite to secure unto the plaintiff the faithful performance of the provisions of this judgment and decree on the part of the defendant, as may be directed and approved by this court."

In my opinion, this order was ancillary to execution, and did not possess any element of a judgment upon the issue submitted to the court for decision, which was whether the marriage between the parties should be dissolved. For this reason, I think the complainant's bill was properly dismissed.

Inasmuch as the only object of this memorandum is to indicate the ground upon which I base my affirmation of the decree below, no useful purpose will be served by elaborating my views upon the interesting questions presented. For the same reason, I do not express any view upon the questions discussed in the opinions that have been read, by which variant results are reached as to the potency of judgments rendered by other states when made the basis of direct equitable remedy, through the medium of our chancery.

Van Syckel, J., dissenting:

The supreme court of New York made a decree for divorce in favor of the wife, and ordered that the husband pay $100 per month alimony, and that, to secure it to the wife, he should execute a mortgage on lands which he owned in New Jersey. Personal service was made upon the husband in the New York divorce suit, and the decree for divorce, including the order to execute the mortgage, was obtained on the 1st day of July, 1892. On the 19th of November, 1892, on the application of the wife's attorney, an order was entered in the New York court specifying the lands in New Jersey upon which the husband should execute the mortgage. Thereupon the wife filed a bill in the court of chancery of this state to compel the husband to execute the mortgage in accordance with the New York judgment, and also to set aside conveyances of the property in this state by the husband, which are alleged to be fraudulent.

The first question is whether the New York court, on common-law principles, had the power to decree a mortgage to be executed to secure the wife's alimony. The ecclesiastical courts had no such power. Those courts enforced their decrees by excommunication until an act was passed (53 Geo. III. chap. 127) forbidding excommunication, and providing imprisonment for contumacy in its stead. The power of the New York court, if it exists, must be statutory. Prior to the judgment, the presumption, in the absence of proof, would be that the common law prevailed, and that no such power rested in the New York court. But, after judgment, the presumption will be that all things were rightly done, and that the power did exist by statute in New York. This presumption will prevail until evidence is produced to repel it. In this case there is an entire absence of proof on this point. Admitting this to be so, the judgment in New York constitutes no lien upon lands in this state. Davis v. Hendley, 22 N. J. Eq. 115; Lindley v. O'Reilly, 50 N. J. L. 636, 1 L. R. A. 79.

But this does not dispose of the case. The question is whether our court of equity will establish a lien upon the New Jersey lands, so as to give effect to the New York decree. It may be conceded that the lex fori must apply to the remedy to enforce the New York judgment in our courts. Harker v. Brink, 24 N. J. L. 333; Garr v. Stokes, 16 N. J. L. 404; Armour v. McMichael, 36 N. J. L. 92. While we will give full faith and credit to the New York judgment, we cannot be asked to give greater efficacy to a decree for alimony made in New York than we can give to a like decree made in our own courts. For instance, if the common law prevailed here, we would enforce the New York decree for alimony only according to the common-law practice, for that would exhaust our power in that respect. Under our statute concerning alimony, it has been held that equity may decree that it shall be a lien upon the husband's lands. Snover v. Snover, 18 N. J. Eq. 261. I do not find that a decree has been made expressly requiring the husband to execute a mortgage, but it is not necessary here, as the decree that it shall be a lien by its own force attaches to the land. It is a difference in mere form, not in substance.

The right to establish the lien must carry with it the power to require the husband to execute any conveyance requisite to its enforcement. The question to be solved, therefore, is whether, under that provision of the Federal Constitution which requires that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state, the wife is entitled to invoke the aid of our courts to give effect to the New York judgment in conformity to our practice. It is undoubtedly true that the New York court had no power to create a lien upon New Jersey lands; and it is also true that the New York court could have acted upon the person of the husband while within its jurisdiction, and constrained him to execute such a writing as would have been effective to pass the title to, or establish a lien on, the New Jersey lands. The question, however, is not what the New York court could have done, but what the courts of New Jersey, in discharge of her constitutional obligations, should do in aid of the wife after rendition of the judgment in New York. The New York court having jurisdiction of the person of the husband, and also of the subject-matter of the suit there, the judgment in that state, as between the parties to that suit, was conclusive of the right of the wife to have the husband execute a mortgage upon the New Jersey lands, although it did not of its own force create a lien upon the lands. As to the title to such lands, it had the effect of an admitted legal contract or obligation by the husband to convey, and should be enforced in equity here. A judgment in New York that a party defendant shall specifically perform a written contract to convey lands in New Jersey would furnish no better foundation for the interference of our court of equity than the judgment relied upon in this case. In what respect a different principle could be applied is not apparent. In either case, obedience to the mandate of the Federal Constitution would give effect to the judgment here. In Elizabethtown Sav. Inst. v. Gerber, 35 N. J. Eq. 153, this court held that a judicial order in New York that the garnishee owes a debt to the defendant in a judgment, such moneys being in the custody of a court of equity, creates per se a right to apply to such court for such moneys, in the same way as an assignment of such moneys to the plaintiff in the judgment would have passed such right. Such a decree in the New York court settled the plaintiff's right to the fund, and that right was an equitable one, which was enforced in this state. The decree or judgment in New York has the effect of being, not merely prima facie evidence, but conclusive proof, of the rights thereby adjudicated; and a refusal to give it the force and effect in this respect which it had in the state in which it was rendered denies a right secured by fundamental law. The force and effect of the decree for alimony in New York was not to create a lien upon lands in New Jersey, but to conclusively entitle the wife to have that decree enforced against the husband. It being competent for our courts to enforce such a decree made in our own courts by establishing it as a lien on lands, we cannot refuse like relief in this case on the extraterritorial judgment. Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 38 L. ed. 1123; McElmoyle v. Cohen, 83 U. S. 13 Pet. 312, 10 L. ed. 177. In Chesser v. Wilson, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 108-121, 19 L. ed. 604-607, there was an order of the divorce court in Indiana directing the wife to pay one third of her rents as they became due to her husband. The land was in Washington, where suit was brought to enforce payment of the rents to the husband. The court said that the decree in Indiana, so far as it related to the real property in question, could have no extraterritorial effect; but, if valid, it bound those who were parties in the case, and could have been enforced in the situs rei by proper proceedings for that purpose. The judgment in New York must be regarded as conclusively imposing a legal personal obligation or duty upon the husband to mortgage his lands in New Jersey.

The New York judgment is conclusive between the parties to it (1) as to the right to a divorce; (2) as to the right of the wife to the alimony allowed; (3) it is equally conclusive, as against the husband, as to her right to have such alimony secured by a mortgage on his New Jersey lands, that being expressly a part of the adjudication in New York. The judgment imposed an obligation upon the husband, from which he cannot relieve himself by removing from the jurisdiction in which it was rendered; that obligation follows him into this state. The lien does not, by mere force of the extraterritorial judgment, attach to lands in this state. To impress that lien upon lands here, the intervention of our court of equity is necessary, just as it is necessary to sue here upon a New York judgment before execution can issue from our courts to obtain satisfaction of it. The husband has had his day in court in New York, where all these questions have been adjudicated against him, and our courts should hold that he is thereby concluded. The question, in its true form, is whether we will give full faith and credit to the judgment of the New York court in so far as it finally adjudges the questions legally submitted to it, when it had jurisdiction both of the subject-matter of the controversy and of the parties to it. It seems to me that there can be but one answer to this question, and that the court below erred in dismissing the complainant's bill.

Dixon, Lippencott, Reed, and Bogert, JJ., also dissent.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

N. P. WIND et al., Appts.,

ILER & CO.

(.....Iowa.....)

1. The reservation of the right to inspect goods does not of itself indicate that title shall not pass until the goods are tested.
2. The title does not pass on an option to purchase if satisfactory until the option is determined; but it is otherwise in case of a purchase with an option to return if not satisfactory.
3. A statutory right to recover money paid on an unlawful purchase of intoxicating liquors cannot apply to a purchase made in another state where it was valid, although the seller's intent to aid the purchaser to violate the laws of his state would defeat his right to recover for the purchase price on grounds of public policy.
4. Sales of intoxicating liquors shipped to another state in the original packages before the passage of the Wilson bill, are not subject to the laws of that state respecting the recovery of money paid on such sales.
5. The drawing of a bung from a barrel

NOTE.—On the right to recover price of property sold for illegal use, see note to Graves v. Johnson (Mass.) 15 L. R. A. 834.

On use of small quantity of goods purchased to test quality, as a waiver of the right to rescind, see note to Cream City Glass Co. v. Friedlander (Wis.) 21 L. R. A. 185.

27 L. R. A.

in which intoxicating liquors were shipped from another state, in order to obtain a small quantity for testing the article to determine an option to reject the purchase, does not destroy the nature of the original package.

(January 21, 1895.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Mills County in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover back money paid for intoxicating liquors. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Messrs. E. R. Duffie, John P. Breen, and John Y. Stone for appellant.

Messrs. Congdon & Hunt, James M. Woolworth, and Smith McPherson for appellees.

Deemer, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff is a copartnership composed of N. P. Wind and George F. Silvers, heretofore, and during the years 1881, 1882, 1883, and 1884, doing business as wholesale and retail liquor dealers in the city of Ottumwa, Iowa. Defendant Iler & Co. is a copartnership composed of the other defendants, doing a wholesale liquor business in the city of Omaha, Neb. Sometime during the latter part of the year 1881 defendants' traveling man, one Gilmore, called upon the plaintiffs at their place of business in Ottumwa to induce them to order some liquors from the firm which he represented. The evidence shows without conflict that this agent had no authority to make sales. He had power to take orders, which were submitted to the defendants for their rejection or approval, and, if approved, the goods ordered were shipped to the proposed purchaser. Plaintiffs gave this agent an order for some goods, which was submitted to the defendants, and by them approved, and the liquors were delivered to the railroad company for shipment to plaintiffs at Ottumwa, plaintiffs paying the freight thereon. An arrangement was made between the plaintiffs and defendants' agent by which plaintiffs might thereafter order such liquors as they desired by mail or by telegram, and in accordance with this arrangement they ordered large quantities of liquor, which they paid for through the Ottumwa banks in response to drafts made upon them for the purchase price. All liquors so paid for, except three bills, were ordered by wire or mail. It is claimed by the plaintiffs that all these various sales of liquor, amounting in number to about eighty, and in value to more than $2,000, were unlawful and that they are entitled to recover all payments made thereon, under Code, section 1550, which provides that all payments made for intoxicating liquor sold in violation of our liquor law shall be held to have been received in violation of law, and against equity and good conscience, and to have been received upon a valid promise of the receiver to pay to the person furnishing such consideration the sum thereof.

The first question which arises is, Were the sales made in this state? From what we have already stated it would appear that the sales were each and all made in Nebraska. But plaintiffs contend that, while the defendants' agent may have had no authority to do more than take their orders for the goods, yet there is testimony tending to show that the liquors were all shipped subject to their approval, and that the title to the goods did not pass until the liquors were received and tested by them. The testimony on this point is as follows: Witness George W. Silvers said, in substance, that Gilmore, the agent, said: "If the goods isn't satisfactory after you receive them, you can send them back to Omaha." And Silvers told him (Gilmore) if the goods were not as he said they should come back. "The goods came, and we inspected them,—gauged them. We had a government gauge there,—a thermometer we called a 'tester.' We tested the goods before we paid the freight. Gilmore said, 'If you receive the order all in good shape, and the goods are satisfactory, and you need any more, and I am not around, why, send your orders in to the house, and they will be filled.'" This witness further testified that when the goods came to the depot at Omaha they were taken by a drayman from the freight house, and delivered at plaintiffs' place of business, the drayman paying the freight in the first instance, and afterwards collecting it from the plaintiffs. Witness further testified that one bill of goods which plaintiffs ordered shipped to Des Moines, to a customer of theirs at that place, was returned, and credit asked of defendants therefor, and that defendants gave them a small discount on one of their bills. He further said: "If they were not satisfactory, they were to be returned. That was the contract. We never returned any from Ottumwa." Witness Wind testified that Gilmore said: "If his goods were not as represented we had the privilege of returning them. We told him we wanted to examine the goods after they came, and see if they suited us. He said we had that privilege." "We had a gauge or whiskey tester that we used. We took out the bung, and took a little out, and used the tester. We told Mr. Gilmore our method of examining it. He said it was satisfactory." Witness Silvers also testified that within three or four days after giving the order the plaintiffs received a bill for the goods, and entries were then made on the plaintiffs' ledger of the amount of the bill. It is an elementary proposition of law, needing no citation of authority in its support, that title passes in the sale of personal property when from all circumstances surrounding the transaction it is evident that the parties to the sale intended it to pass. It is wholly a question of intention to be arrived at from the contract and the acts and conduct of the parties thereto. In the absence of all stipulations and conditions in the contract, the title will be presumed to pass, when the parties live at different places, when the goods are delivered by the seller to a transportation company for carriage to the buyer, subject to the seller's lien or right of stoppage in transitu. This is certainly the rule where the buyer is to pay the freight. It is also a general rule that the buyer has a right to inspect unascertained goods to determine whether they are such as are bargained for or not. Newmark, Sales, § 252; Benjamin, Sales (Bennett's ed.) pp. 669-690; Lirshhorn v. Stewart, 49 Iowa, 418. This right of inspection, however, does not of itself postpone the passing of the title. It simply authorizes a rescission of the sale in the event the goods are not as contracted for. So that the reservation of the right to inspect the goods by the plaintiffs in this case does not of itself indicate that title was not to pass until the goods were tested, for it gives to plaintiffs no greater rights than they would have had under the law without such reservation.

It is claimed that by the terms of the contract the title was not to pass until the plaintiffs were satisfied, after testing the liquors, that they were the kind ordered. The law has made a somewhat refined, yet no less obvious, distinction between an option to purchase if satisfactory and an option to return if not satisfactory. In the one case title will not pass until the option is determined, and in the other case the property passes at once, subject to the right to rescind and return. The former may be said to be a conditional sale, and the latter has been denominated a "sale or return." Hunt v. Wyman, 100 Mass. 198; Foley v. Felrath, 98 Ala. 176; Newmark, Sales, § 810; Bunwell v. Bicknell, 17 Me. 344, 35 Am. Dec. 262; Benjamin Sales (Bennett's ed.) p. 569, and cases cited. It is also well settled that the rule that title does not pass so long as anything remains to be done to the goods to ascertain their value, quality, or quantity, is only applicable to cases of constructive delivery. Bogy v. Rhodes, 4 G. Greene, 183. Under this rule the right reserved to plaintiffs to inspect and test the goods after they came into their actual possession would not operate to postpone the transfer of title, but merely gave them the right to rescind the contract and return the goods. See also in this connection, Foley v. Feltz, supra, and cases therein cited; 2 Kent, Com. 496. We are satisfied from the fact that the drayman, who must be considered as plaintiffs' agent, paid the freight on these liquors, took them from the carrier, and delivered them to plaintiffs, and from the further fact that the plaintiffs credited defendants with the liquors as soon as they received the bills for them, which was in advance of the delivery of the goods, with the understanding that they were to have credit for such as might be returned, that both parties intended title to pass when the goods were delivered to the railroad company at Omaha, Neb., for transportation to Ottumwa; and that the sale was not one on trial or on approval, or if satisfactory to plaintiffs, but rather a completed sale, with an option in plaintiffs to return them if they did not meet the test plaintiffs proposed to give them. Our conclusions find support in the following cases: Engs v. Priest, 65 Iowa, 232; Whitlock v. Workman, 15 Iowa, 351; Tegler v. Shipman, 88 Iowa, 194, 11 Am. Rep. 118, and are not in conflict with Gipps Brewing Co. v. De France (Iowa) 58 N. W. Rep. 1087, and Tolman v. Johnson, 48 Iowa, 127. The following cases from other states are directly in point: Schlesinger v. Stratton, 9 R. I. 578; Mack v. Lee, 18 R. I. 298; Gill v. Kaufman, 16 Kan. 571; McCarty v. Gordon, Id. 85; Snider v. Koehler, 17 Kan. 432; Dolan v. Green, 110 Mass. 822; Abberger v. Marrin, 102 Mass. 70; Boothby v. Plaisted, 51 N. H. 436, 13 Am. Rep. 140.

If the sales were made in Omaha, then they were not unlawful in such sense as that recovery can be had for money paid thereon, although there is evidence in the record that defendants' agent knew plaintiffs had no permit to sell liquors in this state,—which they were at that time required to have to make lawful sales. It is no doubt true that if a nonresident makes sales of liquors in another state to a resident of this state, for the purpose and intent of enabling the purchaser to violate the liquor laws of this state, or participates or assists in a design on the part of the purchaser to dispose of them unlawfully in this state, his complicity in the illegal scheme will prevent him from recovering the price in an action against the purchaser. Davis v. Bronson, 6 Iowa, 410; Whitlock v. Workman, 15 Iowa, 351; Second Nat. Bank of Louisville v. Curren, 36 Iowa, 555. And it is also true that, while mere knowledge on the part of the vendor that the purchaser intends to violate the law may not vitiate the sale, yet it is a fact from which the jury might infer an intent to violate such law.

27 L. R. A.

Tegler v. Shipman, supra. Such unlawful participation in the illegal design of the purchaser will defeat an action by the seller to recover the purchase price of the liquors sold on the grounds of public policy. But will it enable the purchaser to recover the amount of payments made on the contract under section 1550 of the Code? We think not. The sale in such case is not unlawful under this statute, for as we have already seen, the non-resident has a perfect right to make the sale in his state, and recover the purchase price. His act is unlawful because the policy of the law forbids his participation or assistance in the violation of our laws by the purchaser of the liquors, and on the grounds of public policy he cannot recover. The statute referred to gives the purchaser the remedy for recovering back his payments when the sale is of intoxicating liquors in violation of the liquor laws of this state. It is clear, then, that if the matter had been submitted to the jury, and it had found that defendants, in making the sale in Omaha, intended thereby to enable plaintiffs to violate the law of this state, there could be no recovery under section 1550 of the Code. It must be remembered in this connection that all purchases and payments thereon for which recovery is sought in this action were made prior to the enactment of what is known as the "Wilson Bill," and it should further be borne in mind that under the decisions of the United States Supreme Court in Brown v. Maryland, 35 U. S. 12 Wheat. 419, 6 L. ed. 678; Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 125 U. S. 465, 81 L. ed. 700, 1 Intern. Com. Rep. 828; and Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 8 Intern. Com. Rep. 36, sales like those in question, if made in Omaha to a resident in this state, were perfectly lawful in and of themselves. See also Richards v. Woodward, 113 Mass. 285. The statutes of this state regulating and licensing the traffic in liquors therein were void, and of no effect, so far as they interfered with commerce between the states. Lyng v. Michigan, 135 U. S. 161, 34 L. ed. 150, 8 Intern. Com. Rep. 148. So that defendants had the right to sell their liquors for importation into this state without reference to our police regulations. The sales in and of themselves were not unlawful.

Let it be conceded, however, for the purposes of this case, that the sales of the liquor took place at Ottumwa, and that payments were made for it there. What, then, is the state of the case? Defendants insist that if this be true, then, as the sales were made in the original package in which the liquors were imported, section 1550 has no application to them, because it is a regulation of commerce between the states, and is unconstitutional under the cases from the Supreme Court of the United States before quoted. We are well satisfied that defendants' contention is correct. Indeed, it is practically conceded by the plaintiffs' counsel. But they insist that as soon as the barrels were opened for the purpose of testing the property became incorporated into the general mass of property in the state, and subject to the police regulations adopted to preserve the health and morals of the community. That section 1550 was adopted to restrain the traffic in intoxicants, and to aid in the general enforcement of the general liquor laws of the state, in virtue of the police power lodged in the state, cannot be doubted. And, if this be true, it is a direct restraint and interference upon trade and traffic in liquors, and, under the decisions before quoted, it is, or was prior to the enactment of the Wilson bill, unconstitutional so far as it relates to commerce between the states or the inhabitants thereof. This doctrine finds support in the cases of State v. Coonan, 82 Iowa, 400; and State v. Corrick, 82 Iowa, 451. What is said to the contrary in the case of Connolly v. Scarr, 72 Iowa, 223, which was decided prior to the case of Leisy v. Hardin, must be considered as overruled. It is our duty to follow the decision of the highest tribunal in this country—the final arbiter on these grave constitutional questions—without reference to the fact that there is a strong dissent to the doctrines announced by that court, which many of us think announces the better rule. The question, however, is of little importance at this time, because of the enactment of the Wilson bill, which fortunately gave to the states the right to exercise the policy powers vested in them, without reference to the interference the exercise of those powers might have upon interstate commerce.

The question yet remains, Did the drawing of the bung in the barrels in which the liquors were shipped into the state have the effect claimed for it by the appellants? We think not. The barrel was opened in order that a small quantity might be taken from it and tested,—not used,—in order to determine whether the liquors would be returned or not. We do not think that the inspecting or testing of an imported article to determine whether it shall be returned has the effect to make it a part of the general mass of property in the state. Plaintiffs, according to their theory, tested it to see if they would accept it, and make it their property. And if the mere act of testing made it theirs, there was no necessity for the test, because it became theirs by the act itself. We do not think they want such a rule applied in this case. In Leisy v. Hardin, supra, it is said: "Under our decision in Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., supra, they had the right to import this beer into the state, and in the view we have expressed they had the right to sell it, by which act alone it would be commingled with the general mass of property within the state. Up to that point of time, we hold that, in the absence of congressional permission to do so, the state had no power to interfere by seizure." This court is committed to the doctrine that the size or form of the package has very little to do with the question we are now considering. The point has been made to turn rather upon whether the liquors themselves were imported or not than upon the form or inviolability of the package. Collins v. Hills, 77 Iowa, 181, 8 L. R. A. 110; State v. Coonan, supra.

We are well satisfied with the conclusions reached by the lower court, and the judgment is affirmed.

97 L. R. A.

W. L. CULBERTSON, Appt.,

v.

John NELSON.

(.....Iowa.....)

1. The words "with exchange" in a draft destroys its negotiability.
2. Statutes providing that negotiable notes should be for "any sum of money," or for "a sum of money in property or labor," do not change the common-law rule as to the certainty of amount.

(January 15, 1896.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court of Council Bluffs, in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover upon an accepted bill of exchange to which the defense was want of consideration, fraud in the inception of the bill, and alteration after delivered. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. McCrary & Craig and Flickinger Bros., for appellant:

When the evidence indubitably shows a party to be the bona fide holder of a negotiable instrument purchased for value before maturity without notice of outstanding equities and in regular course of business, fraud or deceit in its inception or any infirmity not recognized by statute is incompetent to effect any alteration in his position or to impair any of his rights.

NOTE.—Provision for exchange as affecting negotiability.

The cases are not far from evenly divided on the question as to whether the fluctuation to which exchange is subject is such a contingency or uncertainty as the rule that a negotiable instrument must be for a sum certain was intended to guard against.

Cases holding that negotiability is not impaired.

In one line of cases it is held that an instrument for the payment of a specific sum of money is not prevented from being a promissory note negotiable under the law-merchant by a provision making it payable with exchange on a place other than the place of payment. Hastings v. Thompson, 21 L. R. A. 173, 54 Minn. 184; Smith v. Kendall, 9 Mich. 243, 80 Am. Dec. 68; Johnson v. Frisbie, 15 Mich. 238.

So in Johnson v. Frisbie, supra, it was said that Smith v. Kendall, supra, was based upon the assumption that such notes are negotiable wherever they may have been made payable.

And in Bradley v. Lill, 4 Bias. 473, it was held that a note payable in exchange is not thereby prevented from being a promissory note though the rate of exchange is not specified, refusing to follow Lowe v. Bliss, 24 Ill. 163, 76 Am. Dec. 742, set forth, infra, under heading, Cases holding that negotiability is destroyed.

And in Whittle v. Fond du Lac Nat. Bank (Tex.), June 20, 1894, it was held that a draft is not rendered non-negotiable by its calling for exchange where the amount to be paid as exchange is susceptible of ascertainment.

So in Orr v. Hopkins, 3 N. M. 45, the words "with exchange" in a promissory note were held to be mere surplusage not affecting its negotiability.

And the same rule was held in Clauser v. Stone, 29 Ill. 114, 61 Am. Dec. 299, distinguishing Lowe v. Bliss, 24 Ill. 163, 76 Am. Dec. 742, hereinafter set out on the ground that in that case the exchange was 2 Rice, Ev. p. 1123; Sully v. Goldsmith, 83 Iowa, 397; Lay v. Wissman, 86 Iowa, 806; Sully v. Goldsmith, 49 Iowa, 690.

A purchaser for value of a bill or note before maturity is not affected by what has occurred between other parties unless he had knowledge thereof at the time of his purchase.

Brown v. Spofford, 95 U. S. 476, 24 L. ed. 508.

To hold that the words "with exchange" destroy the negotiability of the paper seems absurd, when this court has held that the words with "collection and attorney's fees" do not destroy the negotiable character of the instrument.

Sperry v. Horr, 83 Iowa, 184; Jewett v. Lyons, 3 G. Greene, 577; Knipper v. Chase, 7 Iowa, 147; Green v. Austin, 7 Iowa, 522; Johnson v. Friebis, 15 Mich. 286; Smith v. Kendall, 9 Mich. 241, 80 Am. Dec. 83; Leggett v. Jones, 10 Wis. 35; Grutacap v. Woulluis, 2 McLean, 581.

The weight of authority is in favor of the negotiability of drafts and notes containing the agreement to pay exchange.

Tiedeman, Com. Paper, § 23 A, p. 66; Dan, Neg. Inst. § 54, p. 63; Randolph, Com. Paper, § 200; Smith v. Kendall, and Johnson v. Friebis, supra; Bullock v. Taylor, 39 Mich. 187, 83 Am. Rep. 356; Leggett v. Jones, 10 Wis. 34; Pollard v. Herries, 3 Bos. & P. 335; Grutacap v. Woulluis, 2 McLean, 581; Price v. Teal, 4 McLean, 201; First Nat. Bank of Canton v. Dubuque S. W. R. Co. 53 Iowa, 378, 85 Am. Rep. 280; Sperry v. Horr, 83 Iowa, 184; Bradley v. Lill, 4 Biss. 473.

Messrs. Wherry & Walker, and Wright & Baldwin, for appellee:

Did the defendant intend to execute negotiable paper, or did he know that he was executing negotiable paper when he signed the paper sued on? If not, then the plaintiff is not entitled to protection even though he is a bona fide holder.

Fayette County Sav. Bank v. Steffes, 54 Iowa, 214; Gibbs v. Linabury, 22 Mich. 479, 7 Am. Rep. 675; Walker v. Egbert, 29 Wis. 194, 9 Am. Rep. 548; Briggs v. Ewart, 51 Mo. 245, 11 Am. Rep. 445; Grieths v. Kellogg, 89 Wis. 290, 20 Am. Rep. 48.

Is the instrument sued on a negotiable instrument? If not plaintiff cannot recover, and it will make no difference whether he is an innocent holder or not.

Absolute certainty is one of the essential requisites of negotiable paper. It must be certain as to a payee, the payor, the time of payment and the amount paid.

1 Parsons, Notes & Bills, pp. 80, 87 88; Sperry v. Horr, 83 Iowa, 184; Smith v. Maryland, 59 Iowa, 649; Bank of Carroll v. Taylor, 67 Iowa, 572; Story v. Lamb, 52 Mich. 525; Morgan v. Edwards, 53 Wis. 599, 40 Am. Rep. 781; Lowe v. Bliss, 24 Ill. 168, 76 Am. Dec. 742; Maryland Fertilizing & Mfg. Co. v. Newman, 60 Md. 548, 45 Am. Rep. 750; Woods v. North, 84 Pa. 407, 24 Am. Rep. 201; Windor Sav. Bank v. McMahon, 3 L. R. A. 192, 88 Fed. Rep. 283; Hughitt v.

on a distant place while the note in suit was simply "with exchange."

So in Hill v. Todd, 29 Ill. 101, and Christian County Bank v. Goode, 44 Mo. App. 129, a provision in a note payable at the place where it was drawn for the payment of current exchange was held not to deprive it of negotiability as in such case there could be no exchange and the provision should be rejected as surplusage.

And in Bullock v. Taylor, 39 Mich. 187, 83 Am. Rep. 356, a provision in a note for the payment of exchange or express charges was said to be nugatory as the expense of the transmission of the money would fall upon the promisor in any event, but the case was decided upon other grounds.

So in Leggett v. Jones, 10 Wis. 35, agreements in the form of a promissory note made in one place and payable in another providing for the payment of exchange on the place where they were made was said to have been everywhere treated as commercial paper both by the business world and by the courts, but all that was decided was that the agreement in question was a contract for the payment of money which might be declared on as such.

And in Morgan v. Edwards, 53 Wis. 599, 40 Am. Rep. 781, in which the stipulation in question was to pay expenses of collection, while it was said that Leggett v. Jones, supra, could not be justly regarded as authority for the proposition that an instrument like the one then in question is a promissory note the court upheld the proposition in argument on the ground that a note payable in one place with exchange on another requires the same amount to pay it as it would if payable in the latter place, and is therefore certain in amount.

There are also several cases in which the instrument in suit containing a provision for payment of exchange was treated as a promissory note, but 37 L. R. A.

the question as to its effect upon negotiability was not raised.

In Pollard v. Herries, 3 Bos. & P. 335, a recovery was allowed on an instrument payable in Paris with course of exchange between London and Paris at the rate existing at the time of presentment.

And in Price v. Teal, 4 McLean, 201, it was held that the rate of exchange at the time of the maturity of the note should be taken and not that at time of the trial.

And in Balch v. Colman, 2 McLean, 85, the court laid down the rule as to the amount of recovery for exchange as the current rate at which drafts on the place on which exchange was contracted for sold at the place where the instrument was payable.

And in Grutacap v. Woulluis, 2 McLean, 581, it was merely held that the difference of exchange may be recovered or a note given in New York payable at Detroit with current exchange on New York, without stating the facts.

Cases holding that negotiability is destroyed.

On the other hand, quite a line of cases agree with the principal case holding that an instrument in which the maker promises to pay a designated sum with exchange is not negotiable, as exchange is constantly fluctuating and the amount to be paid at maturity is thereby rendered uncertain. Hughitt v. Johnson, 28 Fed. Rep. 865; Russell v. Russell, 1 McArth. 233; Fitzharris v. Leggett, 10 Mo. App. 529; Philadelphia Bank v. Newkirk, 2 Miles (Pa.) 442; Read v. McNulty, 12 Rich. L. 445, 78 Am. Dec. 467; Carroll County Sav. Bank v. Strother, 28 S. C. 504; Palmer v. Fahnestock, 9 U. C. C. P. 172; Fahnestock v. Palmer, 20 U. C. C. B. 307; Saxton v. Stevenson, 23 U. C. C. P. 503; Nash v. Gibbon, 4 Allen (N. B.) 479; Caset v. Kirk, Id. 542.

Johnson, 28 Fed. Rep. 865; Fitzharris v. Leggatt, 10 Mo. App. 528; Carroll County Sav. Bank v. Strother, 28 S. C. 504; Philadelphia Bank v. Newkirk, 2 Miles (Pa.) 442; Palmer v. Fahnestock, 9 U. C. O. P. 172; Saxton v. Stevenson, 23 U. C. C. P. 503; First Nat. Bank of New Windsor v. Bynum, 84 N. C. 24, 37 Am. Rep. 604; Cayuga County Nat. Bank of Auburn v. Purdy, 56 Mich. 6.

When we begin to interpolate one element of uncertainty into commercial paper we may do so with another and another and on ad infinitum until we find ourselves involved in an endless sea of uncertainty. Nearly every state in the Union as well as the federal courts have held that contracts of this kind are not negotiable.

Carroll County Sav. Bank v. Strother, Lowe v. Bliss, Hughitt v. Johnson, Windsor Sav. Bank v. McMahon, Fitzharris v. Leggatt, Palmer v. Fahnestock, Saxton v. Stevenson, First Nat. Bank of New Windsor v. Bynum, and Cayuga County Nat. Bank of Auburn v. Purdy, supra; Huss v. Hamblin, 29 Iowa, 508, 4 Am. Rep. 244; Sperry v. Horr, supra; Woodbury v. Roberts, 59 Iowa, 848, 44 Am. Rep. 685; Smith v. Marland, 59 Iowa, 645; Bank of Carroll v. Taylor, 67 Iowa, 574.

Thus in Lowe v. Bliss, 24 Ill. 168, 76 Am. Dec. 742, an instrument for the payment of a designated sum of money with current rate of exchange at a place other than the place of payment was held not to be a promissory note to which the law imparts a consideration on the ground that it is not a promise to pay a specific sum ascertainable by computation independent of extrinsic evidence.

Lowe v. Bliss, 24 Ill. 168, 76 Am. Dec. 742, however, was overruled by Bilderback v. Burlingame, 27 Ill. 383, on the ground that the consideration was otherwise shown, but the question of negotiability was left untouched.

So in Flagg v. Barnes County School Dist. No. 70 (N. Dak.) 25 L. R. A. 363, it was held, Wajlin, J., dissenting, that bonds and interest coupons providing for the payment of exchange on a point other than the place of payment in addition to principal and interest are not negotiable instruments and are subject to the defense of want of consideration good as between the original parties though in the hands of an innocent purchaser for value before maturity, for the reason that resort would have to be had to evidence outside of the papers themselves to determine the amount due.

And in Windsor Sav. Bank v. McMahon, 3 L. R. A. 192, 38 Fed. Rep. 238, it was held that a clause in a promissory note binding the maker to pay exchange between two places renders the amount payable uncertain and defeats its negotiability where there is no fixed rate of exchange established by law or by the terms of the note.

And in Grant v. Young, 23 U. C. Q. B. 387, an instrument for the payment of a specified sum of money with current exchange was said not to be a promissory note, but the case was decided upon other grounds.

So in Caset v. Kirk, 4 Allen (N. B.) 543, it was held that an indorsee could not recover as such on an instrument in the form of a bill of exchange payable a specified period after date with current rate of exchange on New York, as such exchange must be computed at the time of making the bill and the exact amount inserted in it.

And in Nash v. Gibbon, 4 Allen (N. B.) 479, a complaint on an instrument in writing in the form of a promissory note payable to the maker's own order with current rate of exchange on Boston was held 37 L. R. A.

Deemer, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is another case where the unsuspecting has been imposed upon by the patent-right swindler, and, in its facts, is somewhat similar to the case of First Nat. Bank of Grand Haven v. Zeims (Iowa) 61 N. W. Rep. 483, (decided at October term). In this case the patent was on a water heater or feed cooker, and in the Zeims case it was on a fence. The lower court made a finding of facts from which he drew certain conclusions of law, which were as follows: "(1) That the draft in controversy was obtained of the defendant through fraud and misrepresentation of the payee therein, Thos. E. Hall, and is wholly without consideration. (2) That the draft contained the words 'with exchange,' and, by reason thereof, is not a negotiable instrument. (3) That, the draft not being negotiable, the fraud and failure of consideration can be pleaded against it in the hands of this plaintiff. (4) The plaintiff, holding the draft, is subject to the same equities and defense that the original payee would hold it. The court is not called upon to decide whether or not plaintiff stands in a different position than the original payee in the draft, and whether defective in not averring what the rate of exchange was and what Boston was intended, but that the defect might be cured by amendment if the plaintiff thought he could recover on such a contract.

In Russell v. Russell, 1 McArthur, 283, the court said that the transaction might not have been objectionable if the note had been payable at the place on which the exchange was provided for, distinguishing Grutacap v. Woulluisse, 2 McLean, 581, on the ground that in that case the note was made and the transaction had in New York, but was made payable at Detroit with exchange on New York so that it merely amounted to a note payable where it was made.

But in Hughitt v. Johnson, 28 Fed. Rep. 865, it was said that if the note was made at the place of payment that would not affect the question as the maker would have to pay exchange if he happened to be in another place when it fell due.

And in Caset v. Kirk, 4 Allen (N. B.) 543, supra, that a bill of exchange cannot be construed by rejecting a provision for current rate of exchange as surplusage. But see cases treating provision as surplusage under heading: Cases holding that negotiability is not impaired.

In Cayuga County Nat. Bank of Auburn v. Purdy, 56 Mich. 6, a note payable with exchange and with an increase of interest if not paid when due the maker therein agreeing to pay all expenses, including attorney's fee incurred in collecting waiving exemption and all relief from valuation and appraisement laws, was held not to be negotiable.

And in Story v. Lamb, 62 Mich. 525, a promise to pay a specified sum with interest on or before a specified time with current rate of exchange and express charges reciting that it was given for the purchase of a specified instrument which was not to be removed from the township and the title to which was to remain in the payee until payment of the note giving him the option in case of default to take possession or enforce the note by process of law, and providing that he should not be liable to refund moneys previously paid if he seized it, was held not to be a promissory note either negotiable or non-negotiable, and could not be enforced against an indorser as it lacks the necessary or not he could recover if the draft had been a negotiable instrument. Wherefore, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the court that the plaintiff's petition be dismissed, and the defendant have judgment against the plaintiff, W. L. Culbertson, for the costs in this action, taxed at $41.75, and that execution issue therefor."

The following is a copy of the draft upon which the action is predicated:

Dec. 9, 1893.	Accepted and payable at Council Bluffs, Iowa.	Thomas E. Hall, Business Manager.	No. 10,002.
		Hall & Company.	Kansas City, Mo.
		Willits, Ia., Dec. 9, 1893.
		October first, after date, pay to the order of Thomas E. Hall nine hundred dollars ($900), with exchange, and eight per cent. interest from date, if not paid when due. Value received, and charge to the account of
		To John Nelson,	Hall & Co.,
		Willits, Iowa.	By Thos. E. Hall.

There was ample testimony to sustain the findings of the court below that the draft was obtained through fraud and misrepresentation, and was and is wholly without consideration. Indeed, counsel do not challenge these findings. The error of the court, if any, is in his conclusions of law. The appellant contends that the draft is a negotiable instrument, and is not subject to the defenses lodged against it in the hands of a bona fide holder; while the appellee insists that it is not negotiable, and therefore subject to these defenses, because of uncertainty in the amount to be paid, for that it includes "exchange." It is to be regretted that this question, which is of so much moment to the business interests of the country, is in so unsettled a condition. If there is any branch of the law which should be reduced to a certainty, it is that relating to commercial paper. After long usage, the custom of traders finally ripened into the law merchant, and this law gave to notes and bills of exchange their present character, in which they, in a sense, become part of the circulating medium of the whole country; and it is exceedingly important that state lines do not mar the symmetry of the rules governing such paper. However, we find the question presented has been variously decided by the different courts of the country; and, if there is anything at present uncertain it is the negotiability of such an instrument. The following cases affirm the negotiability of such paper: Smith v. Kendall, 9 Mich. 242, 80 Am. Dec. 83; Johnson v. Frisbie, 15 Mich. 286; Leggett v. Jones, 10 Wis. 85; Morgan v. Edwards, 58 Wis. 590, 40 Am. Rep. 781; Bradley v. Lill, 4 Biss. 478, Fed. Cas. No.

elements of certainty in time and amount of payment.

Nothing is said in either of the cases last above set out, however, to indicate that they turned on the stipulation for exchange.

But in Flagg v. Barnes County School Dist. No. 70 (N. Dak.) 25 L. R. A. 863, the court in commenting on Cayuga County Nat. Bank of Auburn v. Purdy, supra, said that as provisions similar to all those in the note in suit except that for exchange had been held by many authorities not to destroy negotiability the case might have turned upon the question whether the provision for exchange destroyed it. But see Michigan cases under heading: Cases holding that negotiability is not impaired.

Reasons for the different rules.

The reason given for the rule that a provision for the payment of exchange in an instrument does not affect its negotiability is placed upon the ground that where proof of exchange is in and the time fixed the amount is a mere matter of computation, in Bradley v. Lill, 4 Biss. 478.

And that the rate of exchange between two places at a particular date is a matter of common commercial knowledge easily ascertainable by any one, and that such paper is usually looked upon as negotiable in commercial circles, and that the law-merchant which is founded upon commercial usages and customs should be construed with reference thereto and so far as possible in harmony with common understanding in such circles, in Hastings v. Thompson, 21 L. R. A. 178, 54 Minn. 184.

And that such instruments are considered as promissory notes by commercial men, and that exchange is an incident to bills for the transmission of money from one place to another and its nature and effect are well understood in the commercial world, and that the law-merchant should be liberally construed so as to affect the object had in view, in Smith v. Kendall, 9 Mich. 242, 80 Am. Dec. 83.

On the other hand, the rule that negotiability is destroyed by such a provision is placed upon the ground that resort would have to be had to evidence outside of the papers themselves to determine the amount due. Flagg v. Barnes County School Dist. No. 70 (N. Dak.) 25 L. R. A. 863; Lowe v. Bliss, 24 Ill. 168, 76 Am. Dec. 748; Caset v. Kirk, 4 Allen (N. B.) 542.

In Flagg v. Barnes County School Dist. No. 70, supra, which is one of the most important cases on that side of the controversy, it is said that the test is whether the amount due is certain from the face of the paper at the time and place of payment and that exchange is contracted for to enable the creditor to receive the full amount of principal and interest without diminution because of being compelled to pay it himself, and this can be provided for by requiring the obligation to be made payable at the place he requires it to be remitted.

This case criticizes the reasoning in Bradley v. Lill, 4 Biss. 478, as clearly unsound and that of Hastings v. Thompson, 21 L. R. A. 178, 54 Minn. 184, as taking a position which is untenable though not devoid of strength, and in commenting on Johnson v. Frisbie, 15 Mich. 286, says that the judges did not intend to express their views on the question as an original one, but merely states that the law was settled by a majority of the court in the prior case of Smith v. Kendall, 9 Mich. 242, 80 Am. Dec. 83.

W. H. R

1,788; Price v. Teal, 4 McLean, 201, Fed. Cas. No. 11,417; Whittle v. Fond du Lac Nat. Bank (Tex.) 26 S. W. Rep. 1106; Hastings v. Thompson, 54 Minn. 184, 21 L. R. A. 178; Grutacap v. Woulluis, 2 McLean, 581, Fed. Cas. No. 5,854. On the other side of this question are the following cases: Lowe v. Bliss, 24 Ill. 168, 76 Am. Dec. 742; Read v. McNulty, 13 Rich. L. 445, 78 Am. Dec. 467; Carroll County Sav. Bank v. Strother, 28 S. C. 504; Palmer v. Fahnstock, 9 U. C. C. P. 172; Saxton v. Stevenson, 28 U. C. C. P. 503; Philadelphia Bank v. Newkirk, 2 Miles (Pa.) 442; First Nat. Bank of New Windsor v. Bynum, 84 N. C. 24, 87 Am. Rep. 604; Russell v. Russell, 1 MacArth. 263; Fitzharris v. Leggett, 10 Mo. App. 529; Hughitt v. Johnson, 28 Fed. Rep. 865; Windsor Sav. Bank v. McMahon, 38 Fed. Rep. 283, 3 L. R. A. 192; Flagg v. Barnes County School Dist. No. 70 (N. Dak.) 25 L. R. A. 863; Christian County Bank v. Goode, 44 Mo. App. 129; Caset v. Kirk, 4 Allen (N. B.) 543; Nash v. Gibbon, Id. 479.

Turning to the text-writers, we find that Randolph, in his work on Commercial Paper, at section 200; Daniel, in his treatise on Negotiable Instruments, at section 54; and Tiedeman on Commercial Paper, at section 280,—affirm the negotiability of such papers; while Benjamin's Chalmers on Bills and Notes, at page 18; Parsons on Notes and Bills, at page 88; and perhaps others,—deny it. Some of the cases cited relate more particularly to the question as to whether instruments in form of promissory notes, with such a stipulation, are promissory notes under the Statute of Anne (1705), or not, and some of them to the negotiability of such instruments. The only English case we have been able to find, having any bearing upon the case, is Pollard v. Herring, 3 Bbs. & P. 385, where an instrument "payable in Paris, or, at choice of bearer, at Union Bank in Dover, or at payee's usual place of residence in London, according to the course of exchange upon Paris," was declared on, and treated as a promissory note. Here is most deplorable uncertainty. Probably, the greater number of cases deny the negotiability of such instruments. And, if the weight of authority were to be determined by the number of cases, no doubt it would be found to be on the negative side of the question. But such is not the true method of determining the preponderance. It becomes our duty, then, to try and untangle this maze, and solve the puzzle upon principle, in the light of the better-reasoned cases.

"A bill of exchange is an open letter by one person to a second, directing him, in effect, to pay absolutely, and at all events, a certain sum of money, therein named, to a third person, or to any other to whom that third person may order it to be paid; or it may be payable to bearer, and to the drawer himself." Dan. Neg. Inst. § 27. And it is among the fundamentals that such an instrument must be certain as an engagement to pay, as to fact of payment, amount to be paid, and must be for payment of money only. One of the most essential elements in it is that it must be certain as to the amount to be paid. And this certainty must appear upon the face of the paper, and not from anything dehors the instrument. The maxim, "Id certum est quod certum reddi potest," does not apply, except the certainty required may be ascertained from the face of the paper. With these rules as our own guide, we think the agreement to pay a certain sum at a particular place, when the acceptor lives at a different one, "with exchange," introduces an uncertainty as to the amount to be paid, which destroys the character and negotiability of the instrument as a bill of exchange. If it were true that there was at all times a certain definite and unchangeable rate of exchange, then there would probably be no uncertainty in the instrument. But it is a fact well known to the business world that there is no such fixed and unchangeable rate. Indeed, the rate charged for exchange is oftentimes a financial barometer, indicative of the state of the money market. He who was an observer of the financial world during the year 1893 could not have failed to observe the varying rates charged for exchange during the panic which was upon us at that time. Moreover, it is well known that rates of exchange vary in the different localities, and oftentimes in the same locality. Here, then, an element of uncertainty is introduced into this bill of exchange, and the amount to be paid by the acceptor will never be known until he applies for his draft at such point as he may happen to be when the instrument is due. Again, neither the state of the money market, the condition of the bank and its account with its correspondent, nor the rate of exchange in the particular locality, can be determined until the time for payment arrives. In all the cases affirming the negotiability of instruments of this kind, these facts are practically conceded, and the only answer offered is, first, that a custom has lately grown up among banks to treat such instruments as negotiable, and that such custom should be regarded and recognized. It is sufficient to say, in reply, that we have never understood that the customary understanding of the law, no matter how general, changed the law itself. There would be some force in the position, if it appeared that there was a uniform custom in the business to charge a fixed and certain rate of exchange between all places, depending simply upon the amount called for by the bill. But such is not the case. It has also been said, second, that the amount of exchange, when any is charged, is so inconsiderable that such a provision ought not to destroy the character of the instrument. We cannot lend our approval to this doctrine. It is exceedingly unsafe to permit innovations upon well-settled rules of law. To do so would lead to "evils we know not of." We had better endure the hardships incident to a strict construction of the rules applicable to commercial paper, than tolerate an innovation which may lead to untold evils. It is of the utmost importance to the business world that the fixed rules with reference to commercial paper shall be preserved in their rigor and integrity. Another argument in support of the character and negotiability of such paper is that, when the acceptor is called upon to pay exchange upon a particular place, it is no more, in effect, than a requirement that the paper be paid at the place on which exchange is to be paid. But this is clearly unsound. As said by Mr. Justice Corliss in Flagg v. Barnes County School Dist. No. 70, supra. "There is a marked difference, both to debtor and creditor, with respect to the amount to be paid and received, between cases where the paper is payable at one place, with exchange on another, and cases where the paper is payable, without exchange, at the last named place. Suppose, when the money is payable in this state, the creditor wishes to use the money here. He is doubly benefited by the provision to pay here, with New York exchange. Had the paper been payable in New York, without exchange, he might be compelled to pay exchange on some western point, to bring the money to this state. But, by having it paid here, he saves this sum, and, in addition, places in his pocket the amount of New York exchange paid him by the debtor. In times of great financial fright, like those through which we have been passing, the difference might be equal to a considerable sum. Nor is the effect the same upon the debtor. Should his money be in New York, he must pay the cost of bringing it West, and also pay the creditor the further cost of sending it back, although the creditor may not desire it remitted, whereas, had the debt been payable in New York, without exchange, he would have saved both of these items of exchange." We have, as we think, sufficiently answered all arguments, worthy of the name, made in support of the negotiability of such instruments. And, while we do not think them utterly devoid of strength, our judgment is, they are untenable.

The decisions cited in support of the negotiability of such instruments are all based upon one or the other of the arguments we have attempted to answer. Some of them, however, we do not regard as authorities for the position they are cited to sustain. In the case in 9 Mich., there was a strong dissenting opinion by Justice Campbell, which we regard as stating the better law. In addition to this, the note in that case was dated in New York, and payable in New York, "with current exchange on New York." The words quoted were superfluous and surplusage. The court correctly decided the case, but, to our minds, gave a wrong reason. See Hill v. Todd, 29 Ill. 101, and Clawser v. Stone, 29 Ill. 114, 81 Am. Dec. 299, which are directly in point on this last proposition. The case in 15 Mich. simply followed the one in 9 Mich., the opinion being written by the justice (Campbell) who dissented in the first case. In a much later case Oayuga County Nat. Bank of Auburn v. Purdy, 56 Mich. 6, that court said: "The modern tendency to interpolate into such instruments engagements and stipulations not recognized by the law-merchant, affecting certainty as to amount due, . . . should be discountenanced, and held to destroy their negotiability, and deprive them of the character of promissory notes. And they should be relegated to the domain of ordinary contracts." The remarks of the court in the Wisconsin cases were clearly obiter, and so recognized in the Morgan-Edwards Case. Neither case is an authority on the question. The case in 4 Biss. (Fed. Cas. No 1,788) is, in its arguments and illustration, so manifestly unsound that no further attention need be given it. The case from 54 Minn. 184, is the only one, to which we have access, which is supported by argument of any force. But we cannot accede to the doctrine there announced. It is said, however by appellant's counsel, that we have recognized the negotiability of such instruments in the cases of Sperry v. Horr, 32 Iowa, 184, and First Nat. Bank of Canton v. Dubuque S. W. R. Co. 52 Iowa, 378. We do not think so. In the first case, we called attention to the conflict in the authorities on the subject, and expressly refrained from deciding the question. In the last case cited, the question was neither involved nor decided.

It is further insisted that the clause is similar in its nature to a stipulation to pay an attorney's fees for collection, and that, as we have held a note with such a stipulation negotiable, a fortiori should we hold the bill in suit negotiable. The distinction between the two provisions is accurately pointed out in the case of Sperry v. Horr, supra. In that case it is said: "The agreement for the payment of attorney fees in no sense increased the amount of money which was payable when the notes fell due, and we are unable to see that it rendered that amount uncertain in the least degree. It simply imposed an additional liability in case suit should be brought, and such liability did not become absolute until an action was instituted. This agreement relates rather to the remedy upon the note, if a legal remedy be pursued to enforce its collection, than to the sum the maker is bound to pay." See also Shenandoah Nat. Bank v. Marsh (Iowa) 56 N. W. Rep. 458. The distinction between such an agreement and one to pay a certain amount, with exchange, is so marked that we need not do more than rest upon this quotation.

Lastly, it is insisted that our statutes have changed the rules of the law-merchant. The sections of the Code relied upon are as follows:

Section 2083: "Notes in writing made and signed by any person promising to pay to another person or his order or bearer, or to bearer only, any sum of money, are negotiable by indorsement or delivery in the same manner as inland bills of exchange according to the custom of merchants."

Section 2085: "Instruments by which the maker promises to pay a sum of money in property or labor, or to pay or deliver property or labor, or acknowledges property or labor, or money to be due to another, are negotiable instruments, with all the incidents of negotiability, whenever it is manifest from their terms that such was the intent of the maker; but the use of the words order or bearer, alone, will not manifest such intent."

The first section is a re-enactment of the statute of Anne, before referred to, giving to promissory notes the same character as bills of exchange under the law-merchant. It has no application to this case. Section 2085 has been in force ever since 1851, and it has uniformly been held that a bill of exchange or promissory note, to be such, and to be possessed of the attributes of negotiability under the law-merchant, must be certain as to payor, payee, amount, time, and place of payment. Smith v. Marland, 59 Iowa, 649; Gordon v. Anderson, 88 Iowa, 224, 13 L. R. A. 483; Bank of Carroll v. Taylor, 67 Iowa, 572; Woodbury v. Roberts, 59 Iowa, 848, 44 Am. Rep. 685; Hollen v. Davis, 59 Iowa, 444, 44 Am. Rep. 688; Miller v. Ponge, 56 Iowa, 96, 41 Am. Rep. 82. So it has been held that a note payable "in currency," or "in current funds," is not prima facie negotiable. Rindskopf v. Barrett, 11 Iowa, 172; Huss v. Hamblin, 29 Iowa, 501, 4 Am. Rep. 244. So we think that, even should it be held that this statute is applicable to the case, yet certainty in amount is essential to establish the character and negotiability of a bill or note. Such a holding in no way conflicts with the rule announced in the case of Council Bluffs Iron Works v. Cuppey, 41 Iowa, 104. It may further be added, in this connection, that if the words "with exchange," appearing in the instrument in suit, destroy its negotiability under the law-merchant, then there is nothing to indicate that it was the intention of the defendant to make it negotiable, except the use of the word "order;" and this, under the statute, will not, alone, manifest such intention. The use of the words "value received" is not indicative of an intention on the part of the acceptor to make the bill negotiable. Lord Denman said in the case of Hutch v. Trayer, 11 Ad. & El. 702, "The words 'value received' express only what the law must imply from the nature of the instrument, and the relations of the parties apparent upon it." See also Osgood v. Bringolf, 32 Iowa, 265; Dan. Neg. Inst. § 108; Townsend v. Derby, 8 Met. 363; Arnold v. Sprague, 84 Vt. 402; People v. McDermott, 8 Cal. 288; Hughes v. Wheeler, 8 Cow. 77; 1 Parsons, Notes & Bills, 193. See also, as directly in point, McCartney v. Smalley, 11 Iowa, 85, and Peddicoord v. Whittam, 9 Iowa, 471. "Where a bill is drawn payable to the order of a third person, the use of the words 'value received,' in the body of the bill, is ambiguous. They may mean either value received by the acceptor from the drawer, or by the drawer from the payee. But the latter is the more natural and probable construction, for, as said by Lord Ellenborough, it is more natural 'that the party who draws the bill should inform the drawee of a fact which he does not know, than one of which he must be well aware.'" Dan. Neg. Inst. § 108.

We think the lower court was right, both in its findings of fact and conclusions of law. Affirmed.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

S. M. WILLOCK

v.

PENNSYLVANIA R. CO., Appt.

(166 Pa. 184.)

A condition in a bill of lading that the shipper shall insure the goods for the carrier's benefit cannot protect the carrier against the consequences of its own negligence.

(January 21, 1895.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, No. 3, for Allegheny County, in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the value of oil shipped by plaintiff over defendant's road under a contract requiring plaintiff to insure against fire, which he neglected to do; and which was burned while in transit. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—A variation of the general rule against avoiding liability for a carrier's negligence by contract is furnished in the case of an agreement to insure for the carrier's benefit.

For limitation of the amount of liability in case of negligence, see note to Ballou v. Earle (R. L.) 14 L. R. A. 438.

For power to limit liability in the absence of negligence, see note to Little Rock & Ft. S. Ry. v. Cravens (Ark.) 18 L. R. A. 537.

27 L. R. A.

Messrs. William Scott and George B. Gordon, for appellant:

The carrier, as bailee, had an insurable interest in the property.

Richards, Ins. p. 35; Ostrander, Fire Ins. p. 155.

He may insure the property to its full value, and recover the same from the insurance company.

Richards, Ins. p. 37; Ostrander, Fire Ins. p. 155.

If he so insures, it is perfectly clear that neither the negligence of the carrier nor its employes, though the proximate cause of the fire, will be any defense to the policy.

Richards, Fire Ins. § 22, p. 29; American Ins. Co. v. Insley, 7 Pa. 223, 47 Am. Dec. 509; Orient Mut. Ins. Co. v. Adams, 123 U. S. 67, 81 L. ed. 63; Phoenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn v. Erie & W. Transp. Co. 117 U. S. 312, 29 L. ed. 878.

The carrier having the right to take out insurance which would protect both it and the owner from loss occurring by fire, and having the right to exact from the shipper (in addition to its charge for transportation), the premium for such insurance, entered into this contract with the shipper, by which he agreed, in consideration of the carrier making no extra charge for the insurance, that he would cause it to be properly, fully and sufficiently insured from loss or damage by fire, and if the loss by fire occurred from any cause which should render the carrier liable, the carrier should have the benefit of the insurance, and that he would see that it should be so inserted in the policy.

This prima facie constituted a valid contract to procure insurance.

Miner v. Taggart, 8 Binn. 204; New York Tartar Co. v. French, 154 Pa. 273; Phœnix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn v. Eris & W. Transp. Co. supra; Providence Ins. Co. v. Morse, 150 U. S. 99, 37 L. ed. 1013; California Ins. Co. v. Union Compress Co. 133 U. S. 387, 33 L. ed. 730; Missouri P. R. Co. v. International Marine Ins. Co. 84 Tex. 149; Gulf, O. & S. F. R. Co. v. Zimmerman, 81 Tex. 605; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Scruggs, 69 Miss. 418; Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Reid, 91 Ga. 877.

Those things only are contrary to public policy which are contrary to the public good.

Greenhood, Pub. Pol. p. 2.

To hold that a person may for a valid consideration agree to perform part of the duties of another, and having neglected to do so hold that other liable for a loss resulting to himself, upon the ground that the contract was contrary to the public good, is to go far beyond any precedent.

Camden & A. R. Co. v. Baldauf, 16 Pa. 67, 55 Am. Dec. 481; Farnham v. Camden & A. R. Co. 55 Pa. 58; Patterson v. Clyde, 67 Pa. 500; Grogan v. Adams Exp. Co. 114 Pa. 523, 60 Am. Rep. 860; and Buck v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 150 Pa. 171.

In determining the questions of limitations of the liability of the carrier all the circumstances must be regarded, and not any mere definition.

Lewis v. Great Western R. Co. L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 195; Roth v. Northeastern R. Co. L. R. 2 Exch. 178; Passmore v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 78 Pa. 238; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Stevenson, 5 L. R. A. 515, 128 Pa. 455; Primrose v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 154 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 838.

Mears. Young & Trent for appellee.

Williams, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Who shall be deemed a common carrier, and what are the nature and extent of his undertaking, are questions that were settled centuries ago upon common-law principles. A common carrier is bound to employ safe and sufficient means of carriage, trustworthy and competent servants, and by himself or his agent to exercise an intelligent supervision over the system of carriage which he employs. He is therefore to all intents and purposes an insurer against such perils of transportation as it is his duty to provide against; and these include all the perils of the journey, except such as arise from "the act of God or the king's enemies." Our forefathers brought this definition of the duties of a common carrier with them when they came to this continent, and its outlines remain substantially the same to this day. Some limitations upon his common-law liabilities have been sustained to protect the carrier against unjust and fraudulent claims on the part of customers, but the measure of care due from him to those whom he serves has not been abated in the slightest degree. He is still held to be an insurer against such perils as it is his duty to provide against, and among these are such as arise from the use of defective or inadequate instruments of carriage, and from the employment of incompetent, negligent, or criminal servants. Farnham v. Camden & A. R. Co. 55 Pa. 58. What are commonly spoken of as limitations of the liability of the carrier, and have been upheld by the courts of this state as such, are, when carefully considered, undertakings of the shipper implied from the nature of the contract, and enforced against him at the instance of the carrier. Thus a stipulation that the carrier shall not be liable to the shipper for the loss of certain packages in a greater sum than that named in the receipt or bill of lading, unless the actual value of the package was fully disclosed to the carrier when it was delivered to him, so that he might know the amount of risk involved and charge accordingly, has been upheld, because good faith on the part of the shipper requires such full disclosure by him. So, also, if the contents of a package are perishable, or easily broken, or explosive, so that the danger of loss is increased, and the exercise of an unusual degree of care is made necessary, good faith requires the shipper to make the facts known to the carrier; and a failure to do so ought to affect the extent, and in some cases the right, of recovery for the loss of goods so shipped. The carrier is relieved in these cases, not from the duty to exercise care and diligence in the transportation of his customer's goods, but from the consequences of the failure of the shipper to advise him fully of facts and circumstances material to the contract the suppression of which is in effect a fraud upon him. His obligations as a common carrier are not reduced. He is bound to the exercise of great care by the nature of his undertaking. He must not be negligent. It is against public policy that he should be. It is also a violation of his contract, which is to carry safely. A stipulation that is intended to protect him in the violation of his contract as a carrier, and in disregarding a settled rule of public policy, will not be sustained. The cases in which this doctrine is recognized and applied in this state are very numerous. Among them may be named the following: Beckman v. Shouse, 5 Rawle, 179, 28 Am. Dec. 653; Bingham v. Rogers, 6 Watts & S. 495, 40 Am. Dec. 581; Laing v. Colder, 8 Pa. 479, 49 Am. Dec. 583; Goldley v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 80 Pa. 242, 72 Am. Dec. 703; Powell v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 82 Pa. 414, 75 Am. Dec. 564; American Exp. Co. v. Sands, 55 Pa. 140; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Miller, 87 Pa. 395; Grogan v. Adams Exp. Co. 114 Pa. 523, 60 Am. Rep. 860; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Raiordon, 119 Pa. 577; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Stevenson, 128 Pa. 442, 5 L. R. A. 515; Phœnix Pot Works v. Pittsburgh & L. E. R. Co. 139 Pa. 284; Buck v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 150 Pa. 171.

It is a sufficient answer to an argument in favor of changing the rule in Pennsylvania, and permitting carriers to stipulate for a release from the consequences of their own negligence or fraud, that the question is not an open one. It has been settled by the cases cited, and many others, and we are bound by the rule of stare decisis. The attempt to overturn the common-law doctrine fixing the liability of carriers was made in England by act of parliament. The result is, after several statutes upon the subject, that the carrier may make a contract limiting his liability on two conditions. The first is that the contract be actually signed by the shipper; the second is that the courts shall adjudge the limitation to be "just and reasonable." This works no substantial change in the law. It makes a contract for carriage of persons or property tripartite. The carrier and the shipper are the ostensible parties, but the public, as represented by the courts of law, is the third party, and may refuse its consent to stipulations on which carrier and shipper have agreed. When such a contract comes before the courts, the question is not, What terms have the parties incorporated into their agreement? but, Are the terms so incorporated "just and reasonable," so that they ought on grounds of public policy to be enforced? In determining this question, the courts have been constrained to apply common-law principles, and hold that to be just or unjust which was so held at common law. Thus, in McManus v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co., 4 Hurlst. & N. 327, the contract provided that the live stock shipped over the defendant's railroad should be carried at the risk of the owner, and that the company should in no case be liable for any loss or injury sustained. The contract was signed by the shipper, but the court held it to be both unjust and unreasonable, and refused to enforce it. In Kirby v. Great Western R. Co., 18 L. T. N. S. 658, the contract provided that the carrier should not be liable for injury to the goods shipped, occasioned by delay, no matter what the cause of the delay might be. The courts, representing the public,—the third party to the agreement,—declined to give assent, and held the provision relieving the carrier from the consequences of his own negligence to be unjust and unreasonable. Still nearer to the question in the case before us is Peek v. North Staffordshire R. Co. 10 H. L. Cas. 473. The carrier in that case had a contract with the shipper containing a stipulation that he should not be liable for loss of the goods, unless their value was declared at the time of the delivery of the goods to him, and they were then insured to their full value by the shipper. This was held to be neither just nor reasonable, and its enforcement was refused. The courts of England have thus held, in substance, that the public have a greater interest in the transportation of persons and property than any individual shipper, and that public policy requires of a common carrier the exercise of constant care over his vehicles or means of transportation, and over his servants and employés in charge of them. They further hold that it is against the public good that he should be allowed to contract for immunity from the consequences of his own negligence or fraud, or the negligence or fraud of his employés, and that stipulations to that effect are incapable of enforcement, because unjust and unreasonable.

The Supreme Court of the United States holds to the same doctrine upon this subject as the courts of Pennsylvania. New York Cent. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 357, 31 L. ed. 627; Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 129 U. S. 397, 32 L. ed. 788. The public is interested in securing the highest measure of safety in the transportation of passengers and goods, and to this end public policy requires that common carriers be held to the highest measure of care in the conduct of their business. Greenhood, in his treatise on Public Policy (page 513), says: "It is obvious, therefore, that if a carrier stipulate not to be bound to the exercise of care and diligence, but to be at liberty to indulge in the contrary, he seeks to put off the essential duties of his employment, and to assert that he may do so seems almost a contradiction in terms." The carrier and the shipper do not stand on equal terms. The latter cannot afford to refuse that which the carrier demands as a condition to the transportation of his goods, and, in ninety-nine cases out of every hundred, if he does so refuse he will find himself discriminated against until his business is ruined, and he has nothing left to ship. The rule that stipulations, insisted on by carriers or other persons who stand in such a position towards their customers as enables them to compel compliance with their demands or destroy their customer's business, should be judged of by their fairness, and be held void whenever they are unreasonable or oppressive, is one of very general acceptance. Public policy compels its acceptance in all civilized countries. The learned counsel for the appellant cite Phœnix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn v. Erie & W. Transp. Co., 117 U. S. 312, 29 L. ed. 873, as tending to sustain their contention. But an examination of that case shows that it was begun by libel filed by the insurance company asking subrogation to the rights of the shipper against the carrier. The first question to be determined was, therefore, what could the shipper recover upon the facts of that case? He had contracted that any insurance he might obtain should inure to the benefit of the carrier. He obtained insurance on the goods shipped, suffered a loss, and was paid the insurance money. The question presented on these facts was whether the right of the shipper to recover against the carrier was not extinguished to the extent to which his loss had been paid by the insurer. If so, subrogation must necessarily be refused, and it was refused for this reason. This point was elaborated in Providence Ins. Co. v. Morse, 150 U. S. 99, 37 L. ed. 1013, in which it was said that, in case of loss, the carrier is primarily liable to the shipper, and the position of an insurer is substantially that of a surety. The insurer can recover, therefore, after payment of a loss, by subrogation to the rights of the shipper, and upon no other ground; so that whatever amounts to an extinguishment of the right of action of the shipper against the carrier must defeat the insurer's right to subrogation. The general proposition, that the surety who pays the debt of his principal succeeds only to the rights of the creditor whom he pays, is beyond all doubt; and in Phœnix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn v. Erie & W. Transp. Co., it was held to be applicable to contracts that, as we have seen, are tripartite, having the public as a third, though unnamed, party. In the case at bar the carrier inserted in its bill of lading a stipulation that the owner, shipper, and consignee severally shall cause the goods to be fully and sufficiently insured, and that in case of loss the carrier shall have the benefit of such insurance if such loss "shall occur from any cause which shall be held to render this line or any of its agents liable therefor." No insurance was effected. A loss occurred as the result of a collision of two of the carrier's trains. The shipper sues to recover the amount of his loss. The only defense set up is under the condition in the bill of lading; and the question raised is, Will the courts compel the performance of a contract between shipper and carrier requiring the shipper to protect the carrier against the consequences of its own negligence? There is no doubt about the carrier's having an insurable interest in the goods, or about his right to protect himself from loss by procuring a policy of insurance for that purpose; but the question here presented is, Can he compel the shipper to insure the goods for his benefit? If so, he can compel the shipper to release him entirely, and so stipulate for complete immunity from the consequences of the negligence and fraud of himself or of his servants and employees. This, in the language of the English courts, would be "unjust and unreasonable." In the language of our own cases, it would be "contrary to public policy." The thought is the same. Our own mode of expressing it is preferable, in this, that it suggests the reason on which the rule rests.

The judgment is affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH of Pennsylvania, Appt.,
v.

LEHIGH VALLEY R. CO.

(165 Pa. 162.)

1. The common law of one of the United States includes the long-recognized judicial practice of that state whether it was ever known in England or not.
2. The practice of rendering judgment by default on defendant's failure to appear, which apparently originated in usage, having been sanctioned by frequent statutory recognition and having been extended in its operation from time to time by judicial application, must be recognized as part of the common law of Pennsylvania.

The existence of an American common law, that is a common law which has grown up by long practice in this country or a portion of it, irrespective of any English law on the subject, is more clearly and sharply illustrated in the above case than in any other. As to the adoption of English common law in this country, see note to McKennon v. Winn (Okla.) 22 L. R. A. 501.

37 L. R. A.

3. A judgment by default against a corporation indicted for misdemeanor may be rendered on its failure to appear by virtue of the common law of Pennsylvania which has established this practice in civil cases, notwithstanding the lack of any precedents in criminal cases, since personal appearance of the defendant is no more necessary in case of misdemeanor than in a civil action.

(January 7, 1895.)

APPEAL by the Commonwealth from a judgment of the Court of Quarter Sessions for Luzerne County, refusing to enter judgment for default in a proceeding against defendant for alleged maintenance of a nuisance. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John M. Garman and C. Frank Bohan, for appellant:

A corporation may become amenable to the criminal law in the matter of the creation and maintenance of things which amount to or become public nuisances and to be proceeded against by indictment.

1 Am. Crim. L. §§ 86, 87; Delaware Division Canal Co. v. Com. 60 Pa. 371, 100 Am. Dec. 570; Northern Cent. R. Co. v. Com. 90 Pa. 305; Pittsburgh, V. & O. R. Co. v. Com. 101 Pa. 199; Com. v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 117 Pa. 643.

It is now the law to indict when the object is the imposition of a fine on the corporation estate, or the abatement of a nuisance.

1 Whart. Crim. L. 9th ed. § 91; Whart. Crim. Pl. & Pr. § 100.

For that which is analogous to a mere trespass on land, an indictment may lie against it. Ang. & A. Priv. Corp. § 896.

The old mode of proceeding against a corporation as such to compel an appearance to an indictment was by distress infinite.

1 Whart. Crim. L. 9th ed. § 92; Reg. v. Birmingham & G. R. Co. 8 Q. B. 228; Ang. & A. Priv. Corp. 2d ed. 826, 637.

Distress infinite is a process commanding the sheriff to distrain a person from time to time by taking his goods by way of pledge to enforce the performance of something due from the party distrained upon.

8 Bl. Com. 231.

Must we go back to the ancient and almost if not entirely obsolete practice of using a venire facias and enforcing obedience by a distingas, or shall the modern practice of entering judgment by default be ours?

A venire facias is a summons and judgment may be entered in default of appearance.

Boston, C. & M. Railroad v. State, 32 N. H. 215; State v. Western N. O. R. Co. 60 N. C. 585.

Messrs. Wheaton, Darling & Woodward for appellee.

Mitchell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is settled and unquestionable that corporations may be indicted at common law, and it necessarily follows that they may be brought into court by compulsion if necessary, for the law is never powerless to enforce what it commands. Statutes may be imperfect, and proceedings under them, for that reason, may be abortive; but, it is a settled rule of the common law that there is no right without a remedy. The question before us therefore is really, What is the proper form of remedy in the case of a corporation indicted for misdemeanor, and refusing or neglecting to appear? By the common law of England, prior to the settlement of this country, an appearance by the defendant was indispensable, both in civil and criminal cases. For want of it the proceedings came to a permanent stop. The end sought was commonly attained indirectly by process of outlawry, by which, in civil actions, after the outlaw's goods had been forfeited to the crown, satisfaction thereout was awarded to the plaintiff, but the action itself could not proceed to judgment. 8 Stephen, Com. 533; Tilghman, Ch. J., in Downey v. Farmers & M. Bank of Greencastle, 13 Serg. & R. 288. In criminal cases, of course, the difficulty seldom arose, as the defendant was usually in arrest, and, his corporal appearance thus being secured, the contention was deferred till the next step in the proceedings, when a contumacious prisoner stood mute and refused to plead. Even then the case was halted, and resort was had to the peine forte et dure to obtain a plea. Sir James Stephen appears to be of opinion that this practice arose from the different modes of trial in criminal cases when the ordeal was usual, and the jury exceptional, only adopted on the election of the prisoner. 1 Hist. Crim. L. p. 298. However this may be, it is unquestionable that the necessity of an appearance as well as a plea was inexorable. And the reason of this seems to me to lie "in the fundamental idea of all common-law actions that they must be developed upon a defined issue. Without parties in court, there could be no lis mota; and without pleas no issue, and therefore no trial. The difficulty, though insuperable, was altogether technical. Hence appearance by attorney was the first solution, and satisfied the requirements of ordinary cases, for it is to be remembered that the usual writ in the commencement of actions was the capias, and the defendant was in court in custody either of the sheriff or of his bail. The failure to appear was therefore comparatively of rare occurrence, and this rarity in large measure accounts for the tardiness of the invention or adoption of the remedy of judgment by default. Corporations not being amenable to a capias, the practice in England, until altered by Stat. 7 & 8 Geo. IV. chap. 71, § 5, was to compel appearance by venire facias and distringas. Reg. v. Birmingham & G. R. Co. reported in its successive stages in 9 Car. & P. 469, 1 Gale & D. 457, and 2 Gale & D. 236. A venire facias ad respondendum is in fact a summons. "The practice . . . was for the sheriff to whom the writ was delivered to make out a warrant or summons to his officer, who thereupon summoned the defendant by delivering to him a copy, . . . and upon the sheriff's return of the names of the summoners, if the defendant did not appear, a distringas issued." 1 Tidd, Pr. 155. "As no capias lay, it was the only method of proceeding against peers of the realm, corporations, and hundredors on the statutes of hue and cry." Id. 112. "The proper process on an indictment for any petty misdemeanor is a writ of venire facias, which is in the nature of a summons to cause the party to appear." Tomlin's Jac. Law Dict. title Process, II.

We have, therefore, to consider the effect in Pennsylvania of a failure to appear after due service of a summons. The ordinary result is to render the party liable to a judgment by default; but the learned judge below, being of opinion that such judgment rests entirely on statute, and the Act of June 13, 1836, § 83 (Pub. Laws, 578), not applying to proceedings on indictment, refused to enter judgment in the present case. The act of 1836 was one of the consolidated statutes reported by the commissioners appointed under the resolution of March 23, 1830 (Pub. Laws 1829-30, p. 408), to revise the Civil Code, and introduces no new practices in regard to judgments by default for want of appearance. The explanatory remarks of the commissioners on the sections concerned make no reference to any change. See report in 2 Parke & Johns. Dig. title Judiciary, p. 804. In fact the practice was coeval with the commonwealth, and even antedated it. In the record of the court at Upland, in Pennsylvania (Memoirs of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, volume 7), are numerous instances of such judgments. At the session of March 13, 1876-77 (Helm v. Ooleen) it is recorded: "The deft. remaining absent the Court doe order that the sd deft. appear att the next court day to defend his sd fact, or in case of further default, Judgment to passe against him according to Lawe and merrit." Page 47. In Addams v. Gray: "The deft. being default and the plt. makinge the Justness of his debt apaire the Court ordered judgment to bee entered against the defendant according to the plts. declaration." Page 88. In Bacon v. Billop: "The deft. being three tymes called did not appeare, and the action haveing been continued three court dayes in wch tyme notwithstanding hee had due notice and did promisse to appeare, hee hath not appeared and the plt. pressing for judgment, the Court thereupon examining the Case doe think fitt to pass judgmt against ye deft." Page 189. These examples from the record of the earliest court administering English law on the soil of Pennsylvania throw a strong light on the action of the colonists under Penn's charter, next to be noticed. In the sixth article of the laws agreed upon in England under the frame of government promulgated by Penn it was declared that in all courts all persons of all persuasions may freely appear in their own way, and personally plead their cause; that the party complained against shall be summoned no less than 10 days before the trial; and before the complaint of any person shall be received he shall solemnly declare in court that he believes in his conscience his cause is just. Duke of Yorke's Laws, p. 100. In the laws made at an assembly held at Philadelphia March 10, 1683, chap. 66, the foregoing was re-enacted, with the notable addition to the sentence last quoted above that, "if the party complained against shall notwithstanding refusal to appear, the plaintiff shall have judgment against the defendant by default." Id. p. 128. I have not been able to discover in the time and with the books at my command how far this simple and effective mode of reaching a legal as well as just result agreeing with the practice already in use in the territory under the government of the Duke of York's charter, as shown by the record of the Upland court, was an original invention of the colonists, or was borrowed, adapted, or enlarged from some special or local practice in England. The latter would seem to be more probable, not only from the analogy of the way in which the actions of assumpsit and replevin and other common-law remedies were enlarged and adapted to new usefulness in Pennsylvania, but also from the fact that the judgment by default came into use about the same time in other colonies, though Judge Bell, who delivered the learned opinion in Boston, C. & M. Railroad v. State, 32 N. H. 215, 281, regarded it as an original invention in New England. But, whatever its origin, the practice has continued to the present time. The Act of 1683 (chapter 66) supra, was declared one of the fundamental laws of the province (Duke of Yorke's Laws, p. 154); was abrogated by the king and queen in council, 1698; was put in the petition of right (Id. 200); and passed through the usual vicissitudes of re-enactment and abrogation familiar to us in the contests between the early assemblies and the royal authority. It has been with substantial identity the law of the state from the earliest day to the present. See Acts 1710 (Duke of Yorke's Laws, 337); Acts 1715 (Duke of Yorke's Laws, 367); Acts 20th March, 1724-25 (1 Dallas' Laws, 223; 1 Smith's Laws, 164; and Purdon's Dig. 1830, title Arrest, p. 57),—where this act is given as the statute in force prior to the passage of the Act of 1838. None of these statutes apply in terms, or perhaps by implication, to cases of indictment. The Act of May 31, 1718, "for the advancement of justice, and more certain administration thereof" (1 Smith's Laws, 116), provides that, if any person indicted for one of certain capital felonies named shall not appear, a capias shall be issued, and, if the party be not found, proclamation and outlawry follow in prescribed course. The Act of September 23, 1791 (3 Dallas' Laws, 115) also limits outlawry to a few of the more serious felonies; and the existing Act of 31st March, 1860 (Pub. Laws, 447), is substantially a re-enactment of the Act of 1791. For the lesser felonies, and for all misdemeanors, therefore, the process of outlawry was practically abolished by these statutes, and, if a capias under the general power of the courts was not effective, or not applicable, as was the case in regard to corporations, there was no statutory substitute for the ancient process of a venire facias respondendum and distringas. But, as already seen, the whole object of the venire and distress infinite, was to secure an appearance, and the whole necessity for an appearance was to get over the technical difficulty in bringing the case to issue. The object and the necessity were the same in the civil and the criminal courts. The older remedies have fallen entirely into disuse in the civil courts, and the end sought is now attained by a judgment entered for the default. The presence of the defendant is not required upon the trial of misdemeanors, and the necessity of an appearance is therefore as barely technical as in civil cases. There is no difficulty in applying the same remedy, and we see no reason why the courts should not recognize the change also in criminal cases, without express statute, by force of the common law of Pennsylvania. This was the result reached by the supreme court of New Hampshire in Boston, C. & M. Railroad v. State, 32 N. H. 215, and the decision was approved and followed by the supreme court of North Carolina in State v. Western N. C. R. Co. 89 N. C. 584. In the former case it was said by Bell, J.: "The foundation of the English common law with its infinite niceties was nothing more than usage, and usage here holds as high a place in our esteem as usage there." The remark is equally true of Pennsylvania. The late Chief Justice Sharswood, in a lecture before the Law Academy of Philadelphia in 1855, traced with great learning the development of a wide-reaching common law "by the silent, gradual, yet all-sufficient power of common usage and consent"; citing, among other instances, the right of a tenant for a term certain to the way-going crop (Diffendorfer v. Jones [1783], cited in Stults v. Dickey, 5 Binn. 269, 6 Am. Dec. 411); but not to spring grain (Demi v. Bosler, 1 Penr. & W. 224); the nonexistence of markets overt (Dosack v. Weaver, 1 Yeates, 479); barring dower by a simple deed (Dacey v. Turner, 1 Dall. 11); and as showing that changes were not confined to the civil courts, the repudiation of the punishment of the ducking stool and some other punishments not in accordance with the notions of the people (James v. Com. 13 Serg. & R. 220). "Every country," says Tilghman, Ch. J. in Guardians of the Poor v. Greene, 5 Binn. 534, "has its common law. Ours is composed partly of the common law of England and partly of our own usages. When our ancestors emigrated from England they took with them such of the English principles as were convenient for the situation in which they were about to place themselves. It required time and experience to ascertain how much of the English law would be unsuitable to this country. By degrees, as circumstances demanded, we adopted the English usages, or substituted others better suited to our wants, until at length, before the time of the Revolution, we had formed a system of our own, founded in general on the English constitution, but not without considerable variations." From the earliest days of the province, as we have thus seen, the failure to appear after due service of a summons has been treated as a contempt of the process of the court, and the dilatory and cumbrous methods of outlawry and distress to avoid the technical necessity of an appearance have been discarded in favor of the shorter, simpler, and more effective remedy of judgment for the default, apparently originating in usage, the fountain of common law, sanctioned by frequent statutory recognition, and extended in its operation from time to time by judicial application. An instance of such judicial extension is found in the adoption of the equity rules by this court in 1865, whereby subpoenas to appear were abolished, and in their place was substituted the service of a copy of the bill, with a notice indorsed thereon to appear, and that on failure to do so a decree pro confesso might be entered thereon for the default. And a still more recent instance is to be found in Longwell v. Hartwell, 164 Pa. 588, where it was held that judgment might be entered by default for want of appearance against a garnishee, although the statute makes no express provision for any such judgment. We therefore conclude that the practice is entitled to recognition as an integral part of the common law of the state. It is true, we have found no precedents in the quarter sessions or in criminal cases, but, as indictments against corporations were even rarer in early times than they are now, the absence of reported decisions is not conclusive against the practice; and, as both the object sought and the technical objection to be avoided are the same, and as in misdemeanors, where the personal presence of the defendant is not necessary, the application of the remedy is equally convenient and effective, we see no good reason why the same remedy should not apply in one case as in the other.

The order refusing judgment is reversed, and judgment directed to be entered against the defendant by default for want of appearance.

NOTE.—I am under obligations in this case to a supplemental brief prepared by John Douglass Brown, Jr., Esq., of the Philadelphia bar.

RE CONTESTED ELECTION OF SCHOOL DIRECTORS OF LITTLE BEAVER TOWNSHIP.

(.....Pa.....)

A voter cannot paste a slip ticket, or sticker procured from outside parties, over the printed matter as well as the blank spaces in the right-hand column of the official ballot, where the only prescribed mode of voting for persons who were not already named thereon is by inserting their names in blank spaces prepared therefor in such column.

(January 7, 1895.)

A PPEAL by Albert McCowin et al. from a decree of the Court of Quarter Sessions for Lawrence County, which threw out certain ballots as illegal which had been cast at an election and counted in favor of appellants. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Messrs. J. Norman Martin and Charles E. Mehard, for appellants:

Statutory provisions for marking ballots and inserting names are merely directory. If the intention of the voter can be ascertained from an examination of the ballot his vote must be counted.

NOTE.—As to sticker ballots, see also Dewalt v. Bartley (Pa.) 15 L. R. A. 771; People v. Shaw (N. Y.) 16 L. R. A. 606; State v. Walsh (Conn.) 17 L. R. A. 364.
27 L. R. A.

It has been the tendency of all courts and legislative bodies to construe election statutes with the utmost liberality in favor of the ascertainment of the expressed will of the voter, and whenever the statutes do not most explicitly declare that particular informalities shall avoid the ballot, their provisions are considered directory.

3 Dowl. & R. 181; Woodward v. Sarsons, L. R. 10 Q. P. 783.

Mr. Malcolm McConnell, for appellees:

The Act of 1893 provides for a secret ballot for the exclusive use of uniform ballots; the free posting and publication of the names of candidates before election; the voting in a room where electioneering and solicitation of votes is forbidden, etc.

De Walt v. Bartley, 15 L. R. A. 771, 146 Pa. 529.

It would seem that by the use of a slip ticket, such as was used in this case, the purpose of the law is defeated.

Sterrett, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The controlling question in this case is whether, upon the undisputed facts, the votes in controversy, which were counted by the election officers for the appellants, Albert McCowin and R. J. Miller, respectively, for the office of school director, etc., should not have been rejected, for the reason that they were not cast according to the provisions of the Act of June 10, 1893, entitled "An act to regulate the nomination and election of public officers," etc. Pub. Laws, 419. The court found that "at the general election held in Little Beaver township on February 20, 1894, it was required that two persons be elected to the office of school director in said township. Ballots, of which a sample is attached to the petition, containing the list of officers and names of all persons duly nominated for this and other offices, were provided by the county commissioners, furnished to the election officers, and by them to the voters, as required by law. Many of the electors procured, at other places, printed slips or tickets of the form shown in the second specification of the petition, including a list of township officers to be voted for, with directions to mark names of candidates for the respective offices, prepared with adhesive paste on the reverse side, and of the size and form the same should have appeared on the official ballot if the persons named had been duly nominated for the respective offices. They affixed said slip tickets upon the right-hand column of the official ballot, which was devoted to blank spaces, and when so affixed the titles of the offices, directions for insertion of names, and the spaces indicated and defined by lines provided in the official ballot for township officers were covered and obliterated, and the titles of officers, direction for marking, spaces, and names provided therein on the prepared slip ticket substituted therefor. Cross-marks were also made in the squares opposite certain names, to the right of the names. The election officers counted, as votes for the respective persons, the names on said slips having the cross marked opposite their names. Seventy-six ballots so cast were counted for Albert McCowin, and 75 ballots so cast were counted for R. J. Miller. The return of the election officers then showed that, for the office of school director, A. G. McGinnis had 54 votes; John M. Scott, 25 votes; M. L. Andrews, 13 votes; W. A. Kenney, 62 votes; Albert McCowin, 90 votes; R. J. Miller, 80 votes; J. Q. Adams, 1 vote." Certificates of election were accordingly issued to appellants; but the court below, holding that the 76 and 75 ballots counted as aforesaid for them, respectively, were illegally cast, adjudged and determined that W. A. Kenney and A. G. McGinnis, having received a majority of all the lawful votes cast at said election for the office of school director, etc., were duly elected to said office.

The question presented for our consideration is whether the learned judge erred in construing the Act of 1893, and ruling as he did against appellants. The first section of the act declares "that all ballots cast in elections for public officers within this commonwealth shall be printed and distributed at the public expense," etc., as thereafter provided; and section 27 declares: "None but ballots provided in accordance with the provisions of this act shall be counted." After specifically directing the manner in which the names of the candidates of each political party shall be arranged on the official ballot, etc., section 14 declares: "There shall be left at the right of the groups of candidates for presidential electors, and of the list of candidates for other offices (or under the title of the office itself for which an election is to be held in case there be no candidates legally nominated therefor), as many blank spaces as there are persons to be voted for, by each voter, for such office, in which spaces the voter may insert the name of any person whose name is not printed on the ballot as a candidate for such office, and such insertion shall count as a vote without the cross-mark hereinafter mentioned." The act also provides for delivery of one official ballot, by the proper election officer, to each qualified voter as soon as he is admitted within the rail; and the next or twenty-second section provides that, on receipt thereof, "the voter . . . shall prepare his ballot by marking, . . . or by inserting in the blank spaces prepared therefor any name not already on the ballot," etc. The "marking" mentioned in the last quotation is applicable only to candidates whose names are printed on the official ballot. They cannot be legally voted for in any other way than by marking, as specified in said section. In the case of a substituted nomination, filed with or transmitted to the county commissioners after the ballots have been printed, said commissioners are required by the twelfth section to "prepare and distribute with the ballot suitable slips of paper bearing the substituted name, together with the title of the office, and having adhesive paste upon the reverse side, which shall be offered to each voter with the regular ballot and may be affixed thereto." The only prescribed mode of voting for persons "whose names are not already on the ballot" is "by inserting [their names] in the blank spaces prepared therefor" in the right-hand column of the official ballot. It is the "name" only that is to be thus inserted, and not the title of the office to be filled, etc. The latter is already printed there, and constitutes part of the ballot prepared for the use of voters. The name or names, as the case may be, cannot be inserted anywhere in said right-hand column, but only in the appropriate blank spaces prepared therefor. The voter is not authorized to insert anything in any part of said columns, save and except in the blank spaces prepared for names not already on the ballot. The manner of inserting is not prescribed. It may therefore be done in any appropriate way, such as by writing, stamping with metallic or rubber stamp, or by covering the proper blank space, in whole or in part, with a slip ticket or sticker, securely attached to said space by adhesive paste or other suitable material, on which ticket or sticker is printed or written a name or names "not already on the ballot." Everything necessary or proper to be done by the voter, in order to record the free and unconstrained expression of his choice of persons to fill the respective offices, is thus provided for, and the manner in which said right of choice shall be exercised is specifically pointed out. If he desire to vote for any of those whose names are printed on the official ballot, he must do so by "marking," as directed by the act. If he wishes to vote for persons whose names are not already on the ballot, he can do so by "inserting" their names in the blank spaces prepared therefor; but he has no right to insert anything else in said blank spaces, or in any other part of the right-hand column. In so far as the mode of voting is thus specifically prescribed by the act, all other modes are, by necessary implication, forbidden. Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. The ordinary rule, as has been stated by recognized authority, is that, where power has been given to do a thing in a particular way, then affirmative words, marking out the way, by necessary implication prohibit all other ways. To hold, as we are virtually asked to do by appellants, that by virtue of the authority given the voter to insert, in the blank spaces provided therefor, names not already on the official ballot, he may so use a previously prepared slip ticket, given to him by an outside party, as to entirely cover the right-hand column of the official ballot, and thus effectually obliterate or conceal everything printed thereon, would not be construction, but judicial legislation of the worst type. Moreover, the use of such a blanket ticket or sticker would tend to defeat the main purposes of the act. The right-hand column is part of the official ballot. In addition to the requisite number of blank spaces for the insertion of names not already on the ballot, the respective titles of the different offices to be filled, and instructions as to the number of names that may be inserted underneath said titles, respectively, are intended as guides, not only for the voter, but also for the election officers. To permit the voter to procure, from outside parties, a slip ticket or sticker, corresponding in size with said column, and paste the same over the printed matter, as well as the blank spaces thereon, would be contrary to the letter, as well as the spirit, of the act. But it is enough for us to know that no authority can be found in the act for doing any such thing.

We have no doubt as to the correctness of the conclusion reached by the court below, and hence the decree should be affirmed.

Decree affirmed, and appeal dismissed, with costs to be paid by appellants.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

CUMBERLAND TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO., Appt.,

UNITED ELECTRIC R. CO.

(98 Tenn. 422.)

1. The ordinary use of streets which a telephone company is forbidden to obstruct by a proviso in the statute giving permission to use the streets, includes the use of the streets by an electric street-car line.
2. The unnecessary conflict of poles and wires of a trolley railway company with those of a prior existing telephone plant to the damage of the latter makes the railway company liable for the cost of necessary changes made by the telephone company.
3. A telephone company cannot recover for loss sustained from induction on account of parallel wires of an electric railway company where a provision of the statute authorizing the construction of the telephone line prohibits its obstructing the ordinary use of the street.
4. The destruction of the use of a telephone plant with a ground circuit which made no injurious disturbance of natural electric conditions anywhere, caused by conduction resulting from the operation of a single trolley street-car line which charged the earth for half a mile on each side with powerful currents of electricity, makes the street railway company liable for the cost of return wires for the telephone line as a substitute for the ground circuit.

(Wakes and Bright, JJ., dissent from propositions 1 and 3.)

(Caldwell and Snodgrass, JJ., dissent from proposition 4.)

(Snodgrass, J., dissents from proposition 2.)

(March 10, 1894.)

APPEAL by complainant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Davidson County, in favor of defendant in a suit to recover damages inflicted upon complainant by the construction and operation of defendant's electric railway system. Reversed in part.

NOTE.—The above case is in some particular one of first impression. The new and difficult questions raised by conflicting electric currents have been decided in other cases in favor of the electric railway companies as against a telephone company; thus, the New York case of Hudson River Teleph. Co. v. Watervliet Turnp. & R. Co. 17 L. R. A. 876; Cincinnati Inclined Plane R. Co. v. City & Suburban Teleg. Asso. (Ohio) 13 L. R. A. 584, and Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. United Electric Railway (U. S. C. C. M. D. Tenn.) 13 L. R. A. 544. These strong authorities are distinguished in the present case as being all cases for injunction against the operation of a street railway, while the

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. Vertrees & Vertrees for appellant.

Mr. J. C. Bradford, for appellees:

The rights acquired by the plaintiff under the Act of 1885, chapter 66, do not rest on contract with the state, but are privileges voluntarily conceded by it. The relation between the plaintiff and the state is not contractual.

East Saginaw Salt Mfg. Co. v. East Saginaw, 80 U. S. 18 Wall. 873, 378, 20 L. ed. 611, 614; Christ Church v. Philadelphia County, 65 U. S. 24 How. 300, 16 L. ed. 603; American Rapid Teleg. Co. v. Hess, 18 L. R. A. 454, 125 N. Y. 641.

The plaintiff therefore, as a foreign corporation, admitted to do business in the state on such terms as the state saw fit to prescribe, is not possessed of franchises granted by irrevocable contract, but is a mere licensee, which has availed itself of privileges conferred by the state.

2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 991; Doyle v. Continental Ins. Co. of New York, 94 U. S. 535, 24 L. ed. 148; Moore v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 21 Fed. Rep. 817; Wilkinson v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 23 Fed. Rep. 353.

There are two grants from the same sovereignty, both conferring rights and franchises affected by a public use, the operation of the latter of which injuriously affects the former.

A junior grantee of franchises, to be used for the public benefit, is not precluded from their exercise and enjoyment, because, to some extent, franchises previously granted are interfered with.

The right of the plaintiff to the exclusive or even prior use of the streets of Nashville cannot be inferred or implied, but must be expressly given; and unless it can put its finger upon some direct and unequivocal grant of such right, it does not exist.

Booth, Street Railways, § 5, p. 6.

It is for the legislature to determine which shall yield, and to what extent, and whether wholly or in part only, to the other.

Com. v. Essex Co. 13 Gray, 239; Atty-Gen. v. New York & L. B. R. Co. 24 N. J. Eq. 49.

The present case simply claims damages for the loss caused by the interference. Great interest attaches to the present case by reason of the distinction made therein, especially that between the damages from induction currents by reason of parallel wires in the street, and the damages from conduction which is not confined to the ground within the street line and so held to be unaffected by a prohibition against the obstruction by the telephone company of the ordinary use of the street. The case, differing as it does so strongly from the other cases mentioned, makes a notable addition to the subject.

The controversy between the electric railway and the telephone could not be narrowed to a question of the invasion, by the electricity of the railroad, of the private ground of the telephone company.

Hudson River Teleph. Co. v. Waterliet Turnp. & R. Co. 17 L. R. A. 674, 185 N. Y. 398.

There was no taking of defendant's property in a constitutional sense.

Iron Mountain R. Co. v. Bingham, 4 L. R. A. 623, 87 Tenn. 522; Northern Transp. Co. of Ohio v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, 25 L. ed. 836.

A street railroad authorized by statute to construct and operate a railway in the streets of a city is an agency of the state.

New York & N. E. R. Co's App. 58 Conn. 532; Northern Transp. of Ohio v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 640, 25 L. ed. 387; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 556, 722; Taggart v. Newport Street R. Co. 7 L. R. A. 205, 16 R. I. 668.

A street railway operated by electricity has been held to be simply an improved mode of travel, and, therefore, within the purpose of the original dedication of the street for public travel.

Taggart v. Newport Street R. Co. supra; Cincinnati Inclined Plane R. Co. v. City & Suburban Teleg. Assn. 12 L. R. A. 534, 48 Ohio St. 390; Haley v. Rapid Transit Street R. Co. 47 N. J. Eq. 393.

No action lies for the reasonable use of a lawful trade in a convenient and proper place.

Hale v. Barlow, 4 C. B. N. S. 384; Ponton v. Holland, 17 Johns. 92, 8 Am. Dec. 369; Lasala v. Holbrook, 4 Paige, 169, 3 L. ed. 890, 25 Am. Dec. 524; McCormick v. Horan, 81 N. Y. 86, 37 Am. Rep. 479; Burke v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 7 Heisk. 462, 19 Am. Rep. 618; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 817, 331, 27 L. ed. 739, 744.

Where the grant is specific, certain, and definite, and confers rights in an easement held by the state in trust for the public, and for the public convenience, the incidental inconvenience suffered must be borne for the public accommodation.

Hoerman v. Beef Slough Mfg. Boom. Log Driving & Transp. Co. 8 Biss. 534; Atty. Gen. v. New York & L. B. R. Co. 24 N. J. Eq. 49; Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. United Electric Railway, 12 L. R. A. 544, 42 Fed. Rep. 273; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 126, 24 L. ed. 77, 84.

It was the duty of the telephone company to readjust its methods to meet the condition created by the introduction of the electromotor on the street railway, at its own expense.

Cincinnati Inclined Plane R. Co. v. City & Suburban Teleg. Assn. supra; Snow v. Parsons, 28 Vt. 459, 67 Am. Dec. 723; Jacobs v. Allard, 42 Vt. 303, 1 Am. Rep. 331.

All, or nearly all, the courts have resolved the controversy in favor of the street railroads.

Cincinnati Inclined Plane R. Co. v. City & Suburban Teleg. Assn. supra; Booth, Street Railways, pp. 195, 218; Keasbey, Electric Wires, pp. 143-153.

Electric railways are not additional servitudes.

Mt. Adams & Eden Park Inclined R. Co. v. Winslow, 8 Ohio Ct. Rep. 426; Pelton v. East 37 L. R. A.

Cleveland R. Co. 22 Ohio L. J. 67; Detroit City R. Co. v. Mills, 85 Mich. 684; Louisville Bagging Mfg. Co. v. Central Pass. R. Co. 15 Ky. L. Rep. 417; Lockhart v. Orsig Street R. Co. 139 Pa. 419.

The occupation of the streets by the telephone company is an unusual use and an additional servitude.

Lewis, Em. Dom. § 131, and note 1 citing cases; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Williams, 8 L. R. A. 429, 86 Va. 696.

Messrs. East & Fogg also for appellees.

G. W. Pickle, Special Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit by a telephone company against an electric street-railway company to recover damages inflicted upon the telephone plant by the contiguous railway plant. The plaintiff has appealed from an adverse judgment, and assigned errors. The facts are practically undisputed, and, so far as they are material or pertinent to the questions to be determined, are as follows:

The plaintiff, a Kentucky corporation, had, prior to 1889, established in the city of Nashville a telephone plant upon the "single-wire" plan or system. The earth, under this system, is used as the return conductor to complete the electrical circuit, and the overhead single wire must have earth connections at both ends, at the exchange, and at the subscribers. These earth connections of plaintiff's wires were effected upon private property at both ends, upon the company's property at the exchange, and upon the subscriber's property, by his consent, at the other end. The poles upon which plaintiff's wires were stretched were planted in the public streets by permission of the city council, and by authority of a general statute of this state, which empowers telephone and other like companies, both foreign and domestic, to construct, operate, and maintain, upon consideration of certain benefits conceded to the state and general government, their lines along and over the public highways and streets of the cities and towns of this state, provided that the ordinary use of such public highways, streets, etc., be not thereby obstructed. Acts 1885, chap. 66. In telegraphy, of which telephony is but another form, it has been universal practice for half a century to use the earth as the return circuit. The plaintiff plant was constructed in accordance with an approved system, and the one chiefly used in all the large cities of the United States. The electric currents required and used in the operation of plaintiff's plant cause no hurtful disturbance anywhere of natural electric conditions. The plaintiff's plant, thus constructed, was in perfect condition and successful operation, rendering satisfactory service to its patrons, when, in 1889, the defendant, a domestic corporation, having obtained control of the street railways of Nashville, which had, with one unimportant exception, been operated by horse power, constructed and put into operation thereon a single-trolley overhead electric railway system. Defendant's action in this particular was authorized by general public statutes of the state, which provided that street-railway companies that had hitherto used animal power for the operation of their cars might, with the consent of the city authorities, adopt electricity as a motive power. Acts 1887, chap. 65; Acts 1889, chap. 40. The required consent of the city authorities was obtained by defendant. While there are two systems of electric railways, the single-trolley system and the double-trolley system, the former is the more approved and satisfactory, and the one in general use. It is better adapted than the double-trolley system to single-track railways like defendant's. It is likewise cheaper. The defendant's plant was properly constructed and equipped according to the single-trolley system. The earth is used as a return circuit in the operation of street-railways constructed upon the single-trolley plan, but not for those operated upon the double-trolley plan. The defendant, in the operation of its plant, generates or collects electricity in such unusual quantities, and applies and uses it in such violent, turbulent, and varying currents, as to produce a non-natural and disturbed condition electrically, not only within the streets, but for the distance of half a mile on either side. The plaintiff's entire plant was for a time paralyzed, and its utility destroyed, by the construction and operation of defendant's plant or system. The injuries, so fatal to plaintiff's franchise and plant, resulted by several methods that it is important to describe.

First. Injury resulting from what is known as "conduction" or "leakage." Currents of electricity of great strength and force are generated and applied by defendant in the propulsion of its cars. These abnormal currents of the electrical fluid are poured out or permitted to escape into the streets. They overflow the streets and invade private property for half a mile on either side, and, finding the earth connections of the telephone wires at the exchange, and at the subscribers, pass up into those wires and the telephone instruments, and by reason of their great force and volume substantially destroy the utility of the telephone plant. This interference can be obviated in only one way, viz., by a metallic return circuit for one of the plants. The only metallic return circuit for a railway yet discovered is that known as the "double-trolley" system. The double-trolley system is more expensive than the single-trolley system, and inferior in other respects for the operation of single-track railways. A recent invention, known as the "McLeuer Device," has been proved by experience to be an effective remedy for the disturbances caused by conduction. This McLeuer device consists of a large copper wire, supported on poles, with which the outgoing telephone wires are connected at both ends, and which serves as a return circuit instead of the earth. The McLeuer device is the most effective and least expensive remedy that has been discovered for the disturbances caused by conduction. The plaintiff was compelled, in order to reclaim its plant, to put in this McLeuer device at a cost of $3,660.58.

27 L. R. A.

Second. Injury resulting from what is called "induction" or "parallelism." The wires of the telephone company and of the railway company are parallel upon some of the streets. It is a physical fact of much importance in electric mechanism that when two wires of two circuits are parallel to each other, and there is a current of varying intensity on one of them, this will produce in the other, in the opposite direction, a current of electricity of similar variation. The amount of induction depends upon variation in current, the distance of the wires from each other, and the length of the parallelism of the wires. The current upon the trolley wire and the feed wire of the railway is quite variable in quantity and intensity, owing to the drain upon the store of the electricity by the moving and stopping of the car. Nor is the electricity, as generated, exactly uniform in its flow from the dynamo. The result is, wherever the telephone wire is parallel with the trolley wire and feed wire, there is induced upon the telephone wire a current whose variation corresponds with the variations of the electrical current on the electric railway wires, thereby producing such disturbances as render the use of the telephone plant impracticable. But one practicable remedy has been discovered for the disturbances caused by induction; that is, to destroy the parallelism of the wires of the two circuits. This remedy is practicable for the telephone company alone. The expense incurred by plaintiff on this account was $856.80.

Third. The plaintiff expended $816 in putting up higher poles on Main street, in consequence of conflict produced by the erection of defendant's poles and wires. The plaintiff's poles occupied one side of Main street, and defendant's poles were put up on both sides of said street, and conflicted with plaintiff's poles and wires, so as to render it necessary for plaintiff to put in new and higher poles. The majority of the court think the defendant could have reasonably avoided this conflict by supporting its wires upon a single line of poles with arms, erected through the middle of the street, or upon the opposite side from the telephone poles and wires. Judge Snodgrass and the writer of this opinion do not concur in this finding of fact. The contention of the parties will be stated and disposed of in order, and so much of the court's charge as may be deemed material will be stated in the proper connections. The fact that plaintiff sustained loss in consequence of the construction and operation of defendant's plant is admitted by defendant. The amount of that loss is accurately ascertained, and is not a matter of controversy. The sole question for determination is defendant's liability for that loss. The loss by conduction is distinct from that resulting from induction and from conflict of the poles and wires of the two systems. The two items last named—loss by induction and by conflict of poles and wires—may be conveniently considered together as involving the same or similar questions. But loss by conduction will be considered apart from other matters.

1. Is defendant liable for loss that plaintiff sustained from induction and from conflict of the poles and wires of the two systems? This loss, unlike that caused by conduction, occurs upon and within the streets, and is a direct and immediate result of plaintiff's occupation and use of the streets simultaneously with defendant, and would be obviated or remedied by the withdrawal of either party from the streets. It is important to ascertain the exact status and relative rights of these companies as regards their use and occupation of the public streets. Both are quasi public corporations of the same general character. Both serve important public ends and needs, and are equal candidates for public favor. Both derive their rights and franchises from the same source,—a public general statute,—and exercise them by permission of the same city authorities. The legislature intended that both should continue to exist under conditions favorable to the accomplishment of the purposes of their creation. No purpose to sacrifice one for the benefit of the other is apparent. It is therefore not quite accurate to say that defendant has the dominant and plaintiff a subservient use of the streets. Their respective rights to occupy and use the streets are co-ordinate. Each, within its own sphere, is independent of the other. The defendant's right is to use the streets for the erection and operation of an electric railway. Acts 1887, chap. 65; Acts 1889, chap. 40. And this, it is insisted, is a strictly legitimate and ordinary street use. The plaintiff's right is to use the streets incidentally in the erection and operation of a telephone plant, with the proviso that the ordinary use of the streets be not thereby obstructed. It is perfectly clear that no conflict can occur between these companies in the use of the public streets if each shall remain within its proper sphere, and exercise its power with that careful and prudent regard for the rights of the other which the law enjoins. The defendant must exercise care and prudence to avoid injury to plaintiff, and plaintiff must not obstruct defendant's use of the streets if that be an "ordinary use."

Is an electric street railway an ordinary use of the streets? There can be no substantial distinction between an ordinary and a strictly legitimate use of the streets. With rare unanimity the courts have concurred in holding that an electric street railway, operated by means of an overhead trolley wire, supported by poles, with permission of the public authorities, for the transportation of passengers only, and conforming its track to the surface of the ground, is not an additional servitude upon the fee, but a legitimate use of the streets, within the original general purpose of their dedication. Taggart v. Newport Street R. Co. 16 R. I. 668, 7 L. R. A. 205; Halsey v. Rapid Transit Street R. Co. 47 N. J. Eq. 880; Mt. Adams & Eden Park Inclined R. Co. v. Winslow, 8 Ohio C. Ct. Rep. 425; Detroit City R. Co. v. Mills, 85 Mich. 684; Cincinnati Inclined Plane R. Co. v. City & Suburban Teleg. Assn. 48 Ohio St. 890, 12 L. R. A. 534; Lockhart v. Craig Street R. Co. 139 Pa. 419; Rafferty v. Central Traction Co. 147 Pa. 579.

37 L. R. A.

Streets were designed to afford facilities for the intercommunication of the multitudes of people assembled within cities and towns. New and improved methods of travel, devised to meet the growing demands of increased population and suburban life, are within the original general purpose for which streets were created. Electric street railways, constructed and operated as stated, are but a modern and improved use of the streets as public ways, affording, without considerable public inconvenience or obstruction of other proper use of the streets, the facilities for cheap, rapid, cleanly, and convenient transportation, so essential to the population of large cities and their suburban additions. The growth and extension of cities must have been contemplated when the streets were established. Such use of the streets, whether new or old, as would best accommodate the increased population, must have been likewise contemplated. The objections urged against the electric railway would exclude the horse car and the cable car, and the result would be to magnify the abutters' insignificant interest in the fee into an importance and value never contemplated by either party, and to subject the public to the burden and inconvenience of making new condemnations of the fee upon the introduction of any new and improved method of using the streets. We hold the electric street railway a legitimate use of the streets within the original general purpose of dedication, and therefore an ordinary use. This seems to have been the common understanding hitherto of the legislature, the street-railway companies, the general public, and the legal profession. We do not hold, and must not be understood as holding, that the electric railway companies may, without making compensation, accompany such ordinary use of the streets with such extraordinary incidents as impose new or additional burdens upon properties outside the streets that were not and could not have been contemplated and compensated for in the original taking. The difference between a dummy line and an electric street railway are so palpable as to require no enumeration. Judges Wilkes and Bright do not concur in the conclusion that electric street railways are an ordinary use of the streets.

By whose negligence or fault has plaintiff sustained the loss under consideration? Clearly, upon the facts as found by the majority the loss caused by conflict of poles and wires is imputable to defendant's fault or want of care. Having power to have avoided this conflict without injury to its plant, it was defendant's duty to do so. The conflict was the result of defendant's unnecessary act. On the other hand, the loss by induction cannot be imputed to any fault or negligence of defendant. Its plant was, as regards this matter, properly constructed and operated. Defendant could not obviate induction without abandoning the streets where it occurred. Induction is such obstruction of the streets as plaintiff is forbidden to create. The objection that induction is not an obstruction of the streets "sticks in the bark." True, it did not arrest the construction and operation of defendant's plant, but that results, not for the reason that induction is not an obstruction, but because defendant was sufficiently powerful to disregard and override it. A child upon defendant's track, in front of its moving car, is not, in a strict sense, an obstruction; but who will say that the fact does not seriously interfere with defendant's free and unembarrassed use of the street? The constraint caused by liability for legal penalties, if the child is crushed, operates as a very substantial obstruction. Defendant must stop the car, or incur serious liability. It is in vain to say that induction is not an obstruction if defendant shall be held for the unavoidable damage caused by it. It is true, induction implies no physical contact of the two plants, but it is a direct and immediate result of plaintiff's use and occupation of the streets. The presence of plaintiff's poles and wires upon the streets causes induction, and their removal would obviate it. The plaintiff cannot recover for the loss sustained from induction. It results from its unlawful obstruction of defendant's use of the streets. The consideration of other questions is irrelevant in this connection.

2. Is defendant liable for loss sustained by plaintiff from the effects of conduction? The loss by conduction, unlike that caused by induction, does not result from plaintiff's obstruction of defendant's use of the streets for an ordinary purpose. This interference would occur, and cause precisely the same loss to plaintiff, and in precisely the same manner, if plaintiff had no poles or wires upon the streets. Loss by conduction does not result in the slightest degree from the presence of plaintiff's poles and wires upon the streets, and would not be to any extent remedied by their removal. The contact between the two plants, caused by conduction and the consequent injury, does not occur upon or within the streets or through the medium of plaintiff's poles and wires located upon the streets, but upon plaintiff's private property, and that of its subscribers, lying outside of the streets, and within half a mile on either side. The fact of plaintiff's occupation and use of the streets—a controlling factor in determining defendant's liability for loss by induction—is irrelevant in the consideration of the question of defendant's liability for loss by conduction. This question must be determined as if the plaintiff had no poles or wires upon the streets. The proviso in the Statute of 1885, forbidding plaintiff, by its use of the streets, to obstruct their ordinary use, has no application to the question under consideration. That statute limits plaintiff's use of the streets, but it does not abridge its right to private property outside the streets, and wholly detached from their use. That statute confers upon plaintiff the use of the streets, and limits that use. It does not confer upon plaintiff any rights of private property outside the streets, and does not undertake to abridge any such rights. The proviso pertains wholly and exclusively to the use of the streets. The defendant's claim to the dominant use of the streets, if conceded, has no place in the consideration of this question, involving the rights of the parties outside the streets.

Another contention of a kindred nature, made on behalf of defendant, may be conveniently disposed of in this connection. It is insisted that plaintiff's corporate franchise was revoked or modified as an effect of the legislation permitting street-railway companies to use electricity in the propulsion of their cars; at least so far as to render it subordinate to defendant's junior franchise. To state it in another form, the insistence is that the Act of 1885 for the benefit of telephone companies has been repealed or modified by implication by the Acts of 1887 and 1889 for the benefit of electric street-railway companies. Repeals of statutes by implication are not favored. Repugnancy between statutes must be plain and unavoidable, or a later statute will not operate to repeal an earlier one by implication. Again, no intention on the part of the legislature to abridge the granted rights of one corporation by a new grant to another will be recognized by the courts, unless such intention plainly appears in the law. And especially should this rule prevail when both corporations are, as in this case, useful public servants, equally indispensable to public convenience, and the one enjoying the elder grant has acquired property and expended money upon the faith of it, which would be destroyed by the revocation of its franchise. It may be conceded that under our Constitution of 1870 corporate franchises are revocable at the will of the legislature. The legislature has undoubted power to exclude a foreign corporation from the state. In neither instance would the corporation have just cause to complain. But this power does not extend to the confiscation of the property of the corporation thus denied the exercise of its franchise. But in the case under consideration, the plaintiff's rights and franchise have not been abridged or revoked by any subsequent legislation in favor of street-railway companies. Had a result so extraordinary been intended as the revocation, without compensation, of the telephone franchises for the benefit of the street railways, it would have found expression by positive enactment. It cannot be admitted by implication upon this record. There is no necessary conflict between the rights and franchises of these companies. There is not any unavoidable repugnancy between the statutes upon which they rely respectively. The electric railway plants can be operated, under proper limitations as to distance and apparatus, without causing injury to telephone plants by conduction. This fulfills defendant's grant without trenching upon the pre-existing rights of plaintiff. If defendant seeks to have a more beneficial use of its plant by an evasion or use of plaintiff's property, it is just that compensation should be made. Our conclusion is that plaintiff's rights have not been abridged or revoked by the Acts of 1887 and 1889, but remain precisely as they were before the passage of these statutes. It should be observed in this connection that the injury caused by conduction is not such necessary incident to the ordinary use of the streets as to have been contemplated and compensated for in the original taking for street uses. It is not necessarily, or even ordinarily, inflicted upon abutters, but extends to many properties on either side that have not been taken or subjected to any burden for street uses.

This brings us to the consideration of a novel and very important question. It is insisted by defendant that plaintiff cannot recover the damages caused by conduction except upon the theory that it has the right to the exclusive use of the whole earth for electric purposes. A monopoly of the earth's use for any purpose, or by any person, is, of course, inadmissible. The plaintiff, however, repudiates this ambitious and extravagant claim, and insists that its demand is the more modest and reasonable one for the exclusive use of electricity upon its own premises, in an authorized and harmless manner, without injurious disturbance from nonnatural electric conditions, caused by the defendant's acts. To recall the pertinent facts: The plaintiff had, by public authority and permission, erected and equipped its telephone plant upon an improved plan, and put it into successful operation, grounding its wires upon the property of itself and subscribers, and using the earth as a return circuit, in accordance with the universal practice of half a century in like enterprises. Afterwards defendant, by like permission, began the operation of a single-trolley electric railway plant, using the earth as its return circuit. The defendant's plant was placed in such proximity to plaintiff's pre-existing plant as to cause injury to the latter by conduction. The operation of plaintiff's plant caused no injurious disturbance of natural electric conditions anywhere. In the operation of defendant's plant large and turbulent artificial currents of the electrical fluid were generated and poured into the streets beyond defendant's control. These currents, following a natural law, left the streets and overflowed private property for half a mile on either side. It was upon the private property of plaintiff and its subscribers, and not elsewhere, that these abnormal electric currents found and ascended plaintiff's ground wires, and throttled its plant. The injury by conduction can be obviated at an expense which entails no great hardship upon either party. We think, upon these facts, that plaintiff has the right to the protection of the courts in the enjoyment of its property. Franchises, easements, and the ability to use property, though intangible, have value, and are, equally with tangible property, entitled to the recognition and protection of the courts. If the plaintiff's claim, that contemplates no more than a lawful and harmless use of its own property, shall be characterized as a demand for the monopoly of the whole earth, what shall be said of defendant's larger demand for a hurtful use, not only of the streets, but of private property for half a mile on either side? The plaintiff's request is: "Let me alone in that use or application of electricity upon my own premises that causes no harm or disturbance to any one anywhere." The defendant's command is, "Get out of my way!" to all feeblér electrical enterprises that may have the misfortune to come within the range of its power.

The plaintiff proposes an adjustment of conflicting claims with defendant by the rule embodied in the enlightened maxim, "sic utere," etc., while defendant insists upon the application of that ruder maxim, "might makes right." If defendant could succeed in its construction, there can be little doubt that the unjust rule thus established would some day "return to plague the inventor." What protection has this defendant in the enjoyment of its vast properties, if it can be deprived of the power to operate them by some younger, but more robust, child of invention, that shall hereafter obtain mastery in the electric world? Is not the noninjurious use of electricity the only safe and just basis for the adjustment of the conflicting claims of electrical inventions and enterprises? What different basis than this can be arbitrarily established? Where shall the line be drawn between those electrical enterprises that must take care of the artificial currents of electricity generated by them and those that shall not be required to do so? To concede defendant's claim is to give to it an injurious use of plaintiff's property, and at the same time to deny plaintiff the harmless use of its own. The argument that assumes that plaintiff is claiming the whole earth as a return circuit, and therefore appropriating a common right to its exclusive use, because "plaintiff's portion of the earth cannot be isolated and separated electrically from the balance of the earth," is one which, if pressed to its logical results, would work a revolution in the law as to the use of the earth, the water, and the air. How, if this argument be sound, can any one insist that the air and water, that by the operation of natural law visit his premises and support life, shall not be rendered noisome and impure by the injurious acts of his neighbor? It is impossible that this portion of the air and water can, in advance, be "isolated and separated from the balance." Is not the right to the use of air and water as "common" as that to use electricity? If the right to the harmless use upon one's own premises without injurious disturbance from others of air or water or electricity is made to depend upon his ability to isolate and separate in advance his portion of these elements from the "balance," that right resolves itself into an "airy nothing." The suggestion that plaintiff, in using the earth as its return circuit, appropriates and uses electrically the properties intervening between its exchange and its subscribers' stations in any other than a rightful manner, is, as we think, based upon a misconception. The plaintiff's use of electricity causes no disturbance electrically upon these intervening properties or elsewhere, and affords no inducing cause, there or elsewhere, for the invasion of its property by defendant's artificial electrical currents. The plaintiff uses the intervening or other outside properties for electrical purposes in no other sense than it uses abutting lands, as part of the framework of the earth, to support its own, or uses the channel of the stream upon adjoining lands that conveys the water by natural flow to its own, or uses the law of gravitation that causes the water to flow towards its land instead of in an opposite direction. The plaintiff does not assert the right to an injurious use of electricity, even upon its own premises. The doctrine that reason sanctions and justice approves, as it appears to us, is that the lawful, harmless, and accustomed use upon one's land alike of water, air, or electricity, cannot be lawfully obstructed or impaired by the injurious act of another, attended with such disturbance of natural and existing conditions and consequent loss as that caused by conduction in this case, especially when the party performing the injurious act had the power to obviate and remedy the injury or loss without greater sacrifice, comparatively, than is required of defendant in this case to remedy conduction. It is not material that the injurious act is done upon the premises of one other than the injured party, as if the channel of a stream is out upon adjoining lands, and the water diverted, or the waters on them arrested in their regular flow, and then turned loose in flooding quantities.

To sustain plaintiff's claim accords with the analogies of the law, as will appear from the following cases: A manufacturer of cocoa matting used a delicate chemical to bleach his matting, which was then hung out on his own land, in the air, to dry. Another manufacturer made sulphate of ammonia, and the vapors escaping in the air combined with the bleacher's chemicals, and blacked his mats. It was shown that if the cocoa-mat maker had used another chemical, just as good or better, his mats would not have been affected. But it was held that he had the right to use any chemical he pleased, which would not hurt anybody else, and that he had the right to have the air come to his lands pure and untainted. Cooke v. Forbes, L. R. 5 Eq. 166. A manufacturer discharged the refuse from his works into a surface stream. It corroded the boilers of another factory below, which used water from the stream for steam purposes. The upper manufacturer was enjoined. Merrifield v. Lombard, 18 Allen, 16, 90 Am. Dec. 172. A manufactory of copper in one case, and of lead in another, gave off vapors which were carried by the winds upon the lands of another, and injured growing crops, fruit trees, and flowers. They had to close down. St. Helen's Smelting Co. v. Tipping, 11 H. L. Cas. 642; Pennsylvania Lead Co's App. 96 Pa. 116, 42 Am. Rep. 534. A brewer bored a deep well, and got water for use in making his ale. There was no running stream below. His neighbor had a similar well, but used it as a sink. The sewage percolated the brewer's lands, and polluted the water so it could not be used in making ale. The brewer was protected in the use of his well. Ballard v. Tomlinson, L. R. 29 Ch. Div. 115. The Standard Oil Company stored oil in its warehouse. The oil barrels leaked. This leakage soaking into the earth, percolated Mr. Kinnaird's land, and ruined his spring. It was held the company had no right to thus use its property. Kinnaird v. Standard Oil Co. 89 Ky. 468, 7 L. R. A. 451. A silk maker required water of great softness and purity to wash and dye his silk. He got it out of the Charnot. A public water company built a reservoir above, and so collected the water that when it was discharged the purity of the water was affected. The company had to quit. Cloves v. Staffordshire Potteries Waterworks Co. L. R. 8 Ch. 126; Gould, Waters, § 219; Acquackanonk Water Co. v. Watson, 29 N. J. Eq. 372.

Although the precise question determined in this case has not hitherto been necessarily involved in the decision of any case, it has, nevertheless, been considered by some of the courts. In Hudson River Teleph. Co. v. Waterliet Turnp. & R. Co., 135 N. Y. 393, 17 L. R. A. 674 (decided in 1892), the court of appeals of the state of New York expressed its views as follows: "The defendant insists that it has an equal right with plaintiff to make use of this property, or law of nature, in the conduct of its business, just as all are entitled to the common use of the air and the light of the heavens, which, in a certain sense, is undoubtedly true. But the defendant does something more. It does not leave the natural forces of matter free to act, unaffected by any interferences on its part. It generates and accumulates electricity in large and turbulent quantities, and then allows it to escape upon the premises occupied by the plaintiff, to its damage. We are not prepared to hold that a person even in the prosecution of a lawful trade or business upon its own land, can gather there by artificial means a natural element like electricity, and discharge it in such volume that, owing to the conductive properties of the earth, it will be conveyed upon the grounds of his neighbor with such force, and to such an extent, as to break up his business, or impair the value of his property, and not be held responsible for the resulting injury. The possibilities of the manifold industrial and commercial uses to which electricity may eventually be adapted, and which are even now foreshadowed by the achievements of science, are so great as to lead us to hesitate before declaring an exemption for liability in such a case. It is difficult to see how responsibility is diminished or avoided because the actor is aided in the accomplishment of the result by a natural law. It is not the operation of the law to which plaintiff objects, but the projection upon its premises, by unnatural and artificial causes, of an electric current, in such a manner, and with such intensity, as to materially injure its property. It cannot be questioned that one has the right to accumulate water upon his own real property, and use it for a motive power; but he cannot discharge it there in such quantities that, by the action of physical forces, it will inundate his neighbor's lands, and destroy his property, and shield himself from liability by the plea that it was not his act, but an inexorable law of nature, that caused the damage. Except where the franchise is to be exercised for the benefit of the public, the corporate character of the aggressor can make no difference. The legislative authority is required to enable it to do business in its corporate form; but such authority carries with it no lawful right to do an act which would be a trespass if done by a private person conducting a like business. If either collects, for pleasure or profit, the subtle and imperceptible electric fluid, there would seem to be no great hardship in imposing upon it or him the same duty which is exacted of the owner of the accumulated water power,—that of providing artificial conduit for the artificial product, if necessary to prevent injury to others." The opinion of the supreme court of New York was to the same effect. An English judge, in a recent case, has thus stated his views: "But, after reflecting much on the merits of the case, on the argument addressed to me, and on the peculiarity of an electric current as distinguished from every other power, I fail to see any reason why the principle should not be applied to it. I cannot see my way to hold that a man who has created, or, if that be inaccurate, called into special existence, an electric current for his own purposes, and who discharges it into the earth, beyond his control, is not as responsible for damages which that current does to his neighbor, as he would have been if instead he had discharged a stream of water. The electric current may be more erratic than water, and it may be more difficult to calculate or to control its direction or force; but, when once it is established that the particular current is the creation of, or owes its special existence to, the defendant, and is discharged by him, I hold that if it find its way onto his neighbor's land, and then damages the neighbor, the latter has a cause of action." National Teleph. Co. v. Baker [1898] 2 Ch. 201. The same doctrine is maintained by Judge Taft, then judge of the superior court of Cincinnati, and now a justice of the federal circuit court of appeals, in the case of City & Suburban Teleg. Assn. v. Cincinnati Inclined Plane R. Co.

The injury by conduction constitutes such invasion or taking of plaintiff's property as renders defendant liable for the damage done. It is a direct and immediate result of defendant's injurious act. It imposes a burden upon plaintiff's property that impairs its use and value. The loss is fixed and definite in amount. It can make no difference that no material thing was taken, or that the loss resulted, not from contact of material things, but through the agency of the subtle and impalpable electric fluid. The important consideration is that a thing of value has been taken from plaintiff for the benefit of defendant as the representative of the public, and for that thing compensation must be made. It is a plain dictate of justice that the public, not the individual citizen, should bear the burdens imposed upon private property for the public benefit. That defendant's act may have been authorized and lawful can make no difference. The legislature has not the power (except perhaps as to corporate franchises) to authorize, and in this case it has not undertaken to authorize, the taking of private property for a public use without compensation. Says Mr. Taylor on Corporations: "To constitute a taking of property, it is not necessary that any material thing be actually taken; it is enough if any right of the owner respecting the thing owned be impaired, so that he cannot apply the thing to all the uses of which it was formerly capable. The legislature cannot authorize either a direct or a consequential taking or injury to property without compensation; and if a corporation voluntarily, for its own benefit, so constructs a work as necessarily to injure the property (i. e. the thing owned) of an individual, or deprive him of any right he may possess regarding the thing which he owns, or his rights therein, it will be bound to compensate him for his damages, even though the work be properly and lawfully constructed." Sections 173, 473, and numerous cases cited. Mr. Lewis, in his late exhaustive work on Eminent Domain, sums up the doctrine in these words: "What possible distinction can there be between the actual taking of my property, or a part of it, and occupying it for the erection of a railroad track, or a gas house, and invading it by an agency that operates as an actual abridgement of its beneficial use, and possibly a complete and practical ouster?" Section 152. "An act which authorized a particular business at a particular place, which necessarily defiled the air so as to create a nuisance, would be void, unless it was for public use, and if for public use, such as manufacturing gas for a city, would be subject to the constitutional limitation of making compensation." Id.; and see sections 55, 57, 149. Says Mr. Wood, in his work on Nuisances: "Wherever the exercise of the right (asserted) operates to destroy an easement incident to real property, or amounts to an actual physical invasion of property by some agency that produces injury thereto, or imposes a burden thereon, this is a taking of property." Section 762. And further: "The legislature cannot confer upon a corporation the right to do any act that imposes a burden upon the property of others that amounts to an actual taking of property for public purposes so as to exempt such corporation from liability for all damages that result from the exercise of their franchise that, in law, amounts to a taking of property." Id. § 759. See also Gray v. Knoxville, 85 Tenn. 99; East End Street R. Co. v. Doyle, 88 Tenn. 747, 9 L. R. A. 100; Myers v. St. Louis, 83 Mo. 878; Abendroth v. Manhattan R. Co. 123 N. Y. 1, 11 L. R. A. 684. The injury by conduction does not belong to that class of "consequential injuries" or "inconveniences" which, it is said, must be borne in ordinary cases without compensation, as the penalty and price of living in cities and enjoying the conveniences and comforts of civilized life. These are usually of such character as to affect the community generally, and are, therefore, in a sense, borne by the public. The damages thereby inflicted are, moreover, not of easy and satisfactory computation. Here the injury is the direct result of an injurious act, and of a graver character than a mere inconvenience. It affects a single person seriously, and the community only incidentally. The loss inflicted is definite in amount.

We respectfully dissent from the view expressed by Judge Brown, in the injunction case between these companies, where he classes this injury with the inconveniences that result from "the smoke that fills our lungs and soils our garments, the dust that enters our dwellings and stores and damages our furniture, the noxious odors that assault our nostrils, the impure water we are sometimes compelled to drink," which he says "are the necessary penalties we pay for living in cities, but in ordinary cases there is no legal remedy for the evil." Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. United Electric R. Co. 43 Fed. Rep. 279, 12 L. R. A. 544. This is not, in our opinion, an ordinary case, in which compensation should be denied, even if it is classed as an "inconvenience" or "consequential injury."

It has been suggested that the electric railway companies may be subjected to multiplicity of suits under this decision. That may be inconvenient and expensive for the railway companies, but it constitutes no defense to their liability for the value of private property taken for their use. Besides, the inconvenience is not all on one side. It might prove equally inconvenient for the citizen to have his right to maintain a telephone at his home or place of business placed at the mercy of the electric railway companies.

One question remains: Was it plaintiff's legal duty, upon the institution of defendant's electric system, to protect itself from the injurious consequences by making, at its own ultimate cost, such changes in its pre-existing plant as would obviate the effects of conduction,—e. g. by putting in the McLeuer device? We answer this question in the negative. The defendant must take care of the natural and reasonable consequences of its own act. The plaintiff, being in the lawful possession and enjoyment of its own property, was under no obligation to take notice of defendant's approach or to get out of its path. Judge Brown says, in his opinion in the injunction case: "If in the case under consideration it were shown that the double trolley would obviate the injury to complainant without exposing the defendants or the public to any great inconvenience or a large expense, we think it would be their duty to make use of it, and should have no doubt of our power to aid the complainant by an injunction." This is correct as regards the application for an injunction, but if it is to be understood as holding that defendant would not be liable for the loss by conduction if plaintiff could apply the cheaper remedy, then we dissent from the view expressed. The plaintiff can only recover such loss as necessarily resulted to it from defendant's act. It must use due diligence to prevent unnecessary loss. The fact that plaintiff could apply the cheaper remedy would affect the amount of its recovery, but not the fact of defendant's liability. The right of the owner to compensation for his property taken for public use does not depend upon any consideration of this sort.

We have been referred to some cases that maintain views in apparent conflict with those expressed herein. It is sufficient to say of these cases that the New York and Ohio cases were decided chiefly upon consideration of particular statutes. Cincinnati Inclined Plane R. Co. v. City & Suburban Teleg. Assn. 48 Ohio St. 390, 12 L. R. A. 534. They were, without exception, injunction cases, in which the telephone companies appeared at great disadvantage, as seeking to obstruct the path of progress, and to debar the public of a great convenience. In that contest the telephone companies sought to take the lives of the electric railway companies. Here the question is one of liability for a sum that would impose no serious hardship upon either party to bear. In none of the cases was the question here decided necessarily involved. It was discussed, however, by some of the courts. It was perfectly clear in the injunction cases that the telephone companies were not threatened with irreparable injury. They had an adequate remedy by suit at law for damages. On the other hand, to have enjoined the railway companies would have inflicted irreparable injury upon them and the public.

As the result upon the whole case, the judgment below is affirmed as to the loss by induction, and reversed in all other respects. And upon the written stipulation of the parties that final judgment shall be entered here there will be entered in this court judgment in favor of plaintiff and against defendant for $3,660.58 for loss by conduction, and $816 for loss by conflict of poles and wires, with interest from date when expended, and all costs of this cause.

Judge Caldwell concurs in the result of this opinion on the question of conflict of poles and wires and on the question of induction, but does not agree on the question of conduction.

Wilkes, J., dissenting:

I concur in the opinion of the majority as to the liability of the electric railway company for damages for the interference of the poles and wires of the railway company with those of the telephone company on Main street, East Nashville, upon the ground upon which it is placed by the majority. I also concur with the majority as to the liability of the railway company for all damages caused by conduction, and think the conclusion can properly be arrived at upon the grounds taken by the majority. But I am unable to concur with the majority that the use of the streets by an electric railway company is an ordinary use of the streets in the sense of the statute and charter provision. The use of a street, in its broad sense, is the purpose or object of the street. This is simply to furnish a highway or passageway from one portion of the city to another, and from one man's premises to another. But this highway may be used for this purpose in many different modes. It may be used by foot passengers, by horses, by carriages, by wagons, or by street-cars drawn by animal power. These are all ordinary or common uses, and have been from time immemorial. What is, then, the ordinary or legitimate use of the street? We would say, in the words of Mr. Lewis in Rafferty v. Central Traction Co. 147 Pa. 579: First. The right of passage,—the right of each member of the community to use the street for travel on foot, with animals, or in vehicles drawn by animals, including the right to such new modes of conveyance as are adapted to the ordinary surface of the highway, and are free to be employed by any member of the community. Second. The right to improve the street for the purpose of facilitating the right of passage, as by grading, paving, draining, lighting, etc. Third. The right, sanctioned by long usage and acquiescence, and by frequent judicial recognition, to lay sewers, gas pipes, and water pipes beneath the surface, for use, not only in connection with the right of passage, but also in connection with the abutting property. Fourth. The right, possibly, to use the space beneath the surface to a limited extent for pipes or other appliances to distribute any article of convenience or necessity to the occupiers of abutting property, such as steam, petroleum, hot water, electricity, and the like. Fifth. The right, upheld by very numerous decisions, of laying down a street railroad so as to correspond with the surface of the street, and to be operated by animal power. Beyond this the authorities do not compel us to go, and reason and justice forbid. It has been uniformly held, and it is conceded, that an ordinary horse railway is an ordinary use of the streets. It is virtually the same as a carriage or omnibus line, except the simple fact that the street-car is confined to a single track, while other vehicles may pass at will over other parts of the street between the pavements. 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 723; Taggart v. Newport Street R. Co. 16 R. I. 668, 7 L. R. A. 205. This court has held that a dummy line is a new use and an additional servitude. East End Street R. Co. v. Doyle, 89 Tenn. 751, 9 L. R. A. 100. It has likewise been held that a cable-car line is an additional servitude. People v. Newton, 112 N. Y. 896, 8 L. R. A. 174. That an elevated railway is a new use has also been held, and is generally conceded. Thus the law stands as to the several improvements upon the ordinary street railroad.

Now, at the time the electric car system was inaugurated, "an electric street-car was neither usual nor common. It was not even lawful. Not until several years after the telephone was in operation was it lawful to use such power to propel street railways. A network of wires, double rows of poles, cross wires, and long wires charged with dangerous currents of electricity, constant and dazzling flashes beneath the wheels, cars running swiftly without any visible means of propulsion (the most alarming form of locomotion to horses), and flashing fire all the while, noisy machinery, and all unknown to former ages, and now allowable only by special statute, can hardly be called the usual and common or 'ordinary' use of a public street." We think the practicable test to determine whether the use is new or an ordinary use is the character and kind of the motive power used. There are valid and permanent distinctions between different sorts of traffic, between a railroad which conforms to the surface of a street and one which does not, between a railroad with a superstructure and one without a superstructure, between a railroad operated by animal power and one operated by other power. The march of invention cannot obliterate these distinctions, nor can improvements and variations in railroad construction and operation. All of these distinctions can be applied to the horse railroad, and it is capable of a logical and permanent distinction from all other railroads. The one particular which distinguishes it from all other railroads is the motive power. Other railroads may be operated upon the same sort of track; other railroads may be operated without a superstructure, or may be confined to street-passenger traffic; but animal power is animal power for all time, and no other form of power can be confounded with it. In all the early horse-railroad decisions the identity of the motive power with that applied to ordinary vehicles was especially relied upon. The moment this basis of distinction is cast aside, that moment the whole subject is thrown into inextricable confusion. If the steam motor is allowed, then there is no resting place between the smallest motor and the largest locomotive. While I think the reason of the rule is that the electric car line is a new use and additional servitude, I do not consider that the question is settled to the contrary by the authorities. I recognize the number of authorities cited by the majority opinion. Only two of them are decisions of courts of last resort,—Cincinnati Inclined Plane R. Co. v. City & Suburban Teleg. Assn. 48 Ohio St. 890, 12 L. R. A. 584; Hudson River Teleg. Co. v. Waterliet Turnp. & R. Co. 185 N. Y. 898, 17 L. R. A. 674,—and these were upon statutes and charters different from ours, and having peculiar provisions. Moreover, all the cases were applications in equity for an injunction by the telephone company, on which it was necessary to show, not only that the telephones were wrongfully interfered with and injured, but also that the remedy at law was inadequate, and the injury not susceptible of being righted by an action at law for damages. The actions being brought by the telephone companies, the result was that in most cases the injunctions were refused. But the text-writers agree that the question as between the telephones and railways is still open and unsettled, and they incline to the view that the electric car system is a new use and additional servitude. Keasbey, Electric Wires, 158; Thompson, Electricity, 64; Booth, Street Railways, § 185; Rafferty v. Central Traction Co. 147 Pa. 579; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 2d ed. 893; Taggart v. Newport Street R. Co. 16 R. I. 668, 7 L. R. A. 205. In this case for the first time the naked question of law is presented untrammelled by the considerations which applications for injunctions in advance involve. The present case is one at law, to recover damages which have been sustained, and the cases cited and relied on by the majority are not conclusive.

Holding to this view, I am of opinion the electric company is liable for all the damages caused to the telephone plant, and the judgment of the court below should be reversed, and judgment given here for the several amounts claimed.

Bright, Special Judge: I concur in this opinion.

Snodgrass, J., dissenting:

I cannot agree with the majority of the court as to liability of defendant for injury by conflict of poles on the streets, and my disagreement is based upon the ground that defendant's use of the street, being the dominant use for a proper street purpose, and the city having in fact authorized and directed the erection of the electric railway poles where placed, the telephone company, whose occupation of the street, while a lawful and permissive one, was nevertheless not a street use proper, cannot complain because the poles of the electric railway company were placed on one side of the street, when, in fact, they might have been placed on the other. The telephone company can no more complain of this than could any other property holder on that side of the street complain because poles were not located on the other. If so, when such poles are placed in front of buildings constructed on one side of the street, opposite which there are none, the owners of the buildings may then rightfully complain that the poles should have been placed on the other side, and in front of the vacant property,—a clearly inadmissible claim. It being clear that the telephone company is on the streets merely by permission, and that their occupancy is subordinate to any street use to which the city might wish to devote the streets, when the city has undertaken to use them for electric railway purposes it cannot be hindered in doing so, nor can the telephone company claim damages for such use, authorized and directed by the city. The concession or determination that the electric railroad use is a proper street use is conclusive of that question, and neither the city nor the company can be made by the telephone company to select one side rather than another of the street for placing the poles, or pay damages if it does not do so. On this theory alone, too, is based the other conclusion of the majority that the defendant is not liable for damages caused by induction. If not liable for one, it is not for the other. Properly considered, the two conclusions are necessarily in conflict.

It will not do to say the city can let the electric railway company run its wires parallel with the wires of the telephone company on the streets, so as to destroy the use of the latter wires, and not be liable, and cannot let it erect street-railway poles and wires in contact with them without being liable. The right to permit the erection of poles includes the right to permit it anywhere the poles can be properly erected, at the discretion of the city. It cannot be made, directly or indirectly, by imposition of penalty in damages on its grantee, to choose a particular side of the street. The railway use being a street use, the telephone company's rights, granted in subserviency thereto, must yield to the claim of the city and its grantee for street service. In this connection it must not be forgotten that though, under the Act of 1885, it was permitted to telephone companies to construct their lines along and over the public highways and streets, it was not intended thereby to recognize such use as a proper roadway or street use, for it was in the same act provided that this permission was granted upon the condition that the ordinary use of such public highways, streets, etc., be not thereby obstructed. It is, of course, too clear for argument that it is not a necessity, for the operation of a telephone line, that it be erected in the streets. It is a convenience to it, of course, and the permission it obtained through legislation was a very desirable one; but it did not obtain it upon any theory that it was a street use, nor can any such claim be made for it. With or without the act, therefore, it is a subordinate use, permissive only for convenience, and must yield to any claim of the public for legitimate street uses, of which the electric railway is one.

On the main point in controversy—the right of damages for injuries inflicted by conduction—I also disagree with the majority. The majority opinion is founded and can be founded alone on the idea that the complainant has the natural right to the use of the earth as a return circuit, for the complainant does not profess to own the intervening earth between points where its wires on the premises of its several subscribers are buried and its plant. It is only in consequence of this use of the earth, and its natural right to use it, that the telephone company's intersecting locations at various places are of value. Disconnect these from the right to use the adjacent earth owned by others than itself intervening between these points and its exchange, and it has no valuable property in its buried wires on the premises of subscribers. So that, in order to deny the defendant the right to use the earth for a return circuit, this very right must be conceded to complainant. And it must logically be conceded that, having first taken possession, it has acquired a monopoly of the earth. The position destroys itself, for it must, to be true, assume the existence of a right in one which has to be taken for granted in order to disprove that the same right exists in another. It is no answer to this to say that complainant has a natural current, not disturbing electrical conditions, or a harmless current. It is not a natural current, but an artificial one, depending for its existence on the generation and specific direction of increased electric fluid, and along an artificial channel. It is not harmless any more than the other, except that it is not powerful enough to overcome or practically interfere with the other, and in the sense that, in this contact, it produces no obviously injurious results. But it is unnatural, and the hurtful or harmless character, as compared to the other, is different in degree merely, and not in kind, as both are alike artificial and powerful. No scientist has yet been able to show how or where the injurious contact first occurs. Whether it originates on the land where the wires are buried, or elsewhere on the circuit, and pursues its entire round, is a matter of speculation merely. The hurtful overflow or disturbance may, in fact, originate at a point entirely away from the telephone wire's intersection with the earth, and on land which the telephone company does not claim; but, assuming the contact and disturbance to commence there, then it could not work an injury, unless, in connection with that particular land, the complainant had undertaken to use the earth away from it as a circuit; and so the injury is not to the specific property, but to the circuit of the earth thus sought to be appropriated and monopolized. Complainant's use of the earth as a return circuit was, of course, on the theory we are treating it, a rightful appropriation by complainant, because that of a property of the earth for such as is common to all. But it cannot, for that very reason, be an exclusive or monopolistic appropriation. If a right at all, it can only be a natural, common right, and cannot be asserted against the exercise of a like right which may impair it, because it cannot be exclusive property; for such use of the earth as may be made exclusive by monopolizing can never be recognized as property.

Principles deduced from cases of poisoned air, polluted water, obstructed light, etc., are inapplicable, as drawn from plausible, but faulty, analogies. These are injuries resulting in specific places to persons having the right to the free and exclusive enjoyment of so much of these elements as are their own, or necessary to their own use. But such rights cannot be enlarged, and these cases made applicable to the case of a claim to use the earth for a special benefit from point of contact of a wire (part of an artificial circuit), on one's own property to any other remote point through lands not so owned, and through which the claimant could acquire right of way only by natural inheritance, in common with all mankind, or by purchase. If the right exists as a natural right, it must be common, and cannot be exclusive. It is not pretended by complainant that it has been acquired by purchase, and therefore it does not, as claimed by complainant, exist at all. That complainant's private property is not affected, independently of its claim to the use of the earth as a circuit, is manifest, for no electric fluid could affect such property in the form of land leased or owned by complainant, unless the circuit—the artificial circuit—was established.

The effect of this holding of the majority is to make the railroad company liable for injury to all property within the influence of its escaping electric current, for it is assumed that the value for telephonic use of all property within the influence of this current is impaired. If this be true, it is immaterial whether such property is now being so used or not. The destruction of its capability for such use would necessarily give the right to damages. It must follow, therefore, upon this theory, that all land within the range of the electric influence of defendant's circuit is impaired in value, though not a foot of it has any such value without connecting it with an artificial circuit. This injury, it appears to me, cannot, in fact, result, but it must be held to result on the theory of the majority. The assumption that complainant has the same right to the use of the electric circuit established over adjacent lands as it has to the support of adjacent land, use of surrounding air, or of water distantly flowing and finally passing through its property, is obviously fallacious, because all these are natural elements in natural condition, ultimately naturally brought, without artificial means or special appropriation thereby, for complainant's use. But complainant's claim to a special artificial use of the earth throughout that portion claimed by it, as well as by others, if it is a special artificial use, is not helped by reference to natural conditions, under which its right to the enjoyment of natural elements is conceded; for, if treated as a natural right, complainant's claim to the earth as a circuit cannot exist to the exclusion or hindrance of an equal natural right in another. The proposition is clear that, if it is an artificial right, complainant would have to show its claim to so much of the earth as it uses for a circuit as an owner, before, in any event, it could be exclusive. This it does not pretend to do, and, on this account, its claim must fail. If asserted as a natural right, it must be because it is common, and not exclusive. It must fail as such, because, if sustained at all, it must be sustained as exclusive. Complainant has, therefore, no real claim of ownership or superior common right, and, on this ground, its claim for damages should be denied.

I have discussed the questions involved only upon principle, but my conclusions on both propositions are sustained by authority. The first proposition is directly adjudged by the courts of last resort in New York and Ohio, and my conclusion as to the second seems to have the approval of the greater number of courts which have considered it, though not all together in theory. In the case of Hudson River Teleph. Co. v. Water-ollet Turnp. & R. Co. (decided by the court of appeals in 1892), 185 N. Y. 393, 17 L. R. A. 674, and reversing the decree of the supreme court of New York, cited by the majority, it was held that, the telephone company's use of the street being a subordinate one, it could not complain of injuries inflicted by the overflowing electric current of the railway company, because its right was subordinate to that of the railway company. To the same effect is the case of Cincinnati Inclined Plane R. Co. v. City & Suburban Teleph. Assn., 48 Ohio St. 890, 13 L. R. A. 584, decided by the supreme court of Ohio in 1891. It is proper to say, too, that the supreme court of Ohio in this case, which reversed his decree therein below, has not adopted the views of Judge Taft, elaborately quoted in the majority opinion in this case; nor do the conclusions of the supreme court of Ohio and court of appeals of New York, differing from those of Judge Taft and the supreme court of New York, depend upon statutes, or the form of the action, as might be inferred from the majority opinion. It is true that these cases were injunction cases, as was that also between these same parties to this case, reported in 42 Fed. Rep. 279, cited by the majority, but the questions determined in them adverse to the conclusions of the majority in this case were not settled, so far as questions we are discussing are concerned, upon construction of statutes, nor dependent upon form of action; and these states, therefore, by decisions of their courts of last resort, have ranged themselves on the other side of the question than that taken by the majority of this court. The weight of authority is against the holding of the majority in this case. I have not, however, attached much importance to the preponderance of decided cases. The question is practically a new one. The cases on it are few, the reasons for each often different from the others, and none absolutely conclusive. I have preferred to rest this dissent upon its own reasoning.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

J. M. ANDERSON, Plff. in Err.,
v.

S. H. RODGERS.

(58 Kan. 542.)

*1. The payee of a check, who fails to * Headnotes by ALLEN, J.

NOTE.—Sending check directly to drawee bank.

The decision in the above case holding it to be negligence in the holder of a check to send it directly to the drawee by mail for payment is an important one considering the frequency with which this practice is followed by banks, and especially in view of some difference in the authorities on the subject. The American cases, however, outside of New York state, are unanimous in support of the doctrine of the present case. Yet it is unquestionably a frequent practice in spite of these decisions, and as the cases on the subject are not at all numerous it may be that many bankers are not aware of them.

The earliest decision in this country which we have found is that of Farwell v. Curtis (1876) 7 Biss. 160, in which the court was of the opinion that sending a check by mail to the drawee would be at the risk of the sender; and where a draft was received in return four days after the check had been received the sender was held liable for the loss on failure to collect the draft. But in this case it was found that there was laches also in presenting the draft, and therefore the question of negligence in sending the check by mail to the drawee was not necessarily the basis of the decision.

But a direct decision to the effect that the collecting bank which sends a check directly to the drawee by mail is liable in case the draft which was received in return proves uncollectible when the check would have been paid if duly sent for presentment at the counter, is made in Merchants' Nat. Bank of Philadelphia v. Goodman (1885) 109 Pa. 422, 58 Am. Rep. 728, and this was also decided in Drovers' Nat. Bank v. Anglo-American Packing & Provision Co. (1886) 117 Ill. 100, 57 Am. Rep. 865.

Both of these cases also decided that a custom cannot be successfully set up as a justification for sending a check directly to the drawee bank by mail.

The same doctrine is recognized as sound in the case of Hazlett v. Commercial Nat. Bank of Philadelphia (1890) 132 Pa. 118. But in that case it was found that with due diligence loss would have been avoided notwithstanding the sending of the check by mail to the drawee, and that the owner of the check had ratified the act by asking to have the check held for a few days.

2. It is negligence in the holder of a check to send it directly to the drawee, residing in a distant place, for payment; and the holder is responsible for any loss occasioned by adopting such course.

check had ratified the act by asking to have the check held for a few days.

The correctness of this doctrine was also conceded in the case of Harvey v. Girard Nat. Bank (1888) 119 Pa. 212, in which a sight draft was sent by mail to the bank at which it was payable, but as the drawee took up the draft after the failure of the bank at which it was made payable, although he did so under protest, he was held to have no right of action to recover back the money which he had paid.

So a bank receiving for deposit a certificate of deposit issued by another bank and transmitting it by mail to the latter was held liable for the failure to obtain payment thereon when it would have been paid if duly sent for presentation. German Nat. Bank of Denver v. Burns (1890) 12 Colo. 539.

Again where a certificate of deposit was sent by a collecting bank the same rule was applied. But only nominal damages were allowed to the bank which sent it for collection where it was found to be in fault for the failure to collect it by reason of its long-continued failure to object after being notified of the sending, or to make any reply when requested to take steps to aid in collection. First Nat. Bank of Evansville v. Fourth Nat. Bank of Louisville (1893) 56 Fed. Rep. 967.

The doctrine of the above cases is directly denied in the New York case of McIntosh v. Tyler (1883) 47 Hun, 99, which decided that the fact of sending a check by mail through a collecting bank to the drawee for payment resulting in its dishonor, when it would have been paid if duly presented at the counter, does not constitute payment of the check or release the drawer from liability on the original indebtedness for which the check was given.

This is a decision of the general term of the supreme court relying on Indig v. National City Bank of Brooklyn (1880) 80 N. Y. 100, and Briggs v. Central Nat. Bank (1882) 89 N. Y. 182, 42 Am. Rep. 285, and refusing to follow the decisions of other states on the question. But the court of appeals in neither of the cases thus relied upon as authority really decided that exact question.

In the case of Briggs v. Central Nat. Bank, supra, the court recites the decision in the case of Indig

3. The Bank of H., as the agent of plaintiff, sent a check drawn by the defendant on the Bank of R., distant about fifty-five miles, to the Bank of R. by mail, with the request that it remit the amount in Kansas City exchange. The check was received by the Bank of R. on the evening of December 12. The Bank of H. continued to do business during all of the following day, receiving deposits and paying checks. On the evening of that day, after business hours, it deposited a letter enclosing the check, with the statement "No funds in bank," addressed to the Bank of H., which was received by the Bank of H. on the evening of the next day. The defendant had more than funds enough on deposit to pay the check. The bank did not open for business thereafter, and has never paid anything to either party. Held, that the loss must fall on the plaintiff.

(June 9, 1884.)

ERROR to the District Court for Hamilton County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount of a check drawn by plaintiff in favor of defendant which failed of collection because of the suspension of the bank upon which it was drawn. Reversed.

Statement by Allen, J.:

This action was brought on a check, of which the following is a copy: "Richfield,

v. National City Bank of Brooklyn, supra, as being to the effect that a collecting bank mailing a check or draft to the drawee does not constitute the drawee its agent to receive the proceeds or guarantee the drawee's solvency. But although the same judge wrote the opinion in both cases and ought to know what was decided in the Indig Case it did not in fact decide just that proposition. It did decide that where a note was sent by mail to the bank at which it was made payable and that bank returned a New York draft when it was in good credit, but failed before the draft was dishonored, the sender of the note was not liable. The court said: "This appears to be the ordinary mode of transacting such business and the defendant was bound only to adopt the ordinary mode," but that, however that might be, no injury appeared to have resulted from this mode of presentment. Furthermore it should be noticed that this was not a case of sending an instrument to the drawee or party liable to pay the instrument, but merely to the bank at which a note was made payable. And it may well be doubted that the mere fact that a note is made payable at a bank places the bank in the same position in reference to its collection thereof as if the bank was itself the debtor, although it is said in the Indig Case to make the note equivalent to a check drawn by the maker upon that bank.

In the case of Briggs v. Central Nat. Bank of New York, supra, the decision actually made was that an arrangement with the drawee bank by the collecting bank for the crediting of all collections in an account to be settled once a week, and the sending of a check drawn on this correspondent itself which was credited in accordance with this arrangement, made the collecting bank the debtor and discharged the drawer of the check on the insolvency of the drawee.

Careful analysis of these New York cases therefore shows that there is no direct decision of the court of last resort upholding the practice of mailing checks directly to the drawee. On the contrary there is a mere expression not necessary to the decision in the Indig Case approving the practice of mailing a note to the bank at which it is payable, and a recital of this decision in the case of Briggs v. Central Nat. Bank (1882) 89 N. Y. 123, 42 Am. Rep. 235, as if it were the case of a check mailed to the drawee. Therefore the decision of the general term of the supreme court denying the doctrine of the other states in reliance on the authority of these two cases is in itself the only direct authority in New York state to that effect. This decision itself is weakened by the fact that it is based on cases which do not exactly support it.

In the case of Shipsey v. Bowery Nat. Bank (1875) 50 N. Y. 465, a check held for collection was mailed in the ordinary course of business to the drawee bank and was lost in the mails. But the decision turned on the question of negligence in respect to giving notice to the owner of the check, and on account of such negligence the sending bank was held liable for the resulting loss consequent on the subsequent insolvency of the drawee.

In the case of People v. Merchants & Mechanics Bank of Troy (1879) 78 N. Y. 299, 34 Am. Rep. 532, a bank which sent checks by mail to the drawee when there were deposits to meet them and received in return a draft which proved worthless, was denied the right to recover from the receiver of the drawee bank on a claim that the deposit was thereby impressed with a trust. There is no discussion in the case as to the liability of the sending bank to the owner of the checks or on the question whether or not it was itself the owner.

In England the cases have not much discussed the question, but in several the practice of sending checks by mail to the drawee bank through the country clearing-house has been recognized, but the real question in controversy in nearly all of these cases has been the question of time of presentment. This was the fact in Hare v. Henty (1861) 10 C. B. N. S. 65, 30 L. J. C. P. 302, 7 Jur. N. S. 523, 4 L. T. N. S. 363, 9 Week. Rep. 738; Bailey v. Bodenham (1864) 16 C. B. N. S. 238, 10 L. T. N. S. 422, 33 L. J. C. P. 252, 10 Jur. N. S. 821, 12 Week. Rep. 865; Prideaux v. Criddle (1890) L. R. 4 Q. B. 455, 38 L. J. Q. B. 232, 20 L. T. N. S. 695, 10 Best & S. 515; Heywood v. Pickering (1874) L. R. 9 Q. B. 423, 43 L. J. Q. B. 145.

In Bailey v. Bodenham, supra, while the question was not decided, Erie, J., said he was inclined to think presentment by mail to the drawee was a good presentment. And in Prideaux v. Criddle, supra, while this point seems to have been but slightly insisted upon, if in fact it was made at all by counsel, the court refers to this statement of Erie, J., in the preceding case, and says: "A presentment through the postoffice is a reasonable mode of presentment; it is a very common mode, and having regard to the commercial business of the country it may be said to be a proper mode of presentment." The English cases, however, stand on a somewhat different footing from the American cases by reason of the recognized custom in respect to the country clearing-house in which the country banks are represented by London correspondents.

The result of the American decisions is entire unanimity in holding that it is not proper to send a check by mail directly to the drawee for payment, except in New York state, where, as shown above, the decision to the contrary cites as authority two other cases which do not exactly decide the question. Considering the great importance of New York decisions on commercial questions, it is unfortunate for the clearness of the law on this question that the New York cases are in any degree at variance with other American cases. B. A. R.

Kansas, Dec. 9th, 1889. Bank of Richfield pay to S. H. Rodgers, or order, two hundred and fifty dollars, to apply on lumber bill Morton county court-house. $250.00. J. M. Anderson." The case was tried on an agreed statement of facts, which is as follows: "That on the 9th day of December, 1889, defendant was indebted to plaintiff in the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars. That on said 9th day of December, 1889, defendant executed the check, a copy of which is set forth in the petition, and delivered the same to the plaintiff through the mail. That said check was executed and delivered and received in the ordinary course of business, with reference to said indebtedness; but no special agreement was entered into as to whether it should be received as payment, or otherwise. That said check was received by plaintiff at Syracuse, in Hamilton county, Kan. That the Bank of Richfield, upon which said check was drawn, was situate at Richfield, in Morton county, a distance of about fifty-five miles from Syracuse, and that there was a daily mail between the two places, leaving each place at 7 o'clock in the morning, and arriving at about 7 o'clock in the evening. That, at the time of the transaction herein set forth, there was at Richfield another bank, doing a regular banking business, known as the Morton County Bank. That on the 11th day of December, 1889, plaintiff indorsed said check by writing upon the back of the same, to wit 'S. H. Rodgers,' and deposited the same for collection and credit of his account, when collected, with the Hamilton County Bank, a banking institution, doing a general banking business in Syracuse, with which said bank said plaintiff did his regular banking business. That on the 11th day of December, 1889, said Hamilton County Bank indorsed said check as follows: 'Pay Bank of Richfield, cashier or order, for account of Hamilton County Bank, Syracuse, Kansas. Frank Bentley, Cashier,'—and deposited the same in the mail in an inclosure directed to the Bank of Richfield, at Richfield, with a request that the said Bank of Richfield remit the amount of said check to said Hamilton County Bank, by mail, in exchange on Kansas City, less charge for exchange. That said check reached Richfield on the 12th day of December, 1889, after business hours. That on the 18th day of December, 1889, the Bank of Richfield inclosed said check in a letter addressed to the Hamilton Bank of Syracuse, and inclosed therewith a paper, on which were written the words following: 'No funds in bank,'—said check being deposited in the mail by the bank after banking hours. That said check was received at Syracuse on the 14th day of December, 1889, after business hours; and on the 15th day of December, 1889, plaintiff was notified of the nonpayment of said check. That on the 16th day of December, 1889, plaintiff verbally notified defendant of the nonpayment of said check, and demanded the amount thereof from defendant, and defendant refused to pay the same, or any part thereof. That plaintiff has never received the amount of said check, or any part of the same. That, at the times herein set forth, defendant had the sum of two hundred and ninety-five dollars to his credit with the Bank of Richfield, subject to check. That on the 14th day of December, 1889, said bank of Richfield made an assignment for benefit of its creditors, and never opened for business after the 18th day of December, 1889. That said check was never charged to defendant by the Bank of Richfield, and the amount thereof was never deducted from his credit on the books of said bank, nor was any credit given to S. H. Rodgers nor the Hamilton County Bank by the said Bank of Richfield; and, at the time of the failure of the Bank of Richfield, the full amount of two hundred and ninety-five dollars was to the credit of said defendant on the books of said Bank of Richfield. That the said sum of two hundred and ninety-five dollars to his credit with said Bank of Richfield was entirely lost to defendant, and he has never received any part of the same. That said Bank of Richfield was open, doing general business, receiving deposits, and paying money upon checks during its regular banking hours, on the 18th day of December, 1889."

The court thereupon rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the amount of the check.

Mr. H. R. Boyd for plaintiff in error.

Mr. George E. Morgan for defendant in error.

Allen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only question we deem it necessary to consider is whether the negligence of Rodgers and his agent, the Hamilton County Bank, in sending the check directly to the drawee, operates, under the facts agreed upon, to discharge Anderson from liability. It is true, as was said by this court in Gregg v. George, 16 Kan. 546, that, "in order to charge the drawee of a check, the same strict rule of diligence in making demand and giving notice of nonpayment does not obtain as in cases of ordinary bills of exchange. As a general rule, he is not discharged unless he suffers some loss in consequence of the delay of the holder." If the drawee of a check has no funds on deposit to meet it, or if, having funds in the bank at the time, he afterwards withdraws them, and the check is not paid on that account, the drawee, having suffered no injury by reason of delay in its presentment, will not be discharged from liability; but when a person, having funds on deposit in a bank, draws a check against them, the holder of the check, if he delays its presentment, assumes the risk of the failure of the bank. It is said in Daniel on Negotiable Instruments (sec. 1586): "The fact that the check is presumed to be drawn against deposited funds makes it of even greater importance than, in the case of a bill, that a check should be presented, and that the drawer should be notified of nonpayment, in order that he may speedily inquire into the causes of refusal, and be placed in a position to secure his funds which were deposited in the bank." The rule, however, as to the time allowed the holder for presentment of a check, in order to relieve him from the risk of loss by failure of the drawer, is definitely fixed by the authorities: (1) Where the payee to whom the check is delivered receives it in the place where the bank on which it is drawn is located, he must present it by the close of banking hours on the next business day. (2) Where the check, as in this case, is drawn on a bank located at a place distant from that in which it was received by the payee, it must be sent for presentment for payment by mail on the next secular day after it is received, and presented on the next day after its receipt. 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 1592, and cases cited.

In this case the check seems to have been forwarded for payment in due time, but it was sent directly to the drawee by mail, with the request that the bank of Richfield remit the amount by mail in exchange on Kansas City. The Hamilton County Bank therefore selected the drawee of the check as its agent for collection. That this was negligence is well settled by the authorities. It is said in Daniel on Negotiable Instruments (vol. 1, § 328a): "For the purposes of collection, the collecting bank must employ a suitable sub-agent. It must not transmit its checks or bills directly to the bank or party by whom payment is to be made, with the request that remittances be made therefor. It is considered that no firm, bank, corporation, or individual can be deemed a suitable agent, in contemplation of law, to enforce in behalf of another a claim against itself." This proposition is sustained by abundant authorities. Drovers' Nat. Bank v. Angle American Packing & Provision Co. 117 Ill. 100, 57 Am. Rep. 855; German Nat. Bank of Denver v. Burns, 12 Colo. 539; Merchants Nat. Bank of Philadelphia v. Goodman, 109 Pa. 422, 58 Am. Rep. 728; First Nat. Bank of Evansville v. Fourth Nat. Bank of Louisville, 6 C. C. A. 188, 56 Fed. Rep. 967; Farwell v. Courtis, 7 Bias. 160, Fed. Cas. No. 4,690.

It is insisted that inasmuch as the check was forwarded in due time, and came into the hands of the drawee, which refused payment, and returned the check with the statement "No funds in bank," the defendant was not injured by the mode of presentment; that an answer of "No funds," sent by mail, is as effectual a refusal to pay as though made across the counter at the bank. Where due presentment is not made, the burden of proof is upon the holder of the check to show that the drawer has not suffered injury. Little v. Phenix Bank, 2 Hill, 425; Ford v. McClung, 5 W. Va. 166; 2 Parsons, Bills & Notes, 71; 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 1588; Daniels v. Kyle, 1 Ga. 304. From the agreed statement, it appears that the check reached Richfield on the 12th of December, 1889, after business hours; that the bank on which it was drawn was open, doing a general business, receiving deposits, and paying money on checks during its regular banking hours on the 13th. During that day a letter was written, addressed to the Hamilton Bank, with which was inclosed the check, and the statement "No funds in bank." This letter was deposited in the post-office after banking hours, and received at Syracuse after business hours on the 14th. The refusal to pay was therefore not communicated to any one until the 14th. Can it be presumed that, if the check had been regularly presented over the counter to the Richfield bank on the 13th, a false answer would have been given, as was in fact given by letter, and payment refused? It is admitted that the defendant had more than money enough to his credit to meet the check. Had presentment been made by another agent of the plaintiff, and payment refused, steps might have been taken immediately to protect the drawer's rights; but, the check being in the hands of the drawee, of course no effort would be made by it to prosecute itself, and the fact that payment was refused was not communicated to the Hamilton County Bank until the night of the day following the last one on which the Richfield bank was open for business. It might be that the answer "No funds in bank" was literally true, and that the Richfield bank had not the money with which to make payment at any time during the day of the 13th; but we are not at liberty to indulge in any presumption of that kind, the agreed facts showing that it received deposits and paid checks during the whole of that business day. This case must be decided in accordance with established principles; and the fact that the Richfield Bank was a small concern in a very sparsely peopled part of the state, and perhaps never had any large amount of funds in its possession, cannot be made a pretext for breaking down those wholesome rules of business which have been built up and defined with so much care and precision. The request in this case by letter was not an ordinary demand of payment, calling for current funds, but was a request for Kansas City Exchange, which the drawee would of course be at perfect liberty to refuse. In cases of this kind, a hardship necessarily results to one party or another. Courts, in their decisions, must be guided by fixed rules. The plaintiff, having trusted in the good faith of the Richfield bank by sending the check to it, must bear the burden of the loss occasioned by its failure occurring after the day on which regular presentment should have been made.

The judgment is reversed, and the case remanded, with directions to enter judgment on the agreed statement of facts in favor of defendant, Anderson, for costs.

All the Justices concur.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

Lydia BUTLER et al.

v.

John FITZGERALD et al., Appts.

(.....Neb.....)

*1. The statute of this state, prescribing in what real estate of the husband a wife shall be entitled to dower, is but declaratory of the common law.

2. When lawful marriage of a man and woman and the ownership of real estate by the former concur, an inchoate dower right attaches, in the nature of a charge or incumbrance upon the real estate of the husband; and when such right has once attached, it remains and continues a charge or incumbrance upon the real estate, unless released by the voluntary act of the wife or extinguished by operation of law, and is consummated upon the death of the husband.

3. The rule of caveat emptor applies to a purchaser of real estate at a judicial sale thereof on execution; and the conveyance made in pursuance thereof conveys no greater estate than would a quitclaim deed for the real estate, executed by the execution debtor.

4. The sale of the real estate of the husband under execution, on a judgment against him alone, followed by judicial confirmation and conveyance, does not extinguish the inchoate dower right of the wife in such real estate, and upon the death of the husband the wife is entitled to have her dower assigned out of such real estate.

5. Real estate which has been sold under execution on a judgment against the husband alone—such sale followed by judicial confirmation and conveyance—is real estate aliened by the husband, within the meaning of section 7, chapter 23, Comp. Stat. 1893.

6. The phrase "enhanced in value," found in section 7, chapter 23, Comp. Stat. 1893, is limited in its meaning to appreciation in the value of real estate by reason of improvements put thereon by the alienee.

7. In estimating the value of real estate aliened by the husband during his marriage, for the purpose of assigning his widow dower therein, the value of the real estate is to be estimated as it is at the time of the assignment of dower, excluding the increase in value of the real estate resulting from improvements made thereon by the alienee subsequent to the date of alienation.

(January 2, 1895.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court of Lancaster County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover dower in land which defendants had procured under a judgment against plaintiff's husband during his lifetime. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. Deweese & Hall and Abbott, Selleck & Lane, for appellants:

*Headnotes by RAGAN, C.

NOTE.—That the above decision follows the stronger current of authorities, see note to Flowers v. Flowers (Ga.) 18 L. R. A. 75, 27 L. R. A.

A dower interest is the right of the widow to the use for the term of her natural life of one third of the real estate of which the husband was seised during marriage, and of which she had not been barred by voluntary release, conveyance, or operation of law.

Hurste v. Hotaling, 20 Neb. 178.

In estimating dower in lands aliened in the husband's lifetime the value must be determined at the time when so aliened, without any regard to any subsequent increase in value from whatever cause.

Guerin v. Moore, 25 Minn. 462; Walker v. Schuyler, 10 Wend. 480; Dorchester v. Coventry, 11 Johns. 510; Humphrey v. Phinney, 2 Johns. 484; Allan v. Smith, 1 Cow. 180; Shaw v. White, 18 Johns. 179; Dolf v. Bassett, 15 Johns. 21; Marble v. Lewis, 53 Barb. 482, 1 Am. Lead. Cas. Real Prop. 400, 401.

Messrs. Leese & Starling and Stewart & Munger, for appellees:

The title acquired in lands by a purchaser at a sale under an execution is that only of the person against whom the execution is issued.

Code Civ. Proc. §§. 499, 500; Mansfield v. Gregory, 8 Neb. 432; Westheimer v. Reed, 15 Neb. 662; Dayton v. Corser, 18 L. R. A. 80, 51 Minn. 406.

The sale of real estate under execution on a judgment against the husband alone does not extinguish the wife's right to dower.

Gould v. Luckett, 47 Miss. 116; Cowan v. Lindsay, 80 Wis. 587; Parmenter v. Binkley, 28 Ohio St. 32; Dingman v. Dingman, 39 Ohio St. 172; Mandel v. McClave, 5 L. R. A. 519; 46 Ohio St. 407; Combs v. Young, 4 Yerg. 218, 26 Am. Dec. 225; Rutherford v. Read, 6 Humph. 423; 1 Scribner, Dower, p. 603; Snyder v. Snyder, 6 Mich. 472; Den v. Fretz, 22 Am. Dec. 710, 711, note; Freem. Judgm. § 361 a; Gove v. Cather, 23 Ill. 684, 76 Am. Dec. 711; Shaeffer v. Weed, 8 Ill. 511; Hamilton v. Southern Nevada Gold & Silver Min. Co. 83 Fed. Rep. 563; Dayton v. Corser, supra.

There is no reason or justice in the claim that by the Act of 1889 the valuable right of appellee was taken away from her and given to appellant.

Strong v. Clem, 12 Ind. 87, 74 Am. Dec. 200; Harrow v. Myers, 29 Ind. 469; Bowen v. Preston, 48 Ind. 876; Moore v. Kent, 37 Iowa 23, 18 Am. Rep. 1; Re Rausch's Will, 85 Minn. 291.

The law in force at the date of the alienation controls the rights of the widow as to dower.

Wade, Retrospective Laws, §§ 179-183; Moore v. Kent, supra; Peirce v. O'Brien, 29 Fed. Rep. 402; Kennerly v. Missouri Ins. Co. 11 Mo. 204.

In determining the value of appellee's interest, the value of the property, exclusive of improvements, at the date of the husband's death, should be taken.

Maxwell, Code Pl. 164; People v. Williams, 64 Cal. 87; Clifton Iron Co. v. Dye, 87 Ala. 468; Davis v. Kobe, 36 Minn. 214; Worcester Nat. Bank v. Cheney, 94 Ill. 480; 1 Rice, Ev. 80; Thompson v. Morrow, 5 Serg. & R. 289, 9 Am. Dec. 353; 1 Am. Lead. Cas. Real Prop. 291; Johnston v. Vandayke, 6 McLean, 422; Shirts v. Shirts, 5 Watts, 255; Powell v. Mon- son & B. Mfg. Co. 3 Mason, 347; Moher v. Moher, 15 Me. 371; Allen v. McCoy, 8 Ohio, 418; Smith v. Addleman, 5 Blackf. 406; Wall v. Hill, 7 Dana, 173; Rawlins v. Buttel, 1 Houst. (Del.) 224; Wooldridge v. Wilkins, 8 How. (Miss.) 360; Duneth v. Bank of United States, 6 Ohio, 76; Green v. Tennant, 2 Harr. (Del.) 336; Bowis v. Berry, 1 Md. Ch. 452; Summers v. Babb, 13 Ill. 483; Fritz v. Tudor, 1 Bush, 28; Boyd v. Carlton, 69 Me. 200, 31 Am. Rep. 269; Price v. Hobbs, 47 Md. 359; Manning v. Labores, 33 Me. 343; Hobbs v. Harvey, 16 Me. 80; 5 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 929, note 11.

The statute in our state is in accordance with the rule of the common law, and the words used therein, "the lands have been enhanced in value since the alienation," mean improvements put upon the land by the tenant or his grantor.

Thornburn v. Doscher, 82 Fed. Rep. 810; Allen v. McCoy, Powell v. Monson & B. Mfg. Co. and Duneth v. Bank of United States, supra.

The purpose of section 7 of our Statute is to settle and establish the common-law rule as to the right of the widow to dower in improvements made by the alienor of the husband.

Doe v. Guinnell, 1 Q. B. 682; 2 Scribner, Dower, 2d ed. 604-606; 2 Scribner, Dower, Park & Perkins' ed., p. 607; Humphrey v. Phinney, 2 Johns. 484; Fritz v. Tudor, and Thornburn v. Doscher, supra; Cowan v. Lindsay, 30 Wis. 587; Westbrook v. Vanderburgh, 31 Mich. 30; Allen v. McCoy, Duneth v. Bank of United States, and Powell v. Monson & B. Mfg. Co. supra; Baden v. McKenny, 7 Mackey, 268; Gore v. Brazier, 3 Mass. 544, 3 Am. Dec. 182; Thompson v. Morris, 5 Serg. & R. 289, 9 Am. Dec. 858; Johnston v. Vandyke, 6 McLean, 422; Moher v. Moher, 15 Me. 371; Boyd v. Carlton, 69 Me. 200, 31 Am. Rep. 268; Price v. Hobbs, 47 Md. 359; 5 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 929, note 11; 2 Scribner, Dower, §§ 85-89, p. 626.

A sale upon execution is not an alienation within the meaning of section 7.

Broom & Hadley's Com. chaps. 21-23, *555; Jones v. Jones, 71 Wis. 513.

Ragan, C., filed the following opinion:

It appears, from a stipulation of the parties to this suit in the record, that the material facts in this case are: That Lydia Butler and David Butler were husband and wife, and resided, as such, in this state from the year 1866 until David Butler's death, in May, 1891, and that Lydia Butler still resides in this state; that on the 6th of October, 1879, David Butler was the owner in fee simple of certain real estate, which on said day was levied upon by an execution issued on a judgment obtained against David Butler alone, and sold to satisfy such judgment; that John Fitzgerald became the purchaser of said real estate at said execution sale, and said sale was followed by a judicial confirmation and conveyance to him of said real estate. Lydia Butler brought this suit to the district court of Lancaster county against John Fitzgerald and others, to recover her dower in said real estate, which had been sold and conveyed under execution as aforesaid. She had judgment, and John Fitzgerald and others interested in said real estate have appealed. The stipulation of facts referred to, and on which the case was tried in the court below, provides that, if the court shall find that Lydia Butler was entitled to dower in said real estate, the court shall ascertain the value of such dower interest, and render judgment therefor in her favor; that said Lydia Butler agrees to accept a gross sum of money in lieu of said dower.

The two important questions presented by this appeal are:

1. Does the sale of the real estate of a husband under execution, on a judgment against him alone,—followed by judicial confirmation and conveyance—extinguish the dower interest of the widow of said husband in said real estate? Blackstone defines "dower" at common law thus: "Tenant in dower" is where the husband of a woman is seised of an estate of inheritance and dies. In this case the wife shall have a third part of all the lands and tenements whereof he was seised at any time during the coverture, to hold for herself for the term of her natural life." And he further says that the object of the common law in giving a widow dower in the estate of her husband was "to provide for the sustenance of the widow, and for the nurture and education of the younger children." Bl. Com. bk. 2, pp. 128, 129. Section 1, chap. 23, p. 401, Comp. Stat. 1893, provides: "The widow of every deceased person shall be entitled to dower or the use, during her natural life, of one-third part of all the lands whereof her husband was seised, of all (an) estate of inheritance at any time during the marriage unless she is lawfully barred thereof." It will be seen that our statute in the matter of a widow's dower follows the rule of the common law, or, more properly speaking, the statute is but declaratory of the common law. In Scribner on Dower (vol. 2, p. 2, § 2) it is said: "It will be observed that this estate [dower] arises solely by operation of law, and not by force of any contract, expressed or implied, between the parties. It is the silent effect of the relation entered into by them, not as in itself incidental to that relation or as implied by the marriage contract, but merely as that contract calls into operation the positive institutions of the law." And it was expressly held in Shearer v. Ranger, 22 Pick. 447, that "an inchoate right of dower is an existing incumbrance on land, within the meaning of the covenant against incumbrances." However this may be, it is clear that, "when lawful marriage of a man and woman and the ownership of real estate by the former concur, an inchoate dower right attaches, in the nature of a charge or incumbrance upon the real estate of the husband." Under certain conditions, unnecessary to notice here, the dower right may never attach; but when it has once attached it remains and continues a charge or incumbrance upon the real estate, unless released by the voluntary act of the wife or extinguished by operation of law, and is consummate upon the death of the husband, and in certain other contingencies not involved in this case, provided for by section 23 of chapter 25 of the Compiled Statutes, entitled "Divorce and All mony." In this case none of the conditions existed which prevented the inchoate dower right of Lydia Butler from attaching the real estate of her husband owned by him at the time of his marriage to her, or acquired by him thereafter. The husband is dead; and we now proceed to inquire whether his widow, within the meaning of section 1, chapter 23, quoted above, has been or is "lawfully barred" of a dower interest in the real estate in controversy. The rule of the common law as to the effect of a husband's acts during the coverture, on the dower interest of his wife in his real estate, is thus stated by Scribner on Dower (vol. 1, p. 603, § 1): "After the right of dower has once attached, it is not in the power of the husband alone to defeat it by any act in the nature of an alienation or charge. It is a right attaching in law, which, although it may never become absolute,—as if the wife died in the lifetime of the husband,—yet, from the moment that the facts of marriage and seisin concur, it is so fixed on the land as to become a title paramount to that of any person claiming under the husband by subsequent act. The alienation of the husband, therefore, whether voluntary, as by deed or will, or involuntary, as by bankruptcy or otherwise, will confer no title on the alienee as against the wife in respect of her dower, but she will be entitled to recover against such alienee in the same manner as she would have recovered against the heir of the husband had the latter died seised."

In the case at bar the real estate in controversy was not "aliened" by the husband, as that phrase is ordinarily understood. He was deprived of the title to this real estate involuntarily, and we may presume that the only act of his which led to his being deprived of his real estate by the law was his voluntarily contracting the debt made the basis of the judgment under which the real estate was sold. The decisions of the courts of last resort of the states in construing statutes like our own, and the decisions of the courts of last resort of the states whose statutes do not define dower, but follow the common-law rule, sustain the proposition quoted above from Scribner, as to the inability of a husband, by any voluntary act of his, to bar his wife's right of dower to his real estate after such right has once attached, either directly or indirectly. In Pifer v. Ward, 8 Blackf. 252, it was held that "if a mechanic's lien accrue after the employer's marriage, and the employer die after the accruing of the lien, the right of dower of the employer's widow will be paramount to the lien." And in Bishop v. Boyle, 9 Ind. 169, 68 Am. Dec. 615, it was held that "the widow's right of dower extends to and includes a house erected on land of her husband, and her claim is superior to a mechanic's lien for which the property was sold under a decree against the husband to enforce the lien." The court said: "The wife's dower is a favorite of the law, not resting in contract or resulting from the marriage relation. Her's is the elder lien. The mechanic bestows his labor with a knowledge of her prior right to the real estate, and he knows that the house he is building, as brick is added to brick and nail after nail is driven, becomes real estate. He may protect himself by security, or not venture. She is passive, and can do nothing. It is for this reason that she is declared to be a favorite of the law." See also Mark v. Murphy, 76 Ind. 534. In Shaeffer v. Weed, 8 U. S. 511, it was held that "a widow's dower cannot be affected by the lien created by the statute for the benefit of mechanics," etc., "but she is entitled to dower of all the real estate of which her husband was seised during coverture, unless she had released it in the form prescribed by law." In Gove v. Cather, 23 Ill. 634, 76 Am. Dec. 711, it was held: "The enforcement of a mechanic's lien for improvements made by the husband in his lifetime will not cut off his wife's right of dower, even to the extent of the value of such improvements." See also Dingman v. Dingman, 39 Ohio St. 172. In Grady v. McCorkle, 57 Mo. 172, 17 Am. Rep. 676, William Grady owned certain lands, and agreed with his son Leonard that, if the latter would go on the lands and improve them, he would convey the same to him by way of advancement, and charge him with their value. Leonard took possession of the lands, and made improvements on them, and occupied the lands until his death. William Grady died, not having conveyed the lands to Leonard. The widow and heirs of Leonard Grady brought a suit against the widow and heirs of William Grady for specific performance of William Grady's contract, and the court decreed a specific performance of the contract. The widow of William Grady was a party to this suit, and served with process, but made no appearance. After this the widow of William Grady brought suit for her dower interest in the lands, and the court held: "The alienation of real estate by the husband, whether voluntary, as by deed or will, or involuntary, as by proceedings against him or otherwise, will confer no title on the alienee, as against the wife, in respect to her dower;" and that the suit for specific performance of the contract made by the widow's husband, and the decree enforcing such contract, did not bar the widow's dower rights, as they were not drawn in question in the specific performance suit; that the decree in that case had the same effect, and no more, than a deed would have had executed by William Grady alone at the time the decree was rendered, had he then been living. Section 8, chapter 46, Minn. Gen. Stat. 1878, provides that a surviving husband or wife shall be entitled to and shall hold in fee simple an undivided one-third of all lands of which the deceased was at any time during the marriage seised or possessed. A wife owned certain real estate. A judgment was obtained against the wife, and her lands levied upon and sold to satisfy the judgment. The wife then died, and the husband brought suit against the purchasers of the real estate at the execution sale to recover his rights in said real estate; and in Dayton v. Corser, 51 Minn. 406, 18 L. R. A. 80, the supreme court of Minnesota held that "the inchoate contingent interest of a husband or wife in real estate owned by the other, fixed [by the statute just quoted], and commonly called the 'dower right,' is not divested by a transfer of title from the owner of the property to a purchaser at an execution sale founded upon a judgment against such owner." The court said: "It hardly seems necessary to cite authorities to the proposition that at common law a wife could not be deprived of her dower rights in the real estate of her husband through a sale upon execution on a judgment obtained against him subsequently to the marriage." See also Barker v. Parker, 17 Mass. 564.

It is to be remembered that the language of our statute is that the widow shall have dower in all the real estate of which her husband was seised during the marriage, "unless she is lawfully barred thereof." Keeping in view the nature of a dower interest as defined by the common law, and the reason and spirit of the common law on the subject, and the authorities just cited, we would feel safe in saying that the dower rights of the appellee in this case were not extinguished or barred by the sale on execution of her husband's real estate during his life, on a judgment rendered against him. But our statute has not remitted the courts for guidance entirely to the common law, and common-law decisions in respect of dower, for determining in what manner a wife or widow may be lawfully barred of her dower rights. Sections 12, 13, 15, chapter 23, Comp. Stat. 1893, provide in what manner a married woman may bar her dower rights in the real estate of her husband. Substantially, these provisions provide that a married woman shall be deemed to have released or waived her rights to dower in her husband's real estate only by her voluntary act or contract. And section 48, chapter 73, Comp. Stat. 1893, provides that a married woman, "to convey her right of dower she must execute a deed with or without her husband." And section 7 of said chapter 23 provides that "when a widow shall be entitled to dower out of any lands which shall have been aliened by the husband in his lifetime . . . that such lands shall be estimated in setting out the widow's dower according to their value at the time when they were so aliened." This statute is of itself a legislative recognition of the inability of a husband to deprive his wife of her dower rights in his real estate by a direct or indirect alienation thereof; and section 477 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that judgments shall be a lien upon the lands of a debtor; and section 491a of the Code provides that, when an execution shall be levied upon real estate, the sheriff shall cause the interest of the execution debtor in such real estate to be appraised at its real value; and by sections 499 and 500 of the Code it is provided, in substance, that the sale of a debtor's real estate on execution, and the conveyance of such real estate to the purchaser thereof at such sale, shall vest in such purchaser the interest which the execution debtor had in said real estate at the time the judgment under which it was sold became a lien thereon. In the case at bar, David Butler had the title to the real estate in controversy at and before the time it was sold on execution, but that title was incumbered or burdened with the in-choate dower interest of his wife, the appellee; and when the judgment was rendered against David Butler it became a lien upon the interest of David Butler in said real estate, but that lien was subject to the inchoate dower interest of the wife therein. When this real estate was sold, and the sale confirmed, and the sheriff executed a deed in pursuance thereof, he conveyed to Fitzgerald all the interest that David Butler had in this real estate; and such purchaser took the title to this real estate charged with the same burdens and incumbrances thereon that it was charged with while the title rested in David Butler,—the wife's inchoate dower right. The rule of cestui emptor applies to a purchaser of real estate at a judicial sale thereof on execution; and the conveyance made to such a purchaser by the sheriff has no greater effect and conveys no greater estate than would a quitclaim deed for the premises executed by the execution debtor. Norton v. Nebraska Loan & T. Co. 85 Neb. 466, and 40 Neb. 394; Hamilton v. Southern Nevada Gold & Silver Min. Co. 83 Fed. Rep. 562. What the law does not permit a husband to do directly he may not do by indirection, and as we have seen it was not in the power of David Butler, by voluntarily alienating his real estate during his marriage, to deprive his wife of her dower rights therein, it logically follows that the sale of David Butler's real estate on execution, on a judgment rendered against him alone, did not bar or extinguish the dower right of his wife or widow therein and it is immaterial whether the debt on which such judgment was rendered was contracted voluntarily or otherwise by the husband. We accordingly hold and decide that the sale of the real estate of a husband under execution on a judgment against him alone, followed by judicial confirmation and conveyance, does not extinguish the inchoate dower of the wife in such real estate, and that upon the death of the husband the widow is entitled to have her dower assigned out of such real estate.

2. The second question is, in estimating the value of the real estate in controversy for the purpose of assigning the widow her dower therein, whether its value at the date of the judicial conveyance made thereof in pursuance of its sale on execution, or its value at the date of the husband's death, shall be adopted. At common law the rule was, if a husband died seised of real estate, in estimating its value, for assigning his widow dower therein, its value at the date of the assignment of dower was adopted. 2 Scribner, Dower, § 80, p. 595. The present English rule is that, where the title to real estate is in an alienee of the husband, in estimating the value of such real estate, for the purpose of assigning the husband's widow dower therein, the value of the real estate at the time of the husband's death is taken; and, if improvements have taken place between the time of the husband's death and the time of the assignment of dower, then the value must be taken at the date of the assignment. The common-law rule for estimating the value of real estate out of which dower is to be assigned to a widow, the title to which real estate is at the time in an alienee or a grantee of an alienee of the husband, is stated in some old English cases found in Scribner on Dower (vol. 2, p. 605) as follows: "If a man be seised of land in fee, and take a wife, and enfeof a stranger of the land, and the feoffee builds thereupon a castle or mansion house, or other buildings, or otherwise improves it, so that it is worth more by the year than when it was in the possession of the husband, the wife shall not have her dower but according to the value it was of in the time of her husband." "E., who was the wife of R., demands one-third part of three acres of land, with the appurtenances, in E., as her dower, against W.; and W. comes and says that he bought the land of her husband, naked and unbuilt upon, and he built upon it, and he willingly allows to her her third part, saving the buildings to himself; and therefore she had her seisin, saving to the said W. the houses built by him," etc., "because he had, without the buildings, where she might have her land," etc. In Humphrey v. Phinney, 2 Johns. 484, Chief Justice Kent, who delivered the opinion in that case, cited the old English cases just quoted, and declared that "such was the law as understood and declared in the most ancient decisions of which we have any record." The American rule follows the rule of the common law. 2 Scribner, Dower, p. 612. See the rule stated, and the authorities collated in support thereof, in 5 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 929, note 2. Section 7, chapter 28, Comp. Stat. 1893, provides: "When a widow shall be entitled to dower out of any lands which shall have been aliened by the husband in his lifetime, and such lands shall have been enhanced in value after the alienation, such lands shall be estimated in setting out the widow's dower, according to their value at the time when they were so aliened." This statute is declaratory of and follows the common-law rule. But the real estate in this controversy was sold under execution on a judgment rendered against the husband alone. Was the judicial sale of this real estate, and the confirmation and conveyance made in pursuance thereof, an "alienation" of such real estate by the husband, within the meaning of this statute? It would seem that the alienation mentioned in the statute meant some voluntary act of the husband. The word "alienate" means, "To transfer property to another; to make a thing another man's. In common law, to alienate realty is voluntarily to part with ownership in it, by bargain and sale, conveyance, gift, or will." "Alienation" means, "An act whereby one man transfers the property and possession of lands, tenements, or other things to another." Anderson, Law Dict. But in Ayer v. Spring, 9 Mass. 8, it was held that, "where land was taken by execution from a husband, the wife was held to be dowable in the land, as it existed at the time of the extent of the execution, and not in the erection or improvements afterwards made." And in McClanahan v. Porter, 10 Mo. 746, it was held that "a purchaser of lands under execution against the husband occupies the same position as the alienee of the husband." To the same effect, see Price v. Hobbs, 47 Md. 359.

97 L. R. A.

Wood v. Morgan, 56 Ala. 397. These authorities are quoted with approval, or rather without dissent, in 2 Scribner on Dower, p. 612. We feel constrained, therefore, to hold that real estate which has been sold under execution on a judgment against the husband alone, such sale confirmed, and a conveyance made in pursuance thereof, is real estate aliened by the husband, within the meaning of said section 7 of said chapter 28.

It appears from the stipulation of facts in this case that the real estate in controversy at the date of the judicial conveyance made thereof, in pursuance of its sale on execution, was of a certain value; and that the value of the real estate at the date of David Butler's death, exclusive of improvements thereon, was of a different value. The contention of the appellants is that, in estimating the value of this real estate for the purpose of assigning Mrs. Butler dower therein, its value at the date of the judicial conveyance thereof made in pursuance of its sale on execution should be taken; while the appellee contends that the real estate as it existed at the date of David Butler's death, excluding improvements made thereon since the date of the sheriff's deed, should be the one adopted. The statute (said section 7 of said chapter 28) provides that, in estimating the value of the real estate for the purpose of the widow's dower therein, its value at the time it was aliened shall be taken, when such real estate shall have been enhanced in value after the alienation. We are thus brought to the consideration of the question, What is the meaning of "enhanced in value" in the statute? Does it mean an appreciation and increase in value from any and all causes, or is it limited in its meaning to appreciation in the value of the real estate by reason of improvements put thereon by the alienee? In Thornburn v. Doecher, 82 Fed. Rep. 810, the precise question arose, and the court held that, "in estimating the value of a widow's dower in land aliened by the husband in his lifetime, she ought to have the benefit of the increase in value between the date of such alienation and the death of the husband, not arising from improvements made or placed thereon." In Allen v. McCoy, 8 Ohio, 418, it is said: "In making assignment of dower, the rule of value is to be taken at the time of assignment, but all increased value from actual improvements on the ground is to be excluded." In McClanahan v. Porter, 10 Mo. 746, it was held that, "where lands have increased in value from extrinsic causes not connected with the labor or expenditures of the alienee, the widow takes according to the value at the time of the assignment." In Summers v. Babb, 13 Ill. 483, it was held that "a widow is only entitled to take her dower according to the valuation of the land at the time of the alienation. She is not dowable of improvements put upon the land, but is entitled to the benefit of its increased value, arising from other causes than the labor and expenditure of the alienee." In Thompson v. Morrow, 5 Serg. & R. 289, 9 Am. Dec. 353, Tilghman, Ch. J., discussing the point under consideration, said: "So far as concerns improvements made by the alienee, it is agreed that the tenant shall be protected from this hardship; but as to any value which may chance to arise from the gradually increasing prosperity of the country, and not from the labor or money of the alienee, it would be hard indeed upon the widow if she were precluded from taking her share of it. She runs the risk of any deterioration of the estate which may arise either from public misfortune or the negligence, or even the voluntary act, of the alienee; for, although he destroy the buildings erected by the husband, the widow has no remedy, nor can she recover any more than one third of the land as she finds it at the death of her husband." And in Powell v. Monson & B. Mfg. Co., 3 Mason, 347, Fed. Cas. No. 11,356, Mr. Justice Story, referring to the opinion in Thompson v. Morrow, supra, said: "This doctrine appears to me to stand upon solid principles and the general analogies of the law. If the land has in the intermediate period risen in value, she receives the benefit; if it has depreciated, she sustains the loss. If, on the other hand, the value of the land has increased solely from the improvements made upon it, and without those improvements it would have remained of the same value as at the time of the alienation, the old value, and not the improved value, is to be taken into consideration. For practical purposes, it is impossible to make any distinction between the value of the improvements and the value resulting from the improvements; between improvements which operate on a part of the land, and those which operate upon the whole. Upon the whole, my judgment is that the dower must be adjudged according to the value of the land in controversy at the time of the assignment, excluding all the increased value from the improvements actually made upon the premises by the alienees, leaving to the dowress the full benefit of any increase of value arising from circumstances unconnected with those improvements." We think the reasoning of these cases is unanswerable, and we therefore conclude that, in estimating the value of real estate aliened by the husband during his marriage for the purpose of assigning his widow dower therein, the value of the real estate is to be estimated as it stood at the time of the assignment of dower, excluding the increase in value of the real estate resulting from improvements made thereon by the alienees after the date of the alienation.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

Rehearing denied.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

J. F. BINGHAM, Respt.,

v.

E. Ashley MEARS et al., Appts.

(.....N. Dak. ....)

*1. It is no defense to an action against sureties on an appeal undertaking that the plaintiff holds security amply sufficient to pay the claim for which the sureties have become bound, and that plaintiff has refused on demand to resort to such security for payment, there being no proof that the sureties were prejudiced by such refusal.

*2. Whether a surety may not, under exceptional circumstances, compel a creditor to exhaust collateral security before suing him, not decided.

(November 12, 1894.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Cass County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce the liability of defendants as sureties on an appeal bond. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. E. A. Mears, with Mr. A. S. Drake, for appellants:

The sureties are favored debtors in the eyes of the law.

The Roman law gave the sureties the power

*Headnotes by CORLISS, J.

NOTE.—Without attempting any annotation to the above case, attention is called to the valuable review of the authorities in the briefs and the opinion of the court on the effect of refusal to resort to security held by the creditor affecting a surety's liability.

27 L. R. A.

to compel the creditors to sue the principal debtor, before having recourse to the sureties.

Hayes v. Ward, 4 Johns. Ch. 123, 1 L. ed. 786, 8 Am. Dec. 554; DeColyar, Guaranties, Principal & Sureties, p. 143.

New York followed the Roman law as early as 1816.

Story, Eq. Jur. 327, 494, 639; Dan. Neg. Inst. 1339; Black River Bank v. Page, 44 N. Y. 457; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Little, 41 N. J. Eq. 519; Pain v. Packard, 13 Johns. 174, 7 Am. Dec. 369; King v. Baldwin, 2 Johns. Ch. 554, 1 L. ed. 487, overruling Pain v. Packard, which was of itself (in 17 Johns. 384, 8 Am. Dec. 415) reversed.

The creditor is under an equitable obligation to collect his debt from the principal in the first instance if he can.

Ramsen v. Beekman, 25 N. Y. 556; Colgrove v. Tallman, 67 N. Y. 99, 23 Am. Rep. 90; Wood v. Jefferson County Bank, 9 Cow. 206; Pardee v. Van Auken, 3 Barb. 540, approved in Smith v. Rice, 27 Mo. 505, 72 Am. Dec. 282; Brown v. Williams, 4 Wend. 367; King v. Baldwin, supra.

A surety has a right to have his principal's property first applied to the payment of the debt.

Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Oxford Iron Co., 38 N. J. Eq. 151; Watson v. Sutherland, 1 Tenn. Ch. 208.

A principal is bound by every rule of moral and legal obligation to protect his surety from the payment of the debt for which he is surety.

Rinconour v. Mathews, 42 Ind. 7; McNiel v. Auldridge, 25 W. Va. 118; Bedwell v. Gephart, 67 Iowa, 44; Brandt, Suretyship, § 205; Kennedy v. Falde, 4 Dak. 319; Meriden Silver Plate Co. v. Flory, 44 Ohio St. 480; Richards v. Osceola Bank, 79 Iowa, 707; Shenandoah Nat. Bank v. Ayres, 87 Iowa, 526; Martin v. Orr, 96 Ind. 491; Smith v. McKean, 99 Ind. 101; Armstrong v. Farmers Nat. Bank of Frankfort, 180 Ind. 508.

All the surety has to do in order to protect his property from being levied upon is to point out property belonging to the principal debtor.

Barnes v. Cavanagh, 58 Iowa, 27; Bedwell v. Gephart, supra; Church v. Simmons, 88 N. Y. 264; Toles v. Adee, 84 N. Y. 224.

A notice from a surety to bring suit, if in writing, is sufficient. Even a verbal notice is sufficient.

Jackson v. Huey, 10 Lea, 184, 48 Am. Rep. 301; Petty v. Douglass, 76 Mo. 70; Cole v. Fox, 88 N. C. 468.

Notice to the creditor, after which the creditor fails to act, will release sureties.

Barnes v. Sammons, 128 Ind. 596; Barnes v. Mowry, 129 Ind. 566; Medley v. Tandy, 85 Ky. 566; Toles v. Adee, 91 N. Y. 562.

The law, previous to any code enactment, was that notice by the surety, if not acted on promptly, would release.

Kauffman v. Com. (Pa.) March 14, 1887; Reiner v. Rodgers, 2 W. N. C. 16; Manufacturers & M. Bank v. Bank of Pennsylvania, 7 Watts & S. 385, 42 Am. Dec. 240; Pott v. Nathans, 1 Watts & S. 155, 37 Am. Dec. 456; Storms v. Thorn, 3 Barb. 814; Bangs v. Strong, 4 N. Y. 815; La Farge v. Herter, 9 N. Y. 241; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 1227; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Little, 41 N. J. Eq. 519; Cheesbrough v. Millard, 1 Johns. Ch. 409, 1 L. ed. 190, 7 Am. Dec. 494; King v. Baldwin, 2 Johns. Ch. 554, 1 L. ed. 487; Hayes v. Ward, 4 Johns. Ch. 123, 1 L. ed. 786, 8 Am. Dec. 554.

This rule is embodied in our Civil Code, section 1718.

Irick v. Black, 17 N. J. Eq. 189.

The complaint shows on its face that defendants were sureties or bail. The judgment entered was in direct contravention of the express words of the statutes.

Shooley v. Fletcher, 45 Ind. 86; Johnson v. Harris, 69 Ind. 305; Smith v. McKean, 99 Ind. 101; Womack v. Paxton, 84 Va. 9.

Messrs. Newman, Spalding & Phelps, for respondent:

The obligation of defendants is statutory and not common law.

Thompson v. Blanchard, 8 N. Y. 835; Doolittle v. Dininny, 81 N. Y. 350.

An undertaking on appeal is an absolute independent contract on the part of the sureties, in the nature of a guarantee of payment.

Curtis v. Richards, 9 Cal. 84; Sacramento City & County v. Dunlap, 14 Cal. 421; Murdock v. Brooks, 88 Cal. 596; Heebner v. Townsend, 8 Abb. Pr. 384; Robinson v. Plimpton, 25 N. Y. 487; Doolittle v. Dininny, supra; Staples v. Gokey, 84 Hun, 289.

The breach of the undertaking is complete upon the affrmance of the judgment and failure to pay, and plaintiff is not bound to exhaust his remedies against the Mortgage Bank & Investment Company, or resort to collateral.

Heebner v. Townsend, and Murdock v. Brooks, 27 L. R. A.

supra; Laws 1891, chap. 120, § 22; Wallerstein v. American Surety Co. 40 N. Y. S. R. 508.

Cerliss, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendants were sureties on an undertaking given on appeal to this court from a judgment. Their only defense to this action against them on the undertaking is that the principal on whose behalf they signed the undertaking assigned to the plaintiff, as collateral to the claim on which such judgment was rendered, certain promissory notes secured by real-estate mortgages, and that such collateral security is sufficient to pay such judgment and all expenses; that they have notified the plaintiff that he must resort to such collateral to collect his claim, but that he has failed to do so. Under the circumstances of this case, these facts do not constitute a defense. The general rule is that the surety has no right to insist that the creditor shall first proceed against the principal debtor, or any security which such debtor may have given him. Upon default the surety may at once be sued. 1 Brandt, Suretyship, § 97. It is true that in cases characterized by exceptional features, equity may compel the creditor to resort first to the property of the principal debtor where this will occasion no inconvenience or delay to the creditor. See Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Little, 41 N. J. Eq. 519. But the facts of this litigation do not call for the application of this rule. There is no claim that the principal debtor is insolvent, or that these collateral securities will not be available to the sureties in their hands for their indemnity after they have become by payment subrogated to all the rights of the plaintiff therein. There is also another rule which appears to be well supported, but this case is not brought within its scope. There is authority for the doctrine that upon indemnifying the creditor against the expenses of the proceedings the surety may, in equity, compel him to first exhaust his remedies against the principal debtor. Brandt, Suretyship, § 238. But in this case no offer of indemnity appears to have been made. This is a simple action at law upon a contract. The right of the sureties with respect to this collateral security is to resort to it themselves on paying the debt, and not to compel the creditor to resort to it. It is because of this right of a surety to look to such security for indemnity after he has paid the debt that the release of such security by the creditor will discharge the surety. When the surety is sued, he cannot, in an ordinary case at least, defend on the ground that the principal should have been first sued, and all efforts to collect the debt from him exhausted. On the same principle, the surety cannot insist that the creditor must first essay to collect his claim out of the collaterals the principal debtor has given him, except in the case mentioned in section 4310. This statute is inapplicable to this action. Another section of our statutes clearly contemplates that the mere failure, after request, to sue the principal debtor, or to proceed against collateral security, will not defeat an action against the surety. The latter may nevertheless be sued, and is liable for every dollar of the debt, except to the extent that he is prejudiced by the refusal of the creditor to proceed as requested. Comp. Laws, § 4305. The fact that the principal debtor has not been sued, or that collateral security has not been exhausted, is never a defense of itself. It is not a defense, even when a request of the surety is shown that the creditor sue the principal or resort to his collateral, unless the surety is prejudiced by the failure of the creditor to act as requested; and then only to the extent of such prejudice. To have made out a defense because of the failure to resort to this collateral security, defendants should have proved that they had been prejudiced thereby.

Another section of our statute leads us to the same conclusion. Section 4310, Comp. Laws, provides that "whenever property of a surety is hypothecated with the property of the principal, the surety is entitled to have the property of the principal first applied to the discharge of the obligation." Here is a single instance in which the surety may insist that collateral held by the creditor shall be first exhausted. It follows that in no other case does this right exist, unless the right was well established under the decision prior to the enactment of this statutory law. So far from finding such a rule to have been settled at the time our code was adopted, we have been unable to discover a single authority sustaining such a doctrine where the facts were not exceptional. All the adjudications support the contrary rule. Fuller v. Loring, 42 Me. 481; Thorn v. Pinkham, 84 Me. 101; Morrison v. Citizens Nat. Bank of Tilton, 65 N. H. 253, 9 L. R. A. 282; Abercrombie v. Knox, 3 Ala. 728, 87 Am. Dec. 721; Allen v. Woodard, 125 Mass. 400, 28 Am. Rep. 250; Jones v. Tincher, 15 Ind. 306, 77 Am. Dec. 92; Brick v. Freehold Nat. Bkq. Co. 37 N. J. L. 307; 1 Brandt, Suretyship, §§ 97, 287; Buck v. Sanders, 1 Dana, 187; Day v. Elmore, 4 Wis. 190-198; Penn v. Ingles, 82 Va. 65; Davis v. Patrick, 6 C. C. A. 632, 57 Fed. Rep. 909; Callahan v. Mitchell, 29 Ind. 419; Aultman v. Smith, 52 Mo. App. 351.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

All concur.

A petition for rehearing was subsequently filed in response to which on January 2, 1895, the following opinion was handed down:

The earnestness with which counsel for defendants have pressed upon us their application for rehearing constrains us to go more fully into the discussion of the exceedingly interesting question presented on this appeal. In their main features, the English common law and the Roman civil law differed radically from each other touching the right of the surety to require the creditor to proceed against the principal debtor or the security the debtor had given the creditor before coercing payment by the surety. In the earlier period of Roman jurisprudence the right of the surety to compel the creditors to resort first to the principal to collect his demand appears to have been well established; but the rule was gradually departed from, Justinian, however, restored it, and from his time the doctrine was universally recognized throughout the empire. It has been incorporated in the jurisprudence of many of the nations of Europe. Burge, Suretyship, pp. 329-341; Hayes v. Ward, 4 Johns. Ch. 123-133, 1 L. ed. 786, 790, 8 Am. Dec. 554. But it never secured a footing in England. There the contrary doctrine has prevailed from the earliest times. The common-law rule is that the surety must pay and seek reimbursement from the principal or out of the securities the latter has given the creditor. This was always the rule in courts of law. But in equity and in bankruptcy proceedings a rule somewhat analogous to that of the civil law grew up. This rule, however, was less sweeping in its effects upon the creditor than the rule promulgated by Justinian. It more carefully guarded his rights from prejudice. The English law regarded the promise of the surety as an absolute promise, unless it was in terms conditional. The surety was under the same obligation as the principal to pay the debt. The courts of law therefore ignored the equities between the principal and the surety when the creditor was seeking to collect his claim of the latter. In equity, also, the promise of the surety was looked upon as an unconditional promise; but equity, unlike the law, would not, under all circumstances, refuse to consider the rights of the surety in his relation to the principal; and whenever a case arose, special in its character, calling for the aid of equity to protect the surety from injury, that court, true to its traditions and its fundamental principles, extended relief to the surety, whenever it could do so without, on the other hand, affecting the right of the creditor to the payment of his debt according to the terms of his contract. But in all such cases equity required that the creditor should be saved from delay, from expense, and from all risk. 1 Brandt, Suretyship, § 238; 24 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 799, and cases. When the object of the surety's appeal to equity was to compel the creditor to exhaust the collaterals in his hands before proceeding against the surety, the foundation of equitable relief was the inability of the surety himself to enforce such collateral after paying the debt, or the possibility that the creditor by some act had impaired its value or destroyed its legality. The mere fact that the creditor held security for the debt did not entitle the surety to appeal to equity for a decree that the creditor look first to such security for his pay. In such a case the surety could protect himself by paying the claim, and by being subrogated to the creditor's rights to the security. But if, after payment by him, he could not enforce such security, or if grave doubt existed as to its legality because of some act of the creditor with respect to it, then a special case was presented, necessitating the interference of equity to prevent injustice to the surety; but even in such cases equity never interposed its aid without exacting the most ample protecting of the creditor against all damages because of delay, and all expenses of other proceedings than those against the surety, and the most complete indemnity against all loss because of the creditor's right of recovery against the surety being postponed. Mr. Burge, in his work on Suretyship, after referring to the civil law which permits the surety to compel the creditors to first sue the principal and exhaust collaterals, says, at pages 841 and 842: "The jurisprudence of England and of those colonies which adopt it does not, in that part of it which administers strict law as distinguished from equity, give this privilege to the surety. But in the administration of that part which is called equity and in the administration of the bankrupt laws a relief similar in its effect is afforded to him. It treats the creditor, however, as entitled to avail himself of all his securities in order to obtain the full payment of his demand. Thus, if the creditor have both a personal remedy against the surety for his demand, and also a fund to which he may resort for payment, and to which fund the surety even, when he has paid the creditor what is owing to him, cannot resort, a court of equity will, when it is satisfied that the creditor has the clear means of making his demand effectual against the fund, and upon the surety's indemnifying the creditor against the consequences of all risk, delay, and expense, compel the creditor to make the fund available towards the satisfaction of his debt, before he proceeds personally against the surety." Said the chancellor in Hayes v. Ward, 4 Johns. Ch. 128, 181, 1 L. ed. 786, 789, 8 Am. Dec. 554: "I am not aware that there is any general rule in chancery that the creditor must look to the principal debtor, and exhaust his remedy against him, before he can be permitted to resort to the surety. The general language in the books and the practice have been otherwise, and the surety has been considered (without any formal adjudication upon the point, and perhaps without any examination of it upon principle) as amenable in ordinary cases to the creditor in the first instance, though the creditor may have taken ample security. The creditor has usually called on the surety at his election, and left him to resort to the principal debtor for his indemnity after he has paid the debt, and after he has been clothed by substitution with all the rights and securities of the creditors. 'The holder of the security, therefore, in general cases,' says Lord Eldon in Wright v. Simpson, 6 Ves. Jr. 784, 'may lay hold of the surety; and, till very lately, even in circumstances under which the surety would not have had the same benefit that the creditor would have had.' But in late cases, and under particular circumstances, Lord Eldon admits that the surety has a right to call upon the creditor to do the most he can for his benefit." Referring to these cases holding that this may be done, the chancellor says of them: "But all the instances to which I have alluded may be considered as cases of a special nature. They do not appear to establish any such general rule as 27 L. R. A.

that derived from the civil law requiring the principal debtor to be first sued, which rule prevails in all those countries where the civil law is an essential part of the municipal law of the land." The chancellor granted relief to the surety in this case upon the ground that there was reason to believe that the creditor, by tainting his security with usury by subsequent dealings therewith, had rendered it void; thus placing the surety in a position where he could not have the benefit of it upon paying the debt. On this question the chancellor said: "I put this case entirely upon the ground of the allegation, to which no answer has been given, that the mortgage is infected with usury, and would be useless and void if placed by substitution in the hands of the surety. If this should happen to be the case, the plaintiff, on paying, might be deprived of all indemnity from his principal by reason of the conduct of the creditor." Said the court in Newcomb v. Hale, 90 N. Y. 327, at page 330, 43 Am. Rep. 173: "Spencer, Ch. J., in his opinion in King v. Baldwin, 17 Johns. 386, 8 Am. Dec. 415, seems to assume that a surety may always proceed in a court of equity, after the debt becomes due, to compel the creditors to collect of the principal debtor. But the authorities do not sustain the broad proposition assumed by the learned judge. There must be some specific equity beyond the mere relation of surety and creditor to entitle the surety to this relief." In a recent case in the circuit court of appeals that court rendered a decision directly in point. Davis v. Patrick, 6 C. C. A. 652, 57 Fed. Rep. 909. In the course of the opinion the court said: "Some cases have been cited by the learned counsel for the plaintiffs in error, the authority of which we do not dispute, that under certain circumstances a court of equity, at the instance of the surety, will coerce a creditor to proceed with the collection of his claim against the principal debtor. But these are cases where, by the delays and forbearance of the creditor, the surety is liable to sustain loss, or where the creditor has access to a fund for the payment of his debt, which the sureties cannot make available. The principle has never been extended to a case like the one at bar, where the creditor has merely exercised his right of election as between two remedies for the collection of a debt, and where the securities held by the creditor may be made immediately available to the surety by his paying the debt and seeking subrogation." In Irick v. Black, 17 N. J. Eq. 189-195, the court said: "If the court is asked to interfere on behalf of the surety before judgment is recovered against him, he must present some special ground of equitable relief." See also London, Paris, & American Bank, Limited v. Smith, 101 Cal. 415; First Nat. Bank of Buffalo v. Wood, 71 N. Y. 407, 411, 412, 27 Am. Rep. 66; Abercrombie v. Knox, 8 Ala. 728, 37 Am. Dec. 721.

The general rule that some peculiar equity must exist in favor of the surety—that the case must be an exceptional one to entitle the surety to relief—applies as fully when the surety is seeking to compel the creditor to first sue the principal as when he is insisting that the creditor shall first exhaust the security he holds. These rules of the common law constitute the law of this state, so far as they have not been changed by statute. We will shortly come to that subject. Now, it is obvious that defendants' answer discloses no special equity in their favor. The security which they ask the court to compel the creditor to exhaust they can secure absolute control of by themselves paying the claim they owe. As between the creditor to whom a debt is owing and the surety who owes it, equity very properly declares that the creditor ought not to be compelled to enforce, for the benefit of the surety, the security he holds, but that the surety himself should pay the debt, and enforce such security for his own benefit. But we are referred to several statutes as having radically changed the common law. They have already been mentioned in the original opinion. Among them, the first we will consider is section 4305, Comp. Laws. This section declares that: "A surety may require his creditor to proceed against the principal, or to pursue any other remedy in his power which the surety cannot himself pursue, and which would lighten his burden; and if in such case the creditor neglects to do so, the surety is exonerated to the extent to which he is thereby prejudiced." This provision has a history. It is the statutory embodiment of the rule established in the state of New York in the early days of that state. That rule was first announced by the supreme court of that state in Pain v. Packard, 18 Johns. 174, 7 Am. Dec. 369, and was finally settled by the court of errors in King v. Baldwin, 17 Johns. 384, 8 Am. Dec. 415, by the casting vote of the president of the court, a layman who was ex officio president of the court by virtue of holding the office of lieutenant governor of the state. It was an anomaly in the law. It rested upon the doctrine that equity would, in special cases, require the creditor to first proceed against the principal debtor or collateral security held by the former. But this doctrine did not warrant such a rule so broad as to apply to all cases, whether any special equity existed or not. See Newcomb v. Hale, 90 N. Y. 327-330, 48 Am. Rep. 173. The court might have deduced from this doctrine that equity would, under peculiar circumstances, compel the creditor to first look to other sources than the surety for his pay, under the rule that in such cases, and in such cases only, this duty might be cast upon him by a notice to him from the surety to proceed against the principal, or to exhaust collaterals; and that in such cases, and in only such cases, the creditor's failure to do so would exonerate the surety to the extent that it caused him injury. But the court, in King v. Baldwin, ignored this limitation, and laid down the rule in language whose legal effect is the same as that of the section of our statute above quoted (i. e. section 4305). The New York decisions furnish a clue to the meaning of this provision. The spirit of it is, not to prevent suit against the surety after the creditor has been notified to proceed against the principal, but to place the hazard of the subsequent insolvency of the principal or the subsequent impairment of the security wholly upon the shoulders of the creditor. If the contention of the counsel for defendants that this statute introduces the civil-law rule that the surety may always require the creditor to first sue the principal or exhaust the collateral he holds, is sound, it is remarkable that the courts of the state which first declared the rule embodied in that section have since that time been called upon, as has been frequently the case, to apply the doctrine that a surety is subrogated to the rights of the creditor on paying the debt. Sureties would have invoked this civil-law rule had it been introduced by the New York doctrine in that state; and, instead of paying and exercising the right of subrogation, they would in every case have compelled the creditor to resort to the principal or to collaterals in the first instance. That the rule enunciated in section 4305 does not carry with it the other rule contended for by counsel for defendants—the civil-law rule—is apparent from the fact that in New York, where the former rule has existed for more than one-half a century, we find the courts steadily refusing to recognize the civil-law rule, except to the extent that it has been recognized in England. In New York, equity will interfere in only exceptional cases, where special equities in favor of the surety exist. Newcomb v. Hale, 90 N. Y. 327, 330, 48 Am. Rep. 173; London, Paris, & American Bank, Limited v. Smith, 101 Cal. 415; First Nat. Bank of Buffalo v. Wood, 71 N. Y. 407, 411, 412, 27 Am. Rep. 66; Hayes v. Ward, 4 Johns. Ch. 128, 131, 133, 134, 1 L. ed. 786, 789, 790, 8 Am. Dec. 554; Warner v. Beardsley, 8 Wend. 199, 200. We therefore discover no reason for holding that section 4305 has wrought the radical change in the common law which counsel for defendants contend that it has.

We are referred to two other sections of our statute as favoring the views of defendants' counsel. They are sections 4310 and 5166, Comp. Laws. They provide as follows:

"Whenever property of a surety is hypothecated with the property of the principal, the surety is entitled to have the property of the principal first applied to the discharge of the obligation." Section 4310.

"In all cases where judgment is rendered upon any instrument in writing, in which two or more persons are severally bound, and it shall be made to appear to the court, by parol or other testimony, that one or more of said persons so bound signed the same as surety or bail for his codefendant, the court must, in entering judgment thereon, state which of the defendants is principal debtor, and which are sureties or bail. And execution issued on such judgment must command the sheriff or other officer to cause the money to be made of the personal property and real property of the principal debtor, but, for want of sufficient property of the principal debtor to make the same, to cause the same to be made of the personal and real property of the surety or bail. In all cases, the property, both personal and real, of the principal debtor, within the jurisdiction of the court, must be exhausted before any of the property of the surety or bail shall be taken in execution." Section 5166.

These statutes are merely declaratory of settled rules. When both principal and surety have, by the same instrument, mortgaged their property for the debt of the principal, no delay or loss or risk can result to the surety from so enforcing the mortgage that the property of the principal shall be first sold. Nor is an additional action necessary as the principal and the surety, and the property of both, are all before the court in the one action to foreclose the mortgage. In such a case, equity, to prevent a multiplicity of actions, and to protect the surety with slightest injury to the creditor, will direct that the principal's property be first sold. The courts had established this rule before it found its way into our code. 1 Brandt, Suretyship, § 287, and cases cited; Weil v. Thomas, 114 N. C. 197; Wheat v. McBrayer, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 195. The case of Richards v. Osceola Bank, 79 Iowa, 707, on which counsel for defendants lay so much stress, belongs to this class. So does Philadelphia & E. R. Co. v. Little, 41 N. J. Eq. 519. And yet the existence of this rule has never been regarded as involving as a necessary consequence the establishment of the broad rule of the civil law that in every case the surety can compel the creditor to first seek elsewhere for his pay. This is true of the rule laid down in section 5166. It is, in terms, restricted in its application to cases in which judgment is rendered against both principal and surety. It does not apply when the surety is sued alone. When both of the debtors are before the court no delay or injury can result to the creditor from being obliged to sell the property of the principal first. His right to a judgment against the surety is not thereby postponed. This is very different from delaying the creditor until he has obtained judgment against the principal, or has exhausted collaterals, when he has sued the surety alone, as he has a perfect right to do, unless the obligation is joint. While these two statutes, and also section 4905, are steps in the direction of the policy of the civil law,—steps which the courts had taken under the common law without statutory authority,—yet it is indefensible to declare that these provisions, limited in their scope, should be construed as being so sweeping in their effect as to revolutionize the common law on this subject. The doctrine announced in King v. Baldwin, 17 Johns. 884, 8 Am. Dec. 415, has been regarded as an unwarranted innovation upon the common law in most of the states, and their courts have refused to adopt it. See 1 Brandt, Suretyship, § 242. And even in the state in which it originated it has never been extended, but the whole drift of the adjudications there is to strictly limit its operation. Trimble v. Thorne, 16 Johns. 152, 8 Am. Dec. 302; Newcomb v. Hale, 90 N. Y. 827-829, 48 Am. Rep. 173; Wells v. Mann, 45 N. Y. 327, 6 Am. Rep. 98; Conceves v. Cook, 25 Hun, 44; Hunt v. Purdy, 82 N. Y. 486, 37

Am. Rep. 587; Lawson v. Buckley, 49 Hun, 829; Goodwin v. Simonson, 74 N. Y. 133; Warner v. Beardsley, 8 Wend. 194, 198, 199. Certainly it is not a legitimate inference to deduce from the statutory adoption by this state of this special doctrine a purpose to introduce the whole policy of the civil law with respect to the rights of sureties against the creditors into our system of jurisprudence. The implication is the other way, and this implication is very much strengthened by the fact that, while our code expressly confers upon the surety the right to compel by judicial proceedings the principal to pay the debt (a right recognized by the common law), it nowhere declares that the surety may by action compel the creditor to first sue the principal, or exhaust the collaterals he holds. See Comp. Laws, § 4906. The decision in Davis v. Patrick, 6 C. C. A. 682, 57 Fed. Rep. 909, is directly in point. There an action was brought upon a supersedeas bond, given on appeal from a judgment. The sureties contended that the creditor could not proceed against them until he had exhausted his remedy against real estate of the principal debt or nearly sufficient in value to pay his claim, which he had attached in the action in which the judgment appealed from had been rendered. The court decided against the sureties, and in refusing to sustain their contentions the court used the language which we have already quoted. Nor was the decision in that case placed upon the ground that in the federal courts no equitable defense to an action at law can be interposed. On this point the court said: "It is to be observed that the plea last mentioned merely asserts an alleged equitable right or defense, and it is doubtful, to say the least, whether such alleged equity could, in any event, be pleaded as a defense to a suit at law in the federal courts when the distinction between legal and equitable defenses is still fully preserved. But we do not care to dwell on the latter suggestion. It is obvious, we think, that the plea did not disclose a right on the part of the sureties to have the lien discharged, or the attached lands sold, before a suit was maintained on the supersedeas bond, which a court of equity would recognize and enforce even on a bill filed for that purpose." We have assumed throughout the course of this opinion that the surety may, under our system of procedure, secure by answer the relief which formerly he could obtain only by filing a bill. It has been urged by counsel for plaintiff that the sureties upon an undertaking on appeal are not within the scope of the equitable principles to which we have referred. We have been unable to assent to his view. It is true that their obligation is as unconditional as that of the principal. So is the obligation of the surety upon a promissory note signed by himself and the principal debtor. But he is none the less a surety, and entitled to all the rights of a surety. Unless made in terms conditional, the promise of a surety is always as absolute as that of the principal. 1 Brandt, Suretyship, § 1; Harris v. Newell, 42 Wis. 691; Warner v. Beardsley, 8 Wend. 199. The equitable right of a surety to compel the creditor, under certain peculiar circumstances, to proceed first against the principal or collateral security, does not rest upon the terms or nature of the contract on which he is surety, but upon the broad equitable principle that, as between himself and the principal debtor, the latter ought to pay the debt. Harris v. Newell, 42 Wis. 692. When, coupled with this equity, special facts, which take the case out of the ordinary category, are found to exist, the right exists irrespective of the terms or nature of the contract, provided, of course, that the right is not waived by the language of the contract. The cases cited by counsel for plaintiff do not hold to the contrary. They merely hold that the surety upon such an undertaking is liable absolutely, and no execution against the principal upon the judgment appealed from is necessary before suing the surety. The decision in Davis v. Patrick, 6 C. C. A. 682, 57 Fed. Rep. 909, is directly against the contention of the plaintiff's counsel in this respect. See also, Wood v. Plak, 68 N. Y. 245, 20 Am. Rep. 528. The authorities cited by counsel for defendants are cases in which the court had both parties before it, or the property of both which had been pledged for the debt, or in which, by reason of the peculiar nature of the litigation, it was possible to protect the surety's equity without in the least degree interfering with the right of the creditor to enforce the contract without delay. Paxton v. Rich, 85 Va. 378, 1 L. R. A. 639; Beckham v. Duncan, 18 Va. L. J. 523; Richards v. Osceola Bank, 79 Iowa, 707; Hoppes v. Hoppes, 123 Ind. 397; Weil v. Thomas, 114 N. C. 197; Wheat v. McBrayer, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 195; Neimcewicz v.

Gahn, 3 Paige, 614, 3 L. ed. 295; Blackman v. Joiner, 81 Ala. 344; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Little, 41 N. J. Eq. 519. The whole trend of the common-law decisions is in the direction of regarding the right of the creditor to compel the surety to at once perform his contract as superior to the equity of the surety that, as between himself and the principal, the latter ought to pay the debt.

It is urged that the plaintiff should have issued execution on the judgment affirmed on the appeal before suing the sureties. The statute is a complete answer to this contention. It provides that a breach of the undertaking is established by neglect to pay the judgment affirmed within thirty days after such affirmance. Laws 1891, chap. 120, § 22. The complaint contains an averment that more than thirty days had elapsed since the affirmance of the judgment by the supreme court. This allegation is not denied. In the absence of such a provision, the sureties would be liable at once upon the affirmance of the judgment. No case can be found holding that the issue of an execution upon the judgment affirmed is a condition precedent to liability on the part of the surety, in the absence of a statute making such act a condition precedent. On the contrary, the decisions are all the other way. Davis v. Patrick, 6 C. C. A. 682, 57 Fed. Rep. 909; Babbatt v. Finn, 101 U. S. 7-18, 25 L. ed. 820, 821; Murdock v. Brooks, 88 Cal. 596-604; Smith v. Ramsay, 6 Serg. & R. 576; Anderson v. Sloan, 1 Colo. 484; Wallenstein v. American Surety Co. 40 N. Y. S. R. 508.

The rehearing is denied. The judgment is affirmed.

All concur.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

BIRMINGHAM MINERAL R. CO., Appt.,
v.
A. F. PARSONS.

(.....Ala.....)

1. A statute requiring railroads to build cattle-guards whenever demand for them is made by the owners of land through which the road runs is not unconstitutional on the ground that the landowner is made the sole judge or the necessity for them, since the statute might require the company to construct them in every case.
2. A statute cannot impose an absolute liability on railroad companies for damages caused by its trains in killing stock irrespective of the railroad company's negligence or fulfillment of the requirements of the statutes, but may impose a liability for negligence or failure to construct cattle-guards required by statute.
3. The stock gaps required by the statute, where a railroad company runs through the premises of an individual, are not designed to be closed; and there can be no negligence charged because of leaving them open.

(July 22, 1893.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County, in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for injuries to plaintiff's crops because of defendant's neglect to maintain proper cattle-guards. Reversed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion. Messrs. Hewitt, Walker & Porter for appellant.

Messrs. W. R. Houghton, Francis D. Nabors, and Kennedy & Hickman, for appellee:

The police power of a state is a most important power, essential to its very existence and embraces the lives, health, and property of her citizens, and the legislature cannot by any contract divest itself of the power to provide for these objects.

NOTE.—As to constitutionality of statutes attempting to make railroad companies absolutely liable for all stock killed by trains, see note to Matthews v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo.) 26 L. R. A. 161. For imposition on railroad companies of cost of 27 L. R. A. abolishing grade crossings, see note to Kelly v. Minneapolis (Minn.) 26 L. R. A. 92.

As to duty to keep cattle-guards clear of ice and snow, see Graham v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co. (Iowa) 5 L. R. A. 813, and note.

American U. Teleg. Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 67 Ala. 26, 42 Am. Rep. 90; Van Hook v. Selma, 70 Ala. 861, 45 Am. Rep. 85; Hackett v. State, 105 Ind. 250, 55 Am. Rep. 201; Eastman v. State, 109 Ind. 278, 58 Am. Rep. 400; Lake View v. Ross Hill Cemetery Asso. 70 Ill. 191, 22 Am. Rep. 71.

In every well-ordered state, property is held subject to the tacit condition that it shall not be so used as to injure the equal right of others.

Dorman v. State, 84 Ala. 216.

The fact that a cattle-guard is constructed in the usual customary manner is no defense to the company if it does not meet the requirements of the statute.

U. S. Gen. Dig. vol. 4, p. 1597, §§ 90, 91; Horan v. Taylor, B. & H. R. Co. (Tex.) 1889.

A statute imposing liability for fires caused by operating railroads is constitutional.

Union Pac. R. Co. v. DeBusk, 8 L. R. A. 850, 12 Colo. 294.

There are provisions of the act clearly constitutional which can be separated from the rest and the court will uphold these.

Powell v. State, 69 Ala. 10; Bogan v. State, 84 Ala. 449; Lowndes County v. Hunter, 49 Ala. 507.

Every person while violating an express statute is a wrongdoer and as such is ex necessitate negligent in the eye of the law, and every innocent party injured thereby is entitled to a civil remedy therefor.

Grey v. Mobile Trade Co. 55 Ala. 387, 28 Am. Rep. 729.

And where a duty is required and no remedy is provided for redress for a breach of that duty the remedy is by common-law procedure.

Autauga County v. Davis, 82 Ala. 708; Lowndes County v. Hunter, supra.

Generally when a statute is assailed on constitutional grounds the court will adopt, if possible, such construction as will bring it within range of the powers of the legislature.

Wilburn v. McCalley, 68 Ala. 486.

A law requiring railroads to fence and to pay value of cattle killed, has been enforced in several states.

Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Otutter, 82 Ill. 128; Small v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 50 Iowa, 338; Cleveland, O. C. & I. R. Co. v. Newbrander, 40 Ohio St. 15; Heskett v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 61 Iowa, 467; Texas & St. L. R. Co. v. Young, 60 Tex. 201; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Dummer, 109 Ill. 402; McCall v. Chamberlain, 13 Wis. 637; Blair v. Milwaukee & P. du Ch. R. Co. 20 Wis. 262; Gorman v. Pacific R. Co. 26 Mo. 441, 72 Am. Dec. 220; Nall v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 59 Mo. 112; Trice v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 49 Mo. 438; Speelman v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 71 Mo. 484; Wilder v. Maine Cent. R. Co. 65 Me. 332, 20 Am. Rep. 698.

Haralson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled, presents a single question for our consideration,—that of the constitutionality of the Act of the legislature approved December 11, 1886 (Acts 1886-87, p. 163). It is entitled "An act requiring railroads to build, and keep cattle and stock guards in order, upon their respective lines of roads." Its first section is: "That all railroads within the territorial limits of the state of Alabama shall be required to put in cattle or stock guards, upon their respective lines of roads, and keep the same in order, whenever the demand is made upon them, or their agents or employes, by the owners of the land through which said road passes, that said cattle or stock guard is necessary to prevent the depredation of stock upon their farms." The second section provides that on and after the passage and approval of the act, as to all stock passing over or through cattle guards upon any line of railroads in this state, and committing depredations and damages to the owners of the land, the company shall be liable for the full amount of damages proven to have been sustained by the party damaged, and all costs accruing in the collection of said damages, which damages can be recovered by suit in the justice or circuit courts of Alabama, where such damages were committed; provided, that the railroad company can only be required to construct cattle-guards whenever said company's road enters the field or upon the premises of any person, or where the premises, or any portion of the same, are exposed by reason of said road entering upon them, or running through them.

1. It is well understood that railroad companies are not bound, by any principle of the common law, to fence their roads, make cattle-guards, or erect any other barrier or stay against the intrusion of stock upon their roads or right of way, and are not liable for injuries happening merely for want of such erections. 7 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 906, 912; 1 Rorer, Railroads, 614; Memphis & O. R. Co. v. Lyon, 62 Ala. 74. Whenever a company is under obligation to fence its right of way, or erect cattle-guards, it is by virtue of a contract or statute. On the other hand, it is equally well settled that acts of incorporation of railroad companies are subordinate to the general police regulation of the state, and that the requirement to fence their rights of way, and erect and maintain cattle-guards, falls legitimately within legislative authority. As is well said in American U. Teleg. Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co., 67 Ala. 82, 42 Am. Rep. 90: "The police power of a state is a most important power, essential to its very existence, and has been declared by the supreme judicial interpreter of the Federal Constitution to embrace 'the protection of the lives, health, and property of her citizens, the maintenance of good order, and the preservation of good morals;' and the legislature cannot, by any contract, divest itself of the power to provide for these objects." Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25, 24 L. ed. 989; Van Hook v. Selma, 70 Ala. 861, 45 Am. Rep. 85; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Baldwin 85 Ala. 619; 7 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 907.

The unconstitutionality of the act we consider is insisted on, "first, because it requires the railroad to erect cattle-guards whenever demand is made upon it, by the owners, that the cattle or stock guard is necessary to prevent the depredation of stock upon their farms, thus making the landowner the sole judge of the necessity, and from whose decision the railroad has no appeal." This objection relates especially to the first section of the act. The criticism cannot be sanctioned. This is a mere option which the statute gives the owner of the land. The guard—if, and when, constructed—is for his benefit alone. The public has no interest in it, further than the general interest every good citizen feels that every other person shall be protected in his rights of property; and of what detriment can it be to the railroad that the owner is permitted to exempt it from a duty which, without his exemption, would be absolute, whether the owner needed or desired the cattle-guard or not? If the statute had simply required the companies to erect and maintain these guards, in all instances, whenever they entered the field or premises of a party, there could, under the authorities, be no objection raised to the validity of the law. Why, then, should the statute, if, in its enactment, it would lighten the burden, if any, of the corporations, without injury to the persons whom it was designed to benefit, by bestowing this option on them, incur judicial displeasure? The point of this suggestion becomes more pertinent when it is remembered that when the duty to fence or build cattle-guards is made absolute, without reference to an option on the part of the owner of the land, the owner may release the obligation, as seems to be well settled. 7 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 907; 1 Thomp. Neg. p. 526, § 26. The case of Owensboro & N. R. Co. v. Todd, 91 Ky. 175, 11 L. R. A. 285, is opposed to this view, and holds that this power of police regulation cannot be delegated to the citizen. No authority upon which the decision is based is given. The constitution of this state certainly contains nothing against the bestowment of such an option on the landowner, in connection with the exercise of this police jurisdiction and authority, and we are at a loss to see on what principle it can be denied. The states delegate this power, without question, in their creations of municipal governments, railroad commissions, medical and examining boards, quarantine commissions, the bestowment of the authority for the creation by the people of counties and parts of counties, of agricultural districts in which fences may be dispensed with, and stock not allowed to run at large, and in other instances, perhaps, which might be named; and it can be readily seen that this police authority may be more safely and beneficially exercised, often, in leaving its exercise to the option of others, within prescribed and proper limitations, than without.

2. There can hardly be any question but that this second section imposes an absolute liability on railroad companies "for the full amount of the damages proven to have been sustained by the party damaged, and all costs accruing in the collection of said damages," whether they have failed, or not, according to the requirements of the law, "to put in cattle or stock guards upon their respective lines of roads and keep the same in order." Indeed, this liability is clearly stated in the words of the section itself. There are many conflicting authorities on this question, which we will not review, or attempt to reconcile. In 7 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 907, it is stated that "statutes have been passed in England, and many of the states, requiring railway companies to fence their tracks [which includes cattle-guards, Id. 913], and holding them liable for all injuries occasioned by a failure to do so, irrespective of whether or not they have been guilty of negligence "in operating their trains; and many authorities bearing more or less intimately on the question are cited as supporting the text. Id. 927. Counsel for appellant, in their elaborate argument on the question (reviewing many of the authorities), conclude: "We concede that if the Act of 1886 had imposed absolute liability in cases where the railroad fails to erect gaps at all, in compliance with the statute, this would have been a valid police regulation, because a penalty imposed for a violation of the act. But the Act of 1886 goes further, and imposes such absolute liability on the railroad, though it may have fully complied with the act, in erecting and keeping in order its gaps, provided stock get over them, and commit depredations. It is therefore manifestly unconstitutional, because it attempts to impose absolute liability, when the requirements of the act may have been fully complied with, and no negligence exists. This is not a valid police regulation." This question is not a new one in this court. In Zeigler v. South & North Ala. R. Co., 58 Ala. 594, we had occasion to pass upon the validity of an act which provided: "That from and after the passage of this act, all corporations, person or persons, owning or controlling any railroad in this state, shall be liable for all damages to live stock, or cattle of any kind, caused by locomotive or railroad cars." It was there said of that statute, that it dispenses with all proof of the wrong it seeks to redress. "It declares that the railroad corporation shall make reparation for an injury inflicted in the authorized prosecution of its lawful business, without a semblance of fault, negligence, or want of skill in its employes,—an injury which no human prudence or foresight could prevent; and yet the statute will not allow the railroad to exculpate itself by proof of the highest qualifications and most watchful vigilance. This falls short of due process of law. . . . We can perceive of no reason, in law or morals, for holding them [railroad companies] to a stricter measure of accountability for inevitable misfortunes than would be exacted from natural persons for injuries which result from unavoidable accident, or accidents which no human prudence can foresee or avert." This case, in these utterances, has been many times approved by us, and other courts. Wilburn v. McCulley, 68 Ala. 443; Mead v. Larkin, 66 Ala. 88; Davis v. State, 68 Ala. 68, 44 Am. Rep. 128; Green v. State, 73 Ala. 32; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hembree, 85 Ala. 485. Under the influence of these decisions, we are constrained to hold that the second section of said Act, in that it imposes an absolute liability on railroad companies, irrespective of compliance on their part with the duties prescribed in its first section, and without any fault on their part, is in violation of constitutional right. The first section, however, without reference to the second, and independently of it, prescribes the duty on these companies "to put in cattle or stock guards upon their respective lines of roads and keep the same in order," and for a failure to do so they are liable to the party injured by their neglect. To prescribe the duties imposed by this section, we have seen, is a valid exercise of the power of the state. It may be maintained as such, separate from the second section. 3 Brick. Dig. p. 128, § 28; Ex parte Couvert, 92 Ala. 97. And "every person, while violating an express statute, is a wrongdoer, and as such is, ex necessitate, negligent in the eye of the law, and every innocent party injured thereby is entitled to a civil remedy therefor;" and when a duty is required, and no remedy provided for its breach, the remedy is by common-law procedure. Grey v. Mobile Trade Co. 55 Ala. 403, 28 Am. Rep. 729; Loundes

County v. Hunter, 49 Ala. 507; Autauga County v. Davis, 32 Ala. 703.

8. The demurrers to the first and third counts in the complaint were properly overruled. The second count bases a recovery on the allegation that the defendant "so negligently and carelessly left open their stock gaps on that part of its said road which runs through the said land of the plaintiff that," etc., specifying the damages suffered. We are not certain of what is meant by leaving stock gaps open, and what negligence is attributed to defendant in so doing. Consulting our knowledge of such barriers against stock, we would suppose they were never designed to be closed, but always open. The duty prescribed by the statute is to put in cattle guards, and keep them in order, and not to keep them closed. It would seem, therefore, that defendant violated no duty to plaintiff in keeping the gaps open, and the demurrer to the second count, for this reason, should have been sustained.

For this error the judgment of the court below is reversed, and the cause remanded.

Rehearing denied.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Joseph BEESLEY

v.

F. W. WHEELER & CO., Piffs. in Err.

(.....Mich.....)

1. The duty of a master to provide a safe place for workmen does not make a shipbuilder liable for negligence of carpenters in preparing a scaffold for other workmen engaged in constructing a ship.
2. A riveter and carpenters under the same superintendent engaged in ship building are fellow servants, so as to preclude recovery by the riveter for injuries caused by negligence of the carpenters in constructing a scaffold on which he works.

(December 22, 1894.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Bay County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries caused by the fall of a scaffold on which plaintiff was working and for the maintenance of which defendant was alleged to be responsible. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. McDonnell & Hall, with Messrs. Moore & Moore, for plaintiffs in error:

The scaffold was a temporary structure made necessary by and used only in this particular piece of work.

NOTE.—In connection with the extensive review of the authorities found in the above case on the subject of scaffolds as places for work within the duty of the master to furnish a reasonably safe place, see the case of Consolidated Coal & Min. Co. v. Floyd (Ohio) 25 L. R. A. 848, holding that a mine is not such a place. 27 L. R. A.

The carpenters, fitters, bolters, chippers, and drillers, riveters and searchers who successively used it were fellow servants engaged in a common enterprise, to wit, that of building a ship, and if the carpenters were negligent in selecting the material it was the negligence of a fellow servant, and the plaintiff could not recover.

Hoar v. Merritt, 62 Mich. 386; Quincy Min. Co. v. Kitts, 42 Mich. 40; Devey v. Parke, 76 Mich. 631; Baron v. Detroit & C. Steam Nav. Co. 91 Mich. 585; Rawley v. Colliau, 90 Mich. 81; Kehos v. Allen, 92 Mich. 464; Pickett v. Atlas S. S. Co. 12 Daly, 441; Butler v. Townsend, 126 N. Y. 105; Killea v. Paxon, 125 Mass. 485; Lehigh Valley Coal Co. v. Jones, 86 Pa. 432; National Tube Works Co. v. Bedell, 96 Pa. 175; Hogan v. Central Pac. R. Co. 49 Cal. 128; Keith v. Walker Iron & Coal Co. 81 Ga. 49; Somer v. Harrison (Pa.) April 4, 1887; Hefferen v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 45 Minn. 471; Ross v. Walker, 189 Pa. 42.

Messrs. Shepard & Lyon, for defendant in error:

The scaffold built by defendant for its employes to go upon to perform their work was an appliance and structure of such a character as to bring the defendant within the rule requiring it to use reasonable care in providing a place reasonably safe upon which its employes were to perform their work.

Brown v. Gilchrist, 80 Mich. 56; Arkerson v. Dennison, 117 Mass. 407; Haworth v. Seavers Mfg. Co. 87 Iowa, 765.

It was the duty of the master to exercise reasonable care in the erection of the scaffold, and if it or its agents to whom it entrusted this duty were guilty of negligence in the performance of the work, and the plaintiff was injured by reason of such negligence, the defendant is liable for the damage sustained.

Johnson v. Spear, 76 Mich. 189; Van Dusen v. Letellier, 78 Mich. 492; Brown v. Gilchrist, 80 Mich. 56; Morton v. Detroit, B. O. & A. R. Co. 81 Mich. 428; Eddy v. Aurora Iron Min. Co. 81 Mich. 548; Sadowski v. Michigan Car Co. 84 Mich. 100; Tangney v. J. B. Wilson & Co. 87 Mich. 458; Ashman v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 90 Mich. 571; Kelly v. Erie Teleg. & Teleph. Co. 54 Minn. 321; Haworth v. Seavers Mfg. Co. supra; Arkerson v. Dennison, 117 Mass. 407; Mulchey v. Methodist Religious Soc. 125 Mass. 487; Coughtry v. Globe Woolen Co. 56 N. Y. 124, 15 Am. Rep. 387; Manning v. Hogan, 78 N. Y. 615; Benzing v. Steinway & Sons, 101 N. Y. 547; Krans v. Long Island R. Co. 123 N. Y. 1; Bowen v. Chicago, B. & K. C. R. Co. 95 Mo. 277; Sims v. American Steel Barge Co. (Minn.) Jan. 2, 1894.

Hooker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant is engaged in building steel vessels, in the construction of which scaffolds are necessary at various stages of the work. It employs about 300 men, of various trades, including fitters, bolters, chippers, drillers, riveters, searchers, and carpenters. These men are continuously employed, and all are subject to the control of the superintendent. The labor is divided among the artisans, and to the carpenters is apportioned the building of scaffolds, though they are sometimes assisted by others. The plaintiff, a searcher, i. e., one who goes over the work, and supplies omitted rivets, after the riveters of the plates of the vessels are through, was injured by the breaking of a weak putlog, selected and used by the carpenters who built the scaffold; and his right to recover hinges upon the question of whether or not he and the carpenter were fellow servants in such a sense as to prevent the application of the rule that it was the duty of the master to provide a reasonably safe place for the plaintiff to work. The doctrine which relieves the master from liability for injuries caused by the negligence of fellow servants is of wide application. It originated in cases where servants were engaged in a common enterprise, wherein, by reason of the negligence of one, another was hurt. It modified the doctrine that the principal is liable for the negligent acts of his agent, upon the theory that the servant assumed the ordinary dangers incident to the employment, and that "an obligation on the part of the master to take more care of the servant than he may reasonably be expected to take of himself will not be implied." Chief Justice Shaw, in the case of Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp., 4 Met. 49, 88 Am. Dec. 339, after discussing the liability of common carriers to their patrons, says: "They are held to the strictest responsibility for care, vigilance, and skill on the part of themselves and all persons employed by them, and they are paid accordingly. The rule is founded on the expediency of throwing the risk upon those who can best guard against it." He continues: "We are of the opinion that these considerations apply strongly to the case in question. Where several parties are employed in the conduct of one common enterprise or undertaking, and the safety of each depends much on the care and skill with which each other shall perform his appropriate duty, each is an observer of the conduct of the others, and can give notice of any misconduct, incapacity, or neglect of duty, and leave the service if the common employer will not take such precautions, and employ such agents, as the safety of the whole party may require. By these means the safety of each will be much more effectually secured than could be done by a resort to the common employer for indemnity in case of loss by the negligence of each other. Regarding it in this light, it is the ordinary case of one sustaining an injury in the course of his own employment, in which he must bear the loss himself, or seek his remedy, if he have any, against the actual wrongdoer." This rule is of such general application that the citation of authorities to support it is unnecessary. Much difficulty has been found in discovering a true test of its application, and the decisions are consequently somewhat inharmonious. The rule that the master is bound to provide his servant with reasonably safe machinery, and a proper and reasonably safe place to work, has sometimes been invoked or overlooked when perhaps it should not have been, and the two rules, running parallel in close proximity, have led to improper applications of both. There are some courts which have held that, in order to constitute servants of the same master fellow servants, it is not enough that they were engaged in doing parts of some work not requiring co-operation, nor bringing the servants together or into such personal relations that they could have exercised an influence, one upon the other, promotive of proper precaution, in respect to their mutual safety. This doctrine finds its favorite fields where large enterprises result in systematic division of labor. Several of the states recognize it, and adjudicated cases from Illinois, Tennessee, Virginia, Kentucky, and Georgia should perhaps be read in the light of this limitation of the general rule. But it is not the prevailing doctrine, as will be seen from an investigation of cases from most of the states, including our own; and it can be maintained only by overthrowing the rule that the implied contract of the master ends with indemnity against his own negligence, and does not extend to that of coemployees engaged in the same enterprise. For a discussion of the subject, see Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. supra; Brodeur v. Valley Falls Co. 16 R. I. 445. See also Hoar v. Merritt, 62 Mich. 386; Quincy Min. Co. v. Kitts, 42 Mich. 84; Dewey v. Parke, 76 Mich. 631; Baron v. Detroit & O. Steam Nav. Co. 91 Mich. 585.

Another attack upon the rule is made by the superior servant, as contradistinguished from the alter ego, or vice-principal, limitation. As might be expected from their adherence to the "division of labor doctrine," hereinbefore mentioned, the courts of Illinois, Tennessee, Virginia, Kentucky, and Georgia have adopted the "superior servant" rule. Similar cases can also be found in Ohio, North Carolina, West Virginia, Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri, and the federal courts. On the contrary, New York, Maine, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Maryland, Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota, California, and Texas have repudiated the doctrine. The English courts also refuse to adopt it. These decisions hold that this doctrine ignores the true criterion of fellow service. The cases upholding the limitations of the rule in these particulars are frequently cited in accident cases, and in hard or doubtful ones may sometimes lead to departures from the true rule. Greater or less obscurity inevitably follows, and no end of trouble from the consequences, where they are irreconcilable with the other rule.

It must not be assumed that there is no limitation to the doctrine of immunity on the part of the master. The law clearly imposes duties upon the master, from the discharge of which he cannot shelter himself by the interposition of an agent or servant, or the "fellow servant" rule. He may assume liability for accidents suffered by his servant in the course of his employment, either expressly or by implication, where it is plain that it was the intention of other parties that he should, or where he is personally present, directing the negligent act. Again, where the rule that he must provide a reasonably safe place and machinery applies, the responsibility is his. In all of these cases he is held liable, because the negligence is his. As said by a text-writer: "The true test, it is believed, whether an employé occupies the position of a fellow servant to another employé, or is a representative of the master, is to be found, not from the grade or rank of the offending or injured servant, but is to be determined by the character of the act being performed by the offending servant, by which another employé is injured; or, in other words, whether the person whose status is in question is charged with the performance of a duty which properly belongs to the master." McKinney, Fellow Servants, § 23; Flike v. Boston & A. R. Co. 53 N. Y. 549, 18 Am. Rep. 545; Crispin v. Babbitt, 81 N. Y. 516, 87 Am. Rep. 521; Ford v. Fitchburg R. Co. 110 Mass. 240, 14 Am. Rep. 598; Anderson v. Bennett, 16 Or. 515. It would seem that this must be the governing principle, unless the limitations hereinbefore discussed are adopted, which, as stated, is not the case in this state. This discussion of the "superior servant" question must not be considered as necessarily involving that of "alter ego." If the liability of the master is in all cases to depend upon the rule above mentioned, it matters little whether the offender is called "alter ego" or "servant." It is only when the act is one which does not fall within a duty that the law imposes upon the master, or which he has taken upon himself, that it becomes important. In such cases the term is found an appropriate one, when it is sought to invoke the doctrine of respondet superior. How far the courts have gone in holding that a master is liable for such acts, committed by a person in full charge of his business, we find it unnecessary to investigate in this case, and express no opinion upon the question. Having, then, determined the rule, it must be the guide in all cases, and if, in some instances, doubts shall have arisen, which in the minds of some have led to greater or less departures from it, the rule, and not such cases, must be the magnetic pole towards which future adjudication must point, and discrepancies, if any exist, must be ascribed to differences of opinion in regard to the application of the rule, which all recognize.

As to the matter of application, each case necessarily rests upon its own facts. Scaffold cases have not been numerous, and the application of the rule has not been uniform. Indeed, we could hardly expect it, in view of the limitations mentioned by the courts of some states. We may properly eliminate all scaffold cases arising in the states mentioned as adhering to the "division of labor" rule. The case of Scott v. Craig, 84 Jur. 401, went off on the proposition that, as the master personally superintended the work, the negligence was his own. In New York, the cases of Manning v. Hogan, 78 N. Y. 615, and Green v. Banta, 16 Jones & S. 156, may seem to support plaintiff's contention. In the former, decided in 1879, the plaintiff's intestate was killed by the falling of a scaffold erected for the purpose of doing the plaster work on a public building in Central Park. One Mahoney was the contractor with the city, and, before the work was begun, he executed an assignment to the defendant, Hogan, of all moneys due or to grow due by virtue of the contract, and he was obliged to carry out the contract to protect himself. The deceased was at work on the scaffold at the time of the accident. It was proved that he had applied for work, and his name was on the pay roll for that half day. There was also evidence that it was a particular branch of mechanical construction to put up such scaffolds; that the persons employed to build were not of that occupation; and that it was built of insufficient material, both in quality and quantity. Held, "that the question of negligence in building the scaffold was for the jury; that it was not sufficient that there was enough of suitable material provided to build the scaffold; it needed that there should be skill and judgment in the use thereof." This was a memorandum case, which was not reported in full, and we have not the benefit of the discussion of these questions by the court, if there was any; but enough appears to indicate that no violence is done to the general rule. The case appears to have turned upon the failure of the master to employ competent fellow servants, which is one of his duties, to the extent of using reasonable care in the selection. See a criticism of this case in Peschel v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 62 Wis. 361. Again, it is possible that the scaffold was erected by Mahoney, under his contract, before Hogan took charge of the work, in which case the scaffold builders and the deceased, who was shown to have worked but one half day, were not servants of the same master, and therefore were not fellow servants, within the rule. The case of Green v. Banta, supra, is from an inferior court, and cannot be said to settle the rule for New York. The plaintiff was a hod carrier, engaged with others in dumping brick upon a scaffold. Defendant, Banta, was a contractor, and the case says that it was his duty to furnish a properly built scaffold. In the performance of this duty he employed a foreman. The court said: "Thereupon any negligence of the foreman was the negligence of the defendant, and not the negligence of a fellow workman; and the same proposition would be true of any workman, not called a foreman, who was directed by the master to build the scaffold." The court adds: "If, after the scaffold be built, the foreman use the scaffold with the workman afterwards injured, and the injury ensues from the negligence of the foreman, they hold the relation of fellow workmen, so called, and the master is not responsible." The decision is based upon Crispin v. Babbitt, supra, which holds that the liability of the master does not depend on the grade or rank of the negligent employé, but upon the character of the act; and that, if the act is one pertaining to the duty which the master owes to his servants, he is responsible, but, if the act is one pertaining only to the duty of an operative, such operative, whatever his rank or title, is a fellow servant, and the master is not liable. For the latter part of the proposition of the court, the case of Slater v. Jewett, 85 N. Y. 61, 39 Am. Rep. 627, is cited. Whatever we may think of its application, this case of Green v. Banta recognizes the rule, and at most bears upon the question whether an employer owed a duty, under the facts in that case, to furnish a safe scaffold. It asserts such duty, but it leaves us to conjecture whether such duty arose by express contract, by necessary implication from the peculiar facts, or upon the broad ground that a scaffold builder and a plasterer are under no circumstances fellow servants. The case of Hogan v. Field, 44 Hun, 72, was where a bridge riveter was injured by the fall of a scaffold. It was not the business of Hogan to build the staging, but, under the direction of the person in charge of the work, he, with others, undertook it. It was held that the negligence of such person was that of fellow servants, and he was not permitted to recover. These cases do not, therefore, weaken, but strengthen the rule mentioned as the criterion, and it does not clearly appear that such rule has been misapplied.

We will next consider the rule in Massachusetts, selecting only scaffold cases. In Mulehey v. Methodist Religious Soc., 125 Mass. 487, a verdict for the plaintiff was sustained because the society expressly contracted to build and remove stagings for decorators. In Arkerson v. Dennison, 117 Mass. 407, the plaintiff, who was at work repairing a building, went upon a staging by defendant's direction. The staging was insecure by reason of its construction of unsuitable materials, or by neglect to securely fasten it. The staging was built before plaintiff's employment, by men who were afterwards his fellow workmen, and the defendant directed what lumber should be used. The staging was not built under the direct personal supervision of defendant, but there was evidence that he superintended the work generally. It was held a proper question for the jury, and apparently turned upon the proposition that, "when the preparation of the appliances is neither intrusted to nor assumed by the employés, the master may be guilty of negligence if defective appliances are furnished, even though the workmen themselves are employed in the preparation of them; and that in that case, negligence appearing, it was a question for the jury whether that negligence was in respect of what was done or undertaken by the fellow workmen, or was the negligence of the master." There may be differences of opinion as to whether this case overstepped the rule or not, but that it was not so intended is inferable from the cases of Zeigler v. Day, 123 Mass. 152; Colton v. Richards, Id. 484; and Killea v. Faxon, 125 Mass. 485, two of which were scaffold cases. The latter case states the difficulty in these cases as follows: "On the one hand is the familiar rule that one who enters the service of another takes upon himself the risks incident to the employment, including the risk of the negligence of fellow servants employed in the same service. On the other hand is the equally well-settled rule that, if the master undertakes to furnish structures or instruments with which the servants have to work, the master is bound to use due care in providing them, and he is responsible if, through his negligence, or that of other servants employed to furnish them, they are unsuitable." The court adds: "We are of the opinion that this case falls within the first rule. There was no evidence which would justify the jury in finding that either of the defendants undertook to furnish a staging for the plaintiff, or to assume the risk of its safety. It was like the ordinary case where a man, in building or repairing a house, employs various servants in different departments of labor. Neither of the defendants retained any charge or direction of the work of putting up the staging, but intrusted it to Higgins. He and the plaintiff were fellow servants, employed in the same service, and each took the risk of the negligence of the other." It should be remarked that Higgins was a carpenter employed by the defendant to superintend the whole job. Plaintiff was a coppersmith hired by defendant to put up gutters upon the roof.

27 L. R. 1.

In Minnesota is a late case, viz., Sims v. American Steel-Barge Co., 57 N. W. Rep. 322, which is supposed to be nearly upon all fours with the present case; but it differs in this particular: that the building of scaffolds was intrusted to one Guiane and his crew, employed to build stagings, and to do nothing else. This may or may not have been considered an important reason for reaching the result in that case. To us it does not seem to be so unless by way of an implication of an undertaking to furnish stagings for employés, and at best we think it is bordering upon the division of labor rule, which we understand that Minnesota does not in terms indorse. For other cases sustaining the claim that the master is not liable in staging cases, see Peschel v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 62 Wis. 338; Benn v. Null, 65 Iowa, 407.

It remains to look at the case from the standpoint of Michigan authorities. The doctrine of "fellow servant" has been so frequently discussed that it will not be necessary to elaborate some branches of the question. The cases show that the rule of Priestly v. Fowler, 3 Mees. & W. 1, exists, and that there has been no express recognition of the limitations as to "division of labor," or "superior servant." Michigan, as already stated, adheres to the rule that the master's liability depends upon the nature of the duty and the character of the contract; and, if this court has ever departed from the rule, it is only in its application, and about that minds may differ. The attack upon the general rule has usually been made, in this state, in the guise of a claim that the master was required to furnish a safe place or safe machinery. In Van Dusen v. Letellier, 78 Mich. 494, an employé was injured by the collapse of a dock, the supports to which became rotten, and gave way. Plaintiff was a laborer piling lumber. The owner lived in another county, and had a superintendent, who looked after the business in a general way, and who hired competent men to inspect the dock before the lumber was piled. The court held that "the duty of inspection, when required by the circumstances of the case, cannot be delegated by the master in such a manner as to avoid responsibility." The doctrine that it was the duty of the master to provide a safe place was applied, and upon this it was decided. In Devey v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 97 Mich. 380, 23 L. R. A. 292, reversing on rehearing 97 Mich. 343, 16 L. R. A. 342, the question of a safe place was again discussed, and the court refused to apply it to a case where an inspector permitted a car improperly loaded with lumber to be made a part of a train, whereby plaintiff was injured; holding that the inspector and plaintiff were servants of the same master, engaged in the same service, viz., running its train. The case contains a valuable discussion of these principles. In the cases of Miller v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 90 Mich. 230, and La Pierre v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 99 Mich. 212, unsuccessful attempts were made to assert the doctrine of a "safe place" where the fault was clearly that of a fellow servant. In none of these Michigan cases cited was a scaffold involved. In Hoar v. Merritt, 63 Mich. 386, the injury was occasioned by the fall of a scaffold. A dwelling was erected by the defendant, who hired a superintendent by the month, who had general charge under defendant's direction, hiring all the men but the painters, who were hired by the defendant personally. The scaffold was erected, by direction of the superintendent, for the building of the cornice. After this was done the painters used the scaffold, and plaintiff was hurt. Defendant furnished suitable material and competent workmen to build the scaffold, and the court held that they were fellow servants, and that the risk was incident to plaintiff's employment, which he assumed when he entered the master's service. The cases of Brown v. Gilchrist, 80 Mich. 56; Harrison v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. 79 Mich. 409, 7 L. R. A. 623, and Hunn v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 78 Mich. 513, 7 L. R. A. 500, are cases where the negligence was that of a superior, for which, under the facts in those cases, the master was held liable. Some may think them an innovation upon the doctrine that the grade of the servant is immaterial; but before reaching such conclusion we should examine the nature of the duty, in the performance of which the injury occurred. At all events, they seem to have raised different questions from that involved in this case.

27 L. R. A.

Here the defendants were engaged in the enterprise of building a ship. Artisans of various kinds were employed to do their respective shares of the work. The building of stagings, the erection of derricks, and raising materials were parts of the necessary work, incident to and simultaneous with, and in fact a part of, the building of the ship. Stagings were for temporary use, and indispensable. All were under the charge of one superintendent, who directed the different gangs through their respective foremen. There is nothing to indicate a contract to provide a safe scaffold to work upon, or an assumption of that duty by the master, and the case seems to be clearly within the rule of Killea v. Paxon, which it closely resembles, and of Hoar v. Merritt. The duty was one which was left to those engaged in the construction of the ship. It is believed that this does no violence to the rule of safe place. The case is different from those where the master furnishes a permanent place to work, as in a ship or factory. A master's duty in such a case is to make and keep the place reasonably safe; but that rule would apply as to those working on, but not necessarily as to those constructing, the factory. The latter would not be fellow servants with each other, for the enterprises would not be the same. The service of one would be the erection of the completed factory; that of the other its use for the purpose for which it was designed. But here the scaffold builder and the riveter are engaged in the common service of building a ship. The work of both goes along together, and it seems to us that the case is clearly within the rule of Priestly v. Fowler and kindred cases. The court should have directed a verdict for the defendant.

Judgment reversed, and no new trial ordered.

Long and Grant, JJ., concurred with Hooker, J.

Montgomery, J., concurring:

The rule that it is the duty of the master to furnish a safe place for the servant to work is so universal and so thoroughly settled that no citation of authorities is necessary to sustain it. It is also settled in this state that this duty is one which cannot be delegated by the master so that the employé engaged to do the work of making the premises safe is to be treated as a fellow servant of those who are employed and engaged in the general work for which the premises are intended. Van Dusen v. Letellier, 78 Mich. 492; Brown v. Gilchrist, 80 Mich. 56; Roux v. Blodgett & D. Lumber Co. 94 Mich. 607; Morton v. Detroit, B. O. & A. R. Co. 81 Mich. 428. On the other hand, I think it is equally clear that where the danger or injury results from the operation, and the negligence is that of one who is engaged in the common employment, it cannot in any proper sense be said to be attributable to a fault in providing a safe place to work, or safe machinery or appliances. See Dewey v. Detroit, 62 Mich. 886, 16 L. R. A. 842, reversed on rehearing in '97 Mich. 329, 23 L. R. A. 292.

The question remains whether the construction of the scaffold, the defect in which caused the injury in this case, was a part of the work in which the plaintiff was, in common with others, engaged, or was in the line of the performance of the duty of the master to supply a safe place to work. I think this question is ruled by Hoar v. Merritt, 62 Mich. 886. In Bulter v. Townsend, 126 N. Y. 110, Finch, J., in treating of this question in a case analogous to the present one, said: "It was a mistake to assume, as the duty violated, that of providing a safe place for the work of the servants. The staging was not, in the sense of the rule, the place in which the work was to be done, but an appliance or instrumentality by means of, or through the aid of which, the calkers were to do their work. The distinction is sometimes very important for a place, in its broad sense, is never safe in which an accident happens, and accident always happens in some place, and so the master might almost become an insurer. Properly enough, an existing mine, or a railroad crossing, a cattle-guard, or the rooms in a factory, have been deemed places for work which the master was bound to make safe by the exercise of reasonable care; but a platform upon which the servant was directed to stand we have treated, not as a place, but as an instrument or appliance of his work. See also, as supporting the doctrine of Hoar v. Merritt, 62 Mich. 886; Killea v. Faxon, 125 Mass. 485, and Peschel v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 62 Wis. 338. I concur in the conclusion reached by Mr. Justice Hooker.

McGrath, Ch. J., concurred with Montgomery, J.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

NEW ENGLAND TRUST CO.

v.

Samuel A. B. ABBOTT, Ex'r, etc., of Josiah Abbott, Deceased.

(162 Mass. 148.)

1. Even if a by-law of a corporation giving the board of directors the option to take the shares of any stockholder

NOTE.—Restrictions by by-law or articles of association on the right to sell shares of stock.

I. By by-law.

a. In general.

b. Of national banks.

II. By articles of association.

III. Exercise of power to approve or disapprove.

- I. By by-law.

a. In general.

That stockholders indisputably have the right to sell their shares at pleasure is declared by the court in Trisconi v. Winslip (1891) 43 La. Ann. 45. This was said in denying the remedy of a stockholder against directors who under authority of a majority of the stockholders suspended the business of the association, and also against representatives of a trust who had bought the majority of the stock.

"We think it cannot be maintained that the right to the shares in the capital stock of this corporation cannot be transferred without a literal compliance with the by-laws,"—said the court in Sargent v. Franklin Ins. Co. (1829) 8 Pick. 90, 19 Am. Dec. 306, where a by-law required shares to be transferred at the office of the company, personally or by attorney and with the assent of the president, and his assent was not procured because of his absence from his office.

The validity of a by-law restricting a sale of stock is a question suggested but not decided in Re David Jones Co. (1893) 67 Hun. 360.

Without passing upon or raising any question as to the validity of a by-law prohibiting any private who desires to sell them at a value appraised by themselves may be invalid, the subscriber is bound by his agreement which adopts the by-law.

2. An agreement between a subscriber and a corporation to the effect that the board of directors shall appraise the value of his shares and have the option to take them at that value in case of any transfer thereof is not against public policy.

3. An offer of stock for appraisal is not sale of stock until it has been first offered in writing to the then existing stockholders who shall have the right of pre-emption at the selling price, the court in American Nat. Bank v. Oriental Mills (1891) 17 B. I. 551, held that even if the by-law was not complied with no one but the stockholders could take the objection, and they had power to waive it.

Without passing on the effect of a by-law requiring approval of a board of directors to a transfer of shares, a transferee was denied a mandamus to compel the transfer in Queen v. Liverpool, M. & N. R. Co. (1852) 21 L. J. Q. B. 284, on the ground that he did not take the transfer with the bona fide intention of becoming a shareholder.

That the power of regulating transfers of stock does not include authority to control its transferability by prescribing to whom the owner may sell and to whom not, or upon what terms, and that the mere power to regulate transfers does not authorize a refusal to allow a transfer of stock to an insolvent is decided in Chouteau Spring Co. v. Harris (1855) 20 Mo. 383.

A by-law prohibiting the alienation of shares of stock or imposing any restrictions on its exercise is declared to be in restraint of trade and against public policy and void, in Moore v. Bank of Commerce (1873) 52 Mo. 377, where the company was held estopped by a statement of an officer from claiming a forfeiture of stock for debts due.

In Wisconsin also it was held that a by-law prohibiting a transfer of stock without consent of all stockholders is against public policy and void. Re Klaus (1886) 67 Wis. 401.

necessary to permit the exercise of an option of the corporation to take the stock under an agreement making it the duty of an executor or other transferee to offer the shares for appraisal and to be taken at the election of the corporation.

4. Specific performance of an agreement to permit a corporation to take the stock of a deceased subscriber at the value appraised by the directors, if they so elect, will not be denied on the ground that the corporation has a remedy at law,—especially where its shares are all subject to its option to purchase and are not bought and sold in the market like most stocks, and it might be difficult to lay down a clear rule of damages.

(October 18, 1891.)

REPORT by the Superior Court for Suffolk County for the opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court of an action brought to compel defendant to transfer to plaintiff certain shares of stock in the plaintiff company which had come to defendant's hands as executor and to enjoin defendant from prosecuting an action at law to recover dividends upon the stocks. Judgment for complainant.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

The court in the above case also considered that provisions of the statutes for inspection of books to see who were stockholders and similar provisions implied the right to sell stock.

A by-law prohibiting a transfer to one not already a stockholder without first offering the stock to the board of directors, followed by the refusal of each member to buy at the price offered by a third person, is void. Brinkerhoff-Farriss Trust & Sav. Co. v. Home Lumber Co. (1898) 118 Mo. 447.

Such a by-law is not binding even upon one who is the president and a director of the company.

Restrictions on the right to make a bona fide sale and transfer of corporation stock must be found in express legislative enactments or authorized by laws. Johnson v. Laffin (1878) 5 Dill. 66, affirmed (1880) 103 U. S. 800, 25 L. ed. 532.

So far as the by-law prohibiting transfer of stock without assent of its directors implies an express agreement between the corporation and stockholders it is void as against public policy. Feckheimer v. National Exch. Bank of Norfolk (1884) 79 Va. 80.

A by-law prohibiting a transfer of stock on the books of the corporation until 80 per cent had been paid thereon was involved in the case of Orr v. Bigelow (1856) 14 N. Y. 556, although its validity was not questioned. It was held not to interfere with a sale of shares before 30 per cent had been paid upon them, but that the assignee was required to complete the payment of 80 per cent in order to obtain the transfer.

The validity of a contract for future sale of stock is not affected, although the fulfillment of the contract may be, by a by-law prohibiting the sale of such stock without first offering it to the corporation at par. Price v. Minot (1871) 107 Mass. 49.

A general power to pass by-laws does not embrace that of creating liens, and through the liens a forfeiture. Rosenback v. Salt Springs Nat. Bank (1868) 53 Barb. 495.

A by-law prohibiting a transfer of stock while a stockholder is indebted to the company is not authorized by New York Laws 1888, chapter 239, section 19, declaring that shares shall be transferable on the books of the association, in such manner as may be agreed upon in the articles of association although the statutes also give power to make

Messrs. W. G. Russell and J. L. Stackpole, for complainant:

Effect will be given to a by-law as a contract where the party sought to be bound has so agreed, or has taken rights subject to it.

Amesbury v. Bouditch Mut. F. Ins. Co. 6 Gray, 596; Flint v. Pierce, 99 Mass. 68, 96 Am. Dec. 691; Davis v. Second Universalist Meeting House Proprs. in Lowell, 8 Met. 321.

A contract to take stock, even if made before organization, would become binding after such organization.

Lechmere Bank v. Boynton, 11 Cush. 369; Athol Music Hall Co. v. Carey, 116 Mass. 471; Phillips Limerick Academy Trustees v. Davis, 11 Mass. 113; Perkins v. Union Button-Hole & Embroidery Mach. Co. 12 Allen, 278; Mirick v. French, 2 Gray, 420; Hudson Real Estate Co. v. Tower, 156 Mass. 82.

The agreement for the valuation of the shares is not invalidated by the interest of the directors who are appointed to value it.

Interest even in a juror or an arbitrator does not avoid a verdict or a submission if it is known to the party before trial and award.

Fox v. Hazleton, 10 Pick. 275; Kent v. Charlestown, 2 Gray, 281.

by-laws inter alia for transfer of stock. Bank of Attica v. Manufacturers & Traders Bank (1869) 20 N. Y. 501.

A by-law prohibiting transfer of stock by one indebted to the company without consent of the board of directors is void although the by-law is indorsed on the certificate of stock. Feckheimer v. National Exch. Bank of Norfolk, supra.

A by-law passed after the death of an insolvent stockholder indebted to the company, which prohibits a transfer of stock by a person thus indebted, is invalid as to a purchaser from the administratrix of the stockholder, who has no notice of the by-law. Philadelphia S. S. Dock Co. v. Heron (1896) 53 Pa. 28.

So in Iowa a by-law requiring approval and acceptance of a transfer of stock by a board of directors is invalid when not expressly authorized by statute. Farmers & M. Bank of Linleville v. Wasson (1878) 48 Iowa, 336, 30 Am. Rep. 398.

And in Louisiana a by-law prohibiting a transfer of stock by a person indebted to the corporation is void. Hyron v. Carter (1870) 22 La. Ann. 98.

But under a charter authorizing by-laws not inconsistent with law as the directors deem necessary it is held in Missouri that a by-law prohibiting a transfer of stock from a person indebted to the company is valid. Spurlock v. Pacific Railroad (1875) 61 Mo. 326; Mechanics Bank v. Merchants Bank (1870) 45 Mo. 512, 100 Am. Dec. 388; St. Louis Perpetual Ins. Co. v. Goodfellow (1845) 9 Mo. 149.

Such a by-law was construed under a statute entitling a purchaser of stock to dividends not to prevent a transfer of stock merely because it was not all paid up if no calls were unpaid. Kahn v. Bank of St. Joseph (1879) 70 Mo. 282.

A by-law prohibiting a transfer by a stockholder while owing the corporation was set up in Carroll v. Mullanphy Sav. Bank (1880) 8 Mo. App. 248, but the court said there was a failure to prove a valid by-law as it was proved to be adopted merely by the directors and not by the corporation.

In Carroll v. Mullanphy Sav. Bank, supra, it is said: "At common law and independently of statutory provisions of the legislature granting or authorizing the exercise of the power a corporation cannot prohibit a transfer of its shares on account of the indebtedness of the shareholder to the corporation. Where the stock is personal property Still less does interest in one appointed and agreed upon as an appraiser or valuer, in regard to whose action the rule is much less rigid than in case of strict arbitration.

Palmer v. Clark, 106 Mass. 373.

The fact that the party to whom such question is submitted is the agent of or under the employ of one of the parties was not regarded in that case, or in others, as in any way invalidating his finding if known to the other party.

Kihlberg v. United States, 97 U. S. 398, 24 L. ed. 1106; Martinsburg & P. R. Co. v. March, 114 U. S. 549, 29 L. ed. 255; Lewis v. Chicago, S. F. & C. R. Co. 49 Fed. Rep. 708; Tullis v. Jackson (1892) 8 Ch. 441.

It is very reasonable that those who are to have the care and custody of the moneys of the company should be trustworthy and respectable.

Queen v. Saddlers Co. 10 H. L. Cas. 404, 462.

The contract of a purchaser made at the time of purchase, that he will offer to sell to the vendor, at a price fixed or to be fixed, before selling to another, is reasonable and valid.

Kenerson v. Henry, 101 Mass. 152.

restrictions upon its transfer must have their source in legislative action and the corporation itself cannot create these impediments."

A by-law requiring the consent of directors to a transfer of shares by a debtor of the company was held not to make a transfer invalid when the usage of the company disregarded the by-law. Chambersburg Ins. Co. v. Smith (1849) 11 Pa. 120.

The general rule against limitation by by-laws applies with equal force against any action by directors to prevent transfers.

In the absence of any restrictions in the articles of association directors cannot prevent the transfer of shares under the English Companies Act of 1862, section 22, which provides that the company may determine the manner of transferring shares. Weston's Case (1868) L. R. 4 Ch. 20, 38 L. J. Ch. 49, 19 L. T. N. S. 337, 17 Week. Rep. 62.

The denial of the right of a majority stockholder on the ground that his stock was paid for by rival corporations will not be allowed to defeat his status and right to compel an election according to the by-laws whatever may be the remedy to limit an improper control of the company. Camden & A. R. Co. v. Elkins (1883) 37 N. J. Eq. 273.

b. Of national banks.

Even state legislation cannot limit or interfere with the transferable quality of national bank stock as that exists under statutes of the United States. Doty v. First Nat. Bank of Larimore (1892) 17 L. R. A. 259, 3 N. Dak. 9.

A by-law of a national bank prohibiting the transfer of its stock without assent of the directors is in contravention of the act of congress, and void. Beckheimer v. National Exch. Bank of Norfolk (1884) 79 Va. 80; Bank of Attica v. Manufacturers & Traders Bank (1880) 20 N. Y. 501.

To the same effect it is said in Johnson v. Laffin (1878) 5 Dill. 65, affirmed (1880) 103 U. S. 800, 26 L. ed. 532, that a national bank association cannot take away or defeat the right of a stockholder to make a bona fide transfer of his stock, which right is given him by U. S. Rev. Stat., section 5139.

II. By articles of association.

The main case of NEW ENGLAND TRUST CO. v. ABBOTT can hardly be reconciled with some of the cases following.

37 L. R. A.

The agreement is not invalid as an agreement to sell to a corporation its own shares.

Dupes v. Boston Water Power Co. 114 Mass. 37; Com. v. Boston & A. R. Co. 142 Mass. 146; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 311, note 4.

The by-law as a by-law or as a contract is not void as against public policy.

Restrictions may be created by a contract mutually agreed to by the stockholders, but cannot be imposed upon them by the majority of the stockholders, nor by the board of directors.

Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 408.

In the English practice it is an ordinary provision that shares shall not be transferred without being first offered to the corporation or the association, this being secured by the articles of association as part of the organic law of its existence.

Bargate v. Shortridge, 5 H. L. Cas. 297; Poole v. Middleton, 29 Beav. 646; Ex parte Penney, L. R. 8 Ch. 446; Moffatt v. Fairquhar, L. R. 7 Ch. Div. 591; Chappell's Case, L. R. 6 Ch. 902.

To hold that parties receiving property shall not be at liberty to agree upon what tenure they shall hold it or upon what terms they will Thus it is held in New York that an agreement by organizers of a corporation, who receive its stock, that their stock shall be put in trust and not drawn for six months without the written consent of all, is void as against public policy if construed to prevent a sale of stock within that time. Williams v. Montgomery (1898) 68 Hun. 416.

And again that an agreement between stockholders that they will not transfer their stock without consent of all parties is against public policy, as the right of alienation is incident to the property. Fisher v. Bush (1885) 35 Hun. 641.

On the other hand, a charter provision prohibiting transfer of stock except by execution or distress, or by administrators or executors, until it is finally paid up, was upheld against a contract to transfer shares when 50 per cent had been paid, and the contract was therefore denied enforcement. Merrill v. Call (1889) 15 Me. 423.

A provision in articles of association that fully paid up shares issued to an officer should be retained by him seven years was held to be for the benefit of the company, and a prohibited transfer was held not to defeat a valid action of the company at a meeting at which the transferee of such shares was necessarily counted to make a quorum. London & W. Supply Asso. v. Griffith (1883) 1 Cab. & El. 15.

The charter of a bank providing that shares should not be sold or transferred within one year from the date of the charter and a by-law creating a lien on stock for debts to the bank, were held not to prevent a valid assignment of shares within such year as against a claim of the bank to a lien for the debt of the original shareholder incurred after his assignment was known to the bank. Nesmith v. Washington Bank (1823) 6 Pick. 324.

A provision in the articles of association merely and not based on any statute prohibiting a person from holding more than $10,000 of stock was held in O'Brien v. Cummings (1885) 18 Mo. App. 197, not to prevent him from taking title to more than that amount of stock, and that such a provision in the articles was not equivalent to a charter provision.

A provision in articles of association that directors can refuse to transfer shares on which calls are unpaid does not apply to a transfer lodged for registration before the call was made. Gilbert's Case (1870) L. R. 5 Ch. 559, 13 Week. Rep. 938.

retransfer it, would be to limit the right of contract with which, in the words of Sir George Jessel, it is the "paramount public policy" not to interfere.

Printing & Numerical Registering Co. v. Sampson, L. R. 19 Eq. 462, 465; Com. v. Perry, 14 L. R. A. 825, 155 Mass. 117; Bank of Attica v. Manufacturers & Traders Bank, 20 N. Y. 504; Sargent v. Franklin Ins. Co. 8 Pick. 90, 19 Am. Dec. 806; Fisher v. Essex Bank, 5 Gray, 378; Sargent v. Essex Marine R. Corp. 9 Pick. 202; Bond v. Mount Hope Iron Co. 99 Mass. 505, 97 Am. Dec. 49; Price v. Minot, 107 Mass. 49; Poole v. Middleton, supra.

By-laws which have been overruled all contain one or the other of the following elements:

(1) That the by-laws had been adopted simply by a majority of the corporators, and had not received the assent of the stockholder, against whom it is sought to be enforced.

(2) That the by-law contained a restriction by which, if enforced by some third party, such as an officer of the corporation, or some other stockholder or stockholders, the transfer was completely prevented.

(3) That the by-law was in conflict with some positive statutory provision regarding the corporation enacting it.

(4) That the question did not involve the relation existing between the stockholder and the company, but turned on some extraneous circumstances.

Bank of Attica v. Manufacturers & Traders Bank, supra; Fisher v. Bush, 35 Hun, 641; Farmers & M. Bank of Lincolnton v. Wasson, 48

Iowa, 386, 30 Am. Rep. 898; Re Klaus, 67 Wis. 401; Moore v. Bank of Commerce, 53 Mo. 377.

There is no ground for pronouncing the by-law invalid as malum in se or malum prohibitum.

"The principle of public policy is this: Ex dolo malo non oritur actio. No court will lend its aid to a man who founds his cause of action upon an immoral or an illegal act."

Cranston v. Goss, 107 Mass. 440, 9 Am. Rep. 45.

The objection made arises solely from the claim that a private right to property is infringed. The person possessed of this right is certainly competent to waive it. Quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se introducto.

Long v. Billings, 9 Mass. 482; Miles v. Boyden, 3 Pick. 218; Com. v. Dailey, 12 Cush. 88.

It was not in the power of Mr. Abbot or of his executor to revoke the agreement that the directors should appraise the stock.

Palmer v. Clark, 106 Mass. 378; Haley v. Bellamy, 187 Mass. 857; Sugden, Vend. & P. chap. 7, § 1, par. 87; Mores v. Merest, 6 Madd. 26; Pope v. Lord Duncannon, 9 Sim. 177; Harcourt v. Rambottom, 1 Jac. & W. 511; Richardson v. Smith, L. R. 5 Ch. 650, note.

The evidence offered by the defendant that the directors erred in their judgment in their appraisal of the stock was rightly rejected.

Palmer v. Clark, supra; Martinsburg & P. R. Co. v. Marsh, 114 U. S. 549, 29 L. ed. 255; Kihlberg v. United States, 97 U. S. 898, 24 L. ed. 1106; Sweeney v. United States, 109 U. S. 618, 27 L. ed. 1058.

Instead of issuing shares of stock members of a reservoir corporation may lawfully agree in the absence of any restriction in their charter that rights in the joint or capital stock of the corporation shall pass with the mills, mill-dams, and mill privileges owed by such members, thus confining the ownership to persons directly interested in the maintenance of the dams. This is decided in holding that death of a member does not dissolve the corporation. McGinty v. Athol Reservoir Co. (1862) 155 Mass. 188.

A provision in articles of association of a partnership against the sale of shares without first offering them to the association was assumed to be valid but not directly decided in Harper v. Raymond (1858) 3 Bosw. 29.

Such provisions have not been uncommon in articles of partnerships which were organized in the form of joint-stock companies, but they do not seem to have been brought into adjudication. But in view of the general doctrine of delectus personarum applicable to partnership associations, such cases are plainly distinguishable from corporation cases.

III. Exercise of power to approve or disapprove.

Directors having the power to approve or disapprove of a transfer of shares cannot disapprove for a purely arbitrary reason or because an otherwise objectionable transferee would not vote in a proper manner. Moffatt v. Farquhar (1876) L. R. 7 Ch. Div. 591, 47 L. J. Ch. 355, 38 L. T. N. S. 18, 28 Week. Rep. 522.

So in Chappell's Case (1871) L. R. 6 Ch. 902, 20 Week. Rep. 9, 25 L. T. N. S. 438, it was held that directors cannot arbitrarily disapprove of a transferee and that "they are only to see if they can provide a substitute who will take the shares," where the deed of settlement provided that the transferee should take the shares if the directors should not within fourteen days procure some other person to take them at the market price for the time.

Refusal by directors to make any transfer at all is not a reasonable exercise of power given them by a deed of settlement to approve or disapprove of a transfer of shares. Robinson v. Chartered Mercantile Bank of India, London and China (1885) L. R. 1 Eq. 52, 35 Beav. 79, 13 L. T. N. S. 454, 14 Week. Rep. 71.

But another case holds that it must appear that directors have acted from some improper motive, or arbitrarily, or capriciously in refusing to approve a transfer of shares, where the deed of settlement of the company requires their approval, in order that the court may interfere to compel them to give their approval. Ex parte Penney (1872) L. R. 8 Ch. 446, 42 L. J. Ch. 183, 28 L. T. N. S. 150, 21 Week. Rep. 186, reversing 21 Week. Rep. 96.

This is in effect adopting the presumption of due exercise of official duty until the contrary is proved. On the other hand, a Canadian case holds that a company has no power, under 27 & 28 Vict., chapter 23, to refuse to allow a transfer of shares without assigning a sufficient reason therefor. Smith v. Canada Car Co. 6 U. C. Pr. Rep. 107 (Rob. & J. Dig.).

The right which directors of a banking company may have to withhold approval of a transfer cannot be exercised for the purpose of obtaining priority of payment to the bank of a debt due from the shareholder. Pinkett v. Wright (1842) 2 Hare, 120, 12 L. J. Ch. 119, 6 Jur. 1103.

On the ground that the power of directors to disapprove a transfer cannot be arbitrarily exercised, they cannot refuse after receiving payment of a call from a transferee to approve the transfer to him on the ground that the transfer has not been

Notice to parties is not necessary for a valuation.

Palmer v. Clark, supra; Norton v. Gale, 95 Ill. 533, 35 Am. Rep. 173; Bedell v. Kennedy, 109 N. Y. 153; Flint v. Gibson, 106 Mass. 891; Robbins v. Clark, 129 Mass. 145; Haley v. Bellamy, 187 Mass. 359; St. Paul & N. P. R. Co. v. Bradbury, 42 Minn. 222; Tullis v. Jackson [1892] 8 Ch. 441; Langdon v. Northfield, 42 Minn. 464; Lull v. Korf, 43 Ill. 225; Hudson v. McCartney, 33 Wis. 331; Hubbell v. Bissell, 2 Allen, 196; Boston Water Power Co. v. Gray, 6 Met. 131; Brown v. Bellows, 4 Pick. 179; Hoffman v. DeGraaf, 109 N. Y. 638; Brush v. Fisher, 70 Mich. 469; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Canton Co. of Baltimore, 70 Md. 405; Godard v. King, 40 Minn. 164; Belchier v. Reynolds, 2 Kenyon, Ch. pt. 2, p. 87; Collier v. Mason, 25 Beav. 200; Weeks v. Gallard, 21 L. T. N. S. 655; Underhill v. Van Cortlandt, 2 Johns. Ch. 339, 348, 349, 358, 1 L. ed. 400, 405, 408; Parken v. Whitby, Turn. & R. 366.

Inadequacy of consideration is not by itself a ground for refusing specific performance.

Western R. Corp. v. Babcock, 6 Met. 346; Park v. Johnson, 4 Allen, 259; Lee v. Kirby, 104 Mass. 420; Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. Jr. 234; Watson v. Doyle, 130 Ill. 415.

Specific performance is the appropriate remedy where the stock is limited in amount, held in a few hands, and not easily to be obtained.

Adams v. Messinger, 147 Mass. 185; Todd v. Taft, 7 Allen, 371; Somerby v. Buntin, 118 Mass. 279, 19 Am. Rep. 459; Chaffee v. Middlesex R. Co. 146 Mass. 224; Gloucester Inginglass & Glue

Co. v. Russia Cement Co. 12 L. R. A. 563, 154 Mass. 92.

Messrs. L. S. Dabney and F. J. Stimson, for defendant:

The seventh by law is void:

(1) Because it is not expressly authorized by its charter, and not "consistent with law" within the meaning of Pub. Stat., chap. 105, § 4.

By common law of England:

Norris v. Staps, Hob. 2106; Master & Co. of Framework Knitters v. Green, 1 Ld. Raym. 113; Harrison v. Godman, 1 Burr. 12, 16; Re v. Spencer, 3 Burr. 1837; Re v. Breton, 4 Burr. 2260, 2267; Re v. Head, 4 Burr. 2515, 2521; Re v. Dublin, 1 Strange, 537; Re v. Ginever, 6 T. R. 732; 2 Kyd, Corp. pp. 24, 26, 29, 30, 107, 109, 112, 113, 114, 119, 156, 157; Boisot, By-Laws, §§ 27, 36, 44, 50; Lowell, Transfer of Stock, § 31; Lindley, Partn. 4th ed. 701.

By common law of Massachusetts and the United States:

Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 105, §§ 4, 5, chap. 106, § 30; Gray v. Portland Bank, 3 Mass. 364, 3 Am. Dec. 156; Sargent v. Franklin Ins. Co. 8 Pick. 90, 19 Am. Dec. 306; Sargent v. Essex Marine R. Corp. 9 Pick. 201; Boston Music Hall Assn. v. Cory, 129 Mass. 436; Re Klaus, 67 Wis. 401; State v. St. Louis Union Merchants Exchange, 2 Mo. App. 96; Farmers & M. Bank of Lineville v. Wasson, 48 Iowa, 836, 30 Am. Rep. 398; Chouteau Spring Co. v. Harris, 20 Mo. 882; Moore v. Bank of Commerce, 52 Mo. 377; Kolf v. St. Paul Fuel Exchange, 48 Minn. 215; Bergman v. St. Paul Bldg. Assn. No 1, 29 Minn. 275.

The Trust Company Act (1868, chap. 418) made on the books of a company which is being merged in the new one under an arrangement for the issue of shares in the new company for those in the old. Slee v. International Bank (1893) 17 L. T. N. S. 423.

Transfers of shares fully paid up by the holders, who were the largest creditors of the company, made to different persons in order to give them votes at a proposed meeting to consider the winding up of the company, were ordered by the court to be registered in time to give the transferees the right to vote at that meeting, although the articles provided that the directors might decline to register a transfer made by a member indebted to the company, or "in the case of shares not fully paid up to a person of whom they do not approve." Re Stranton Iron & Steel Co. (1873) L. R. 16 Eq. 559, 43 L. J. Ch. 215.

In some cases the right of transfer has been considered with reference to the subsequent liability of the seller of the shares.

Thus under articles giving directors power to refuse approval of any transfer which they think not conducive to the interests of the company where they have just before winding up resolved that no transfers then in the office be registered without the express sanction of the board, except to new directors, it was held that the official liquidator had no power to put the transferee on the list of shareholders where the transfer was not registered although it had been deposited in the office by a shareholder whose calls were paid and the transferee was a responsible person. The court intimated that a compulsory order on the directors might have been obtained if the company had been going. Shepherd's Case (1866) L. R. 2 Eq. 584, 35 L. J. Ch. 626, 12 Jur. N. S. 697, 14 L. T. N. S. 736, 15 Week. Rep. 2.

A transfer although approved by directors, who had power to disapprove, is not sufficient to relieve the transferee on the winding up of the company where it was made to an irresponsible person, misrepresenting the consideration, and describing him as a "gentleman" when he was a clerk on a small salary. Rogers' Case (1871) 25 L. T. N. S. 406, 19 Week. Rep. 1057.

So a transfer of shares to a clerk in the office of the transferor describing him as a "gentleman" and falsely reciting a consideration, while in fact the clerk was hired to take the transfer, although it was registered by the directors who had power to disapprove, it was held on subsequent winding up of the company, which began soon afterwards, insufficient to relieve the former shareholder from liability as a contributory. Payne's Case (1869) L. R. 9 Eq. 223.

A very similar case was that of Williams (1869), reported in a note in L. R. 9 Eq. 224, where a transfer made to a clerk describing him as a public accountant, was registered.

Substantially the same was held in Ex parte Kintrea (1869) L. R. 5 Ch. 95, 39 L. J. Ch. 193, 21 L. T. N. S. 668, in case of a transfer to a ship steward earning small wages which the directors registered although they had power to disapprove.

Under articles providing that directors may decline to register a transfer to a person whom they consider irresponsible, a transfer to an irresponsible person deposited with the company but not registered before an order to wind up the company six weeks afterwards is not sufficient to relieve the transferor from liability as a contributory. Shipman's Case (1868) L. R. 5 Eq. 219, 37 L. J. Ch. 193, 16 Week. Rep. 364.

Want of formal consent of the board of directors to the transfer of shares in a joint-stock bank which consent was required under its deed of settlement, and which had been held in an action at does not govern plaintiff company (§ 1) and was never accepted by them as permitted by Massachusetts Laws 1890, chap. 815, § 2.

Chouteau Spring Co. v. Harris, Re Klaus, and Sargent v. Franklin Ins. Co. supra.

(2) The by-law in question is void, furthermore, because it requires the plaintiff corporation to buy its own stock.

Mass. Stat. 1871, chap. 142, 1890, chap. 168, 1888, chap. 413, §§ 13, 14.

(3) It is further void because it requires shareholders to submit to arbitration (appraisal), and makes the directors judges as between them and their own corporation.

Bonham's Case, 8 Coke, 114a, 118a; State v. St. Louis Union Merchants Exchange, supra, citing Middleton's Case, 8 Dyer, 832b.

(4) The amended seventh by-law is further void, because it prescribes a penalty of more than $20 (to wit, the loss of all subsequent dividends, which is practical forfeiture of the stock) for any breach of its provisions, contrary to the common law, where a by-law could only be enforced by a money penalty; and to Pub. Stat., chap. 105, § 5; Gen. Stat., chap. 68, § 7, which fix such money penalty at $20.

2 Kyd, Corp. §§ 109, 156, 157; Doggerell v. Pokes, F. Moore, 411.

(5) The by-law is further void, because, as amended, it requires the plaintiff company to declare and pay a dividend on only part of its shares, which is illegal, and will be enjoined in equity.

Re Election of Directors of Cape May Delaware Bay Nav. Co. 51 N. J. L. 79; Jackson v.

Newark Fl. Road Co. 81 N. J. L. 277; Luling v. Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co. 45 Barb. 510; March v. Eastern R. Co. 43 N. H. 515; Ryder v. Alton & S. R. Co. 13 Ill. 516; Carpenter v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 5 Abb. Pr. 277; Carlisle v. South Eastern R. Co. 1 Macn. & G. 639.

The by-law itself is invalid, cannot be enforced, as a contract made between the plaintiff and the defendant's testator.

A by-law is nothing but a contract sanctioned by law between the corporation and all its members, and therefore what is illegal as a by-law is no less illegal as a general contract with all the stockholders.

Rex v. Head, 4 Burr. 2515, 2521; 2 Kyd, Corp. § 114; Boisot, By-Laws, §§ 2, 7; Adley v. Whistable Co. 18 Ves. Jr. 323; Bergman v. St. Paul Bldg. Asso. No. 1, supra.

Even if the stockholders expressly assent to, or vote for, the by-law in question.

Boisot, By-Laws, §§ 77, 97; 2 Kyd, Corp. 114; Re Klaus, supra; Thomas v. Mutual Prot. Union, 49 Hun, 171; Rex v. Head, and Bergman v. St. Paul Bldg. Asso. No. 1, supra.

If a contract be claimed to have been made by defendant's testator with the corporation, there was no consideration therefor.

Gray v. Portland Bank, 3 Mass. 864, 3 Am. Dec 156.

A by-law can only be enforced by a penalty.

A court of equity will not decree specific performance of an illegal contract, or one void as against public policy, or even unfair.

Dunham v. Presby, 120 Mass. 285; Noyes v. Marsh, 123 Mass. 286; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 769, 770.

law (Bosanquet v. Shortridge (1850) 4 Exch. 699, 19 L. J. Exch. 221, 14 Jur. 71), ineffectual to release the shareholder from liability as such, was held in equity sufficient to release him where the transfer was made according to the usage of the company. Shortridge v. Bosanquet (1852) 16 Beav. 84.

The approval of a transfer by directors, who have authority to approve or disapprove, may be inferred from their conduct with respect to the shares. Ex parte Bentinck, 1 Meg. 2 (Mew's Dig. Supp.).

Specific performance of a contract to sell shares may be compelled by the purchaser notwithstanding the objection of the directors who have power to disapprove of the transfer. The court said it did not pass upon the effect of the transfer or say that the plaintiff would become a shareholder unless the board of directors approved it. Pool v. Middleton (1851) 29 Beav. 644, 9 Week. Rep. 753, 7 Jur. N. S. 1262, 4 L. T. N. S. 651.

But where purchase money was paid for shares in a company which was ordered to be wound up before any legal transfer was made, and the official liquidator refused to register or recognize it, while a provision in the deed of settlement required approval of the board of directors, the court refused a specific performance in favor of the seller to compel the transferee to pay calls made by the liquidator and denied an injunction against his suit to recover back the purchase money, although the court said the company might ratify the transfer and it would then bind the parties to the contract from the time it was entered into. Birmingham v. Sheridan (1864) 33 Beav. 600.

The vendor of shares in a company bought and sold on the stock exchange is not under an implied obligation to procure the consent of the directors to the transfer, where they have power to disapprove it. London Founders Asso. v. Clarke (1886) 37 L. R. A.

59 L. T. N. S. 93, L. R. 20 Q. B. Div. 576, 57 L. J. Q. B. 201, 36 Week. Rep. 439; Stray v. Russell (1859) 1 El. & El. 833, 29 L. J. Q. B. 115, 6 Jur. N. S. 163, 8 Week. Rep. 240.

But in case of shares not sold on stock exchange so that there was no usage binding the vendee to procure the transfer to be registered for the perfecting of the transfer to him, and where the deed of the company which was in the knowledge of both parties cast the duty of obtaining the consent of the directors on the vendor, by whose default only it was that the consent of the directors was not obtained, it was held in Wilkinson v. Lloyd (1845) 7 Q. B. 27, 14 L. J. Q. B. 165, 9 Jur. 323, that the purchaser was entitled to recover back the purchase money which he had paid, on the ground of a failure of consideration.

The sufficiency of a transfer to relieve the former owner of the shares on the winding up of the company is denied in Walker's Case (1860) L. R. 2 Eq. 554, where the transfer had not been submitted to the board for approval as required by the articles, or registered.

The result of full investigation of all the cases on the subject shows that the power to restrict transfers of stock by a by-law of a corporation is denied unless there is express authority given by statute or by articles of association to make such by-law. That such power to restrict transfer of shares may be given by statute is hardly open to question. That articles of association may restrict such power of transfer as a valid agreement between members of the corporation is left somewhat unsettled by reason of the lack of harmony of the decisions on this point.

The right to transfer interests in the property of corporations not represented by shares of stock is not considered in this note. B. A. R.

This alleged contract is against the public policy of Massachusetts.

See Gray v. Portland Bank, supra; Davis v. Second Universalist Meeting-House Proprs. in Lowell, 8 Met 321.

The court erred in excluding evidence of the fairness and adequacy of the appraisement, it being made by the plaintiff's officers themselves.

1 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 769, 770; Margraf v. Muir, 57 N. Y. 155; Mansfield v. Sherman, 81 Me. 865; Ramsay v. Gheen, 99 N. C. 215; Chute v. Quincy, 156 Mass. 189.

Defendant has never offered his stock for appraisal; and a court of equity will not decree specific performance of an agreement to submit a matter to arbitration.

Noyes v. Marsh, supra; Pearl v. Harris, 121 Mass. 390; Cobb v. New England Mut. Marine Ins. Co. 6 Gray, 192.

Specific performance for an agreement for the sale of stock will be denied if the plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law for defendant's refusal to purchase.

Noyes v. Marsh, supra.

Morton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a bill brought by the plaintiff to compel the transfer to it, by the defendant, as executor of the will of Josiah G. Abbott, of certain shares in the plaintiff corporation, which were held by said Abbott at his decease, and which, it is alleged, he agreed, when the certificates were issued to him, should be appraised at his death by the directors, and transferred to the plaintiff at the appraisal, if the directors so elected. The bill also seeks to enjoin the defendant from prosecuting an action at law brought by him against the plaintiff to recover certain dividends upon said shares that have been declared by it.

The plaintiff was organized in 1869, under a special charter (Acts 1869, chap. 182), with a capital of $500,000, which was afterwards increased to $1,000,000. The terms of the alleged agreement are found in the by-laws, of which all that is now material is as follows:

"Art. 7. Any member of this corporation who shall be desirous of selling any of his shares, the executor or administrator of any member, deceased, and the grantee or assignee of any shares sold on execution, shall cause such, their shares, respectively, to be appraised by the directors, which it shall be their duty to do on request, and shall thereupon offer the same to them for the use of the corporation at such appraised value; and, if said directors shall choose to take such shares for the use of the corporation, such member, executor, administrator, or assignee shall, upon the payment or tender to him of such appraised value thereof, and the dividends due thereon, transfer and assign such share or shares to said corporation; provided, however, the said directors shall not be obliged to take said shares at the appraised value, unless they shall think it for the interests of the company; and if they shall not, within ten days after such shares are offered to them in writing, take the same, and pay such member, executor, administrator, or assignee the price at which the same shall have been appraised, such member, executor, administrator, or assignee shall be at liberty to sell and dispose of the same shares to any person whatever.

37 L. R. A.

"Art. 8. The directors shall have power, and it shall be their duty, to sell and dispose of the shares which may be transferred as aforesaid to the corporation, whenever, in their judgment, it can be done with safety and advantage to the corporation; and in all sales made by the directors, under any of the aforesaid provisions, it shall be their duty to sell the shares to such persons as shall appear to them, from their situation and character, most likely to promote confidence in the stability of the institution; no greater number than one hundred shares being assigned to any one person, nor, in the case of a person already a member, a greater number than will be sufficient to increase his previous number to one hundred shares."

These by-laws were adopted before any certificates of stock were issued. Afterwards but before the capital was increased, article 7 was duly amended by adding to it the following:

"It shall be the duty of such executor, administrator, grantee, or assignee to offer said shares for appraisal, and to be taken by the corporation, if it shall so elect, whenever requested by the actuary or secretary, and no dividends or interest shall be paid or allowed after a failure to comply with such request: provided, that such request shall not be made until after the payment of one dividend and the expiration of six months from the death of the owner or sale as aforesaid, but the offer may be made at any earlier period if the party shall prefer."

Every certificate contained on its face, as part of the certificate, the provision that "said shares are transferable only in person or by attorney, duly constituted, on the books of the company, and in the manner and upon the conditions expressed in the by-laws of the company, printed upon the back of this certificate." On the backs of the certificates were printed by-laws 7 and 8. By-law 7 was printed as amended on the backs of those issued after the increase. There were also on the stubs from which the certificates were detached, in the certificate books, two receipts given and signed by the defendant's testator at the time the two certificates were issued to him in the original and increased capital, which were each as follows: "Received the above certificate subject to the conditions and restrictions therein referred to, and to the by-laws of the company, to which I agree to conform." The defendant contends that these by-laws are void. We have not found it necessary to consider that question, and we express no opinion upon it. We think that the case may well stand on the ground that the defendant's testator entered into an agreement with the plaintiff to do what the plaintiff now seeks to compel his executor to do. It is manifest that a stockholder may make a contract with a corporation to do or not to do certain things in regard to his stock, or to waive certain rights, or to submit to certain restrictions respecting which the stockholders might have no power of compulsion over him. In Adley v. Whitstable Co., 17 Ves. Jr. 315, 322, Lord Eldon says: "It has been frequently determined that what may well be made the subject of a contract between the different interests of a partnership would not be good as a by-law. For instance, an agreement among the citizens of London that they would not sell except in the markets of London would be good; yet it has been declared by the legislature that a by-law to that effect is void." See also, Davis v. Second Universalist Meeting-House Proprs. in Lowell, 8 Met. 321; Bank of Attica v. Manufacturers & Traders Bank, 20 N. Y. 505; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 408. In the present case the certificates were issued to the defendant's testator in consideration of the payment by him to the corporation of the amount due for the stock, and of the agreements with it on his part which they contained. By accepting them without objection, and by signing the receipts, he must be held to have agreed to the conditions printed on the backs of the certificates. The fact that the conditions were contained in by-laws which may have been invalid as such does not render his agreement void, if the contract was in substance one which the corporation had power to make. We think that it had such power. It is held in this state that a corporation, unless prohibited, may purchase its own stock (Dupes v. Boston Water Power Co., 114 Mass. 87); and we see nothing opposed to public policy in such an agreement as this with corporations like this. If honestly carried out by the directors, it tends to secure a trustworthy body of stockholders, from which those having the care and management of the affairs of the corporation naturally would be selected. It certainly cannot be contrary to public policy that the managers of this and similar institutions should be persons of skill who possess the confidence of the public. The restraint upon alienation is no greater than is often agreed to. In England it is not unusual to find in the deeds of settlement or articles of association under which corporations or joint-stock companies have been organized, and which correspond to the charter and by-laws here, provisions requiring the stockholder, in case he wishes to transfer his stock, to offer it to the directors, or to submit to them the name of the transferee for approval. Bargate v. Shortridge, 5 H. L. Cas. 297; Pools v. Middleton, 29 Beav. 646; Ex parte Penney, L. R. 8 Ch. 446; Moffatt v. Farquhar, L. R. 7 Ch. Div. 591; Chappell's Case, L. R. 6 Ch. 902. No objections seem to have been made to these provisions. In this state, the legislature, in numerous instances, has provided, in the charters of corporations like this, that the shares shall be transferable according to such rules and regulations as the stockholders shall establish, and not otherwise. It is hardly possible that the legislature was ignorant of the construction which has been put upon the power thus conferred, and which in the case of the first corporation of the kind chartered in the commonwealth, the Massachusetts Hospital Life Insurance Company (Acts 1818, chap. 180), was shown, it is said, by the adoption of by-laws from which those in this case were copied. It is true that this charter contains no provision in regard to by-laws or to the transfer of shares; but the policy of the legislature cannot be affected by such an omission, especially in view of the fact that many of the charters since granted contain this provision.

Neither do we think that the agreement is void for the reason that it authorizes the plaintiff to invest, as the defendant contends, in its own stock, or because it compels the defendant to submit to the appraisal of the directors. If the enumeration in its charter of certain things in which it may invest is to be construed as excluding, among others, its own stock, we think that the object of the agreement is not to secure the transfer of the shares to the plaintiff as an investment, but to enable the directors to dispose of it to such person or persons as shall appear to them, from their situation and character, most likely to promote confidence in the stability of the institution; and though, pending its disposition by the directors, it may, for convenience's sake, be placed with the company's securities, and dividends, if declared, collected upon it, that does not alter the essential character of the tenure upon which the company holds it. It is settled that one may agree to sell his property at a price to be determined by another, and that he will be bound by the price so fixed, even though the party establishing it was interested; provided the interest was known, and no objection made by the parties, and no fraud or bad faith is shown. Brown v. Bellows, 4 Pick. 179, 189; Palmer v. Clark, 106 Mass. 873, 889; Haley v. Bellamy, 137 Mass. 357, 359; Fox v. Hazellon, 10 Pick. 275; Strong v. Strong, 9 Cush. 569; Benjamin, Sales, 6th Am. ed. § 88, note 3.

The defendant objects that there was no real appraisal, and that he did not offer the stock for appraisal. The records of the plaintiff show that at a directors' meeting, at which were present sixteen directors, it was voted that the defendant's stock be appraised at $220 per share, and taken for the use of the corporation. The directors were not bound to give the defendant notice or a hearing (Palmer v. Clark, supra); and we must assume that they gave the matter such attention as, in their opinion, was necessary, and that the appraisal correctly expresses their judgment, after taking into account such matters as they thought should be considered. There is nothing to show that they were so mistaken about the facts that what they did was in no fair sense an appraisal of this stock, but of something else. It is said that they omitted the good-will. If so, it was, at most, an error of judgment, which would not invalidate the appraisal. It was not a condition precedent to the appraisal that the defendant should offer the stock. The agreement of defendant's testator was, in substance, that the stock should be appraised by the directors, and that it might be taken at the appraisal by them if they so elected; and that has been done. The offer was for the purpose of fixing a time from which the ten days should begin to run at whose expiration the stockholder could dispose of his stock if the directors had not elected to take it. If the directors appraised the stock, and voted to take it at the appraisal, an offer was unnecessary.

Lastly, the defendant contends that the plaintiff is not entitled to specific performance, because the stock was greatly undervalued and because the plaintiff has a remedy at law. It is evident that to remit the plaintiff to an action at law for damages would defeat the very purpose of the contract, and would not, we think, furnish an adequate remedy. No stock in the plaintiff company has ever been sold in the market, and all the shares that have been transferred have been transferred to the plaintiff, and disposed of by the directors in the manner provided. About three fourths of the stock of the original subscribers has been thus transferred. There is no evidence that the testator ever objected to this mode of dealing with it; and we see no good reason why the plaintiff should be obliged to accept damages for which it might be difficult to lay down a clear rule, instead of performance. Western R. Corp. v. Babcock, 6 Met. 346; Cushman v. Thayer Mfg. Jewelry Co. 76 N. Y. 365, 82 Am. Rep. 815. The case would perhaps stand differently if the shares were bought and sold in the market like most stocks. Adams v. Messinger, 147 Mass. 185. The defendant does not charge the directors with any fraud in the appraisal. He expressly disclaims that. It is well settled that where one agrees that another may fix the price for certain property, or the sum to be paid for material or services, the decision of the party selected cannot be impeached by showing that he has committed an error of judgment, or failed to avail himself of all the information which he might have obtained, or has valued the property too high or too low. Palmer v. Clark, supra; Flint v. Gibson, 106 Mass. 891; Robbins v. Clark, 129 Mass. 145; Martineburg & P. R. Co. v. March, 114 U. S. 549, 29 L. ed. 255; Steenerson v. Watson, L. R. 4 C. P. Div. 148; Sharpe v. San Paulo R. Co. L. R. 8 Ch. 597; Richards v. May, L. R. 10 Q. B. Div. 400; Tullis v. Jackson [1892] 8 Ch. 441; Ranger v. Great Western R. Co. 5 H. L. Cas. 72. The evidence that was offered by the defendant relating to the value of the stock was therefore rightly excluded. It is equally well settled that specific performance of an agreement to convey will not be refused merely because the price is inadequate or excessive. The difference must be so great as to lead to a reasonable conclusion of fraud, mistake, or concealment in the nature of fraud, and to render it plainly inequitable and against conscience that the contract should be enforced. Chute v. Quincy, 156 Mass. 189; Lee v. Kirby, 104 Mass. 420; Park v. Johnson, 4 Allen, 259; Western R. Corp. v. Babcock, 6 Met. 346, 352; Cathcart v. Robinson, 30 U. S. 5 Pet. 271, 8 L. ed. 123; Underhill v. Van Cortlandt, 2 Johns. Ch. 839, 1 L. ed. 400; Belchier v. Reynolds, 2 Kenyon, Ch. pt. 2, p. 87; Weekes v. Gallard, 31 L. T. N. S. 655; Fry, Spec. Perf. 3d Am. ed. § 424, note 1. It is to be observed that this is a suit directly between the company and a stockholder, to enforce a contract made with the company by the latter, and that the rights of third parties are not involved. Many of the cases cited and relied upon by the defendant are cases where the rights of third parties are involved, and therefore inapplicable to this.

The result is that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree compelling the defendant to convey the shares upon payment by it of the amount of the appraisal, with interest, and enjoining him from prosecuting the action at law.

Ordered accordingly.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

Kate BUDD, Resp't.,

v.

UNITED CARRIAGE CO., Appt.

(25 Or. 314.)

1. The carrier has the burden of proving freedom from negligence on proof of injury to a passenger in a public carriage resulting from the running and kicking of the horses, which the driver could not control.
2. Whether a passenger in jumping from a public carriage when directed to do so by the driver, while the horses were running and kicking, was guilty of contributory negligence or not is a question of fact for the jury.

3. A passenger is not guilty of contributory negligence in jumping from a public carriage while the team is running and kicking, if persons of ordinary prudence would take that course.
4. General directions of a passenger in a public carriage to drive down a certain street does not relieve the driver from responsibility in driving over an unsafe place on such route, as the driver is expected to know whether the road is suitable and reasonably safe

(January 22, 1894.)

NOTE.—As to the burden of proof of negligence in case of injury to a passenger, see note to Barnowski v. Helson (Mich.) 15 L. R. A. beginning on page 36; also later cases: Thomas v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (Pa.) 15 L. R. A. 416; Fredericks v. Northern Cent. R. Co. (Pa.) 22 L. R. A. 306; Fleming v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. (Pa.) 22 L. R. A. 361; Carrioco v. West Virginia Cent. & P. R. 37 L. R. A.

Co. (W. Va.) 24 L. R. A. 50; also (as to passengers on street-cars) Hawkins v. Front Street Cable R. Co. (Wash.) 16 L. R. A. 808; Spelman v. Lincoln Rapid Transit Co. (Neb.) 20 L. R. A. 316; Elliot v. Newport Street R. Co. (R. I.) 23 L. R. A. 208.

For implied warranty of horse and vehicle by liveryman, see note to Copeland v. Draper (Mass.) 19 L. R. A. 288.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Multnomah County, in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence.

Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. W. Paddock for appellant.

Mr. Thomas O'Day, for appellee:

There is required of the carrier "the utmost degree of care and skill in the preparation and management of the means of conveyance."

Angell, Carriers, § 532; Hegeman v. Western R. Corp. 18 N. Y. 9, 64 Am. Dec. 517.

All precautions as far as human foresight will go.

Kent, Com. 602; Edwards v. Lord, 49 Me. 279.

Every person who contracts for the conveyance of others is bound to the utmost care and skill, and if through any erroneous judgment on his part any mischief is occasioned he must answer the consequences.

Jackson v. Tollett, 2 Stark. 84.

The proprietors of stage-coaches which ply between different places, and carry passengers for hire and compensation, are responsible for all accidents and injuries happening to the persons of the passengers which could have been prevented by human care and foresight.

Brink v. Coe, 4 G. Greene, 555, 61 Am. Dec. 141; Farish v. Reigle, 11 Gratt. 697, 62 Am. Dec. 666; Story, Bailm. 4th ed. 592, 602; Bremner v. Williams, 1 Car. & P. 414; Crofts v. Waterhouse, 8 Bing. 831; Waland v. Elkins, 1 Stark. 272; Christie v. Griggs, 2 Campb. 79.

When injury or damage happens to a passenger by the breaking down or overturning of a railroad train, or breaking down of a bridge, or wheel, or axle, or by any other accident occurring on the road, the presumption, prima facie, is, that it occurred by the negligence of the railroad company, and the burden of proof is on the company to establish that there has been no negligence whatsoever.

Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Noell, 82 Gratt. 894; Curtis v. Rochester & S. R. Co. 18 N. Y. 535, 75 Am. Dec. 258; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Anderson, 94 Pa. 351, 89 Am. Rep. 787; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Williams, 74 Ind. 462; Cleveland, O. C. & I. R. Co. v. Newell, 104 Ind. 264, 54 Am. Rep. 812; Dawson v. Manchester, S. & L. R. Co. 7 Hurlst. & N. 1087; Feital v. Middlesex R. Co. 109 Mass. 398, 12 Am. Rep. 720; Breen v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. 109 N. Y. 297; Galena & C. U. R. Co. v. Farwood, 17 Ill. 509, 65 Am. Dec. 662; Anderson v. Scholey, 114 Ind. 553; Wilson v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 26 Minn. 278, 87 Am. Rep. 410; Lemon v. Chanalor, 68 Mo. 340, 80 Am. Rep. 799; Hipaley v. Kansas City, St. J. & O. B. R. Co. 88 Mo. 848; Ingalls v. Bills, 9 Met. 1, 48 Am. Dec. 346; Hegeman v. Western R. Co. 18 N. Y. 9, 64 Am. Dec. 517; Christie v. Griggs, supra; Stokes v. Saltonstall, 88 U. S. 18 Pet. 181, 10 L. ed. 115; Memphis & A. River Packet Co. v. McCool, 83 Ind. 892, 43 Am. Rep. 71; Inland & Seaboard Coasting Co. v. Tolson, 189 U. S. 551, 85 L. ed. 270; City & Suburban R. Co. v. Findley, 76 Ga. 811; Carpus v. London & B. R. Co. 5 Q. B. 749; Stager v. Ridge Ave. Pass. R. Co. 119 Pa. 70; Ohio & 27 L. R. A.

M. R. Co. v. Voight, 123 Ind. 288; New Jersey R. & Transp. Co. v. Pollard, 89 U. S. 22 Wall. 341, 22 L. ed. 877.

It was not negligence in the plaintiff to jump from the carriage under the belief of impending danger.

Iron R. Co. v. Mowery, 88 Ohio St. 418, 88 Am. Rep. 597; Galena & C. U. R. Co. v. Farwood, 17 Ill. 509, 65 Am. Dec. 662; Toomley v. Central Park, N. & E. River R. Co. 69 N. Y. 158, 25 Am. Rep. 163; Stokes v. Saltonstall, 88 U. S. 18 Pet. 181, 10 L. ed. 115; 2 Shearm. & Refit. Neg. § 519.

Whether the plaintiff in doing that act acted negligently or not is a question of fact for the jury.

McIntyre v. New York Cent. R. Co. 87 N. Y. 287; Edgerton v. New York & H. R. Co. 89 N. Y. 227; Filer v. New York Cent. R. Co. 59 N. Y. 851; Pool v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 56 Wis. 227; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Sykes, 96 Ill. 163; Cleveland, O. C. & I. R. Co. v. Manson, 80 Ohio St. 451.

Lord, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action brought to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff through the negligence of the defendant. The complaint, after alleging that the defendant was a common carrier, and its undertaking to carry the plaintiff around and through the city, avers, in substance, that the defendant, in disregard of its duty, sent a team for this purpose which was fractious and unsafe; that it was not properly and safely hitched to the carriage with safe gearing and appliances; and that the driver which the defendant furnished to drive such team was negligent and incompetent. It also alleges "that, while the plaintiff was being conveyed as aforesaid, said team, by reason of being wild, fractious, and unsafe, and being carelessly hitched to said carriage with unsafe gearing and appliances, and being driven by said careless and incompetent driver, became unmanageable and ran away, and said driver was wholly unable to control the team; and that plaintiff, being in imminent danger of life and limb, and believing herself so to be, at the request of said driver, in order to escape greater injury, attempted to get out of said carriage, and was thereby forcibly thrown to the ground, breaking and dislocating the bones of her forearm near the wrist, and otherwise greatly bruising and injuring her." The answer admits that the relation of passenger and carrier existed between the plaintiff and defendant, but denies the alleged negligence, and sets up contributory negligence as a defense. The evidence shows that the plaintiff informed the defendant, through the telephone, that she had a sick or invalid daughter whom she desired to take for a drive about the city, and requested the defendant to send to her residence, for this purpose, an easy carriage, with a safe and gentle team, and a careful and competent driver. In response to this telephonic order, the defendant sent a team hitched to a close carriage or coupé, with a driver, to her residence, and plaintiff and her sick daughter entered the carriage, and the driver, as directed by the plaintiff, proceeded to convey them, with said team and carriage, from place to place upon several business and social errands about the city. The plaintiff, noticing that the horses, when at a halt, were nervous and fidgety, asked the driver whether they were gentle and safe, and he answered that "the horses were all right." The evidence shows that she was induced to make this inquiry by solicitude for her sick daughter, whom she did not wish to be subjected to the excitement and fright likely to result if the horses proved intractable or unruly. When through with her errands, the plaintiff instructed the driver to convey them to the city park, where, after driving around its driveways for some time, she told him to leave the park by way of Park avenue, so as to pass a certain new residence located thereon which she desired to see. This avenue was graded out to the city park line, but there was a declivity of one or two feet which the carriage had to descend in turning from the park driveway into it. In making this turn, when the wheels descended the pitch or declivity, the tongue flew up between the heads of the horses, the carriage ran forward, whereupon one of them got his leg over the trace and commenced kicking, and then both ran away, kicking. As the horses were thus running and kicking, the driver hallooed to the ladies, "For God's sake, jump out!" which they promptly did; the plaintiff's daughter jumping out on one side, and she on the other, causing the injury complained of. As tending to show the conduct of the driver and the behavior of the horses under the circumstances, one witness testified: "It seemed as though, just as the team started down the hill, one of the horses became frightened and commenced to kick. . . . As soon as the horses began to kick, the man got scared. His actions indicated that from his performance. The driver immediately raised to his feet, and commenced to halloo. I could not understand what he said, but the horses were going down the hill at a rapid rate, and kicking, and the driver did not seem to have any control over them at all. When the team got opposite of us, the carriage door opened, and a woman fell out from the other side from where we were, and, after going several feet, another woman fell out on the other side," etc. Another witness testified that "the pitch was about a foot, and that when they came around, and made the turn to come into the road, the front wheels pitched down, and upon that the tongue flew up between the horses' heads, and one horse got his foot over the trace. Then they started forward again, and the trace straightened out under his hind leg, when the horse commenced kicking, and the man kept hallooing, and they kept coming over the hill in that shape." There was some further evidence tending to show that the team was not hitched to the carriage with proper gear to enable the horses to hold the carriage back when going down a pitch or declivity. Upon the part of the defendant the evidence tended to prove that the man in charge of the team at the time of the accident was a skillful, careful, and competent driver; that the team was safe and gentle, and was hitched to the carriage in a safe and proper manner, with safe harness and gearing; that the plaintiff had directed the driver where to go, and which way to drive, and that just before the accident she directed him to leave the park by Park avenue, where there was a sharp declivity of one or two feet; that, in driving down this declivity, in some unknown manner one of the horses got his leg over a trace, which frightened him and caused him to kick, and, the carriage pushing forward on the horses, they commenced running down the street, that the driver checked the team to about a standstill, and requested the plaintiff and her daughter to alight from the carriage; that plaintiff's daughter stepped out without injury, but the plaintiff, being greatly excited, jumped out hastily, and sustained the injury complained of. The trial resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff, and, from the judgment which followed, this appeal is taken.

The record discloses that, when the plaintiff rested, the defendant moved for a nonsuit on the ground that the testimony was insufficient to sustain the allegations of the complaint, which motion the court overruled, and the defendant excepted. The contention for the defendant is, conceding that the driver was careless on the occasion of the accident, it shows but a single act of negligence, which is not, of itself, sufficient to establish his general incompetency; and for a like reason, conceding that the team became unmanageable, and began to kick and run, under the circumstances indicated, it only shows that the team was intractable or unsafe on this particular occasion, which is not sufficient to establish the character of the team as fractious and unsafe. This contention is based on the hypothesis that the negligence alleged as the cause of the injury imposed upon the plaintiff the burden of proving that the team furnished by the defendant was habitually fractious and unsafe, and that the person provided by the defendant to drive such team was incompetent, or not possessed of the requisite skill and qualifications for that business. As a consequence, the defendant claims that the testimony for the plaintiff showing that she sustained an injury by jumping from the carriage by direction of the driver, while the horses were running and kicking, under the circumstances disclosed, although the relation of passenger and carrier existed between the plaintiff and defendant, is incompetent and insufficient to show that such injury resulted from the negligence alleged, and therefore the court erred in overruling the motion for nonsuit and submitting such evidence to the jury. From these considerations it will be observed that, in the view taken by counsel, he has wholly ignored the evidence in support of the allegation that the team was not properly hitched to the carriage with safe gearing and appliances, and confined his objections to the evidence in support of the allegations that the horses were unfit or unsuitable for the service required, and the driver incompetent and careless in the performance of his duty. He overlooks the fact that the complaint embraces nearly the whole field of the carrier's duty and obligations, and that evidence tending to prove negligence or failure to perform its duty in any essential particular alleged, adequate to have caused the injury, would be sufficient to sustain the verdict. But, as the objection raised involves the same principle as an objection to an instruction given by the court to which an exception is reserved, its consideration becomes important and imperative. The real point of the objection is that the alleged negligence to which it refers, considered in connection with the evidence in support of it, does not make a case which comes within the principle, as sometimes briefly stated, that the happening of an injurious accident raises a presumption of negligence, and throws upon the defendant the onus of showing that it does not exist. The gravamen of the complaint is that, while the relation of passenger and carrier existed between the plaintiff and defendant, the former was injured by reason of the defendant's negligence in furnishing a fractious and unsafe team, which, not being properly hitched with safe gearing to the carriage, nor provided with a careful and competent driver, became unmanageable, and began to kick and run away, when the plaintiff, at the urgent request of the driver, attempted to get out of the carriage, and was forcibly thrown to the ground and injured. As the relation of carrier and passenger is admitted, does the fact that the plaintiff sustained an injury, under the circumstances indicated, make a prima facie case of negligence against the defendant? The general rule undoubtedly is that, in actions for personal injuries caused by the alleged negligence of the defendant, the plaintiff is required to produce some evidence of negligence to warrant the judge in submitting the case to the jury. "But when the cause of the accident is shown to be under the management of the defendant or his servants, and the accident is such as, in the ordinary course of things, does not happen, if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence for the jury, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from want of proper care." Scott v. London Docks Co. 8 Hurlst. & C. 596. The law imposes the duty upon the proprietor of a stagecoach or other public vehicle to provide a reasonably safe conveyance, drawn by steady horses, with secure harness, and a skillful and competent driver. In the discharge of his duty the carrier is bound to use the utmost care and diligence of cautious persons to prevent injury to passengers. In Crofts v. Waterhouse, 8 Bing. 321, Best, Ch. J., said: "The coachman must have competent skill, and use that skill with diligence. He must be well acquainted with the road he undertakes to drive. He must be provided with steady horses, a coach and harness of sufficient strength and properly made, and also with lights by night. If there be the least failure in any one of these things, the duty of the coach proprietors is not fulfilled, and they are answerable for any injury or damage that happens." But it is not meant by this language that a stage proprietor is a warrantor of the safety of his coach, its equipments, the competency of his driver, or other appliances used, but that he is bound to use the utmost diligence and care in making suitable provisions for those whom he carries. So, in McKinney v. Neil, 1 McLean, 540, it is held to be the duty of a stage proprietor "to furnish good coaches, gentle and well-broke horses, good harness, and a prudent and skillful driver," and that he is liable to any passenger who may receive an injury for any defect in these particulars; and Greene, J., said: "With horses gentle and well broke, with coaches and harness good and strong, with drivers sober, prudent and skillful, a stagecoach line might be regarded as managed with human care and foresight." Brink v. Cox, 4 G. Greene, 558, 61 Am. Dec. 141. The liabilities of the carrier arise from the duties which the law imposes, and, while he is not an insurer against all defects, his liability extends to such as might be guarded against by care and skill; so that, although the duty is not imposed upon him of conveying his passengers with absolute safety, yet his liability goes to the extent of requiring that he shall use all care and diligence in providing a suitable vehicle, safe horses and harness, and a qualified driver. This is based on the principle that, the means of transportation being under the management of the carrier, and their fitness for such service peculiarly within his knowledge, he is bound to be supplied with every reasonable requisite to insure the safety of his passengers. This being so, when the duty is performed in the ordinary course of things, an accident would not be likely to happen; but, when one occurs from some apparent defect in the means, appliances, men, or apparatus employed by such carrier in the transportation, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from the want of proper care. Hence, the rule is well settled that in an action by a passenger for personal injuries when it is made to appear that the accident resulted from defects in the carriage or in the appliances, or in the want of skill of the driver, or in the unfitness of the team, the presumption of negligence arises, and the onus is cast upon the defendant to relieve himself of responsibility by showing that the injury was the result of an accident which the utmost care and foresight could not have prevented. When, therefore, a plaintiff establishes the relation of carrier and passenger, the fact that he received an injury from any defect in the instrumentalities which it was the duty of the carrier to furnish as a means for his transportation makes a prima facie case of negligence against the carrier. The onus is then cast upon the carrier to show that he used reasonable care and diligence in providing a suitable conveyance, steady and well-trained horses, good harness and proper appliances for the journey, and a competent driver, who acted with reasonable caution and skill. In a word, if a carrier would relieve himself from liability, he must rebut the presumption or negligence which arises from the happening of the accident by showing that the injury was not occasioned by any defect in the hack, or want of care or skill in the driver, or any neglect or want of diligence or foresight on his part. Christie v. Griggs, 2 Campb. 80; Jackson v. Tollett, 2 Stark. 84; Sales v. Western Stage Co. 4 Iowa, 547; Farrish v. Reigle, 11 Gratt. 711, 63 Am. Dec. 666; Mauzy v. Talmadge, 2 McLean, 157; Stokes v. Saltonstall, 88 U. S. 13 Pet. 181, 10 L. ed. 115; Boyes v. California Coach Co. 25 Cal. 468; Treadwell v. Whittier, 80 Cal. 589, 5 L. R. A. 498; Story, Bailm. §§ 592-601.

In the case at bar the record discloses the circumstances under which the horses began to run and kick, the conduct of the driver on the occasion, and how the injury occurred to the plaintiff. The defendant claims that these circumstances afford no inference that it failed in its duty to provide a safe and steady team, or a careful and competent driver. Counsel argues that the fact that the team ran and kicked, or that the driver was careless, on this occasion, does not show that the team were addicted to this habit or vice, or that the driver was generally incompetent, and hence was not evidence that the plaintiff's injury was caused by reason of the defendant's negligence in providing an unsafe or unreliable team, or a careless and incompetent driver. This is putting the onus on the person who has no means of knowing the temper or character of the team, or the particular skill or qualifications of the driver, to show that the team is habitually vicious or unsafe, or that the driver is without the requisite qualifications for his position. In Simson v. London General Omnibus Co., L. R. 8 C. P. 891, a passenger in an omnibus was injured by a blow from the hoof of one of the horses, which had kicked through the front panel of the vehicle, but there was no evidence to show that this particular horse was vicious or a kicker. It was contended that a casual kick by one of the numerous horses employed by the company was no evidence of a want of due and reasonable care on its part. It was argued, as here, that a horse which has never kicked before may do so once without acquiring the character of being vicious, and hence that the burden of proving the horse unsafe rested on the plaintiff. But in that case Bovill, C.J., said: "In the present case a horse drawing an omnibus belonging to the defendants, without any assignable cause, kicks out, and strikes and injures the female plaintiff, who was riding in the vehicle. It seems to me that that alone presents a case which calls for some explanation on the part of the proprietors. It is said that it is the nature of horses to kick. But I think it ought not to be the nature of a horse employed to draw a public vehicle to kick. Proof having been given that the horse in question had misconducted itself in the way charged, the burden of showing that he was not habitually a kicker, or something to account for his having kicked on this particular occasion, lay on the defendants. The mere fact of his having kicked out was, I should say, prima facie evidence for the jury." In the present case, the fact that the horses ran and kicked, and the driver was unable to control them, under the circumstances disclosed, tended to show that the defendant, in disregard of its duty, had provided wild and unsafe horses, and a careless and incompetent driver, as charged, and cast the onus upon the defendant of showing that such horses were not habitually unsafe or unmanageable, or the driver negligent or incompetent, or something to account for the running and kicking of the horses, or the inability of the driver to control them, on this particular occasion. In Roberts v. Johnson, 58 N. Y. 616, the evidence tended to show that, while the plaintiff was getting out of the omnibus, the horses started, whereby plaintiff was violently thrown upon the ground, and injured. Grover, J., said: "This showed, prima facie, either that the horses were unsuitable for such service, or the driver incompetent or negligent in the performance of his duty. If the starting of the horses was attributable to some other cause, for which the defendants were not responsible, it was for them to show it. This results from the fact that where proper horses and suitable drivers, who attend to their business, are employed, the horses will not start while passengers are getting into and out of the stage. If anything occurs, causing such start, which is beyond the control of the driver or proprietor, they can readily show it. Such fact is peculiarly within their knowledge, while, in most cases, the persons injured would be entirely ignorant of it." So here, with equal reason, the fact that the horses misconducted themselves showed, prima facie, either that the horses were wild and unsafe for such service, or that the driver was negligent and incompetent in the performance of his duty; for, if the running and kicking of the team was attributable to some other cause, for which the defendant was not responsible, it was for the defendant to show it, as such matter was peculiarly within its knowledge, and, generally, without the knowledge of the person injured. But there was other evidence. It was proved that the horses were without breeching, and that the pole was not firmly fastened down by some appliance, so that the horses could hold the carriage back, and prevent it from running upon them, as happened when the team turned from the park into the avenue, in passing down a declivity of a foot or so, when one horse got his hind leg over the trace, and both horses commenced to run and kick. The evidence for the defendant fails to account for the horse's getting his leg over the trace, but says that, "in driving over this declivity, in some unknown manner one horse got his leg over the trace." The cases cited by counsel to the effect that the fact that a horse becomes unmanageable on one occasion does not show him to be vicious in disposition are in actions where no contractual relations existed between the parties, and those that a single act of negligence by a servant does not establish general incompetency are in actions where the relation of master and servant existed. As Gordon, J., said: "An employé, by his contract, is presumed to run the ordinary risks of the machinery and appliances he is engaged to supervise or use. He is also held to a knowledge of the character and obvious defects of such machinery and appliances, as well as the skill and habits of his coservants. A passenger, on the other hand, neither can know, nor is presumed to know, anything about these things. He has paid his passage, and he is wholly passive in the hands, and at the mercy, of the transportation company and its agents. The doctrine advocated by the defendant's counsel, by which the passenger would be put on a par with an employé, will not do; it accords neither with reason nor precedent. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Anderson, 94 Pa. 569, 39 Am. Rep. 787.

Whether the plaintiff was contributorily negligent in jumping from the carriage, under the circumstances, depends upon whether her act was precipitate or rash, or such as a person of ordinary prudence might do. The evidence shows that the plaintiff was in a closed coupé, that the horses were running and kicking, and that the driver, who appeared to be frightened and unable to control them, was calling excitedly to the plaintiff and her daughter, "For God's sake, jump out!" These circumstances showed presumptively that the negligence of the defendant had placed the plaintiff in a situation of imminent peril. In such case the law does not require of the passenger the exercise of all the presence of mind and care of a prudent man; and if the plaintiff, in endeavoring to escape from such danger, either by following the directions of the driver or the dictates of her own judgment, acted as a person of ordinary prudence would have done under similar circumstances, she was not negligent. 2 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 766. Hence, whether she acted negligently or not was a question of fact to be submitted to the jury. So, also, in determining whether the plaintiff was negligent, the jury were not only to consider the presumption arising from the happening of the accident and injury, but all the facts and circumstances in evidence.

But it is claimed that, as the plaintiff directed the driver to go down the avenue, so as to afford her an opportunity to view a certain house which was being erected, she assumed the entire control of the driving, and therefore was responsible for the accident which occurred in traveling down such street. This contention relates to that portion of the charge in which the court said that "the plaintiff did not take the responsibility of the road being safe, but left that to the driver's judgment." It is usual for persons who hire a carriage and driver to give general directions as to places where they desire to be conveyed, and the driver is expected to know whether the roads over which he must pass to reach the places to which he is directed to go are suitable and reasonably safe for passage. The carrier cannot escape liability for an injury caused by driving a team over an unsafe road, by showing that the injured passenger directed or expressed a wish to travel over such road. As the court said in Anderson v. Scholey, 114 Ind. 558: "It is true, the driver testified that he was in the road, pursuing the right track, and that he pulled to the left, thereby upsetting the conveyance over the bank, because the plaintiff told him repeatedly he was too far to the right. The plaintiff denies this. However the fact may be, it was the duty of the defendants to supply the coach with a driver who knew the way for himself, and who would not be controlled by the suggestion of a passenger on the inside, while he occupied the seat charged with the duties and responsibility of driver." The fact is, that there is no evidence that the road was unsafe. We do not think, therefore, that the evidence was incompetent, or that the court erred in refusing the nonsuit, or that there was error in the instructions.

It follows that the judgment must be affirmed.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

William L. MAULDIN, Respt.,
v.

City Council of GREENVILLE, Appt.

(.....S. C.....)

1. The law of the land within the meaning of a constitutional restriction upon interference with private rights means the common law and the previously existing statute law.
2. Prior laws and decisions not directly or by necessary implication denied in a new constitution, survived with full force and effect.
3. The assessment on abutting owners of the whole or part of the cost of grading, paving, or otherwise improving public streets, on the basis of supposed benefits to their property, is not according to the law of the land and is unconstitutional unless directly authorized by the constitution.

4. Charging upon abutting owners the cost of improving sidewalks and sewers in front of their property, having been recognized as valid prior to the adoption of a state constitution, must be regarded as embraced in the law of the land to which the constitution refers.

(January 22, 1895.)

A PPEAL by defendant, from a judgment of the Common Pleas Circuit Court for Greenville County, in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enjoin the collection of a certain tax assessment. Reversed in part; affirmed in part.

NOTE.—The above case is a striking one because of its conflict with nearly all the authorities in this country on the constitutional question as 27 L. R. A.

shown in the notes to Raleigh v. Peace (N. C.) 17 L. R. A. 380.

The exceptions which became the grounds for appeal are as follows:

"(1) Because his honor erred in holding that all of the material allegations of the complaint were admitted by the defendant. (2) In ordering and adjudging that the defendant, the said city council of Greenville, their servants and agents, be, and they are, perpetually enjoined and restrained from collecting or attempting to collect the special tax or assessment levied by them upon the property of the plaintiff and other owners of real estate situate on Main street, in the said city of Greenville, to pay the expenses of improving the said street. (3) In holding that the act of the general assembly (20 Stat. at L. p. 1372) authorizing the improvement of Main Street, in said city of Greenville, and the levying and collection of the assessment complained of, was null and void, in that it violated sections 23 and 36 of article 1, section 33 of article 2, and sections 8 and 9 of article 9, of the Constitution of South Carolina. (4) In not holding that the answer of the defendant constituted a sufficient return to the rule to show cause theretofore granted, and therefore in not dissolving the temporary injunction of date of May 20, 1893. (5) In not holding that the facts alleged in plaintiff's complaint were insufficient to entitle plaintiff to the injunction and relief prayed for. (6) In not holding that by reason of the facts alleged in defendant's second and third defenses, as contained in their answer to plaintiff's alleged cause of action, as set out in his complaint, plaintiff was estopped from disputing the validity of said assessment or his liability on account thereof. (7) In not holding that the acts and proceedings of defendant touching the matter complained of in plaintiff's complaint in improving the street, ascertaining the cost thereof, and levying and collecting the assessment in question, were lawful and regular, being authorized, by act of the general assembly for this state (vol. 20, p. 1372), and ordinance passed in pursuance thereof. (8) In not holding that plaintiff had a complete and adequate remedy at law for any injury threatened him by reason of the collection of the assessment complained of, and therefore not entitled to invoke the aid of the court of equity."

Mr. Joseph A. McCullough, for appellant:

Assessing the expense of local improvements upon the property in the vicinity does not contravene the constitutional provision that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation."

Dill. Mun. Corp. § 754; Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 617, 618; Cooley, Taxn. p. 624; Nichols v. Bridgeport, 23 Conn. 189, 60 Am. Dec. 363; Raleigh v. Pence, 17 L. R. A. 830, 110 N. C. 82; Speer v. Athens, 9 L. R. A. 402, 85 Ga. 49; People v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 419, 55 Am. Dec. 266.

37 L. R. A.

This species of taxation is referable to the taxing power of the state, which apart from constitutional inhibitions, knows no restraint whatsoever except such as necessarily grows out of the nature of the power itself.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 593; McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 416-423, 4 L. ed. 603-606; Providence Bank v. Billings, 29 U. S. 4 Pet. 514, 7 L. ed. 939; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 737; Cooley, Taxn. § 8, p. 622; People v. Brooklyn, supra; Spencer v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 845, 31 L. ed. 763; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 569; Speer v. Athens and Raleigh v. Pence, supra; Birmingham v. Klein, 8 L. R. A. 369, 89 Ala. 461.

The general assembly is not to look to the organic law to ascertain what is permitted it to do, but only to find what inhibitions are put on its action.

Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 703, 26 L. ed. 241; Willard v. Presbury, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 676, 20 L. ed. 719; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. ed. 616; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, supra; Re Jager, 29 S. C. 438; Charleston v. Pinckney, 3 Brev. 217; Ex parte Lynch, 16 S. C. 82; Feldman v. Charleston, 23 S. C. 66, 55 Am. Rep. 6; State Hayne, 4 S. C. N. S. 420.

The constitutional provisions refer solely to state taxation, or, when they go further, to the general taxation for state, county, and municipal purposes; and though assessments are laid under the taxing power, and are in a certain sense taxes, yet they are a peculiar class of taxes, and not within the meaning of that term as it is usually employed in our constitutions and statutes.

Cooley, Taxn. pp. 616-636, and note 4; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Decatur, 147 U. S. 198, 37 L. ed. 134; Elliott, Roads & Streets, p. 369; Hoyt v. Saginaw, 19 Mich. 39, 2 Am. Rep. 76; Birmingham v. Klein, supra; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 755, 757, and note; People v. Lynch, 51 Cal. 15, 21 Am. Rep. 677; 2 Desty, Taxn. 1252, note 3; Edgerton v. Green Cove Springs, 19 Fla. 140; Speer v. Athens, 9 L. R. A. 402, 85 Ga. 449; Goodrich v. Winchester & D. Turnp. Co. 26 Ind. 119; Holtzclauer v. Newport, 94 Ky. 396; Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Gogreve, 41 La. Ann. 251; Dorgan v. Boston, 12 Allen, 223; Williams v. Detroit, 2 Mich. 560; Daily v. Swope, 47 Miss. 367; People v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 419, 55 Am. Dec. 256; Raleigh v. Pence, 17 L. R. A. 830, 110 N. C. 82; Winona & St. P. R. Co. v. Watertown, 1 S. Dak. 46.

Frontage may lawfully be made the basis of apportionment.

Cooley, Taxn. 644, note 3. See also 2 Desty, Taxn. 1368, notes 1, 2; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 752; Beaumont v. Wilkes-Barre, 142 Pa. 198; Baltimore v. Johns Hopkins Hospital, 56 Md. 1; O'Reilly v. Kingston, 114 N. Y. 439; Joyes v. Shadburn (Ky.) April 8, 1890; Harrisburg v. McCormick, 129 Pa. 213; Jennings v. Le Breton, 80 Cal. 8; Washington Avenue, 69 Pa. 252, 8 Am. Rep. 260; Davis v. Lynchburg, 84 Va. 861; Speer v. Athens, Raleigh v. Pence, and Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Gogreve, supra.

In the absence of the expression of a clear intent that "special taxes" when laid on real property shall be laid in proportion to its value, the legislature may prescribe any other standard, which in its judgment would be equitable and just.

Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. v. Gibbs, 27 S. C. 385; State v. Hayne, 4 S. C. N. S. 403; Information v. Oliver, 21 S. C. 818; Re Jager, 29 S. C. 438; State v. Columbia, 6 S. C. N. S. 1.

The rule of "equality and uniformity" prescribed in cases of taxation for state and county purposes does not require that all property or all persons in a county or district shall be taxed for local purposes. Such an application of the rule would often produce the very inequality it was designed to prevent.

Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 705, 28 L. ed. 571; Hurford v. Omaha City, 4 Neb. 886; Bishop v. Tripp, 15 R. I. 466. See also 1 Desty, Taxn. 191; 2 Desty, Taxn. 1252; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 748, 755, 759, 778; Cooley, Taxn. 680-683; Raleigh v. Peace, 17 L. R. A. 830, 110 N. C. 82; Speer v. Athens, 9 L. R. A. 402, 85 Ga. 49.

Plaintiff is estopped from disputing the validity of the assessment complained of.

Where the owner stands by and sees the street improved, on a contract made by council, without attempting by injunction to prevent it, after the work is completed or nearly completed, he cannot refuse to pay the assessment.

2 Desty, Taxn. 666, 1424; Elliott, Roads & Streets, 420, 440; 2 Wait, Pr. 9; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. p. 1122, and note; Ashton v. Rochester, 183 N. Y. 187; State v. Jersey City, 52 N. J. L. 490; Muscatine v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 79 Iowa, 645; Jenkins v. Steller, 118 Ind. 275; Powers v. New Haven, 120 Ind. 185; Ritchie v. South Topeka, 88 Kan. 368; Murdock v. Cincinnati, 44 Fed. Rep. 726.

Messrs. Earle & Mooney, for respondent:

In this state, the constitution expressly limits the power of taxation, and throws around its exercises many safeguards.

Whaley v. Gaillard, 21 S. C. 560; Feldman v. Charleston, 28 S. C. 57, 55 Am. Rep. 6.

Where property is to be taxed, the constitution, section 86 of article 1, and section 33 of article 2, fixes upon value as the means of distributing the burden that ought to be borne by the property.

State v. Hayne, 4 S. C. N. S. 424.

The act of the legislature which attempts to adopt a different rule cannot be sustained, unless it can be shown that the constitutional limitations do not apply to assessments for local improvements. Taxes and assessments are synonymous.

State Bank v. Charleston, 8 Rich. L. 847; Emery v. San Francisco Gas Co. 23 Cal. 845; Hill v. Higdon, 5 Ohio St. 248, 67 Am. Dec. 289; McBean v. Chandler, 9 Helsk. 349, 24 Am. Rep. 808.

The improvement of Main street in the city of Greenville is certainly a public purpose. Once admit that the work to be done is a public purpose, and it follows that the tax to be imposed for the raising of the money necessary to accomplish the work must be laid subject to all the restrictions and limitations imposed by the constitution upon the exercise of the taxing power.

Weeks v. Milwaukee, 10 Wis. 258; Municipality No. 2 of New Orleans v. White, 9 La. Ann. 447; Chicago v. Larned, 34 Ill. 208.

27 L. R. A.

When a street is once opened and paved, thus assimilated with the rest of the city and made a part of it, all the particular benefits to the locality derived from the improvements have been received and enjoyed. Repairing streets is as much a part of the ordinary duties of the municipality for the general good as cleaning, watching, and lighting.

Hammett v. Philadelphia, 65 Pa. 146, 3 Am. Rep. 615; Re Saw-Mill Run Bridge, 85 Pa. 163; Norfolk v. Chamberlain, 17 Va. L. J. 53; Lexington v. McQuillan, 9 Dana, 518, 35 Am. Dec. 159; Paris Trustees v. Berry, 2 J. J. Marsh. 483.

As to all taxation apportioned upon property, there must be taxing districts, and within these districts the rule of absolute uniformity must apply.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 495.

The legislative authorization to make assessments for local improvements must be unequivocally and strictly construed.

10 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 276, note; Henderson v. Lambert, 14 Bush, 24; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 8d ed. § 811, and cases cited.

Estopped by conduct is where one party has been induced by the conduct of the other to do or forbear to do something which he would not or would have done, but for such conduct of the other party.

Bigelow, Estoppel, 480; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 817; Bull v. Rowe, 18 S. C. 870.

This principle does not apply where the expenditures are made upon the public domain, or upon the lands of the person making them, for then third persons have no right to object.

Gray v. Bartlett, 20 Pick. 186, 33 Am. Dec. 208.

An estoppel can never arise founded upon an omission to object to an act which the other party had a right to perform.

Corning v. Troy Iron & Nail Factory, 40 N. Y. 221; Ramsden v. Thornton, L. R. 1 H. L. 129; Keese v. Denver, 10 Colo. 112.

Pope, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action in the court of common pleas for Greenville county had for its object a perpetual injunction against the city council of Greenville, restraining them from any assessment of the property of the plaintiff and other citizens of said city who owned land abutting on Main street, beginning at Ready river, and thence up to a point on said Main street where it is crossed by North street, to pay for two thirds of the cost of paving the roadway and sidewalk of such street. The basis of the demand for such relief was—First, that the act of the general assembly which empowered said city council to make an assessment of the property of those citizens for the cost of the paving of Main street and its sidewalks, so that such citizens should pay two thirds of the cost of such improvements (said assessment of such two thirds to be computed against such property holders pro rata, according to the frontage of their property on said street, respectively), was unconstitutional; and, second, because such city of Greenville made such assessment without giving the citizens affected thereby any opportunity to contest such assessment so made. The defendants denied that such legislation was unconstitutional, and then, in case the court should hold it unconstitutional, claimed that the plaintiff was estopped by his conduct in not opposing its enactment by the legislature, and afterwards by his conduct in not opposing the active steps of the defendants to execute such law. The circuit court, after a hearing of the cause, confined to the complaint and answer, issued the injunction prayed for; and from this decree, therefore, the defendants have appealed. The grounds of appeal etc., will appear in the report.

If the act of the general assembly authorizing the defendant to make this assessment is unconstitutional, no other question raised by the appeal may be said to fairly arise upon the record of the case, and therefore necessary to be considered and decided. The act in question may be found on page 1872, 20 Stat. at L., and its text is as follows: "An act to provide for the grading and paving of the streets, public ways and alleys of the city of Greenville.

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the state of South Carolina, now met and sitting in general assembly and by the authority of the same, that the mayor and aldermen of the city of Greenville shall have power and authority, and it is hereby made their duty, to grade, pave, macadamize and otherwise improve for travel and drainage the streets, public ways, and alleys of said city or such of them as they may deem advisable, and to construct sidewalks and to pave the same and put down crossings, curbing, drains, side drains, and cross drains, such as may be necessary in their judgment to carry out the provisions of this act.

"Sec. 2. In order to more effectually carry out the authority hereby delegated, the said mayor and aldermen shall have power to assess one third of the costs of such grading, paving, macadamizing and improving said streets, public ways, and alleys of said city both as to sidewalks and roadways upon the abutting property owners on each side of said streets, public ways, and alleys, so that said property in the aggregate shall pay two thirds of the said costs, and the said city the remaining one third. Said assessments to be paid by said property holders pro rata according to the frontage of the property on said streets, public ways and alleys, respectively, and the money arising from such assessments shall be applied to the payment of interest on and as a sinking fund to redeem the same under such regulations as said mayor and aldermen may by ordinance prescribe.

"Sec. 3. The assessment provided for in section 2 of this Act shall be collected as other taxes in said city are collected and in such installments as the said mayor and aldermen shall by ordinance prescribe.

"Sec. 4. Whenever the said mayor and aldermen shall determine to improve any street, public way or alley as hereinbefore provided, they shall cause the same to be carefully surveyed, and the proposed grade definitely established, and ascertain as accurately as possible the cost of the contemplated improvement, and shall also cause the frontage of each piece of property fronting on said street, public way or alley to be determined and fixed so that the assessment on each property holder may be easily ascertained.

"Sec. 5. To obtain the means of carrying out the provisions of this act on the part of the city the said mayor and aldermen may issue and negotiate bonds of said city under the provisions of section 31 of the charter of said city.

"Sec. 6. The said mayor and aldermen shall have power and authority by ordinance to provide the details necessary and requisite for carrying out the provisions of this act."

Approved December 22, A. D. 1891.

Just now, greater particularity is not needed, to bring the issue of the constitutionality of this act before the court, than to say that the defendants have passed the ordinances required by this act, and made the assessments therein contemplated, upon the plaintiff, as one of the property owners whose property abutted on the front of Main street, in said city, for one third of such cost.

The first question that presents itself here is, What power of legislation has the general assembly of this state? It may savor of extreme care, but it is eminently proper that this court should declare its recognition of responsibility in undertaking to pass upon the rights, duties, and powers of a co-ordinate branch of the state government. We are not unmindful that in the bill of rights, incorporated in—as a part of—our Constitution, section 26 distinctly provides: "In the government of the commonwealth, the legislative, executive and judicial powers of the government shall be forever separate and distinct from each other. . . ." Yet it is made the duty of this tribunal to decide when either of the other two has exceeded the grant of power under the constitution and laws, when such a question is fairly involved in an action or special proceeding between parties litigant; but any decision which denies efficacy to an act passed by the legislature, for the want of constitutional power, is only made after an allowance by us of all presumptions in favor of the rightfulness of such exercise, which are required to be overcome, clearly and certainly, by him who assails such constitutional power.

Our state constitution, as the grant of its power to the general assembly, in section 1 of article 2, is in these words: "The legislative power of this state shall be vested in two distinct branches, the one to be styled the 'Senate' and the other the 'House of Representatives' and both together the 'General Assembly of the State of South Carolina.'" We may announce as the result of our considerations, fortified by decisions both before and after the adoption of this, our present constitution, that by the use of the language here quoted the people, in convention assembled, clothed the general assembly with the whole legislative power capable of being exercised within our borders, subject only to such restrictions upon and regulation of such power as are embraced in the constitution itself, or that of the United States. State v. Charleston, 10 Rich. L. 501; State v. Hayne, 4 S. C. N. S. 420; Pelzer v. Campbell, 15 S. C. 592, 40 Am. Rep. 705; Ex parte Lynch, 16 S. C. 83; Utsey v. Charleston, 8 & N. R. Co. 88 S. C. 899; and other cases since decided. As before remarked, all presumptions are solved in favor of the constitutionality of an act of the legislature, and it devolves upon one who assails it to point out, certainly and clearly, where it is unconstitutional. This has been undertaken by the respondent in the case at bar, and the duty is now devolved upon this court to pass upon these several propositions.

A municipal corporation, in this state, can only exercise power with which it is clothed by the general assembly. State v. Maysville, 12 S. C. 76. And, as we have before seen, the general assembly is only able to vest such municipal corporation with powers within the restrictions contained in our own state constitution and that of the United States. The power of taxation may be given to a municipal corporation, but such power, when exercised by such municipal corporation, must not only be exerted according to the charter thereof, but also within the limits of the constitution of the state. Among the powers of the corporation of the city of Greenville is the control of its streets, ways, etc.; and, within certain well-defined restrictions, such municipality may tax the property within its territorial limits to improve and keep in repair such streets, ways, sidewalks, etc. The respondent concedes the constitutionality of the act of the general assembly which clothes the city of Greenville with the right, by taxation, to raise the funds necessary to pay for one third of the cost of the proposed improvements to the roadway and the sidewalks of the city of Greenville; but he goes further, and insists that the whole of such cost should be paid from general taxation in said city. It is too late in the day to question, in our courts, that highways (and public streets in our cities and towns are highways) belong to the public. Their being laid out over the lands of private individuals, without compensation to the private individuals, was maintained in our courts prior to our Constitution of 1868. Lindsay v. Charleston Comrs. 2 Bay. 88; Patrick v. Cross Roads Comrs. on Charleston Neck, 4 McCord, L. 541. Since our Constitution of 1868, such power exists, but compensation therefor must be first provided. Const. 1868, art. 1, § 28. But, for highways (and, as before remarked, Main street, in the city of Greenville, is a highway), belonging to the public, may taxes be laid upon private citizens, who happen to own the land abutting upon such highway, to improve such a highway, in exoneration of all other citizens who own property in said city? This is a serious question. Many other states, speaking through their courts of last resort, have so affirmed. It is always to be regretted when a difference in judgment upon the same subjects exists in the courts of last resort in the different states of this Union. Our oath of office requires us to uphold the laws of this commonwealth, subject to such restrictions thereon as exist in the constitutions of this state and that of the United States. Among the laws of this commonwealth is the organic law, as found in the twelfth and fourteenth sections of article 1 of our Constitution of 1868. The latter section: "No person shall be arrested, imprisoned, dispoiled or dispossessed of his property, immunities or privileges, put out of the protection of the law, exiled, or deprived of his life, liberty or estate but by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land. . . ." When the clauses of the constitution of the state empowering the general assembly to clothe a city, town, or village with the right to levy a tax are considered, we must also consider sections 12 and 14 of article 1 along with them. The sections of our constitution authorizing the general assembly to clothe one of its municipalities with the power of taxation are sections 8 and 9 of article 9, in these words:

97 L. R. A.

"Sec. 8. That the corporate authorities of counties, township, school districts, cities, towns and villages may be vested with power to assess and collect taxes for corporate purposes, such taxes to be uniform in respect to persons and property within the jurisdiction of the body imposing the same. And the general assembly shall require that all the property except that heretofore exempted within the limits of municipal corporations, shall be taxed for the payment of debts contracted under authority of law.

"Sec. 9. The general assembly shall provide for the incorporation and organization of cities and towns, and shall restrict their power of taxation, borrowing money, contracting debts and loaning their credit."

Great stress is laid by appellants upon the two decisions of this court (State v. Hayne, 4 S. C. N. S. 408, and State v. Columbia, 6 S. C. N. S. 1) as construing the power of taxation by the state itself, in the first case, and of taxes laid by a city, in the second case. These cases have been recognized by this court repeatedly since they were rendered, and we do not propose to question their ruling authority now. But, when examined, it will be ascertained that State v. Hayne, supra, affirmed the constitutional power of the general assembly of this state to require a license fee to be paid by an attorney, in addition to the tax upon property, real and personal, while that of State v. Columbia, supra, affirmed the right of the city of Columbia, under its charter, to require a license fee to be paid by a bank within its limits, in addition to a tax upon its property. When these cases are critically examined, it will be discovered that the principles presented by the case at bar were in no wise involved then.

We think it will be found that the case of State v. Charleston, 12 Rich. L. 702, decided by the court of errors in this state in 1860, will throw great light upon the case at bar. In the case just cited, the city council had determined that it was expedient to widen George street, in said city, and for that purpose had, at an expense of $26,000, purchased the land on the north side of said street. Under the Act of 1860 the city council had appointed commissioners, whose duty it was to ascertain the cost and expense of widening said street, and to assess such cost and expense, to be paid by the proprietors of lots and houses on the south side of said street, according to the benefit accruing to such lots. When these assessments were made, such proprietors of lots and houses refused to pay the same, upon the ground that such assessment was "against the laws of the land, in derogation of the right of trial by jury, and is unconstitutional and void." This question arose under the Constitution of 1790, in the ninth article, whose second section provided that "no freeman of this state shall be taken, or imprisoned, or dissesed of his freehold, liberties or privileges, or outlawed, or exiled, or in any manner destroyed or deprived of his life or liberty, or property but by the judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land." While Chancellor (afterwards Chief Justice) Dawkins was discussing the defense that such power could be successfully referred to and bottomed upon the general power of taxation inherent in every government, he said: "No power is more necessary, none more universally recognized, and, it may be added, none the unjust exercise of which has been, in all countries and all ages, a more fruitful source of complaint and dissatisfaction. Taxes are collected in a summary manner, and without an opportunity to the party of being heard. This legal process (says Judge Nott in State v. Allen, 2 McCord, L. 55), which was originally founded in necessity, has been consecrated by time, etc., must be an exception to the trial by jury, and is embraced in the alternative in the law of the land. (Italics ours.) . . . But in the same case it was held by the court that an imposition by the legislature, by the name of a tax, yet wanting its qualities, could not be levied and collected as such without violation of the constitutional rights of the citizen, and the act was null and void. Essential characteristics of any system of taxation (properly so called) are certainly, equality, universality." The taxation proposed by the city council of Greenville upon the plaintiff (respondent), under the light furnished by State v. Charleston, supra, in order to be legal, must be either directly authorized by the constitution, or by "the law of the land." Certainly, there is no provision in the constitution which directly, or by necessary implication, authorizes this tax. Is there authority for this tax in "the law of the land?" What does this term, "law of the land," mean, as interpreted by our courts of last resort? Judge O'Neill, in pronouncing the judgment of the court of errors in this state in the case of State v. Simons, 2 Speers, L. 761, thus stated the doctrine: "In this state, taking as our guide Zylstra's Case, 1 Bay, 384; White v. Kendrick, 1 Brev. 471; State v. Marcy, 1 McMull. L. 503,—there can be no hesitation in saying, that these words mean the common law and the statute law existing in this state at the adoption of our constitution (1790). Altogether, they constitute the body of the law, prescribing the course of justice to which a freeman is to be considered amenable in all time to come."

An examination of our statutes prior to 1790, relating to the improvement of streets and sidewalks, will show that the provisions therein related to the city of Charleston, and that such statutes were confined,—that of 1698 (7 Stat. at L. p. 12) to requiring every inhabitant of Charleston to mend and raise the sidewalk in front of his house in the manner and to the dimensions therein prescribed, on penalty of forfeiting, for each house, a penalty, to be collected under the warrant of a justice of the peace; and that of 1764 to requiring the construction of sewers or drains and sidewalks. These statutes were considered and upheld, with reluctance, in the two cases of Oruskehanks v. Charleston, 1 McCord, L. 860 (decided in 1821), and Yeadon v. Council, ——— (decided in 1828). And when the Act of 1850 (12 Stat. at L. p. 5456) was considered by the court in the case of State v. Charleston, supra, the court of errors distinctly repudiated, as foreign to our laws, any mode of taxation for the improvement of the streets of the city of Charleston which looked to the assessment of property abutting on George street, in that city, according to the benefits to be derived from such improvement, to such land-owners, under the said Act of 1850, saying: "As has been said, the general rule knows nothing about partial assessment for benefits, or the selection of a portion for a class. Existence of persons, or the possession of property, and not the supposed benefits, are the guide. When each is taxed according to the value of his property, both equality and certainty may be attained, to a reasonable extent, but what may be beneficial or otherwise is a matter of opinion or fancy or vague conjecture." (Italics ours.)

These principles may be deduced from that case: (1) The right to tax persons or property abutting upon a public street, for improvements made upon such public street, in exoneration of other persons or property within the same territorial limits as are the persons or property abutting upon a highway or public street, is opposed to "the law of the land," and is therefore unconstitutional. (2) The right to tax property abutting upon a public street, to pay the costs of improvements upon the same, according to the supposed benefit to such property by such improvement, is distinctly repudiated. (3) The right to tax the land abutting upon public streets for the costs of improvements of sidewalks and sewers in front of such land, is recognized, because such power was exercised by reason of statutes passed before the adoption of the Constitution of 1790, and may therefore be said to be embraced in "the law of the land." This principle was recognized with reluctance, and only because of previous decisions affirming its existence. We heartily sympathize in the reluctance expressed, and only affirm its existence under the authority of such previous adjudications.

When our constitution was adopted, in 1788, this case of State v. Charleston, supra, had construed the legislative power of this state, so far as its exercise in the direction of requiring property abutting upon streets to pay for improvements upon the same ac-ording to the benefits derived therefrom was concerned; and, as before remarked, there is no provision of such instrument which directly or indirectly contravenes the same. The principle is well recognized that when, previous to the adoption of a new constitution, there exist laws and decisions construing such laws, and this force and power is not directly or by necessary implication denied in the new instrument, such laws and decisions survive with full force and effect. Such being the case, we do not feel at liberty to disregard them, unless we would assume the responsibility, by reversing such decisions, of asserting the existence in our commonwealth of a different system. This latter step we do not feel at liberty to adopt. It may be frankly admitted that we have employed much of the time since the hearing of this appeal in considering this very question. This consideration of the subject has tended to increase our respect and acquiescence in the previous policy of the state, as being bottomed upon the immutable principles of right in the citizen to the enjoyment of his property free from any danger of its being taken from him by such exercise of arbitrary power, when it is remembered that the fundamental object of government is the protection of the life, liberty, and property of each individual residing within a state; that the exercise of the right of taxation is supported by the truth that every individual should contribute of his means to defray the expenses of government, to enable it to protect life, liberty, and property within its territorial limits; that such taxation is for a public purpose, and must be uniform in its imposition upon all the persons and property within a state, when for state purposes, and upon all the persons and property within a municipal corporation, when for its purposes; that there exists no power, except the police power, in a state, to compel an individual citizen to improve his property, and of this class Charleston v. Werner, 88 S.

C. 488, is an instance, and that the improvement of public streets does not fall within the police power; that the experience of mankind has established, as a truth, that, in republics, no greater protection from unjust taxation exists than the power of the people, who select the representatives who lay taxes upon them, to change such representatives, if the taxing power has been unjustly exercised, but that the beneficial results of this principle of our government, in this respect, are largely denied when onerous taxation upon a few, to the exclusion of the many, is laid by representatives chosen by the many against the united opposition of the few. Granted, as it should be, that eminent tax-writers, and the judicial tribunals of many states of this Union, adopt a different view of this matter; why may not the people of this commonwealth adopt a domestic policy at variance with the views of others? We have a settled policy of our own on other grave subjects,—for instance, the indestructibility of the contract of marriage, except by death. No reason exists, or can be suggested, why the domestic policy of this state touching the mode of taxation for local improvements should be made to conform to that adopted by any of our sister states.

It is therefore the judgment of this court that so much of the judgment of the Circuit Court as grants a perpetual injunction against the defendants, preventing any assessment upon the property of the plaintiff, and other citizens of the city of Greenville in like plight as the plaintiff, to pay for the cost of improving the roadway of Main street, in said city, be affirmed; but when the said judgment enjoins the defendants from levying and assessing upon the plaintiff, and others in like plight with him, the cost of the improvements to the sidewalks and drains fronting their respective lands, it be reversed.

Gary, J., did not hear this case.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

David HENDERSON, Pff. in Err.,

v.

Charles C. JAMES.

(61 Ohio St. —.)

*1. An escaped convict who is convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary for another crime may, at the expiration of the latter sentence be held to serve out the remainder of his first sentence.

2. A final order of discharge on habeas corpus may be reviewed and reversed on error by a higher court.

3. In such case the order of discharge may be stayed by the higher court, under sec-

*Headnotes by the Court.

NOTE.—As to effect of absence from prison on time of sentence, see also Ex parte Vance (Cal.) 13 L. R. A. 574, and note.
27 L. R. A.

tion 6725, without fixing any terms other than the stay of the execution of the order.

(February 5, 1896.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Franklin County to review a judgment reversing a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of petitioner in a habeas corpus proceeding to procure the petitioner's release from defendant's custody as keeper of the penitentiary. Affirmed.

Statement by Burket, J.:

On September 18, 1879, the plaintiff in error, David Henderson, was received at the penitentiary to serve a five years' sentence from Warren county. On October 12, 1881, after serving a little over two years of that sentence, he escaped and was at large until March 16, 1891, when he was received at the penitentiary under the name of Carrol Scott, on a five years' sentence from Cuyahoga county, but nothing was known by the Cuyahoga county court as to the prisoner's real name being David Henderson, nor as to his former sentence, nor as to his escape. When he reached the penitentiary he was received and put to work as Carrol Scott, without being recognized as David Henderson by the warden. After he had been there some time, registered and working as Scott, the deputy warden recognized him as being David Henderson, but no action was taken by the warden or any one else upon such recognition, and the prisoner served out his sentence as Carrol Scott, and was discharged July 14, 1894. The warden having learned that Scott was Henderson, detained him as the escaped Henderson, and duly registered him as the returned convict, and put him to work to serve out his unexpired sentence.

Thereupon David Henderson filed his petition for writ of habeas corpus, the warden made due return, and the plaintiff replied. The reply is in effect that within a week after he was received at the penitentiary as Scott, he was recognized as the escaped convict Henderson by the deputy warden who was then, in the absence of the warden, in charge of the prison. To this reply the warden demurred which demurrer was overruled by the court of common pleas of Franklin county, and on hearing the case, the prisoner was ordered to be discharged. Exceptions were taken by counsel for the warden, and on hearing the case in the circuit court on petition in error the judgment of the court of common pleas, discharging the prisoner, was reversed and the prisoner remanded to the custody of the warden to serve out his unexpired sentence.

Thereupon Mr. Henderson filed his petition in error in this court to reverse the judgment of the circuit court, and for the affirmation of the judgment of the common pleas.

Mrs. George B. Okey and James A. Allen, for plaintiff in error:

There being no statutory provision in our state on this question, a judgment discharging a prisoner in habeas corpus proceeding, whether erroneous or not, and as being in favor of personal liberty, must be regarded as final and conclusive.

1 Freem. Judgm. § 824, p. 587; 9 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 288; Ex parte Jile, 64 Mo. 905, 37 Am. Rep. 218; Re Glasby, 8 Utah, 163; Com. v. McBride, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 545.

The judicial discharge of a prisoner upon habeas corpus conclusively settles that he was not liable to be held in custody upon the then existing state of facts.

1 Freem. Judgm. § 824, p. 586; Re Glasby, supra; 9 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 288; Ex parte Jile, supra.

The indictment against the person of Henderson affected in the same manner the person of Carrol Scott. The name has no substance and therefore cannot be indicted, tried, convicted or punished.

Lasurs v. State, 19 Ohio St. 50; Mead v. State, 26 Ohio St. 505.

When Carrol Scott was received at the penitentiary to serve the Cuyahoga county sentence David Henderson at the same time entered the penitentiary, and having a part of a term to serve commenced at that moment upon its execution.

The term of imprisonment imposed by a court of this state having jurisdiction may be made to begin upon the expiration of another term of imprisonment, but it must be definite and certain.

Picket v. State, 22 Ohio St. 405; Williams v. State, 18 Ohio St. 46.

When there is no statute providing for cumulative sentences, the common law rule will prevail, which is laid down by the various courts to be, that when there are several convictions and several terms of imprisonment adjudged, the terms run concurrently.

Miller v. Allen, 11 Ind. 389; Kennedy v. Howard, 74 Ind. 89; Ex parte Myers, 44 Mo. 279; People v. Whitson, 74 Ill. 20; Ex parte Hunt, 28 Tex. App. 361; 21 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 1075, notes; 9 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 282.

Mr. J. K. Richards, Atty-Gen., for defendant in error:

By no shift or device can a criminal escape the full punishment for his crimes under the laws of Ohio.

It is not so essential when punishment shall be inflicted, as it is essential that the kind of punishment, and the amount of punishment, fixed by law and the court for the crime committed, shall be inflicted; and especially that a criminal shall know that he cannot escape the full punishment of one crime by escaping and committing a new crime.

Dolan's Case, 101 Mass. 219; Clifford v. State, 30 Md. 575; Holland v. Hopkins, 21 Kan. 688.

A sentence cannot be altered or postponed at the pleasure of the warden of the penitentiary.

Williams v. State, 18 Ohio St. 46; Picket v. State, 22 Ohio St. 410.

Error lies to reverse and correct the judgment of a lower court.

People v. Liscomb, 60 N. Y. 559, 19 Am. Rep. 211; Ex parte Lafayette, 3 Rob. (La.) 495; Lark v. State, 55 Ga. 435; Macready v. Wilcox, 33 Conn. 321; Smith v. State, 21 Neb. 552; 2 Spelling, Extraordinary Relief, §§ 1856, 1858.

Burket, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The latter part of section 7825, Revised Statutes, provides that "if any convict escape from the penitentiary, . . . no part of the time such convict is absent shall be counted as a part of the time for which such convict was sentenced."

The plaintiff in error claims that, as his sentence in Cuyahoga county was not made to begin in the future, his imprisonment under that sentence began at once upon his arrival at the penitentiary, and that by virtue of the above section, his imprisonment, under the Warren county sentence, again began to run immediately upon his return to the penitentiary, so that both sentences were being served at the same time, and that upon the expiration of the longer sentence, he was entitled to his discharge from both sentences. There was no attempt to invoke the doctrine of cumulative sentences, and the prisoner was sentenced to five years without knowledge on part of the court that he was an escaped convict.

As we have no statute authorizing cumulative sentences for crime, it would seem at first blush, that such sentences should not be permitted in this state; but this court, with the courts of most of the other states, as well as England, has sustained cumulative sentences without the aid of a statute. Williams v. State, 18 Ohio St. 46; Pickett v. State, 22 Ohio St. 405; Larney v. Cleveland, 34 Ohio St. 599; Bishop, Crim. L. § 953; Rea v. Wilkes, 4 Burr. 2575; State v. Smith, 5 Day, 175, 5 Am. Dec. 182; Fitzpatrick v. People, 98 Ill. 269; Mims v. State, 26 Minn. 498; Mills v. Com. 13 Pa. 631; Russell v. Com. 7 Serg. & R. 489; McCormick's Petition, 24 Wis. 492, 1 Am. Rep. 197; Kite v. Com. 11 Met. 581. In Texas, Indiana, and Kentucky the courts hold cumulative sentences unauthorized. In Indiana there is a statute to the effect that the term of service shall commence on the day of conviction and sentence. See Kennedy v. Howard, 74 Ind. 87; Prince v. State, 44 Tex. 480; Hannahan v. State, 7 Tex. App. 664; Baker v. State, 11 Tex. App. 262; James v. Ward, 3 Met. (Ky.) 271.

The great weight of authority is in favor of cumulative sentences, and they should be upheld on principle. The severe punishments which induced judges to invent technicalities to aid the acquittal of those on trial, on criminal charges, no longer exist, and under our just and humane statutes, those who violate the law should be duly punished for each offense. Tilgham, Ch. J., in Russell v. Com. supra, well says: "But to consider the thing on principle; where a man has been sentenced to imprisonment for one offense, and is afterward convicted of another, what can be so proper as to make his imprisonment for the second offense commence at the expiration of the first imprisonment. Would it not be absurd to make one imprisonment a punishment for two offenses? Nay the absurdity does not end there, for unless imprisonment for the last offense is to begin where the imprisonment for the first ends, it would be impossible, under our system, to punish the offender, in certain cases, for the last offense, at all."

But as there was no attempt to impose a cumulative sentence in this case, it might be said that the doctrine of cumulative sentences is not involved in this case. It has been argued at length and in one phase of the case it is pertinent.

Had the court known that the prisoner on trial was the escaped convict Henderson, the court might, on proper proof of that fact, have sentenced him to five years' service in the penitentiary, and ordered him to be delivered to the warden, and fixed his term of service to begin at the expiration of the Warren county sentence. The power of the court to do this, in the absence of any statute, seems clear from the cases above cited.

Again, had the court known that the prisoner under indictment in Cuyahoga county was the escaped convict Henderson, the warden of the penitentiary might have been notified and the convict returned to the penitentiary to serve out his Warren county sentence. Being then in the penitentiary under a sentence from one county and under indictment for another crime in another county, section 7234, Revised Statutes, would have been applicable, and under that section he could have been taken from the penitentiary to Cuyahoga county, and tried under the indictment pending against him there, and upon conviction, he could have been sentenced to the penitentiary, and returned thereto under section 7238, Revised Statutes, to serve out the full term of both sentences. Sections 7234 and 7238, are as follows:

"7234. A convict in the penitentiary who escaped or forfeited his recognizance before receiving sentence for a felony of which he was convicted, or against whom an indictment for felony is pending, may be removed to the county in which such conviction was had, or such indictment is pending, for sentence or trial, upon the warrant of the court of such county; but this section shall not extend to the removal of a convict for life except the sentence to be imposed, or indictment pending against him, is for murder in the first degree."

"7238. If such convict be acquitted he shall be forthwith returned by the sheriff to the penitentiary, there to serve out the remainder of his term; but if he be sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary, he shall forthwith be returned thereto by the sheriff, and his term of imprisonment thereon shall begin to run from the expiration of the term for which he was imprisoned at his removal; or, if he be sentenced to death, such sentence shall be executed as if he were not under sentence of imprisonment in the penitentiary."

These two sections clearly show the legislative intent, that convicts shall serve out one sentence for each offense of which they are convicted and sentenced. It is therefore clear, from these two sections, and the decisions of this court sustaining cumulative sentences, that the service under the Cuyahoga county sentence could apply on that sentence only, and that after having served out that sentence, he still remained an escaped convict under the Warren county sentence, subject to be held to serve out the remainder of that sentence.

As he concealed his true name and identity, and was sentenced by the name of Scott, his term to begin in presenti, the warden was bound to receive and treat him as designated in the record, and even had the warden recognized him at first sight as being the escaped convict Henderson, he would have been powerless to treat him as such, so long as the sentence from Cuyahoga county remained in force and unsatisfied. Both the warden and the prisoner were conclusively bound by the record and sentence in that case.

While for many purposes there is nothing in a mere name, yet for many other purposes a name is very important. The plea of abatement by reason of a wrong name, and the disclosure of a true name, is a very valuable protection to the prisoner, as in case of a second prosecution for the same crime, he can with more force invoke the record of the first case in support of his plea of former acquittal or conviction. Lasurs v. State, 19 Ohio St. 51.

In Mead v. State, 26 Ohio St. 505, the judgment was reversed on the ground that Elish Davidson and Elijah B. Davidson are different names, and that the description of a person by one of these names is not supported by proof of a person bearing the other name.

A person allowing himself to be tried and convicted by the name mentioned in the indictment is, for the purpose of serving out the sentence under such conviction, conclusively held to be the person bearing such name, and he cannot lawfully gain any advantage by concealing his true name and identity. He may take his chances, as did the plaintiff in error, and if he succeeds well and good for him; but should his identity and true name be discovered before his discharge, he would be liable to be held as an escaped convict to serve out his old sentence.

The warden, therefore, was right in holding the prisoner to serve out the remainder of his Warren county sentence.

In the next place it is claimed, that having been ordered discharged by the court of common pleas on habeas corpus, that such order is conclusive, and cannot be reviewed or reversed by a higher court.

A proceeding in habeas corpus is essentially a civil, and not a criminal proceeding. In Ex parte Tom Tong, 108 U. S. 556, 27 L. ed. 826, Chief Justice Waite uses this language, on page 559, 27 L. ed. 827: "The writ of habeas corpus is the remedy which the law gives for the enforcement of the civil right of personal liberty. Resort to it sometimes becomes necessary, because of what is done to enforce laws for the punishment of crimes, but the judicial proceeding under it is not to inquire into the criminal act which is complained of, but into the right to liberty notwithstanding the act. Proceedings to enforce civil rights are civil proceedings, and proceedings for the punishment of crimes are criminal proceedings. In the present case the petitioner is held under criminal process. The prosecution against him is a criminal prosecution, but the writ of habeas corpus which he has obtained is not a proceeding in that prosecution. On the contrary, it is a new suit brought by him to enforce a civil right, which he claims, as against those who are holding him in custody, under the criminal process. . . . The proceeding is one instituted by himself for his liberty, not by the government to punish him for his crime. . . . Such a proceeding on his part is, in our opinion, a civil proceeding, notwithstanding his object is, by means of it, to get released from custody under a criminal prosecution."

When the code of civil procedure was first adopted, section 604 contained the provision, that until the legislature should otherwise provide, the code should not affect proceedings on habeas corpus; but it contained the further provision that such proceedings might be prosecuted under the code, whenever applicable; thus clearly recognizing such proceedings as a civil remedy.

By the Revision of 1890, the legislature did otherwise provide, and habeas corpus became a part of the civil procedure statute, being chapter eight of title one, division seven; and it is classed with actions for dower, partition, real actions, replevin, rights and remedies of sureties, contest of will, and some other actions.

That judgments and final orders in the actions just named, and with which habeas corpus is classed, can be reviewed and reversed by a higher court, is too clear for argument. That the same can be done in habeas corpus is settled by section 5751, Revised Statutes, which provides that the proceedings upon a writ of habeas corpus may be reviewed on error as in other cases. This court, in the case of Wilcox v. Nolze, 84 Ohio St. 520, entertained a petition in error to review a proceeding on habeas corpus when the plaintiff below had been discharged by the lower court.

It is therefore clear that the rule found in some cases, to the effect that a discharge on habeas corpus, being in favor of personal liberty, must be regarded as final and conclusive, and not subject to review or reversal on error, does not prevail in this state.

It is also claimed that section 6725 does not apply to a judgment of discharge on habeas corpus. That section provides: "Execution of a judgment or final order, other than those enumerated in this chapter, of any judicial tribunal, or the levy or collection of any tax or assessment therein litigated, may be stayed on such terms as may be prescribed by the court in which the petition in error is filed, or by a judge thereof."

Because the circuit court stayed the execution of the judgment or final order of discharge without fixing any terms, other than the simple stay, it is claimed that the above section is not applicable to such case, and that there can be no stay, except on such terms as may be prescribed by the court. The answer to this is that the court has ample power to stay the execution of the judgment or final order, and it may grant the stay upon such terms as it sees fit, and if in the opinion of the court no other terms than the stay itself are required, the stay may be so granted. In the case at bar, while no terms were prescribed in the order of stay, in fact the prisoner remained in the custody of the warden until the hearing of the petition in error. The order of stay might well have been upon the terms that the warden safely keep the prisoner, until the final hearing.

We think, therefore, that section 6725 is applicable to a stay in habeas corpus proceedings.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment of the Circuit Court is therefore affirmed.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

BALTIMORE BREWERIES CO. (LIMITED), Appt.,

v.
Lyman T. RANSTEAD.

(78 Md. 501.)

Water brought in large quantities to a brewery for the purpose of cooling beer and cleaning utensils cannot be discharged upon the surface of the ground in such manner as to injure neighboring proprietors.

(January 18, 1894.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court of Baltimore City, in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for injuries to plaintiff's property which were alleged to have been caused by defendant's wrongfully turning water thereon. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Charles Marshall, William L. Marbury, and H. J. Bowdoin for appellant.

Messrs. J. Alexander Preston and Robert Ludlow Preston, for appellee:

A landowner who places noxious substances on his land, polluting the surface water or superficially percolating waters passing thence upon the premises of an adjoining owner, to his injury, will be liable in an action for such pollution.

L. Gould, Waters, 2d ed. § 278, and cases cited in note.

Such pollution is a nuisance, and the familiar maxim, sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas, applies.

Gavtry v. Leland, 81 N. J. Eq. 885; Beckley v. Skroh, 19 Mo. App. 75, brewery discharge; Jutte v. Hughes, 67 N. Y. 267; Charles v. Finchley Local Board, 48 L. T. N. S. 569, 572.

The plaintiff is entitled to recover if the lot of the appellee was flooded with water by the construction of the sewer by the appellant and thereby damaged.

Scott v. Bay, 8 Md. 481; Lawson v. Price, 45 Md. 123; Levin v. Simpson, 88 Md. 468; 6 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 15, 16 notes, and cases cited.

Water must be drawn off in some natural channel in vicinity, or by any other means preferred, provided no damage is done to others by this plan.

McCormick v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 70 Mo. 359, 35 Am. Rep. 431.

A landowner cannot increase the quantity of water upon another's property, in any different manner from that in which the same would have naturally flowed upon it.

Livingston v. McDonald, 21 Iowa, 160, 89 Am. Dec. 568; Miller v. Laubach, 47 Pa. 154, 86 Am. Dec. 521; Templeton v. Voshlos, 73 Ind. 134, 87 Am. Rep. 150; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. §§ 685, 688, artificial drains, §§ 695, 696, flooding, §§ 671-676, nuisances.

An owner of land cannot even drain off surface water in such a way as to injure his neighbors.

O'Brien v. St. Paul, 25 Minn. 331, 33 Am. Rep. 470; Noonan v. Albany, 79 N. Y. 470, 35 Am. Rep. 540; Cooley, Torts, p. 480; McCormick v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. supra.

Robinson, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff is the owner of an inclosed lot of ground in Baltimore city, bounded on the North by Bayard street, and on the east by Ridgely street, containing about five acres of land. The lot had been used as a cattle or stock yard, from which the plaintiff derived an annual revenue of from $400 to $500. The defendant company is the owner of a brewery abutting on Ridgely street, and uses from three to four hundred barrels of water daily for the purpose of cooling the beer; and in addition to this it uses from three to four barrels of water, mixed with acids and ashes, once a week, for the purpose of scouring the copper coils. All the water thus used is conveyed from the brewery to a sewer box built inside the brewery lot, and running inside the lot, about 80 feet, to the west side of Ridgely street, and then down the street, 128 feet, to a wooden box or trough built by the city authorities across Bayard street, and through this trough the water is discharged upon the plaintiff's lot. The plaintiff proved that, in consequence of this discharge of water upon his lot, it had become miry and unfit for use; and he further proved that the water was mixed with vegetable matter, the refuse grains used in brewing the beer, and was noxious and of-

NOTE.—Disposal of water brought in unnatural quantities upon property.

While there are several cases which discuss the question decided in Rylands v. Fletcher, L. R. 8 H. L. 330, upon which the above decision is based as to the duty to care for water stored in unnatural quantities upon property, a careful search has failed to reveal any precedent upon the question of the right to dispose of the water. The case nearest in point is perhaps Frye v. Moor, 58 Me. 588, in which the discharge was into the natural channel of the water, the accumulation having been caused by a dam across the channel. In that case the court held that the one making the accumulation must exercise at least ordinary care in letting the water pass again into its natural channels so far as one against whom the accumulation was rightful was concerned. But in respect to one against whom he had no right to make the accumulation he acted at his peril and he would be responsible for the consequences of his wrongful act in case he returned the water so rapidly that injury was done to the former.

If such is the rule when the water is returned to its natural channel it must be much more true when as in this case no attempt is made to return it to its channel but it is cast upon the surface of the earth.

A reason that the question has not arisen more frequently probably is that the sewerage systems are ordinarily sufficient to carry off all such accumulations and there is no necessity of finding other outlets.

H. P. F.

fensive. Assuming these facts to be found by the jury,—and it is upon this assumption the plaintiff rests his case,—there can be no question, it seems to us, as to the liability of the defendant. That it had no right to discharge noxious and offensive water through its sewer to the wooden trough built across Bayard street, and thence upon the property of the plaintiff, is conceded. And it is equally clear, we think, that the defendant had no right to bring or collect upon its premises large quantities of water to be used in the manufacture of beer, and to discharge the water thus used upon the bed of Ridgely street, in consequence of which the plaintiff's property was injured, even though the water was not noxious or offensive. Having brought this water upon its premises to be used by it for its own purposes, the defendant was bound to provide proper drains or means for its escape without injury to the property of others. The whole contention of the defendant rests upon the assumption that it has the absolute right to discharge the water used by it in brewing beer upon the bed of Ridgely street, and if the plaintiff's lot lies below the level of the street, in consequence of which his lot is flooded, the defendant is not liable for the injury, unless the jury shall find that the water so discharged was unreasonable or excessive, in view of the character of the locality. The question is not whether the water discharged upon the bed of Ridgely street, the same not being surface water, was unreasonable or excessive in quantity, having in view the character of the locality, but whether the water thus discharged did in fact come upon the plaintiff's lot. Although the facts are different the principles upon which the leading case of Rylands v. Fletcher, L. R. 3 H. L. 330, was decided, would seem to be conclusive as to the defendant's contention. In that case the defendant, the owner of a mill, constructed a reservoir for the purpose of accumulating water, but, the supports being insufficient, the sides of the reservoir gave way, and the water percolated through some old and disused coal workings into the plaintiff's colliery; and the house of lords, affirming the court of exchequer, held that the defendant was liable for the injury sustained by the plaintiff. In the court of exchequer, Blackburn, J., says: "We think that the true rule of law is that the person who, for his own purposes, brings on his lands, and collects and keeps there, anything likely to do mischief if it escapes, must keep it in at his peril, and, if he does not do so, is prima facie answerable for all the damage which is the natural consequence of its escape."

37 L. R. A.

cape." Fletcher v. Rylands, L. R. 1 Exch. 265. In affirming the exchequer chamber, Lord Chancellor Cairns says: "The defendants, treating them as the owners or occupiers of the close on which the reservoir was constructed, might lawfully have used that close for any purpose for which it might, in the ordinary course of the enjoyment of land be used; and if, in what I may term the 'natural user' of that land, there had been any accumulation of water, either on the surface or underground, and if, by the operation of the laws of nature, that accumulation had passed off into the close occupied by the plaintiff, the plaintiff could not have complained that that result had taken place." "On the other hand, if the defendants, not stopping at the natural use of their close, had desired to use it for any purpose which I may term a 'non-natural use,'—for the purpose of introducing into the close that which, in its natural condition, was not in or upon it, for the purpose of introducing water either above or below ground, in quantities, and in a manner not the result of any work or operation on or under the land,—and if in consequence of their doing so, or in consequence of any imperfection in the mode of their doing so, the water came to pass off into the close of the plaintiff, then it appears to me that which the defendants were doing they were doing at their own peril, and if, in the course of their doing it, the evil arose, to which I have referred,—the evil, namely, of the escape of the water, and its passing away to the close of the plaintiff, and injuring the plaintiff there,—for the consequence of that, in my opinion, the defendants would be liable." Now, in this case, it was held that if one brings or accumulates on his land anything which, if it should escape, may cause damage to his neighbor, he does so at his peril; and if this be so, a fortiori, where one brings or accumulates on his land water in large quantities, to be used for any purpose he may see proper, and discharges the water upon the property of his neighbor, he will be liable for the injury thereby occasioned. And such is the case before us. The proof shows that the water used by the defendant in the manufacture of beer is conveyed from its premises by means of a sewer built by the defendant to the west side of Ridgely street, and thence down said street to a trough across Bayard street, and thence upon the land of the plaintiff. And, such being the case, there was no error in granting the plaintiff's prayers, and in rejecting the prayers offered by the defendant.

Judgment affirmed.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

Fred EIGHMY

v.

UNION PACIFIC R. CO., Appt.

(.....Iowa.....)

A railroad company is not liable to employes for negligence of physicians and surgeons in a hospital which it voluntarily maintains for the gratuitous accommodation of injured employes to whom the company owes no statutory or contractual obligation in the matter.

(January 23, 1895.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Pottawattamie County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Wright & Baldwin, for appellant:

To render one person liable for the negligence of another the relation of master and servant must exist between them.

Stevens v. Armstrong, 6 N. Y. 435; McGuire v. Grant, 25 N. J. L. 355, 67 Am. Dec. 49; Larock v. Ogdensburg & L. O. R. Co. 26 Hun, 382; Hexamer v. Webb, 101 N. Y. 377, 54 Am. Rep. 703.

In order to establish this relation more must be shown than the mere fact of employment.

1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 144; Wood, Mast. & S. §§ 311, 312; 14 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 880, and cases cited.

It must be shown that the employment created the relation of master and servant.

King v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 66 N. Y. 181, 23 Am. Rep. 37; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 144.

If the person sought to be charged for the negligence of another did not have such control over him as enabled him to direct the manner of performance, he is not liable for his wrongful or negligent acts.

Callahan v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co. 23 Iowa, 562; Wood v. Independent School Dist. of Mitchell, 44 Iowa, 27; Van Winter v. Henry County, 61 Iowa, 664; Wood, Mast. & S. §§ 311-314; 14 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 850; Painter v. Pittsburgh, 46 Pa. 220; Edmundson v. Pittsburgh, M. & Y. R. Co. 111 Pa. 313; Hexamer v. Webb, supra; Sherbourne v. Yuba County, 21 Cal. 114, 31 Am. Dec. 151; Du Pratt v. Lick, 89 Cal. 691; Prairie State Loan & T. Co. v. Doig, 70 Ill. 54; Hilliard v. Richardson, 8 Gray, 354, 63 Am. Dec. 743; De Forrest v. Wright, 2 Mich. 368; Pierce v. O'Keefe, 10 Wis. 181; Brown v. McLeish, 71 Iowa, 332; Miller

NOTE.—As to liability for negligence of employes of charitable institutions in general, see Williamson v. Louisville Industrial School of Reform (Ky.) 23 L. R. A. 200, and note, and the later case of Downs v. Harper Hospital (Mich.) 25 L. R. A. 632.

As to liability of railroad company to employes for negligent treatment by physicians, see also Union Pac. R. Co. v. Artist (U. S. C. C. 8th Cir.) 23 L. R. A. 531.
27 L. R. A.

v. Minnesota & N. W. R. Co. 76 Iowa, 658; Corbin v. American Mills, 27 Conn. 274, 71 Am. Dec. 63; Fire Ins. Patrol of Philadelphia v. Boyd, 1 L. R. A. 417, 120 Pa. 642; Tindley v. Salem, 137 Mass. 174, 50 Am. Rep. 289.

The duty of the company is performed, and it has performed all the law requires when it furnishes a competent man. If he does not properly treat the plaintiff and thereby the injury is increased he is responsible. But the company would be not liable, because it had performed all the duty that is incumbent upon it when it selected a proper and competent man.

Secord v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 18 Fed. Rep. 221; O'Brien v. Cunard S. S. Co. 13 L. R. A. 329, 154 Mass. 272; Laudheim v. De Koninglyke Nederlandsche Stoomboot Maatschappij, 107 N. Y. 223; Allan v. State S. S. Co. 15 L. R. A. 160, 132 N. Y. 91; Loftus v. Union Ferry Co. of Brooklyn, 84 N. Y. 455, 38 Am. Rep. 533; McDonald v. Massachusetts General Hospital, 120 Mass. 432, 21 Am. Rep. 529; Van Tassel v. Manhattan Eye & Ear Hospital, 39 N. Y. S. R. 781.

Messrs. Jordan & Brockett and N. M. Pusey, for appellee:

The confidence induced in Eighmy by the undertaking of appellant to have his injuries treated by its medical department was a sufficient consideration to create a duty on the part of appellant to treat those injuries with care.

Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Derby, 55 U. S. 14 How. 458, 14 L. ed. 604; 1 Parsons, Cont. p. 372; Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. 909; Story, Bailm. §§ 9, 164-172; Thorne v. Deas, 4 Johns. 96; McArthur v. Sears, 21 Wend. 190; Morrison v. Davis, 20 Pa. 175, 57 Am. Dec. 695; 2 Hilliard, Torts, 532; Backhouse v. Sneed, 5 N. C. 173; The New World v. King, 57 U. S. 16 How. 469, 14 L. ed. 1019; 1 Addison, Torts, 4th Eng. ed. 527-533.

In the treatment which the doctors connected with the medical department, gave to Eighmy they were acting in the course of their employment, and their omission, or their acts of commission, were such acts as their employer is liable for.

Slath v. Wilson, 9 Car. & P. 607; The New World v. King, supra; Southwick v. Estes, 7 Cush. 335; Lovett v. Salem & S. D. R. Co. 9 Allen, 557; 1 Redf. Railways, § 130, notes 6, 7, 11.

Robinson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

At the time the injuries in question were received by the plaintiff, he was in the employ of the defendant as brakeman on a freight train. On the 11th day of April, 1888, the train with which he was employed was moved from the yards in Council Bluffs, over the bridge, to the yards in Omaha. As the train was made up, the locomotive engine was at the front or west end, the way car or caboose was next to it, and in the rear of that were thirty-four freight cars. The plaintiff was on the top of the rear car. Just after the engine passed over the bridge, the train was stopped, most of it being on the bridge. When the train was started, the two rear cars were detached and left behind by the breaking of a car link, but the train was stopped before it had moved half its length, another link and a pin were procured, the train was backed, and the plaintiff, after giving the signal to back slowly, proceeded to make the coupling. While so engaged, his right hand was caught between the bumpers of the cars, and he received the injuries of which he complains. He charges the defendant with negligence which caused the injury, as follows: (1) In not providing the bridge with a floor or other safeguard against the unusual perils of coupling cars upon it; (2) in requiring freight trains to stop on the bridge before entering the switch at the east end of the Omaha yards; (3) in starting the train in question so violently as to separate it from the two rear cars; (4) in the sudden increase by the engineer, without warning, of the speed of the rear car of the train, as it approached the standing cars; (5) in the giving by the head brakeman of the signal to stop, without warning. In the second count of his petition, the plaintiff alleges that by reason of his employment by the defendant, his injuries, and the custom in such cases, it became the duty of the defendant to furnish him the services of a skillful and careful surgeon; that the defendant undertook to perform that duty, but that the surgeon employed for the purpose, after dressing the hand once, refused to treat it further, except to have it examined by an inexperienced and unskillful student; and that by reason of this negligence the hand became stiff, and almost wholly useless. The amount of damages the plaintiff is alleged to have sustained in each count is the sum of $1,995, and judgment for that amount is demanded. The defendant denies all liability on its part, and alleges that negligence of the plaintiff contributed to the injuries for which he seeks to recover. The jury found specially that, if the plaintiff had used a coupling stick or implement of like character for guiding the link, his hand would not have been caught; that he knew, when he went between the cars to make the coupling, that the cars would necessarily be moved a short distance before they would be stopped; that the engineer did not make any movement of the engine, to increase its speed or the speed of the train, after he received the signal to back slowly; that at or near the time the plaintiff stopped near the stationary car, to make the coupling, the engineer was signaled to stop it, and did so. The jury returned a general verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $1,500.

1. It appears that the defendant has what is called a "medical department" for the treatment of its employes who are injured on its road. Dr. Galbraith was employed by that department, on a salary, to attend to persons so injured. He was the one who amputated some of the fingers, and first dressed the injured hand of the plaintiff, and was assisted by Dr. Gibbs, the alleged student. There is no evidence that Dr. Galbraith was not in all respects competent and skillful, and it is shown affirmatively that Dr. Gibbs was a competent physician. He treated the hand after it was first operated upon and dressed. There was evidence from which the jury might have found that the treatment was improper and negligent, and that it was injurious to the plaintiff.

The next question to be determined is, To what extent is the defendant liable for the negligence of its physicians and surgeons? There is but little evidence in regard to its medical department. It seems to have included a hospital building, of which Dr. Gibbs had charge. The plaintiff went there to have his hand treated, and was placed in a room and given a bed. But he refused to remain there, and went to an hotel. It does not appear that the defendant was under any obligation by contract to furnish surgical and hospital accommodations for its injured employes, and, so far as is shown, its doing so was wholly voluntary. Its employes were under no obligation to avail themselves of the facilities for treatment offered, and paid nothing for them when accepted. That the defendant maintained its medical department for its own advantage, and not for charitable purposes only, may be presumed, but that does not alter what appears to be the fact, that it was not maintained to discharge any statutory or contractual obligations. In the case of O'Brien v. Cunard S. S. Co., 154 Mass. 272, 18 L. R. A. 329, the plaintiff sought to recover for damages alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the surgeon of the defendant. He had been employed by the defendant under an act of congress which required every steamship or other vessel engaged in carrying or bringing passengers, other than cabin passengers, exceeding fifty in number, to carry a duly competent and duly qualified surgeon or medical practitioner, who should be provided with surgical instruments, medical comforts, and medicines proper and necessary for diseases incident to sea voyages. The services of such surgeon or medical practitioner were required to be promptly given, in any case of sickness or disease, to any of the passengers who should need his services. It was said that the masters or owners of the vessel do their whole duty under that statute when they employ a duly qualified and competent surgeon and medical practitioner and supply him with all necessary and proper instruments, medicines, and medical comforts, and have him in readiness for such passengers as choose to employ him. That rule was followed in Allen v. State S. S. Co. 133 N. Y. 91, 15 L. R. A. 166. In Laudheim v. De Koninklyke Nederlandsche Stoomboot Maatschappij 107 N. Y. 229, it was said: "If, by law or by choice, the defendant was bound to provide a surgeon for its ships, its duty to its passengers was to select a reasonably competent man for that office, and it is liable only for a neglect of that duty. . . . It is responsible solely for its own negligence, and not for that of the surgeon employed. In performing such duty, it is bound only to the exercise of reasonable care and diligence." In McDonald v. Massachusetts General Hospital, 120 Mass. 432, 21 Am. Rep. 529, the plaintiff sought to recover for damages caused by unskillful treatment. The defendant was a public charitable institution. It was held that it was, at most, liable only for a failure to use due care in selecting its inferior agents, and, if it had used such care in selecting the surgeon of whose conduct complaint was made, it was not further liable. We are of the opinion that the rule of the cases cited is applicable in this case. The charge of the court in regard to the liability of the defendant for the acts and omissions of its surgeons was based on the theory that it was responsible for their negligence. In that respect the charge was erroneous.

2. The appellee contends that, even if there was error in permitting a recovery on the second count of the petition, no prejudice resulted, because it clearly appears that he was entitled to recover on the first count. The appellant is fully as positive that there was no evidence upon which to base a recovery on that count, and insists that the court erred in not sustaining its motion for a judgment upon it. Of these conflicting claims, that of the appellant has the most support in the record. It appears that, at the time the coupling in question was attempted, the plaintiff gave the signal to back slowly, or, as it is called, "the easy signal," to allow the cars to run back without pressure from the engine, and then went between the cars to make the coupling. At about that time, the head brakeman gave the engineer the signal to stop, which was obeyed. The plaintiff claimed in his testimony, and now claims in argument, that the action of the engineer in stopping his engine had the effect to increase the speed of the moving car nearest the stationary one, to which it was to be coupled. We are not entirely satisfied that the theory of the plaintiff in regard to this is sustained by the evidence, and think the jury would have been as apt to find for the plaintiff on the second as on the first count of his petition; and it is quite probable, in view of the charge of the court, that the amount of the verdict was increased by, if it was not wholly based upon, the second count.

3. The appellant insists that it was entitled to judgment on the first count. A rule of the defendant prohibited its employees from making couplings by hand, and required each one to provide himself with a stick or proper instrument for raising and guiding the link. The plaintiff knew of the rule, and the court charged the jury that there was not sufficient evidence to show that the rule had been set aside or waived by any one having authority to do so; that, as the plaintiff knew of the rule, and voluntarily disregarded it, he could not recover for injuries he received by reason of any negligence on the part of the defendant which occurred prior to the time he went between the cars to make the coupling. It seems that, five or six years before the accident, the brakemen of the defendant used coupling sticks for about thirty days; that they have not been used since, and that couplings are universally made on the defendant's road by hand. Whether the court was justified in instructing the jury that the rule had not been waived is a question not before us for determination. The signal of the head brakeman of which the plaintiff complains, was given after he went between the cars, and therefore, if negligently given, and a cause of the injury, the plaintiff might be entitled to recover under the charge of the court.

For the reason shown, the court erred in not granting the defendant a new trial, and for its refusal to do so the cause is remanded for further proceedings.

Reversed.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

Charles C. FORD et al., Appts.,

v.

CHICAGO MILK SHIPPERS' ASSOCIATION.

(.....Ill.....)

1. A corporation and its members in their control over it may constitute a trust or combination to fix the price of merchandise or limit the amount sold within the meaning of a statute prohibiting such trust or combination and relieving third persons from liability to pay for goods purchased from such combination.
2. A combination between a corporation and its members to control the price of food products may be made illegal by subsequent legislation.

3. A statute relieving purchasers from a trust or combination to raise the price of food products from liability to pay for their purchases will apply to purchases made after its passage under a continuing contract previously executed which guarantees payment on the 15th of each month for goods furnished during the prior month.

(January 15, 1905.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Appellate Court, First District, reversing a judgment of the Circuit Court for Cook County in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover the contract price of milk sold and delivered by plaintiff to defendant Charles C. Ford. Reversed.

NOTE.—The proposition that a corporation in itself may constitute an illegal combination, which is clearly presented in the above case, is substantially sustained also in the New York case of People v. Milk Exchange, post, 487, on a decision 27 L. R. A.

annulling the corporate existence of a milk exchange.

For general principles as to monopolies to fix prices, see note to Lovejoy v. Michels (Mich.) 17 L. R. A. 770.

Statement by Phillips, J.:

Appellee brought its action of assumpsit against appellants to recover for milk sold and delivered, the declaration containing the common counts, to which was pleaded the general issue and two special pleas which substantially alleged that the plaintiff was a corporation organized and created for the purpose of regulating and fixing the price and amount and quantity of milk to be shipped and sold within the corporate limits of the city of Chicago to the city dealers and retail dealers, and, pursuant to its purpose to become a party to an agreement undertaking combination and confederation with certain persons named, and with divers other persons, to regulate and fix the price and the amount and quantity of milk to be shipped and sold within the corporate limits of the city of Chicago, and in pursuance of that unlawful agreement, plaintiff sold and delivered to the defendant Charles C. Ford, a retail milk dealer, large quantities of milk, at the price fixed and determined by the plaintiff and the other persons in pursuance of said unlawful agreement, whereby plaintiffs were not entitled to recover, etc. To these pleas replication traversing the same was filed, and the case was tried on a stipulation of facts, before the judge without a jury. The court was requested by the plaintiff to hold the following propositions, which were refused:

"(1) The court holds, as a proposition of law, that, although the Chicago Milk Shippers' Association may have been an illegal corporation on April 15, 1891, in that it was a combination in restraint of trade, yet the contract between it and defendants, who were not members of said corporation, having been fully performed, with the single exception of payment on the part of defendants to the plaintiff for milk delivered by plaintiff to them in October, 1891, is not affected thereby, and the plaintiff is entitled to recover from defendants the amount shown to be unpaid by the defendants to the plaintiff for the milk so delivered. (2) The court holds, as a proposition of law, that an act entitled, 'An act to provide for the punishment of persons, co-partnerships and corporations forming pools, trusts and combines, and mode of procedure and rules of evidence in such cases,' approved June 11, 1891, in force July 1, 1891, is, so far as it provides that 'any purchaser of any article or commodity from any individual or company transacting business contrary to the provisions of this act shall not be liable for the price or payment of such article or commodity, and may plead this act as a defense to any suit for any such price or payment,' unconstitutional and void. (3) The court holds that the original contract for the sale of milk by the plaintiff to the defendant C. O. Ford, and the written guaranty of payment for such milk, made by both defendants to the plaintiff, were valid contracts in law at the time they were made, to wit, on April 15, 1891; and the court further holds that the act of the general assembly of Illinois entitled, 'An act to provide for the punishment of persons, co-partnerships or corporations forming pools, trusts and combines, and mode of procedure and rules of evidence in such cases,' approved June 11, 1891, in force July 1, 1891, in so far as it provides that 'any purchaser of any article or commodity from any individual, company or corporation, transacting business contrary to any provisions of the preceding sections of this act, shall not be liable for the price or payment of such article or commodity, and may plead this act as a defense to any suit for such price or payment,' does not prevent a recovery by the plaintiff in this cause, by reason of section 14, article 2, of the Constitution of Illinois, which provides that 'no law impairing the obligation of contracts shall be passed.' (4) The court holds, as a proposition of law, that the fixing of the retail price of any article by the board of directors of any corporation dealing in such article is not such a fixing of a price as is prohibited by any statute of the state of Illinois. (5) The court holds, as a proposition of law, that the contract which forms the basis of this action was such a valid and subsisting contract at the time the act of the general assembly of the state of Illinois, entitled, 'An act to provide for the punishment of persons, co-partnerships, or corporations forming pools, trusts, and combines, and mode of procedure and rules of evidence in such cases,' became in force, to wit, on July 1, 1891; that said law does not apply to this case, since said law, if applied, would impair the obligation of said contract, contrary to section 14, article 2, of the Constitution of Illinois. (6) The court holds, as a proposition of law, that an act entitled, 'An act to provide for the punishment of persons, co-partnerships or corporations forming pools, trusts, and combines, and mode of procedure and rules of evidence in such cases,' approved June 11, 1891, in force July 1st, 1891, is unconstitutional and void." To the refusing of which plaintiffs excepted.

At the suggestion of defendants' attorney, the following propositions of law were held:

(1) The defendant C. C. Ford submits to the court, and asks the court to hold as a proposition of law, upon the testimony shown in this case, the plaintiff, at the time of the sale and delivery to the said defendant of the goods and merchandise, viz., a certain quantity of milk by the plaintiff sold to the defendant, was a corporation which, under the by-laws shown in evidence, had created, entered into, and was a combination then existing for the purpose of regulating, fixing, and establishing the price of milk to be sold within the corporate limits of the city of Chicago, by purchasers, shippers, and wholesale dealers, to the city dealers and retail dealers, and also for the purpose of fixing and limiting the amount and quantity of milk to be supplied and sold within the limits of the city of Chicago by purchasers, shippers, and wholesale dealers, and retail dealers; that the purchase by the defendant from the plaintiff of the milk, the price of which is sought to be recovered in this case, was made by the defendant pursuant to the purpose of such combination, and, as matter of law, the court holds that the said combination existed for an unlawful purpose, and that the purchase by the defendant from the plaintiff of said milk was done in furtherance of such unlawful purpose, and created no indebtedness for the recovery of which the law will afford any remedy, and that, therefore, the judgment of the court is for the defendants. (2) The defendants submit to the court, and ask the court to hold as a proposition of law, upon the testimony shown in this case, the plaintiff, at the time of the sale and delivery to the defendant C. C. Ford of the goods and merchandise, viz., a certain quantity of milk by the plaintiff sold to the defendant, was a corporation which, under the by-laws shown in evidence, had created, entered into, and was a combination then existing for the purpose of regulating, fixing, and establishing the price of milk to be sold within the corporate limits of the city of Chicago, by purchasers, shippers, and wholesale dealers, to the city dealers and retail dealers, and also for the purpose of fixing and limiting the amount and quantity of milk to be supplied and sold within the limits of the city of Chicago by producers, shippers, and wholesale dealers to the city dealers and retail dealers; and that the purchase by the said defendant from the plaintiff of the milk, the price of which is sought to be recovered in this case, and the execution of the guaranty offered in evidence, were made by the defendants pursuant to the purpose of such combination, and, as a matter of law, the court holds that the said corporation existed at said time for an unlawful purpose, and that the purchase by the defendant from the plaintiff of said milk, and the giving of the guaranty offered in evidence and executed by both the defendants, was done in furtherance of such unlawful purpose, and created no indebtedness for the recovery of which the law will afford any remedy, and that, therefore, the judgment of the court is for the defendants. To the holding of each of which counsel for plaintiff excepted.

The circuit court entered a finding and judgment for defendants, and an appeal was prosecuted to the appellate court of the first district, where a finding of facts was made and entered, and a judgment reversing the trial court, the facts found, and judgment entered as follows:

"This day came again the said parties, and the court, having diligently inspected as well the record and proceedings aforesaid as the matters and things therein assigned for error, find from evidence contained in said record the following facts:

"That the appellant is a corporation, organized and doing business in the manner shown by the constitution and by-laws hereto attached, which said constitution and by-laws are as follows:

"'Constitution and General Laws of the Incorporated Joint-Stock Association of Milk Shippers and Producers Tributary to the City of Chicago.

"'Article I. Name and Subject.

"'Section 1. This company shall be known as the Chicago Milk Shippers' Association.

"'Section 2. The object of the incorporation of this association shall be to secure to the purchaser of milk a just return for the sale of the same; to rid the field of city distribution of irresponsible and dishonest dealers; to establish a central bureau of information, for the shipper's benefit; and to secure to the dealer of milk a pure, wholesome, honest quality of that product.

"'Article II. Jurisdiction and General Office.

"'Section 1. This association shall have jurisdiction over all districts shipping dairy products to the city of Chicago, in which local organizations of milk shippers have been, or may hereafter be, established in accordance with the regulations hereinafter provided.

"'Section 2. The general office of this association shall be permanently located in the city of Chicago and state of Illinois.

"'Article III. Capital.

"'Section 1. This association shall be incorporated with a capital of one hundred thousand dollars, which shall be divided into ten thousand shares of ten dollars each.

"'Article IV. Board of Directors, and Duties.

"'Section 1. A board of directors, to consist of nineteen members, shall be chosen by ballot at the first regular meeting of the stockholders, and annually thereafter.

"'Sec. 2. The board of directors shall hold its second regular meeting upon the last Tuesday of March, 1892, and annually thereafter. The board may be convened by the secretary, at any time, whenever a request shall be made by five members of the same.

"'Sec. 3. It shall be the duty of the board of directors, upon the day of its selection, to proceed to elect by ballot, for the term of one year, a president, a secretary, and a treasurer.

"'Sec. 4. The board of directors shall, at the first regular meeting of each year, select an advisory committee, to consist of five members of said board; this committee, with the president of the association, to constitute the board of management.

"'Article V. Duties of the Officers of the Association.

"'Sec. 1. The president of this association shall preside over all meetings of the stockholders and board of directors; he shall convene the advisory committee whenever the affairs of the association require its attention; he shall recommend for the approval of the board of management a manager, and an assistant manager, whenever, in his opinion, the business necessities of the association require the services of such assistants, and shall perform all the duties ordinarily attached to the position of president.

"'Sec. 2. The secretary shall keep a full and complete record of all the business transactions of the association, in all its relations with its membership, as well as with all other parties doing business with it; he shall be present at all meetings of the stockholders and board of directors, and shall prepare minutes of the same; he shall give bond for the honest and faithful performance of his duties, in such amount as the board of directors may deem sufficient. The board of directors shall determine the compensation he shall receive for his services.

"'Sec. 3. The treasurer shall keep a correct account of all the receipts and expenditures of the association, based upon his own record of the same, and confirmed by the books of the secretary; he shall secure vouchers for the payments of money made; his books of account, money on hand, and vouchers shall be open to the inspection of the board of management at all times, and shall be promptly delivered to his successor in office; he shall give bond for the honest and faithful performance of his duties, in such amount as the board of directors may deem sufficient, and, at the end of his official term, make a full and complete report of the financial condition of the association. The board of directors shall determine the compensation which he shall receive for his services.

"Article VI. General Laws—Capital Stock.

"Sec. 1. The certificates of capital stock of the association shall be held by the secretary until paid for. All assessments, as paid, shall be indorsed thereon, and, whenever desired, the secretary shall furnish a duplicate receipt to the party in whose name the stock is recorded.

"Sec. 2. No transfers, sales, or assignments of the capital stock of this association shall be made to any person who is not expected soon to become a producer and shipper of milk.

"Sec. 3. In order to secure the full protection and benefits of the association, all members must own as many shares of its capital stock as they ship cans of milk per day; but it is expressly stipulated that in no case shall any stockholder own more than fifty shares of the same.

"Sec. 4. The board of management shall determine the number and limit of the periods for the delivery of milk; it shall, between the first and fifteenth of the month, previous to the beginning of said periods, establish the price to be paid for milk, and shall give due and sufficient notice of the same to the members of the association and the city dealers.

"Sec. 5. City dealers will be required to pay the price ordered by the board of management; and, in order to secure compliance with this and other requirements of the association, all parties purchasing milk of the same will be required to give bonds or furnish other security to the satisfaction of said board.

"Sec. 6. Of the market price, as determined by the board of management, the treasurer shall retain five cents upon each can of milk sold for each day. The fund so created shall be used to make up the loss in price which any member may sustain who is required, at any time, to sell his milk out of the city market for more than five days during any one month, and at a less price than that ordered by the board. The expenses of managing the association shall also be paid out of the above fund, and any balance remaining on hand at the end of the year shall be returned to the stockholders in proportion to the number of cans shipped.

"Sec. 7. This association shall have supervision and authority over all milk consigned by any of its members to any stand or other place of reception within the corporate limits of the city of Chicago.

"Sec. 8. The stockholders at any stand or station, holding not less than fifty shares of the capital stock of the association, may organize a local organization, to take charge of all local interests, and to keep up close business relations with the central association. Stands holding less than fifty shares may, for purposes of organization, attach themselves to others nearest of access, so that their combined shares represent the necessary number. Local associations shall have full power to adopt by-laws for their government, provided they do not conflict with any of the provisions of the constitution and general laws of this association.

"Sec. 9. Of any proposed amendment to the constitution and general laws of this association, fifteen days' notice shall be furnished the members of the board of directors, and a two-thirds vote of the members present shall be necessary to secure the adoption of the same."

"That appellant receives milk from various persons operating under and in connection with said association, all of whom are members or stockholders in said association, and accounts to them for the same, and guarantees to them payment for milk so sold by said appellant to the customers of said appellant; that said association fixes and determines the price at which such milk shall be sold, precisely as set forth in said constitution and by-laws; that said appellant, on April 5, 1891, fixed the price of its milk for the ensuing six months as follows: During the months of May and June, 75 cents per can; during the months of July, August, and September, 80 cents per can; during the month of October, 90 cents per can,—all in year 1891. And appellees agreed to said price, and to receive and pay for milk during said period of six months at said prices, at the date of the guaranty, hereto attached.

"That all milk for which the appellant claims the right to recover in this suit was received by appellant from the persons so consigning the same in the manner aforesaid, and was delivered to the appellee C. C. Ford, during the month of October, 1891, under and pursuant to the agreement and arrangement previously referred to, and a written guaranty accompanying the same, which forms a part of the admitted facts in this case, which said guaranty is as follows:

"Guaranty.

"Chicago, April 15th, 1891.

"Whereas, Charles C. Ford is about to purchase and receive milk from the Milk Shipper's Association of the city of Chicago, a corporation doing business in the city of Chicago, in the state of Illinois; Now, in consideration of one dollar, and the furnishings of said milk, I, Elias Ford, for myself and jointly with the said Charles C. Ford, do hereby guarantee the payment of the amount due for milk on the fifteenth day of each month, for all milk furnished by said association during the preceding month.

"Charles C. Ford, 1055 Adams.

"Elias Ford, Niantic, Ill."

"That all of said business between said appellant and appellees was done and transacted under and pursuant to the aforesaid regulations of said association, and that, for and on account of the milk so sold and delivered under said arrangement during said month of October, there is yet a balance unpaid to the appellant by the appellees of four hundred and thirty-three dollars and eighty cents ($433.80).

"That the number of stockholders (members) of said association is approximately fifteen hundred (1,500), and was at the date aforesaid.

"Therefore, it is considered by the court that the judgment of the said circuit court of Cook county, in this behalf rendered, be reversed, annulled, and wholly for nothing esteemed, and that the said Chicago Milk Shippers' Association have and recover from Charles C. Ford and Elias Ford, appellees, the sum of four hundred and thirty-three dollars and eighty cents ($433.80), as and for its damages; and it is further considered by the court that the said Chicago Milk Shippers' Association, appellant, recover of the said Charles C. Ford and Elias Ford, appellees, its costs in this behalf expended in this court, and also its costs in said circuit court, to be taxed as part of its costs in this court, and that it have execution for its said damages and its said costs."

From that judgment the defendants appealed to this court.

Mr. H. T. Helm, with Mr. E. A. Aborn, for appellants:

A corporation can deal with its stockholders and directors in the same way and upon the same terms as it can with strangers.

Merrick v. Peru Coal Co. 61 Ill. 478.

The entire transactions between the members, the appellee, and the appellants were a combination in restraint of trade, and "the end to be obtained being illegal, the contracts and agreements entered into to secure the end must be equally so."

More v. Bennett, 15 L. R. A. 861, 140 Ill. 69; Central Ohio Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 85 Ohio St. 666; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, p. 528, note 2; Glancey v. Onondaga Fine Salt Mfg. Co. 62 Barb. 595; Case of the Monopolies, 11 Coke, 84. Messrs. Cutting & Castle for appellee.

Phillips, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Stockholders in an association may enter into contracts with it and deal with it in reference to contracts and agreements, acquiring the same rights and incurring like liabilities as strangers. Merrick v. Peru Coal Co. 61 Ill. 478. The right to enter into contracts and agreements thus existing, their effect and construction, is the same as if made with other corporations or with strangers; and where void by reason of a statutory provision in the one case it would be so in another. As a general rule, no recovery can be had upon a contract made in violation of the express provisions of a public statute. Where an act is forbidden by a statute, no right arises under any agreement made in carrying out such forbidden act, as no legal right exists to do that which is declared illegal, and, in the absence of a legal right, there can be no legal remedy. Penn v. Bornman, 102 Ill. 523, and cases cited. The constitution and by-laws of this association furnish the evidence of the object and purpose of the organization of the corporate body, and the contract between it and its members is to be determined by that instrument. From the facts found by the appellate court, there are reciprocal relations between this association and its 1,500 members, which may be summarized as follows: Appellee receives milk from members, and accounts to them for same, guarantees to members payment for milk sold by it, fixes and determines the price of milk, retains five cents upon each can of milk sold for each year, has authority over all milk consigned by any of its members to any stand within the corporate limits of the city of Chicago. Member cannot sell his stock excepting to shipper and producer of milk, and must own as many shares as he ships cans of milk per day, but not to own more than fifty shares of stock.

That the object of the association is to control the price of the purchase and sale of milk to retail dealers within the limits of the city of Chicago is clearly apparent, and this object is carried out by the concurrent action of the members and association; by the action of the association on the one part, aided by the agreement of its members, who, assenting to the constitution and by-laws, carry out a scheme which is a combination, agreement, or trust by which they fix the price of an article of merchandise, and limits the amount to be sold, within the corporate limits of the city of Chicago. By the Act approved June 11, 1891, in force July 1, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for the punishment of persons, co-partnerships and corporations forming pools, trusts and combines and mode of procedure and rules of evidence in such cases," it is provided that any corporation, partnership, individual, or association of persons who shall create, enter into business as members of, or a party to, any pool, trust, agreement combination, or confederation with another corporation, partnership, association, or individual to regulate or fix the price of any article of merchandise or commodity, or to limit or fix the amount or quantity to be produced or sold, is made a misdemeanor, punishable as provided in the act. By the sixth section of that act, any purchaser of any article or commodity from any individual or corporation transacting business contrary to the provisions of the act shall not be liable for the price or payment of such article or commodity, and may plead the act as a defense to any suit for the price. These provisions were, by the special pleas, invoked as a defense to the suit. The statute by its terms makes a combination, trust, or agreement between corporations, partnerships, associations, or individuals to fix the price of any article of merchandise, or to limit the amount to be sold, an offense which is sought to be prohibited; and it further provided that a purchaser of any article or commodity from any individual company or corporation transacting business contrary to the preceding section of the act is not liable for the price or payment of such article or commodity. The purpose of the arrangement between this corporation and the stockholders thereof was to fix the price and control and limit the amount shipped. The purposes attempted to be accomplished through the corporation were illegal. To carry out such purposes, it stands as the active business agent of the members, who are stockholders, contracting with it to create and carry out the purpose of the organization. It is a combination in violation of the statute and in restraint of trade. Any purchaser of any commodity thus sold by such organization is not liable for the price thereof. It is urged that the corporation cannot alone enter into a trust or combination that could be a violation of this statute. While it is true, as a general proposition, that a corporation may be created and constituted a legal entity, existing separate and apart from the natural persons composing it, yet it cannot act independently, or against the will, or abstain from complying with the direction, of the natural persons who constitute the corporate body. A corporation is in fact an association of persons united in one body, having perpetual succession, vested with political rights conferred upon it by the authority creating it. Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 237; 1 Kyd, Corp. 13. Such being the nature of the corporate body, acts done by it are the acts of the associated persons, as corporations or as individuals; and in which capacity the act is done must be determined from the nature and character of the act, and the purpose for which organized. State v. Standard Oil Co. 49 Ohio St. 137, 15 L. R. A. 145. And when the acts of the corporate body are violative of the statute of the state which would be a misdemeanor that would subject to punishment in accordance with law, such acts are wholly without the lawful power of the corporation, as the state will create no body with authority to violate its laws. And where the organization of the corporate body, or the control exercised by the stockholders in determining the agencies selected for managing its business, and the business, as thus conducted, managed, and controlled, is against public policy, or in contravention of a statute of the state, such acts of the corporate body and of the individual shareholders are the combined acts of all, and courts are not so powerless that they may not prevent the success of ingenious schemes to evade or violate the law. There can be no immunity to evasion of the policy of the state by its own creations. The corporation as an entity may not be able to create a trust or combination with itself, but its individual shareholders may in controlling it, together with it, create such trust or combination that will constitute it, with them alike, guilty.

This corporation was organized February 24, 1891, and engaged in business, and the statute invoked by the pleas as a defense became a law July 1, 1891; and the appellee urges that, even if it be admitted that a combination between a corporation and its stockholders exists, such combination, occurring before the passage of the act, cannot be held contrary to its provisions, and that the circuit court erred in refusing to hold propositions presented by appellees which presented this question. The rule is settled that corporations created within this state are amenable to the police power, and such bodies are not beyond legislative control, and are amenable to the same extent as natural persons. Ruggles v. People, 91 Ill. 256. The corporation is subject to the statute, and, although the contract of guaranty was entered into before the passage of the act, yet, by its terms, the furnishing of the commodity named from month to month was contemplated, and, by the facts as found by the appellate court, that for which the price is sought to be recovered in this case was furnished, after the passage of the act. The acts of the corporation and its stockholder with reference to this sale were within the meaning of the act. While the corporation and appellants entered into the contract before the passage of the law, the contract at the time of its execution was unilateral, and under no circumstances could a recovery be had thereon until the defendants had the benefit of the consideration for which they bargained (Richardson v. Hardwick, 106 U. S. 252, 27 L. ed. 145), which did not occur until after the passage of the act. That, with reference to this guaranty, the act was not in contravention of section 14, article 2, of the Constitution of this state.

There was no error in the trial court refusing to hold as law the propositions submitted by the appellee, nor in holding as law the propositions submitted by appellants, and finding for the defendants and entering judgment against the plaintiff for costs. There was error in the appellate court reversing the judgment of the circuit court.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed, and the judgment of the Appellate Court is reversed.

VERMONT SUPREME COURT.

Lucy ROBINSON

v.

Martin V. B. LEACH et al.

(.....Vt.....)

A homestead is not exempt from a note

NOTE.—The denial by the above decision that a renewal of notes affects the character of the debt with reference to a homestead is so fully sustained by the authorities that any analysis and compilation of them can hardly be needed.

37 L. R. A.

given in renewal of notes outstanding when the homestead was acquired, the parties to the notes being the same.

(February 4, 1895.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Rutland County Court in favor of plaintiff in a proceeding to establish a claim against an estate which defendant claimed to be exempt as his homestead. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion. Mr. Fayette Potter for defendant.

Mr. J. C. Baker, for plaintiff:

The object of the statute was to prevent men, after they had obtained credit, from putting their property into a homestead, and thus preventing their creditors from reaching it by attachment.

West River Bank v. Gale, 42 Vt. 27; Lamb v. Mason, 45 Vt. 500.

It is the existence of the debt at the time the deed is left for record that establishes the right of attachment and levy upon the land.

Gilson v. Parkhurst, 53 Vt. 884; White v. White, 63 Vt. 577.

The note of a debtor is not a payment of the debt unless it is taken as such by agreement of the parties.

8 Randolph, Com. Paper, 1509; 18 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 167.

The debt represented by this new note was a cause of action existing when the homestead was acquired.

Holland Trust Co. v. Waddell, 75 Hun. 104; Kidder v. Knox, 48 Me. 551; Lee v. Hollister, 5 Fed. Rep. 752; McLaughlin v. Bank of Potomac, 48 U. S. 7 How. 228, 12 L. ed. 679; Lowry v. Fisher, 2 Bush, 70, 92 Am. Dec. 475; Bank of Hanover v. Bridgers, 98 N. C. 67; Dickinson v. King, 28 Vt. 878.

This homestead being subject to attachment and execution for the debt of Mrs. Robinson, which was a cause of action at the time when the homestead was acquired, passed to the assignee by the assignment for administration in the payment of her debt, so far as the homestead was liable for its payment.

Tilden v. Crimmins, 60 Vt. 546.

Rowell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question is whether a homestead is exempt from a note given by the homesteader after its acquisition, in renewal of his notes given before its acquisition, the parties to the notes being the same. The statute subjects the homestead to attachment and levy of execution upon "causes of action existing at the time" it is acquired. It is contended that the cause of action meant is the claim that the plaintiff makes and declares upon as the ground of his suit, and which is to be litigated on trial. But this construction is too strict. The words "causes of action" are evidently used in a sense broad enough to embrace the debt, as distinguished from the evidence of it. The statute is the same for the purposes of this case as though it read "debts existing," etc. Hence, if the original debt can be said to exist, the case is with the plaintiff.

Courts will, if they can, when justice requires it, look behind the evidence of the debt, and consider the debt itself, and decide according to that. This is always done when mortgage notes are renewed. As long as the original debt can be traced, the security remains, no matter how many renewals there have been. So in Conway v. Seamons, 55 Vt. 8, 45 Am. Rep. 579, we looked behind a judgment rendered, after the defendant's discharge in insolvency, but founded on a note unaffected by the discharge, and held the judgment not discharged because the note was not. The ground of the holding was that although the note, as evidence of the indebtedness, was merged in the judgment, yet the judgment was not to all intents a new debt, but the old debt in a new form, for the purpose of protecting the right connected therewith before the judgment. The same view was held and applied in Pinney v. Kimpton, 46 Vt. 80. There the plaintiff held a note as collateral for signing with another. Having had to pay, he took the note of his principal for the amount, and afterwards brought suit on the collateral. It was held that, by taking his principal's note, he did not discharge his claim on the note he held as collateral. The court said that the debt still existed, though evidenced by the principal's note; that, in an action against the principal for the collection of the debt, the plaintiff would, in form, be confined to his remedy on the note, instead of the open account; that, in this sense and for this purpose, it is often said in this state that the giving of a promissory note for an existing debt is prima facie payment; but that it is not payment in the sense of extinguishing the debt so as to discharge the creditor's claim on property put into his hands by the debtor as collateral security for the debt, unless so agreed. This principle is entirely applicable here. The new note was but a new evidence of the old debt. True, the old notes were extinguished as affording a ground or cause of action, but the debt evidenced thereby continued to exist for the purpose of preserving the right against the homestead that was originally connected with it. Weaver's Estate, 25 Pa. 434, is a case precisely like this. There a creditor held the promissory note of his debtor given before the passage of the homestead act. After its passage, he gave up that note, and took in place of it a single bill, with warrant of attorney for confession of judgment, and it was held that a judgment entered on the bill was not subject to the act. Even where a negotiable promissory note given for land, and payable to the vendor, went into the hands of a third person, who, while he held it, took a new note therefor, payable to himself, with a party added as surety, it was held that this was not such a novation of the original contract that a homestead laid off in the land was not subject to levy and sale to satisfy a judgment founded on the bill. Wofford v. Gaines, 53 Ga. 485, cf. Perrin v. Sargeant, 33 Vt. 84.

The defendant relies on Hutchins v. Olcott, 4 Vt. 549, 24 Am. Rep. 634, where it was held that the taking of a negotiable promissory note is an extinguishment of any implied promise on the part of the maker to pay the consideration for which the note was given, and that, therefore, the taking of such a note in payment of an account for labor bestowed on an article is such a manifestation of the intent of the taker to rely on the personal security of the maker as to be a waiver of any lien given by law on the property. The ground of that decision seems to be that the lien is but an incident of the implied contract; and so, when the creditor takes a note, thereby extinguishing that contract, which is the principal thing, he must be taken to intend to waive the lien, which is the incident. If this case is opposed to what we now hold, it must be regarded as departed from to that extent.

Judgment affirmed, and ordered to be certified to the court of insolvency.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Evan MORRIS et al.

v.

METALLINE LAND CO. of Lake Superior andWilliam H. STEVENS et al., Appts.

(184 Pa. 326.)

A declaration of forfeiture of shares in an unincorporated joint-stock company or partnership is absolutely void where the articles of association provide for publication of notice in newspapers of Philadelphia and Detroit thirty days before declaring a forfeiture, and such notice has been published in Philadelphia but not in Detroit.

(October 8, 1894.)

APPEAL by defendants Stevens, Brooking, and Miller from a decree of the Court of Common Pleas, No. 2, for Philadelphia County refusing recognition to them in the distribution of assets of the Metalline Land Company. Reversed.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion.

Mr. T. Elliott Patterson, for appellant William H. Stevens:

Chancellor Kent, of articles of agreement like those of the Metalline, said: "There cannot be a doubt upon any mind, after perusing these articles, and connecting them with the admissions in the (bill), that they are of the character and authority of permanent constitutional provisions, binding upon all the members when adopted by all, as a solemn private contract; and that they can only be abolished by the like concurrent will by which they were adopted. If these are not of the nature, and do not partake of the force of fundamental articles, it is not in the power of any private association to have any."

Livingston v. Lynch, 4 Johns. Ch. 595, 1 L. ed. 948.

The duties and obligations, as well as the rights, of the parties inter se being ascertained and defined by the several provisions contained in such articles, they are regulated, and can alone be enforced consistently with the terms and stipulations agreed upon.

Gow, Partn. 7-9; Chapple v. Cadell, Jac. 537; Parsons, Partn. p. 234, footnote; Ex parte Lawes, 10 Eng. L. & Eq. 168; Const v. Harris, Turn. & R. 496; Clarke v. Hart, 6 H. L. Cas. 638.

In Johnson v. Lytle's Iron Agency, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 687, when notice of a call demanded payment of interest from the day of the call instead of the day fixed for its payment as the by-law required, Mellish, Lord Justice, said: "I think that if the notice departs in any respect from the statutory form, it is impossible for us to go into the question, how much it departs. It is bad notice and the subsequent resolution, which is founded upon it, is invalid."

Where a forfeiture is sought to be enforced, it is the notice for the call for the assessment that is of greater importance than any subsequent steps in the procedure.

Cook, Stock & Stockholders, p. 150.

Where the charter expressly requires notice to be given in certain newspapers, and for a

NOTE.—Forfeiture of corporate stock.*I. Power to forfeit.*II. Validity of exercises of power.*a. In general.*b. Necessity of notice.*c. Sufficiency of notice.*III. Redemption or other remedy of stockholder.*IV. Effect of forfeiture on personal liability of stockholder.*a. As to unpaid assessments.*b. As to creditors.*V. Miscellaneous.*L. Power to forfeit.

That a corporation has no inherent power to forfeit delinquent stock is declared in Budd v. Multnomah Street R. Co. (1887) 15 Or. 413.

The right to forfeit shares must come from the law and can be exercised only in the manner prescribed by law, says Judge Cooley in Westcott v. Minnesota Min. Co. (1871) 23 Mich. 145.

In a case of a mining partnership on the cost-book principle, it was held that the right of forfeiture was not inherent in such a company. Clarke v. Hart (1858) 6 H. L. Cas. 638, affirming Hart v. Clarke (1854) 6 DeG. M. & G. 232, 27 L. J. Ch. 415, 5 Jur. N. S. 447, reversing 19 Beav. 356.

Paid-up stock of non-assenting members of a corporation cannot be subjected by any action of the majority to forfeiture for nonpayment of additional assessments. Gresham v. Island City Sav. Bank (1890) 2 Tex. Civ. App. 52.

Directors have no power to declare a forfeiture of stock for nonpayment of installments unless the power has been conferred upon them by charter. 37 L. R. A.

A by-law providing for such forfeiture is not authorized by general power to make by-laws not inconsistent with any existing law for the management of property, the regulation of its affairs, and the transfer of stock. Re Long Island R. Co. (1897) 19 Wend. 37, 22 Am. Dec. 429.

But a declaration of a forfeiture of stock without express grant of power in the charter, but in pursuance of a by-law printed on certificates and acquiesced in, was upheld on the theory that the by-law had been agreed to by all, and relief against the forfeiture was denied in Leaseps v. Architects Co. of New Orleans (1849) 4 La. Ann. 316.

A statute giving a corporation a power of sale to enforce a forfeiture of stock is applicable to existing stockholders where the former law gave a lien on the stock leaving the holder of the lien to common remedies for its enforcement. Tutwiler v. Tuscaloosa Coal, Iron & Land Co. (1890) 89 Ala. 391.

A declaration of forfeiture after a judgment for the full amount of unpaid calls is void where the deed of settlement of the company provided for forfeiture, and also that the directors, if they should think fit, might enforce the payment of the amount due "instead of declaring the same to be forfeited." Giles v. Hutt (1843) 3 Exch. 13, 13 L. J. Exch. 53, 5 Railway Cas. 505.

A statute requiring payment of calls and providing that 5 per cent shall be added for every month's delay, and that "if the same and the said additional penalty shall not be paid for such space of time as that the accumulated penalties shall become equal to the sums before paid for and on ac-certain number of days, before calls shall be valid, the requirements must be observed, or there can be no recovery upon a call.

Boone, Corp. 161; Alabama & F. R. Co. v. Rowley, 9 Fla. 508; Sinking Springs Mut. Ins. Co. v. Hoff, 2 W. N. C. 41; Northampton Mut. Life Stock Ins. Co. v. Stewart, 39 N. J. L. 486.

The power to declare a forfeiture of the shares for non-payment of calls is derived only from express statute provision, and usually depends on certain conditions, as a prescribed notice, and mode of sale. If these are not strictly complied with, or if the assessment itself is illegal, the sale will be void, and the shareholders will not be liable for the deficit.

Redf. Railways (1887) 214; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. (1886) 127; Walker v. Ogden, 1 Biss. 287; Sparks v. Liverpool Water Works, 13 Ves. Jr. 428; Westcott v. Minnesota Min. Co. 23 Mich. 145; Portland, S. & P. R. Co. v. Graham, 11 Met. 1; Lexington & W. O. R. Co. v. Staples, 5 Gray, 522; Alabama & F. R. Co. v. Rowley, supra.

The language of Judge Sharswood, in Germantown Pass. R. Co. v. Fittler, 60 Pa. 180, 100 Am. Dec. 546, is: "We must look to the charter for the power of the directors to forfeit the stock. No doubt the power given must be strictly pursued, and if any restrictions or limitations therein provided have been disregarded, the alleged act of forfeiture must be declared invalid."

See also Johnson v. Lyttle's Iron Agency, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 687; Pitcher v. Barrows, 17 Pick. 865, 28 Am. Dec. 806; Lincoln v. Wright, 23 Pa. 80, 62 Am. Dec. 816; Kellogg v. French, 15 Gray, 857.

Messrs. James E. Hood and Francis I. Gowen, for appellant, Sarah Miller:

To justify forfeiture the requirements of the articles of association regulating the mode of proceeding to enforce the same must have been strictly complied with.

Lindley, Partn. p. 744.

Messrs. Richard C. Dale and William D. Neilson, for appellees:

The articles of association of this company have been before this court in Oliver's Estate, 9 L. R. A. 421, 136 Pa. 45.

The company is unincorporated, and is a partnership organized on the joint-stock plan by the contract entered into by its members.

Invalid forfeitures may subsequently by acquiescence, express or tacit, be so far confirmed that they cannot be opened.

Green's Brice, Ultra Vires, 188; Agricultural Insurance Company Cases, in Lindley, Partn. p. 760.

There may be, first, a power to forfeit on a bona fide forfeiture but wanting in formalities. In such cases slight circumstances or a short lapse will suffice to bind the parties.

Green's Brice, Ultra Vires, 188, citing Woolaston's Case, 4 DeG. & J. 437; Webster's Case, 32 L. J. Ch. 185; Knight's Case, L. R. 2 Ch. 321; King's Case, L. R. 2 Ch. 714, 731; Kelk's Case, L. R. 9 Eq. 107; Austin's Case, 24 L. T. N. S. 432; Lyster's Case, L. R. 4 Eq. 233; Garden Gully Quarries Min. Co. v. McLister, 1 App. Cas. 39; Lawrence's Case, L. R. 2 Ch. 412; Hart v. Clarke, 19 Beav. 356; Olegg v. Edmondson, 8 DeG. M. & G. 787; McConomy v. Reed, 152 Pa. 42.

Messrs. R. C. McMurtrie and John G. Johnson also for appellees.

Green, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The proceeding in this case is a bill in equity filed by certain trustees of a fund of the enterprise. Cox v. Bodfish (1853) 35 Me. 302. The rights of a stockholder on foreclosure of a railroad mortgage are forfeited by his failure to assent within the time specified by statute to a plan of reorganization which the statute authorizes. Vatable v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1884) 96 N. Y. 49.

A general assignment by a corporation for creditors will not prevent a forfeiture of stock for non-payment of assessments as against the contention of the stockholder after the corporation has again become a profitable concern. Germantown Pass. R. Co. v. Fittler (1869) 60 Pa. 124, 100 Am. Dec. 546.

The holder of paid-up stock is held liable to the sale thereof for an assessment to pay debts, although there is unsold stock in the treasury, if this cannot be sold, by virtue of 2 Utah Comp. Laws 1888, section 2396, which provides that the holder of such stock shall not be liable to assessment or for any indebtedness otherwise than by sale of stock unless distinctly provided for in the articles of incorporation. Cary v. York Min. Co. (1893) 9 Utah. 484.

Where a deed of settlement provided for the forfeiture of the shares of any subscribers who did not execute such deed, without giving a right of forfeiture for nonpayment of calls, it was held that forfeiture for non-execution of the deed could not be declared where the deed made payment of a call a requisite of its execution. Norman v. Mitchell (1854) 5 DeG. M. & G. 648, 19 Beav. 278.

A forfeiture of the interest of a member of a religious society for non-payment of an assessment is not to be justified by articles of association providing that the proprietors may tax themselves to

of the enterprise. Cox v. Bodfish (1853) 35 Me. 302. The rights of a stockholder on foreclosure of a railroad mortgage are forfeited by his failure to assent within the time specified by statute to a plan of reorganization which the statute authorizes. Vatable v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1884) 96 N. Y. 49. A general assignment by a corporation for creditors will not prevent a forfeiture of stock for non-payment of assessments as against the contention of the stockholder after the corporation has again become a profitable concern. Germantown Pass. R. Co. v. Fittler (1869) 60 Pa. 124, 100 Am. Dec. 546. The holder of paid-up stock is held liable to the sale thereof for an assessment to pay debts, although there is unsold stock in the treasury, if this cannot be sold, by virtue of 2 Utah Comp. Laws 1888, section 2396, which provides that the holder of such stock shall not be liable to assessment or for any indebtedness otherwise than by sale of stock unless distinctly provided for in the articles of incorporation. Cary v. York Min. Co. (1893) 9 Utah. 484. Where a deed of settlement provided for the forfeiture of the shares of any subscribers who did not execute such deed, without giving a right of forfeiture for nonpayment of calls, it was held that forfeiture for non-execution of the deed could not be declared where the deed made payment of a call a requisite of its execution. Norman v. Mitchell (1854) 5 DeG. M. & G. 648, 19 Beav. 278. A forfeiture of the interest of a member of a religious society for non-payment of an assessment is not to be justified by articles of association providing that the proprietors may tax themselves to arising from the sale of lands owned by the defendant land company. "The company is unincorporated, and is a partnership organized on the joint-stock plan by a contract entered into by the members." Oliver's Estate, 136 Pa. 58, 9 L. R. A. 421. It is composed of numerous members, whose interests in the company are represented by certificates of stock, of which there were to be 20,000, of $5 each. The business of the company was to be the purchasing of lands, developing mines of copper and other valuable minerals, and disposing of the same, situated in the Lake Superior land district, upper peninsula, state of Michigan. The funds and property of the association were vested in three trustees, to be held by them as joint tenants, and they were to have the entire control and disposal of the property, real and personal, and to make purchases, conveyances, sales, and contracts. In the exercise of their authority they sold 40 acres of the lands of the company for $500,000, and the distribution of this money is the object of the present proceeding. Certain of the stockholders had failed to pay calls or assessments made by the trustees, and the shares of a number of stockholders, including the appellants, had been forfeited for nonpayment of the calls. If these forfeitures were lawfully made, the appellants have no case, and the decree of the court below should be sustained. If they or any of them were not lawfully made, the appellants are entitled to participate in the distribution, from which they were excluded by the master and court below. Three calls were made prior to the forfeitures involved in the present contention,—one in 1872, one in 1874, and another in 1878. As to the call made in 1872, no question arises here, as all the appellants paid the amounts called for at that time. There are three appellants,—Roope Brooking, Sarah Miller, executrix, and William H. Stevens. The shares of Brooking and Miller were forfeited under the call of 1878 only. Of the shares of Stevens, 550 were forfeited for nonpayment of the call of 1874, and 1,500 for nonpayment under the call of 1878. In regard to the forfeiture of the 550 shares under the call of 1874, we are of opinion that the provisions of the articles of association which authorized a forfeiture were strictly and precisely followed in every particular, and therefore that forfeiture was a valid and binding act, fully authorized by the articles, and it must be sustained.

We are of a different opinion in regard to all the forfeitures under the call of 1878, and therefore do not sustain them. The authority to make any forfeitures is found in the fourth section of the articles of association, which is in the following words, viz.: "The original shares of this company shall be issued to the proprietors of the lands in proportion to their respective interests in said lands, liable to no more than five dollars per share assessment, and the board of trustees shall have authority to make a requisition upon their several stockholders for the payment of such installments upon the shares held by them whenever they may deem it necessary or expedient, by giving thirty days' previous notice of the same in one or more newspapers published in the city of Philadelphia and Detroit, specifying in such notice the amount of such installment per share, and the time and place of payment of the same: provided, however, that no installment shall be called in, which, with the raise money to repair their house. Perrin v. Granger (1868) 90 Vt. 595.

A condition in a deed of a pew given by an incorporated religious society that if the grantee "shall leave the said meeting-house he shall first offer the said pew to the treasurer" for a sum named, or else forfeit his rights, is upheld. French v. Old South Soc. in Boston (1871) 106 Mass. 479.

For rights in respect to pews, see note to Aylward v. O'Brien (Mass.) 23 L. R. A. 205.

II. Validity of exercise of power.

a. In general.

In accordance with the decision in the above case of MORRIS V. METALLINE LAND CO. it is held by all the cases that strict compliance with the law is necessary to sustain a forfeiture of stock. Such is the doctrine of Mitchell v. Vermont Copper Min. Co. (1878) 8 Jones & S. 405.

The right of forfeiture of delinquent shares is strictissimi juris and all that is necessary must be exactly pursued. Clarke v. Hart (1858) 6 H. L. Cas. 623, 5 Jur. N. S. 447, 27 L. J. Ch. 615, affirming Hart v. Clarke, 6 DeG. M. & G. 223, reversing 19 Beav. 355.

To enforce statutory liability for deficiency after forfeiture of stock the terms of the statute must be strictly complied with. Lewey's Island R. Co. v. Bolton (1860) 48 Me. 451, 77 Am. Dec. 226.

Under statute authorizing the sale of delinquent stock leaving a personal liability for any deficiency, the terms of sale specified are conditions precedent to a valid sale. Portland, S. & P. R. Co. v. Graham (1846) 11 Met. 1.

27 L. R. A.

Proof of sale must show every fact named in the statute. Lewey's Island R. Co. v. Bolton, supra.

Where articles of association are the law governing the right of forfeiture all the conditions precedent which are made by them must be strictly complied with or the proceedings will be void. Westcott v. Minnesota Min. Co. (1871) 23 Mich. 145.

In the absence of any provision in a charter for the sale of forfeited shares except under order of the directors, they cannot delegate their power and they cannot make the order in the alternative. York & C. R. Co. v. Ritchie (1855) 40 Me. 425.

A by-law providing for notice under an order of the directors makes such order necessary to a valid sale for the forfeiture of shares. Lexington & W. O. R. Co. v. Staples (1855) 5 Gray, 580.

A mere declaration of a forfeiture of stock without any sale thereof does not prevent an action to collect an assessment upon it, where a by-law provides for enforcing forfeiture by sale at auction after notice. Minnehaha Driving Park Assn. v. Legg (1868) 50 Minn. 333.

A sale of stock to enforce forfeiture is held not to be necessary where the statute merely authorizes a forfeiture without providing the mode of proceeding. Rutland & B. R. Co. v. Thrall (1868) 85 Vt. 536.

But forfeiture of stock incurred when there is no express mode of establishing it provided, cannot be established by declaration of trustees so as to prevent equity from allowing redemption in a proper case. Walker v. Ogden (1850) 1 Biss. 287.

Where the statute says the treasurer may sell stock at public auction "under such regulations as the corporation by its by-laws may direct," no amount already paid on the share, shall make the total amount exceed the sum authorized by the articles of this association; and provided, also, that notice of the call for any installment shall be sent by letter through the postoffice, addressed to all stockholders whose residence is known to the secretary, and it shall be competent for the trustees, after the expiration of thirty days from the period at which any installment shall become due, to forfeit the stock of such parties as may fail in paying such installment and the interest thereon from the time such installment shall have become due, and the stock so forfeited shall be sold at auction in accordance with the general laws of the state of Michigan."

It will be perceived that, in order to make a forfeiture which should be in accordance with the power conferred by the foregoing article, it would be necessary for the trustees to make a requisition for the amount called "by giving notice of the same in one or more newspapers published in the city of Philadelphia and Detroit, specifying in such notice the amount of such installment per share, and the time and place of payment of the same." In point of fact such a notice was published in the city of Philadelphia, but no publication of any kind was made in Detroit; and the master has so found, and that it was an irregularity,—in fact, a non-compliance with the requirements of the articles of association. It was not only necessary that there should be a publication in a newspaper published in Detroit, but, before an act of forfeiture could be performed by the trustees, it was essential that thirty days should elapse after the first publication before the installment would become payable. But, if there was no publication at all in a Detroit paper, then there was no period of thirty days which commenced to run prior to the day of payment, and by necessary consequence no day of payment. Hence the installment was not due at any time, and the stockholders were in no default for not paying. Therefore two primary, elemental prerequisites to any right of forfeiture were altogether absent, to wit—First, the publication in a Detroit newspaper; and, next, the lapsing of an interval of thirty days between the publication of the notice and the day of payment. Both of these requirements were indispensable, but the second of them is so manifestly and so fatally indispensable that the mere statement of the proposition is its own proof. If the thirty days of grace are absent from the case, the power to declare the forfeiture never arose, never came into existence, and the subsequent declaration of the forfeiture was simply a void act, altogether nugatory, and of no effect whatever.

If authority were wanting for so plain a proposition, a perfect and authoritative illustration is found in the case of Northampton Mut. Live Stock Ins. Co. v. Stewart, 39 N. J. L. 486. The company brought an action against a member to recover an assessment. In the court below a judgment was obtained, which was reversed by the court of errors and appeals, who said: "The plaintiff is a mutual insurance company. Its scheme of organization draws each holder of its policies into its society, as a member thereof. This suit is instituted against the defendant as a member of the corporation. As such he is subject to its constitution, and bound by its by-laws and proper corporate regulations, valid sale can be made in the absence of any such regulations by by-law. Mitchell v. Vermont Copper Min. Co. (1876) 8 Jones & S. 408.

Action by a corporation attempting to forfeit stock for non-payment of assessments under a stipulation making time of the essence of the contract to pay them, was held to be effectual, although the company had advertised the sale of the shares afterwards, which was postponed from time to time and never took place. The court held that any disposition of the shares by the corporation after their forfeiture could not be contested by the former owner who attempted to redeem them. Weeks v. Silver Inlet Consol. Min. Co. (1887) 28 Jones & S. 1.

Where shares were forfeited to satisfy a lien thereon without any sale under a provision in the deed of settlement for a lien with liberty to forfeit the shares in satisfaction of a debt without saying anything about a default, the court says: "We must consider that the shares if taken were to be taken at their real value and applied in reduction of the debt." The company was held not obliged to sell them, but if it did not must give full market value without deduction for the probable effect of throwing the shares on the market. Stubbs v. Lister (1841) 1 Younge & C. Ch. Cas. 81.

A judicial sale of shares on a default decree against a nonresident shareholder for assessments, which was obtained by publication, was held void for want of jurisdiction where the charter conferred no power to forfeit and sell and the shares were not seized and taken into custody, since the proceeding must be viewed as being in rem. Williams v. Lowe (1876) 4 Neb. 383.

A resolution to forfeit the shares of a single stockholder is in no sense a by-law and cannot be sustained where there is no by-law on the subject but the power is given by statutory provision that the corporation may make by-laws therefor. Budd v. Multnomah Street R. Co. (1887) 15 Or. 413.

A resolution that the name of delinquent stockholders "be taken from the rolls" if they do not pay within the next thirty days does not show a forfeiture without further action, or defeat recovery of the assessments by the corporation. Hays v. Franklin County Lumber Co. (1892) 35 Neb. 511.

A statutory provision that a delinquent shareholder "shall absolutely forfeit" his shares, construed with a later provision that no advantage shall be taken of such forfeiture until thirty days' notice has been given, does not make a forfeiture effective without a declaration thereof after such notice. Van Diemen's Land Co. v. Cookerell (1867) 1 C. B. N. S. 732, 36 L. J. C. P. 208; Graham v. Van Diemen's Land Co. (1866) 1 Hurlst. & N. 541, 26 L. J. Exch. 73.

A mere resolution of directors that "if delinquent stockholders do not pay their full subscription stock within the next thirty days their names shall be taken from the rolls" will not, without further action, effect a forfeiture or prevent the enforcement of the subscription. Hays v. Franklin County Lumber Co. supra.

Calls proclaiming that stock will be forfeited if they are not paid are not enough to constitute forfeiture. Macon & A. R. Co. v. Vason (1876) 37 Ga. 314.

A declaration that stock of delinquent subscribers will be forfeited unless payment is made before a particular time is held not to constitute a for-which he is presumed to know and understand; . . . and he is entitled, in his relations to the company, to whatever aid and protection they provide for him. . . . How and when the tax is to be levied is provided for in the thirteenth article of the by-laws, as follows: 'If the funds in hand be insufficient to pay all losses, the directors shall, by resolution, levy a tax on the members of the company . . . on the amount insured, and they shall publish such levying in two newspapers of the county, and all persons insured at the time of such levying of tax shall pay his amount of tax to the treasurer or his order within sixty days from the day of such public notice.' The fourteenth article provides that, if any member neglect or refuse to pay his tax for sixty days from the day public notice shall be given, the company may sue for and recover the same, with interest and costs of suit. The delinquent must be in default sixty days after publication of the tax levy in two newspapers. . . . There was nothing to show that such publication had ever been made by the company. The demand contains no allegation, and the evidence fails to show, that such public notice was given before the suit was brought. The fact, even, that personal notice of the assessment was served by the company upon the defendant is not sufficient answer to his objection."

The court said further that it might even be admitted "that personal notice served to apprise him better than public notice would have done, but sixty days of grace were not to be computed from the time when personal notice should be given him, but from the giving of public notice,—an event equally within the company's control, and adopted in its law." If all this is true of a mere call to pay in an assessment, which can easily be recovered after another and proper assessment has been made, with how much greater force does it apply when the consequence of nonpayment is the forfeiture and absolute loss of an immensely valuable interest—in this case worth in one instance $29,000 and upwards—for the failure to pay $86.11.

In the case of Stevens, it was undoubtedly the fact that he had no knowledge whatever of the call of 1878 until in 1885, when he wrote to the secretary, making inquiry in regard to his stock, and was informed that it had been forfeited for nonpayment of the calls of 1878. He and his family lived in Detroit, but he was absent a large part of the time in the Rocky Mountain territories, engaged in geological explorations and mining. If the notice had been published in Detroit his family might have seen it, and informed him of it. The publication in Philadelphia was obviously of no service, and a publication in Detroit would be of far greater importance to him and his rights than publication anywhere else. But, while this consideration affects the merits of his case on the facts, his right to the Detroit publication is one of the conditions of his contract, and he is therefore entitled to have it rigidly and strictly enforced.

In the case of Germantown Pass. R. Co. v. Filler, 60 Pa. 180, 100 Am. Dec. 546, we said (Sharswood, J.): "We must look to the charter for the power of the directors to forfeit the stock. No doubt the power given must be strictly pursued, and if any restrictions or limitations therein provided have been disregarded the alleged act of forfeiture must be declared invalid. This is so for the feiture without a further declaration of forfeiture. Water Valley Mfg. Co. v. Seaman (1876) 53 Miss. 655.

But in another case a resolution that all stock on which assessments should remain unpaid on a certain date "shall be and hereby is forfeited to the use of this corporation," and that the treasurer shall give immediate notice, and that all stock forfeited by virtue of the resolution should be sold, was held a final declaration of forfeiture. Rutland & B. R. Co. v. Thrall (1868) 35 Vt. 536.

A resolution declaring in general terms that subscriptions not fully paid, a notice of which has been duly served, be forfeited, is not effective without specifying what subscriptions are thus forfeited. Johnson v. Albany & S. R. Co. (1870) 40 How. Pr. 138.

A mere declaration of forfeiture is not effective when there is no express provision of charter or of law authorizing it, but in such case a judicial forfeiture may be had for default. Chase v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. (1880) 5 Lea. 415.

A resolution of directors declaring shares forfeited will be presumed to have been made, although there is no record of it, where entries of the transfer of the shares to the company and of the forfeiture of the shares has been made, which could only have been done when ordered by such resolution. Knight's Case (1867) L. R. 2 Ch. 221, 15 L. T. N. S. 544, 36 L. J. Ch. 317, 15 Week. Rep. 224.

A sale of stock forfeited must be for a legal assessment. Lewey's Island R. Co. v. Bolton (1880) 48 Me. 451, 77 Am. Dec. 236.

A sale for assessments of which one is illegal, is 37 L. R. A. void, and no action will lie for a deficiency under the statutes. Stoneham Branch R. Co. v. Gould (1854) 2 Gray, 277.

Assessments made by directors outside the state of incorporation are not effective to justify a forfeiture of stock for nonpayment as against a stockholder who had not participated in such act. Ormsby v. Vermont Copper Min. Co. (1874) 56 N. Y. 623.

A declaration of forfeiture of shares made by directors who had made the call on which forfeiture was based without being legally elected was held void for that reason. Garden Gully United Quarts Min. Co. v. McLister (1875) 1 App. Cas. 39, 24 Week. Rep. 744, 33 L. T. N. S. 408.

Two directors, although sufficient to form a quorum of a properly constituted board, were held incompetent either to increase the number of directors or to make a call on which a forfeiture could be based, where the articles provided that the board should consist of not less than three nor more than seven. Faure Electric Accumulator Co. v. Phillipart (1888) 58 L. T. N. S. 525.

But a director who acted in making a call when in fact there were not enough to make a valid board, was held estopped to deny the validity of the call on which a forfeiture of his shares had been declared. Ibid.

A forfeiture was held void for the reason that both it and the call on which it was based were made by four directors only where the articles provided that the business should be conducted by not less than five. Bottomley's Case (1880) L. R. 16 Ch. Div. 681, 29 Week. Rep. 133, 50 L. J. Ch. 167, 48 L. T. N. S. 630.

special reason that it is one of those forfeitures against which, if regular, equity does not relieve." In Westcott v. Minnesota Min. Co., 23 Mich. 145, Mr. Justice Cooley, delivering the opinion of the court, said: "Assuming, however, that the first and second conditions to valid assessment were complied with, it is very clear, we think, that notice of the meetings as required by the articles is not shown to have been given. . . . The parties, in associating, clearly had a right to stipulate for any notice they saw fit; and we cannot say that a different one would have been equally effectual, and therefore must be held sufficient. There were reasons which they might have regarded of much force for insisting upon a written notice in every instance, and when proceedings in invitum were taken against them they were not bound to give heed to any other. . . . The right to forfeit shares in any joint-stock undertaking must come from the law, and can only be exercised in the manner provided by the law. In this case the articles of association were the law governing the right of forfeiture, and all the conditions precedent which were made by them must have been strictly complied with, or the proceeding would be void." In 1 Redfield on Railways, 211 (ed. 1887), the author says: "The company in enforcing the payment of calls by forfeiture of stock must strictly pursue the mode pointed out in their charter and the general laws of the state. This is a rule of universal application to the subject of forfeiture, and one which the courts will rigidly enforce, and more especially where the forfeiture is one of the prescribed remedies given to the party, and against which equity does not relieve when fairly exercised." In Tom- lin v. Tonic & P. R. Co., 23 Ill. 429, the eleventh section of the charter required notices of calls to be published for thirty days in two newspapers published in the vicinity of the road. An action of assumpsit was brought for unpaid calls, and a certificate was filed, stating that notice had been duly given by publishing. The court said (Caton, J.): "We are inclined to think that the averments of notice in the first and second counts are insufficient. . . . The eleventh section of the charter positively requires notice of the calls to be published for thirty days in two newspapers published in the vicinity of the road. We are inclined to think that this notice required by the charter could not be dispensed with by giving actual notice to the subscriber." To the same effect is Rutland & B. R. Co. v. Thrall, 35 Vt. 536, in which the court said, "The subscriber, by incorporating this [newspaper notice for thirty days] into his subscription, secures the notice as a condition precedent, without compliance with which he is not liable to suit." In Hughes v. Antietam Mfg. Co., 34 Md. 816, the court said: "The manner of giving notice is prescribed by the law under which the calls were made, and it was the plain duty of the directors to have complied strictly with its requirements in this respect. They had no right to dispense with the mode and manner of notice thus prescribed, and where, by positive law, personal notice is required, a written notice through the mail is not a compliance with the statute." The same doctrine is enforced in Macon & A. R. Co. v. Vason, 57 Ga. 814; Alabama & F. R. Co. v. Rowley, 9 Fla. 508; and People v. Fire Department of Detroit, 31 Mich. 458,—and in many other cases unnecessary to be cited.

A sale of delinquent shares is not unlawful because the assessments not paid would not have been necessary if the trustees of the corporation had not previously misappropriated its funds. Marshall v. Golden Fleece Gold & Silver Min. Co. (1881) 16 Nev. 156.

The tender of the amount due is sufficient to defeat a valid sale of stock as delinquent. Mitchell v. Vermont Copper Min. Co. (1876) 8 Jones & S. 406, affirmed in 67 N. Y. 280.

A protest against payment in a letter accompanying a check for the amount of a call and reciting the fact that the check is forwarded for the amount of the call, will not prevent it from being a valid tender so as to prevent a forfeiture for non-payment. Sweny v. Smith (1890) L. R. 7 Eq. 824, 38 L. J. Ch. 442.

b. Necessity of notice.

Lack of notice either personally or by mail is fatal to a sale of stock as a forfeiture where such notice is prescribed by by-law. Mitchell v. Vermont Copper Min. Co. (1876) 8 Jones & S. 406.

Reasonable notice that stock will be forfeited unless assessments are paid by a certain time is necessary to make a declaration of forfeiture valid. Rutland & B. R. Co. v. Thrall (1883) 35 Vt. 536.

But a provision for a notice of forfeiture which has been declared, made in articles of association, is held in Knigh's Case (1887) L. R. 2 Ch. 321, 15 L. T. N. S. 548, 30 L. J. Ch. 817, not to be essential to the completion of the forfeiture, but as matter more of form than of substance. This notice was different from that called for by another article, which was to be given twenty-eight days before forfeiture.

c. Sufficiency of notice.

Notice of forfeiture is properly served upon the person whose name is on the register as owner, although he has become a bankrupt. Graham v. Van Diemen's Land Co. (1856) 1 Hurlst. & N. 541, 26 L. J. Exch. 73.

A notice of assessment need not expressly notify the stockholder that forfeiture will follow non-payment where a statute authorizes calls "under the penalty of forfeiture." Hill v. Nisbet (1884) 100 Ind. 341.

Where a by-law prescribes that notice of forfeiture of stock must be signed by the treasurer or a director and an order prescribing sale at public auction, these provisions must be complied with. Lewey's Island R. Co. v. Bolton (1890) 45 Me. 451, 77 Am. Dec. 226.

A forfeiture founded on non-compliance with a notice which demanded interest from the date of a call, when it was only payable from a subsequent day, is invalid. Johnson v. Lytle's Iron Agency (1877) 46 L. J. Ch. 798, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 687, 25 Week. Rep. 548, 36 L. T. N. S. 523.

Notice orally given is held insufficient to make a valid meeting so as to sustain a forfeiture for non-payment of an assessment made at such meeting, where the articles which were the law of the case required a written or printed notice served twenty days in advance. Westcott v. Minnesota Min. Co. (1871) 23 Mich. 145.

Notice by publication extensively made in good faith is held sufficient notice to stockholders of the

The English cases are equally clear and positive to the effect that, in order to sustain a forfeiture of property, every condition precedent must be strictly and literally complied with. In Johnson v. Lytle's Iron Agency, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 687, it was said by James, L. J.: "I am of opinion that the notice of December 21st did not comply strictly with the provisions of the contract between the company and the shareholders which is contained in the regulations of Table A. It is the established rule of the courts of chancery and of the courts of common law that no forfeiture of property can be made unless every condition precedent has been strictly and literally complied with. A very little inaccuracy is as fatal as the greatest. Here the notice is inaccurate. It is therefore bad and the forfeiture is invalid." Mellish, L. J., in the same case, said: "I think that, if the notice departs in any respect from the statutory form, it is impossible for us to go into the question how much it departs. It is a bad notice, and the subsequent resolution, which is founded upon it, is invalid. In this case the notice was inaccurate in demanding the payment of interest from the date of the call." One of the provisions of Table A directed that interest should be due on calls from the date of payment, and for this small variance in the notice it was held that the subsequent resolution of forfeiture of the shares in question was void. Other English cases to the same effect are Sparks v. Liverpool Waterworks Co. 13 Ves. Jr. 428; Watson v. Eales, 23 Beav. 294; Clarke v. Hart, 6 H. L. Cas. 688. In the last case, Lord Chelmsford said, "It is unnecessary to advert to the principle that forfeitures are strictissimi juris, and that parties who seek to enforce them must exactly pursue all that is necessary in order to enable them to exercise this strong power."

It is not necessary to pursue the citations further. They are really not in controversy. The learned master admitted their correctness and their force. But he was misled into refusing the proper effect of absolute invalidity of the forfeitures declared under the call of 1878 by a theory of acquiescence and of laches on the part of these appellants in seeking to set aside the forfeitures. The cases he cites in support of his conclusions are all well enough in their way, but they are inapplicable to the facts of this case. In Sparks v. Liverpool Waterworks Co., 13 Ves. Jr. 428, the calls were made and the proceeding to forfeit was conducted in strict accordance with the rules of the company, and the forfeiture was sustained upon the insufficiency of the excuse for noncompliance with the call on the part of the delinquent shareholder. In Prendergast v. Turton, 1 Younge & C. Ch. Cas. 109, the stock was paid in full, but the original articles of agreement authorized the directors to call for additional shares to carry on the operations of the company. Such a call was made in accordance with the articles, and the plaintiff did not comply, but temporized, and finally refused to pay. The company being a mining company, and requiring contributions from its members to conduct the business, and the other members having constantly paid their contributions, until the business became profitable, it was inequitable that the plaintiff should stand aloof while others were furnishing the means to proceed with the business, and be permitted to participate in the profits thus earned, by means of a restoration to his forfeited shares.

time within which assent must be made to a plan of reorganization after foreclosure in order to work a forfeiture of the rights of those who do not assent. Vatable v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1884) 96 N. Y. 49.

A by-law requiring notice to be posted in a conspicuous place is not shown to have been complied with by proof merely that it was posted in a public place. Lewey's Island R. Co. v. Bolton (1890) 48 Me. 451, 77 Am. Dec. 236.

A requirement of notice at the "usual or last place of abode" of a delinquent stockholder in order to forfeit his stock is not complied with by taking the notice for a stockholder who had left the country to the former place of business of a firm to which he belonged, but which had been shut up, and then in accordance with a direction posted on the premises to send notices of the firm to a certain place, taking the notice to that place where it was left with a request to obtain acceptance of the notice. Van Diemen's Land Co. v. Cockerell (1867) 1 C. B. N. S. 732, 26 L. J. C. P. 206.

A three days' notice of sale by publication is not reasonable notice to a stockholder who is known to reside in a remote part of another state. Lexington & W. C. R. Co. v. Staples (1855) 5 Gray, 820.

A declaration on August 15 of forfeiture of all stock on which assessments should remain unpaid the 20th of September following is held not unreasonable in the absence of any provision fixing the time of notice where immediate notice is required to be given of the declaration. Rutland & B. R. Co. v. Thrall (1863) 35 Vr. 536.

Proof of notice thirty days before sale is not sufficient. L. R. A.

cient where the statute requires thirty days' notice before order to sell. Lewey's Island R. Co. v. Bolton (1890) 48 Me. 451, 77 Am. Dec. 236.

Statutory provision for forfeiture on thirty days' neglect to pay after a notice specified in public papers must be strictly complied with and the right to enforce an unreasonable penalty against a delinquent stockholder must be tested by the letter of the statute. So where publication was prescribed in newspapers at two places, the failure to publish in one of them cannot be excused on the ground that publication of the other was sufficient. Louisville & E. Turnp. Road v. Meriwether (1844) 5 B. Mon. 18.

The rules of a mining partnership on cost-book principle providing power "to declare absolutely forfeited" all delinquent shares and a requirement of ten days' notice was not complied with by giving notice for an impossible day such as Monday the 9th of March, when the 9th fell on Friday. Watson v. Eales (1856) 23 Beav. 294, 3 Jur. N. S. 53, 26 L. J. Ch. 361.

III. Redemption or other remedy of stockholder.

Where failure to pay assessment was due to mistake, redemption of stock after mere declaration of forfeiture by trustees was allowed on full payment of principal and interest, there being no mode of enforcing the forfeiture expressly provided. Walker v. Ogden (1859) 1 Biss. 287.

Where shares had been forfeited without allowing the full market value, as the court held should have been allowed, a redemption was granted. Stubbs v. Lister (1841) 1 Younge & C. Ch. Cas. 81.

The fact that failure to pay a call on which a

Clarke v. Hart, 6 H. L. Cas. 649, was an application of the same principle in somewhat different circumstances. It was held that upon all the facts in the case there was an intentional abandonment of the enterprise by the plaintiff after a full knowledge of the forfeiture, and an opportunity to join in the further necessary expenditures to maintain the existence and business of the company. Rule v. Jewell, L. R. 18 Ch. Div. 660, was quite similar in its leading facts, being an absolute refusal to pay, not only previous calls, but subsequent necessary contributions to enable the business to be carried on; and the court held that both intentional abandonment and persistent laches and lying by to take chances, after full notice of forfeiture proceedings, were developed by the testimony, and they refused to restore the forfeited shares. But there are no such facts in the present case. The Metalline Land Company was not engaged in any mining or manufacturing business requiring constant contributions from its members to sustain either its existence or its business. The proceedings to forfeit the shares of the appellants were absolutely void for a fatal want of compliance with an essential prerequisite to any forfeiture. There was no lying by for chances while others were keeping the company alive by constant contributions which were essential to that end. There was no intentional abandonment of their interests in the enterprise, and no conscious laches, after full knowledge of the forfeiture proceedings. On the contrary, there was only an illegal and void forfeiture of their shares set up against their claim to a continued ownership of the shares which were originally their property, and which ownership had never been legally divested. This being their legal status, their original ownership continued, notwithstanding the declaration of forfeiture. That declaration was founded upon a default of which they had never been guilty, for there never was a time, thirty days after a notice to pay a call, published in two newspapers,—one in Philadelphia and one in Detroit,—at which they could have paid the sum demanded, or any sum. Such a time never arrived, because there never was such a publication. Hence they never were in default, and there was no power to forfeit their shares, and they remained the owners of their shares as fully and as lawfully, in all respects, after the declaration of forfeiture as before. They were not bound to take any notice of it, or to seek to have it set aside. They already held their shares, and they continued to hold them, and to be capable of asserting their ownership in any circumstances and for any purpose. They are not the actors in the present proceeding. They were the original owners of the shares in question, and if any other persons assert such ownership they must show it affirmatively, and obtain a judicial decree to that effect. This they cannot do by setting up a void declaration of forfeiture.

There is much discussion of other matters in the paper books, but we do not deem its consideration essential, in consequence of our views upon the leading subject which lies at the foundation of the entire contention. We are of opinion that the appellants are entitled to participation in the distribution to the extent of the shares held by them at the time of the call of 1878, and to that extent the decree of the learned court below must be reversed. The decree of the court below is reversed, at the cost of the appellees, and the record is remitted, with instructions to distribute the fund in the hands of the trustees in accordance with this opinion.

forfeiture resulted was due to ignorance of the call although the prescribed notice was sent to the shareholder's house while he was absent from town, and he had relied upon payment by his bankers who had been in the habit of paying his calls on receipt of notice for the shares of another person, but who at the time of this call no longer held those shares and received no notice, does not constitute ground for relief in equity against the forfeiture. The court says it cannot relieve against such accident and that the plaintiff ought to have taken all due pains to inform himself. Sparks v. Liverpool Waterworks Co. (1807) 13 Ves. Jr. 428.

A stipulation "that the failure to pay calls when due, time being of the essence of the stipulation, shall be and be taken to be a relinquishment by the holder of the shares on which payment has not been made, and the certificate and all interest thereunder in regard to such shares shall be null and void," is held in Weeks v. Silver Islet Consol. Min. Co. (1887) 23 Jones & S. 1, to make a contract clear, reasonable, and in all respects binding, which should be enforced without interference of a court of equity to sanction or sustain its violation.

A notice that a forfeiture of shares will be remitted on payment before the evening of May 10, with a postscript to the effect that the directors have no power to remit after the 11th, was held to be complied with where payment was tendered at the company's office on the afternoon of the 10th and on direction of a clerk to pay it to the company's account at a bank was taken to the bank five minutes after closing hours, where the bank clerk directed the money to be brought in the morning, which was done. The court considered that payment was actually tendered on the 10th, and also it would have been sufficient if not made until the 11th. Re Quebrada Co. (1873) 42 L. J. Ch. 277, 27 L. T. N. S. 843, 21 Week. Rep. 429.

Relief against a forfeiture of shares in a joint-stock company for working a mine because of refusal to pay calls was denied in Prendergast v. Turton (1841) 1 Younge & C. Ch. Cas. 96, 11 L. J. Ch. N. S. 22, 5 Jur. 1102, on the ground that the owners had acquiesced in the forfeiture of the shares for a long period.

And after a declaration of forfeiture of shares of a partner in a cost-book mine, it was held that even if it was not regular, a claim to the shares could not be asserted after lying by for more than six years. Rule v. Jewell (1881) L. R. 18 Ch. Div. 660, 29 Week. Rep. 755.

Delay in taking steps to reinstate delinquent stock for which opportunity was given on reasonable terms, where the forfeiture was justified by a stipulation that the certificate should be null and void on failure to pay calls when due, was held in Weeks v. Silver Islet Consol. Min. Co. (1887) 23 Jones & S. 1, to make such laches as to defeat any claim for judicial relief against the forfeiture.

After refusal to render forfeited shares on the ground that they were not worth it and acquiescing

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

Emanuel MANDEL, Appt.,
v.
SWAN LAND & CATTLE CO. (LIMITED).

Henry L. FRANK, Appt.,
v.
SAME.

Joseph E. FRIEND, Appt.,
v.
SAME.

(154 Ill. 177.)

1. The liability of stockholders in foreign corporations must be determined by the law of the state under which such corporations were created.
2. The liability of a stockholder to the corporation for calls made, though dependent upon the phraseology of the statute creating it, is contractual, and will ordinarily be enforced by the courts of another jurisdiction, unless a wrong or injury will be done to the citizens of such jurisdiction, or the policy of its laws will be contravened or impaired.
3. The general rule in the United States is that, while a corporation having the right under the statute creating it to declare a forfeiture of shares for nonpayment of calls may exercise an option to forfeit the stock or sue for the amount of the calls, it cannot forfeit the stock and afterwards sue at law for such amount.
4. A positive statutory provision that a corporation may not only forfeit stock for nonpayment of calls, but collect all calls made prior to the forfeiture, will control any principle adopted as a mere equitable rule.
5. A right of recovery by a foreign corporation, of calls made upon stock which has been forfeited for nonpayment of such calls, being in conflict with the current of legislation in this country, cannot depend on a by-law merely, but must exist in the act under which the company is incorporated.

6. A statute authorizing recovery after forfeiture of corporate stock, of all calls owing upon it at the time of forfeiture, does not authorize recovery of interest and expenses thereafter accruing.
7. The right of a corporation to recover in another jurisdiction the amount of calls made upon its stock does not depend upon any principle of comity, but upon the right to enforce a contract validly entered into.
8. The Illinois statute providing that foreign corporations doing business in the state shall be subject to the liabilities, restrictions, and duties imposed upon domestic corporations, and have no other or greater powers, does not relieve a citizen becoming a stockholder in a foreign corporation from a liability for calls made upon stock forfeited for nonpayment of such calls, imposed by the statute under which such corporation was organized, as the term "doing business" has no relation to the by-laws of the company, or its relations to its own members, or its resort to the Illinois courts to enforce such liability.
9. A corporation whose articles of association provide that the holders of shares for the time being, whatever the number issued or subscribed for, shall form the company, may make calls upon its stock, although the entire amount of stock has not been subscribed for or the shares allotted.
10. Secondary evidence of the books and papers of a corporation is inadmissible in its behalf, where the originals are under its control.

in the forfeiture until the shares became valuable, the right to redeem is lost. Sayre v. Citizens Gas Light & Heat Co. (1886) 69 Cal. 207.

But mere neglect to take action for a period short of the statute of limitations will not defeat a stockholder's remedy at law by action for conversion against an invalid forfeiture and sale of his stock. Ormsby v. Vermont Copper Min. Co. (1874) 56 N. Y. 623.

Under Cal. Civ. Code, section 339, requiring the first publication of delinquent sales of stock to be at least fifteen days prior to the sale, a sale on thirteen days' notice, made under valid assessments, will not be restrained by injunction, but under section 347 the delinquent stockholder may at any time within six months tender the amount of the assessment to the purchaser and bring action to recover the stock. Burnham v. San Francisco Fuse Mfg. Co. (1889) 76 Cal. 26.

No waiver of a right of action for conversion of stock by invalid proceedings to forfeit it was made by receiving a check for the surplus proceeds without knowledge of the failure to comply with the by-laws. Allen v. American Bldg. & Loan Assn. (1892) 49 Minn. 544.

After invalid forfeiture and sale of stock for default in assessments the remedy is by action for its recovery and not by an action for a specific undivided share of the property of the corporation. Smith v. Maine Boys Tunnel Co. (1861) 18 Cal. 111.

A corporation is liable in damages for forfeiting and selling shares on account of a default of one who has transferred them to the plaintiff by a lawful transfer which the company has neglected to make on the books. Catchpole v. Ambergate, N. & B. & E. Junction R. Co. (1853) 1 El. & Bl. 111, 7 Railway Cas. 221, 22 L. J. Q. B. 35, 17 Jur. 345.

The right to damages for irregular forfeiture of shares which is the only remedy provided in articles of association in case shares are forfeited irregularly, can be asserted by a shareholder against the company in liquidation where the forfeiture was declared without giving him notice for the time prescribed. The court denied the contention that the forfeiture must be held wholly invalid so as to exclude him from this remedy and leave him on the list of contributors. Re New Chile Gold Min. Co. (1890) 68 L. T. N. S. 344.

A decree against a foreign corporation to relieve from forfeiture of shares in opposition to the construction of the contract by the courts of the country where the corporation belongs is denied in Sudlow v. Dutch Rhenish R. Co. (1855) 21 Beav. 43.

A court has no jurisdiction to issue a writ of mandamus to a foreign corporation to compel the annulment of a forfeiture of stock. North State Copper & Gold Min. Co. v. Field (1896) 64 Md. 151.

If an assessment is lawful no injunction will be granted against forfeiture of shares for failure to pay it. Gorman v. Guardian Sav. Bank (1877) 4 Mo. App. 180.

An injunction against the forfeiture of shares may be granted where a resolution directing a call

11. Proof of papers, entries, and records of a private corporation in its possession cannot be made by the opinion or conclusion of a witness as to what is shown.
12. Entries of mailing letters and notices of calls upon corporate stock are mere memoranda to which the person making them may refer to refresh his recollection, and not a record which can be proved only by the originals or by certified copies.

(January 15, 1895.)

APPEALS by defendants from judgments of the Appellate Court, First District, affirming judgments of the Circuit Court for Cook County, in favor of plaintiff in actions brought to enforce payment of calls upon stock of the plaintiff corporation, to which defendants had subscribed. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Otis & Graves, for appellant:

No action can be maintained by a corporation to recover upon a call made upon its stock, after the stock itself has been forfeited by the corporation for nonpayment.

Small v. Herkimer Mfg. & Hydraulic Co. 2 N. Y. 330; Buffalo & N. Y. O. R. Co. v. Dudley, 14 N. Y. 336; Mills v. Stewart, 41 N. Y. 384; Taylor, Corp. § 546; 1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 124; Rutland & B. R. Co. v. Thrall, 85 Vt. 553; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, §§ 121, 134; Great Northern R. Co. v. Kennedy, 4 Exch. 417.

The power to sue and recover the amount of a call after forfeiture of the stock for nonpayment of that particular call was not given to the appellee by the statutes of Great Britain, or otherwise, and the articles of association neither can, nor properly construed do, confer any such power.

Rutland & B. R. Co. v. Thrall, supra.

The appellee being a foreign corporation, organized under the general statutes of Great Britain, can exercise no powers in this state except by comity, and only upon such terms and conditions as the people of Illinois may deem proper to impose. Nor can a foreign corporation exercise any right which is not conferred on a corporation created by our laws.

Santa Clara Female Academy v. Sullivan, 116 Ill. 384, 56 Am. Rep. 776; Granite State Provident Assn. v. Lloyd, 145 Ill. 620; Stevens v. Pratt, 101 Ill. 206; New Haven Horse Nail Co. v. Linden Spring Co. 142 Mass. 349; Hutchins v. New England Coal Min. Co. 4 Allen, 580; Jones v. Sisson, 6 Grav, 288; Penobscot & K. R. Co. v. Bartlett, 12 Grav, 244; Blackstone Mfg. Co. v. Blackstone, 13 Gray, 488; Halsey v. McLean, 12 Allen, 438, 90 Am. Dec. 157; Smith v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. of New York, 14 Allen, 336; Kansas & E. R. Constr. Co. v. Topeka, S. & W. R. Co. 135 Mass. 34; Rice v. Merrimack Hoisery Co. 56 N. H. 114; Ash v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 72 Md. 144; Richardson v. New York Cent. R. Co. 98 Mass. 85; Usher v. West Jersey R. Co. 4 L. R. A. 261, 126 Pa. 206; O'Reilly v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 6 L. R. A. 719, 16 R. I. 395; Hanna v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 41 Ill. App. 116; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Cragin, 71 Ill. 177.

No matter what construction may be given to the articles of association in this case by the on stock which is fully paid up threatens to enforce it by forfeiture. Moore v. New Jersey Lighterage Co. (1889) 3 N. Y. S. R. 213.

A forfeiture of stock constituting part of an illegal increase for default after payment in part defeats the right of a holder, although all the increased stock was subsequently retired by a resolution to "reduce" the stock to the original amount and bonds were issued to holders of such stock. Knowlton v. Congress & E. Spring Co. (1874) 57 N. Y. 513.

IV. Effect of forfeiture on personal liability of stockholder.

a. As to assessments.

It is said in the above case of MANDEL v. SWAN LAND & CATTLE CO. to be the general rule in this country that a corporation having the right to declare a forfeiture may have the option to do so or to collect the calls, but cannot forfeit the stock and afterwards sue at law, as the exercise of forfeiture would end the relation between the parties and exclude a resort to the other remedy; but adds that it has never been held that a right to do both cannot be given. Provisions authorizing recovery of the deficiency have in fact been frequent.

The general doctrine above stated has been declared in several cases saying in substance that a corporation cannot both forfeit shares of stock and sue for the amount due upon them. Macon & A. R. Co. v. Vason (1876) 57 Ga. 314; Lexington & O. R. Co. v. Bridges (1847) 7 B. Mon. 554, 46 Am. Dec. 523.

Also that after forfeiture of stock the corporation cannot recover for prior unpaid assessments even if it holds the stockholder's promissory note therefor. Ashton v. Burbank (1873) 2 Dill. 435.

Also that while an unsuccessful attempt to sell shares for the purpose of forfeiting them will not defeat personal liability for the assessments although the court says: "Had the shares been sold their right to sue the defendant would without doubt have been destroyed." Instone v. Frankfort Bridge Co. (1812) 2 Bibb, 576.

But it does not appear that in these cases there was any sale of the stock or any accounting to the owner for its value or anything except an absolute forfeiture. The true doctrine we believe to be expressed with proper limitations in the cases following to the effect that a stockholder cannot be sued for deficiency on his assessments after declaring his stock forfeited without any sale thereof. Rutland & B. R. Co. v. Thrall (1863) 35 Vt. 536.

Or that after the forfeiture of stock without any liability to account whatever the value of the property may have been, no action can be maintained for subscriptions or any part thereof. Small v. Herkimer Mfg. & Hydraulic Co. (1849) 2 N. Y. 330.

Also that the forfeiture of stock pending suit to recover the amount due thereon will constitute a perfect defense to the action if it was shown that the value of the stock forfeited is equal to the amount due, and if not, it will satisfy the debt in proportion to such value. Herkimer Mfg. & Hydraulic Co. v. Small (1839) 21 Wend. 273.

It is perfectly reasonable to hold that a sheer forfeiture of stock is inconsistent with a claim of personal liability for unpaid calls thereon, but it is not so reasonable to say that a sale of shares in the nature of a foreclosure sale to obtain what is due thereon should relieve the shareholder of liability for any deficiency.

So it has been held on principle without any express provision therefor that a personal liability for a deficiency after sale of forfeited stock remains. Carson v. Arctic Min. Co. (1853) 5 Mich. 238; Dexter & M. Pl. Road Co. v. Miller (1854) 3 Mich.

courts of Great Britain, where the operation was created, our courts will not enforce the claim in this case.

Santa Clara Female Academy v. Sullivan, supra.

If the right of action in this case is given by a statute of Great Britain, it is purely and simply an action to enforce the penal statutes and provisions of a foreign country, which no court will carry into effect and for which no claims of comity can be invoked.

Sherman v. Gassett, 9 Ill. 521; Discrecy v. Smith, 108 Ill. 879, 42 Am. Rep. 14; Katama Land Co. v. Jernegan, 126 Mass. 155; Mechanics Foundry & Mach. Co. v. Hall, 121 Mass. 272; New Haven Horse Nail Co. v. Linden Spring Co. supra; Erickson v. Nasmith, 4 Allen, 233; Halsey v. McLean, supra; Woods v. Wicks, 7 Lea, 40; Sayles v. Brown, 40 Fed. Rep. 8; Fourth Nat. Bank of New York City v. Francklyn, 120 U. S. 747, 30 L. ed. 825; Derrickson v. Smith, 27 N. J. L. 166; First Nat. Bank of Plymouth v. Price, 83 Md. 487, 3 Am. Rep. 204; O'Reilly v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 5 L. R. A. 364, 16 R. I. 388; Queenan v. Palmer, 117 Ill. 619.

Before any call can be enforced upon shares of stock in a corporation, it must be shown that the capital of the company has been all subscribed; of which there is absolutely no evidence in this record or outside of it.

Allman v. Havana, R. & E. R. Co. 88 Ill. 521; Temple v. Lemon, 112 Ill. 51; Beach, Corp. § 566; Bray v. Farwell, 81 N. Y. 600; Stoneham Branch R. Co. v. Gould, 2 Gray, 277; Fry v. Lexington & B. S. R. Co. 2 Met. (Ky.) 314.

91; Merrimac Min. Co. v. Bagley (1886) 14 Mich. 501.

And an action will lie for the balance due on calls after sale by executory process of forfeited stock and a purchase thereof by the corporation itself. Re Thomson's Succession (1894) 46 La. Ann. 1074.

The court says the judicial proceedings were by way of direct enforcement of the contract and not by way of forfeiture within the rule as to forfeitures.

The doctrine now generally repudiated that subscription to stock of a corporation does not imply any promise to pay assessments or calls thereon leads to the decision in Maine that charter power to make and collect assessments in the manner prescribed by by-laws does not authorize a by-law providing that the holder of shares which were forfeited for unpaid assessments shall be personally liable for a deficiency, as this is regarded as effecting a change of his contract. Kennebec & P. R. Co. v. Kendall (1860) 31 Me. 470.

The same court also decides: A by-law making the owner of delinquent shares which are forfeited liable for the deficiency due upon them is held unauthorized by authority to "make by-laws for regulating their affairs not repugnant to the law of the state," and even if such a by-law would be binding on an original shareholder on the ground that he had accepted it, his assignee of stock will not be bound thereby. Jay Bridge Corp. v. Woodman (1860) 31 Me. 373.

In Massachusetts following the same doctrine it is held that after a sale of the shares of a manufacturing company under Mass. Stat. 1870, chap. 224, §§ 27-29, no action for a deficiency can be sustained unless the subscriber had expressly promised to pay the amount assessed. Mechanics Foundry & Mach. Co. v. Hall (1876) 121 Mass. 272; Katama Land Co. v. Jernegan (1828) 126 Mass. 156.

37 L. R. A.

Mosses, Swift, Campbell, Jones & Martin, for appellee:

The right of action now exercised by plaintiff is expressly given by its articles of association and these articles are expressly warranted by the laws of Great Britain.

The forfeiture of shares discharges the liability to pay calls due before forfeiture only when the charter of the company contains no provision to the contrary.

Small v. Herkimer Mfg. & Hydraulic Co. 2 N. Y. 380; Rutland & B. R. Co. v. Thrall, 85 Vt. 558; Dawes' Case, 88 L. J. Ch. 512; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. pp. 9, 10, 18, §§ 124, 125, 874, 875; Roundtree v. Baker, 52 Ill. 241, 4 Am. Rep. 597; Beach, Priv. Corp. p. 1117; First Nat. Bank of Deadwood v. Gustin-Minerva Consol. Min. Co. 6 L. R. A. 676, 42 Minn. 327.

The statute of Illinois relating to foreign corporations has no bearing whatever upon any question in this case.

This action is in no sense an action to recover a penalty given by statute or otherwise.

Patterson v. Lynde, 112 Ill. 196; Fowler v. Lamson, 146 Ill. 472; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 2d ed. § 223; Queenan v. Palmer, 117 Ill. 619; Flaah v. Conn. 109 U. S. 371, 27 L. ed. 966.

It was not necessary in this case to allege or to prove that all of the capital stock of the plaintiff corporation had been subscribed for.

Ornamental Pyrographic Woodwork Co. Limited v. Brown, 2 Hurlst. & C. 63.

The plaintiff was entitled to the interest included in the judgment.

Stocken's Case, L. R. 5 Eq. 6; Faure Electric

These cases are distinguished by the court from those as to railroad companies on the ground that the railroad acts contain a distinct provision making a personal obligation to pay assessments Mass. Rev. Stat. chap. 89, § 53.

Where by the act of incorporation the right of forfeiture is given as an alternative of the right to enforce calls, a forfeiture of shares is held to preclude a subsequent right of action for the call. Edinburgh, L. & N. R. Co. v. Hebblewhite (1840) 6 Mees. & W. 707.

Under Maine Special Laws 1840, chap. 361, § 5, a delinquent stockholder is personally liable for a deficiency on the sale of forfeited stock. York & C. R. Co. v. Pratt (1855) 40 Me. 447.

Personal liability for a deficiency on a sale of forfeited stock is expressly provided by statute in Connecticut. Danbury & N. R. Co. v. Wilson (1853) 22 Conn. 435.

A declaration of forfeiture is not an alternative remedy under 8 & 9 Vict., chap. 16, and therefore does not defeat an action for the amount due, although when the shares are sold or converted into others the prior owner must be given credit for the proceeds or the benefit of the new security pro tanto. In this case the acts said the company might forfeit the shares "whether the company have sued for the amount of such call or not." Great Northern R. Co. v. Kennedy (1849) 4 Exch. 417, 7 Dowl. & L. 197.

There is no liability for a deficiency where notice was given by an auctioneer purporting to be by order of directors merely and did not comply with the statute requiring notice by the treasurer pursuant to the order of directors, and where the sale was not at auction as the statute requires. Portland, S. & P. R. Co. v. Graham (1846) 11 Met. 1.

Procuring substituted subscriptions to stock

Accumulator Co. v. Phillipart, 58 L. T. N. S. 525.

Phillips, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellee was a corporation organized in Scotland under the "Companies Act of 1862," of the United Kingdom, in which appellants became shareholders. The capital stock of the company was £800,000, divided into 80,000 shares of £10 each. The appellant Mandel became the owner of 880 shares. The appellant Henry L. Frank became the owner of 140 shares. Louis E. Frank was the owner of 395 shares, and Joseph E. Friend was the owner of 99 shares. On these shares calls had been made and paid amounting to the sum of £8 per share. On the 11th of October, 1887, a call was made of £1, 2s. per share by the directors, which not being paid, they, by a resolution of the board passed September 4, 1888, declared the stock forfeited.

On the 24th of March, 1890, the appellee instituted its actions of assumpsit in the circuit court of Cook county to recover from each of said several appellants the amount owing on their stock by reason of the calls so made, and filed its declarations setting up the foregoing facts; to which the defendants therein filed pleas of general issue and nul tiel corporation and on trial before the judge, a jury being waived, appellee recovered judgments. Whereupon appeals were prosecuted to the appellate court of the first district, where the several judgments were affirmed, and these appeals are now prosecuted to this court. The same questions of law are presented in the several cases. By stipulation certain portions of the acts of parliament of Great Britain comprising what is generally known as the "Companies Act of 1862" with its amendments were in evidence from which it appears that seven or more persons by subscribing their names to a memorandum of association and otherwise complying with the statute in respect of registration, may form an incorporated company with or without limited liability. The act contains the usual provisions prescribing the powers and duties of corporations, the manner in which they can be created, their business conducted, and how their affairs may be wound up and put into liquidation in case of insolvency.

By a schedule to this act known as "Table A," certain regulations for the management, government, and control of the business affairs of corporations organized under this law are given, which each corporation was at liberty to adopt or make other and different regulations in lieu thereof.

These regulations contained in "Table A" are substantially by-laws regulating the manner in which the corporate business may be conducted.

The appellee did not adopt the regulations in "Table A" but expressly provided they should not apply, and this they were authorized to do by the act.

The appellee introduced the evidence of sundry witnesses, by deposition, who testified in substance that the books of the company showed that the appellant Mandel was from other persons, filling up the stock to the maximum limit, waives the right of the corporation to sue the former holder of stock for deficiency after sale thereof under Mass. Gen. Stat., chap. 63, § 9, as the sale if valid would create additional stock which could not be done in this way. Athol & E. R. Co. v. Prescott (1872) 110 Mass. 218.

Failure to sell shares for want of bidders does not prevent recovering from the owner personally for the amount due under a statute authorizing the sale and a personal recovery from him on the deficiency. Grays v. Lynchburg & S. Turnp. Co. (1836) 4 Rand. (Va.) 578.

A forfeiture not confirmed at a meeting of the company is insufficient to exempt a shareholder from liability for calls where the right to forfeit or sue for calls is in the alternative, with a provision that no advantage of the forfeiture shall be taken until the declaration is confirmed at a general or special meeting of the company. London & B. R. Co. v. Fairclough (1841) 2 Mann. & G. 674; 2 Railway Cas. 544; 8 Scott, N. R. 68; Birmingham, B. & T. Junction R. Co. v. Looke (1841) 1 Q. B. 256; 2 Railway Cas. 307.

A provision that a member whose shares were forfeited should be liable to pay all calls owing upon them and interest, if any, thereon, was held to make the shareholder liable for interest on the call up to the time of forfeiture from the time the call was payable, but not upon a later call which did not become payable until after the forfeiture. Faure Electric Accumulator Co. v. Phillipart (1888) 58 L. T. N. S. 525.

Where a forfeiture of shares was made for default in payment of a prior call before a second call thereon became payable but after it was made, it was held that the second call was "owing" at the 57 L. R. A.

time of the forfeiture within the meaning of a provision in the articles for personal liability of the shareholder to pay all calls owing at the time of the forfeiture. Ibid.

The right of forfeiture under the general companies act being cumulative, and a special act under which a company was formed giving power to cancel any forfeited shares if the market price is insufficient to meet the arrears of calls, and issue new shares, it was held that such issue and sale of new shares in lieu of the canceled shares realizing more than the unpaid portion of the canceled shares did not defeat an action for calls, but that the original shareholder was entitled to the benefit of payments on the new shares. Inglis v. Great Northern R. Co. (1852) 1 Macq. H. L. Cas. 112, 16 Jur. 305.

Under articles providing for interest at 25 per cent on over-due calls, and also providing that the members should continue liable for calls due at the time of forfeiture of his shares, it was held that the continuation of liability was for the calls only and not for interest thereon. Stoken's Case (1868) L. R. 8 Ch. 412, 37 L. J. Ch. 230, 17 L. T. N. S. 554, 16 Week. Rep. 322, affirming L. R. 5 Eq. 8, 16 Week. Rep. 99, 37 L. J. Ch. 5, 17 L. T. N. S. 161.

A provision in the English companies act authorizing action for a deficiency after forfeiture which a company could adopt or reject, having been expressly rejected by an English company, which nevertheless adopted a by-law to substantially the same effect, it was held in the above case of MANDEL v. SWAN LAND & CATTLE CO. that the by-law could not be given effect as against a shareholder in this country, since it was in conflict with the general rule in this country. But that case holds that a resident stockholder in a foreign corporation would be subject to liability for such deficiency on the owner of three hundred and eighty shares of the capital stock of the company, of the par value of £10 per share, on which only £6 per share had been paid in, and that a call was made by the directors on the stock of the appellant, on the 11th day of October, 1887, of £1, 2s. per share, which was not paid; and that in September, 1888, the same was duly forfeited for nonpayment of the call, but the corporate books and records themselves were not offered in evidence on the trial.

The only indebtedness of the appellant to the company was for the call made upon the shares standing in his name, for nonpayment of which they were forfeited more than a year before the commencement of suit, and all previous calls had been paid by appellant. No attempt was made to show the amount realized by the company from forfeiture and re-sale of the stock of appellant, or in what manner it was disposed of, or its value, and the witness, Dun, the secretary, refused to answer cross-interrogatories seeking to ascertain what disposition of the forfeited shares had been made by the company, and how much it had realized from such re-sale.

Objections were duly interposed by the appellant to certain designated portions of the depositions, and the court was asked to suppress the same, on the ground that parol statements of the contents of the corporate books and records were offered in evidence, instead of producing the original books themselves, the minute book itself was not offered in evidence on the trial, though shown to be in the possession of appellee.

Appellant asked the court to hold propositions of law numbered one to eight inclusive, which was refused, and there was a finding and judgment for the appellee for the sum of twenty-five hundred and seventy dollars and sixty-one cents ($2,570.61), being the full amount of the call, with interest thereon at six per cent per annum, without any credit for the amount received by the company from the forfeiture and re-sale of the shares.

Motions for a new trial and in arrest of judgment having been overruled by the court, this appeal was prosecuted from the judgment. This suit is instituted by the company itself and the rights of creditors are not involved.

It is urged by appellant that no action can be maintained by a corporation to recover upon a call made upon its stockholders where for the same call the stock has been by resolution of the board of directors of the corporations declared forfeited for nonpayment of that call.

The appellee being a foreign corporation the general rule is that the liability of stockholders in such corporation must be determined by the law of the state which created it. The law of such foreign state cannot operate beyond its own territory, and its right to do business in this state or create relations between itself and citizens of this state as members exists by comity alone.

forfeited stock when imposed by statute of the country where the corporation was organized notwithstanding a provision of the Illinois statute that foreign companies doing business in the state shall be subject to the liabilities, restrictions, and duties imposed upon domestic corporations.

An action under Mass. Rev. Stat., chap. 99, § 53, for a deficiency, is subject to the defense that the defendant never became a stockholder because the condition of subscription was never performed; but such defense was held waived by demurrer in Troy & G. R. Co. v. Newton (1854) 1 Gray, 544.

An action for a deficiency after forfeiture of shares of stock under Mass. Rev. Stat., chap. 99, § 53, was upheld against the objection that the directors had not by vote fixed the number of shares, as it was held that the vote to close the subscription book did this. Lexington & W. C. R. Co. v. Chandler (1847) 13 Met. 311.

The assignee as well as the original subscriber is liable for the deficiency unpaid after the sale of forfeited shares. Merrimac Min. Co. v. Bagley (1886) 14 Mich. 501.

The right to sell shares and hold the owner liable for the deficiency is held in a Tennessee case to be lost by delay when not exercised until after successive calls including all that could be made, and after such remedy is lost by laches chancery cannot relieve the company. Stokes v. Lebanon & S. Turnp. Co. (1846) 6 Humph. 241.

Directly to the contrary it is held in Virginia that a statutory right to sell shares of stock and hold the owner liable for deficiency may be exercised after all assessments have become due and the stockholder become liable for the whole deficiency with interest on the installments. Brockenbrough v. James River & K. Canal Co. (1839) 1 Patton & H. (Va.) 84. This case was decided without 37 L. R. A.

any published opinion and without any appearance of counsel for the stockholder.

b. As to creditors.

A forfeiture of delinquent stock dissolves the holder's connection with the company and terminates his liability to creditors of the corporation, when it is subsequently declared insolvent. Macaulay v. Robinson (1866) 18 La. Ann. 619; Allen v. Montgomery R. Co. 11 Ala. 437.

This is true, although the debts were contracted before the forfeiture. Mills v. Stewart (1869) 41 N. Y. 384. But the court declares that if a forfeiture was made by collusion and fraud between the directors of the company and the stockholder, his liability would not cease.

As to creditors of a corporation a resolution authorizing stockholders to forfeit their shares on payment of a certain percentage is invalid, except so far as the creditors give their consent. Slee v. Bloom (1822) 19 Johns. 456, 10 Am. Dec. 273.

A resolution authorizing stockholders to submit to a forfeiture of shares on payment of 50 per cent, which is assented to by a creditor of the company, will release from liability to him those stockholders who comply with the provision with reasonable promptness, but will not be operative as to those who claim its benefits long afterwards when the condition of the corporation has become worse. Ibid.

An unlawful distribution of assets among stockholders does not work a forfeiture of their stock so as to preclude their individual liability to creditors of the company. Spear v. Crawford (1836) 14 Wend. 20, 28 Am. Dec. 513.

A declaration of forfeiture of shares for nonpayment of calls, made under an arrangement between the directors and the shareholder on payment by

The liability of a stockholder to the corporation for calls made has but slight analogy to a debt, but is a statutory liability the form and extent of which is dependent upon the particular phraseology of the statute creating the liability. It is not a penalty but a liability that is contractual and will ordinarily be enforced by the courts of all the states, unless where a wrong or injury will be done to the citizens of the state in which the calls are sought to be enforced, or the policy of the laws of such state will be contravened or impaired.

This rule is so uniformly held that the citation of authorities is unnecessary. The general rule in the states of this country is, where a corporation has a right under the statute creating it to declare a forfeiture of shares for nonpayment of calls, it may exercise its option to forfeit the stock or bring its action to collect the amount of the calls, but cannot forfeit the stock and afterward sue at law, as the exercise of the first option would end the relation between the parties and exclude a resort to the other. Small v. Herkimer Mfg. & Hydraulic Co. 2 N. Y. 330; Buffalo & N. Y. C. R. Co. v. Dudley, 14 N. Y. 336; Rutland & B. R. Co. v. Thrall, 35 Vt. 553.

But it has never been held that a right to do both cannot be given.

When the act of incorporation gives the right to declare a forfeiture and at the same time reserves to the company the right to collect all calls made prior to such declaration, it must be held that the positive enactment will control, and any principle adopted as a mere equitable rule must yield to such express provision. This corporation in its articles of association expressly provided that "the regulations contained in the table marked 'A' in the first schedule to 'The Companies Act of 1862,' shall not apply to the company." The table marked "A" in the first schedule to the Companies Act is practically a system for the government of a company organized under that act. Section 14 of the Act authorizes incorporators thereunder by their articles of association to adopt all or any of the provisions contained in the table marked "A" in the first schedule. Section 15 of the Act is as follows: "In the case of a company limited by shares, if the memorandum of association is not accompanied by articles of association or in so far as the articles do not exclude or modify the regulations contained in the table marked 'A', in the first schedule hereto, the last-mentioned regulations shall, so far as the same are applicable, be deemed to be the regulations of the company in the same manner and to the same extent, as if they had been inserted in articles of association, and the articles had been duly registered."

Section 17 of Table A. provides if a member fail to pay any call as made the directors may serve a notice on him requiring him to pay such call together with interest and expenses. Section 18 is as to the notice provided for in section 17. Section 19 provides for forfeiture for non-compliance with above notice, whilst section 20 provides that any him of a certain sum of money, was held on winding up the company twelve years after to be a fraud on the other shareholders and insufficient to relieve him from liability as a contributory. Stanhope's Case (1866) L. R. 1 Ch. 161, 13 Jur. N. S. 79, 35 L. J. Ch. 266, 14 Week. Rep. 266, 14 L. T. N. S. 468.

Forfeiture of shares made for his benefit was held insufficient to relieve the shareholder who took them under an invalid arrangement that he should not be liable to make payments on the shares, but merely to complete the necessary subscriptions and with the understanding that these should be got rid of to other persons. Ex parte Jones (1858) 27 L. J. Ch. 666, 4 Jur. N. S. 448.

But a compromise agreement adopted at a general meeting of the company offering dissatisfied shareholders the privilege, if accepted before a certain date, of having their shares forfeited on payment of a certain sum for nonpayment of the remainder of a call, was held, even if ultra vires, to be beyond impeachment on winding up the company twelve years later. Brotherhood's Case (1868) 31 Beav. 866, 8 Jur. N. S. 906, 10 Week. Rep. 706, 31 L. J. Ch. 361, affirmed by 4 De G. F. & J. 566, 8 Jur. N. S. 926, 7 L. T. N. S. 142.

To similar effect it was held in Belhaven's Case (1865) 11 Jur. N. S. 572, 12 L. T. N. S. 595, 3 De G. J. & S. 41, 34 L. J. Ch. 503, 13 Week. Rep. 849, that a compromise by this same company with Lord Belhaven, releasing him from further liability in respect to his shares on payment of £50, which was agreed to at a meeting of the shareholders, was sufficient to prevent his being put on the list of contributories on winding up the company several years later.

Yet where directors declared shares forfeited for nonpayment of part of a call under a resolution adopted at a meeting of the company, under which any shareholder might on acceptance within a certain time, submit to forfeiture after payment of a certain portion of the call, and the acceptance was made after that time, the forfeiture was held invalid on the ground that the directors had no power to allow him to accept after the expiration of the specified time. Stewart's Case (1866) L. R. 1 Ch. 511; Houldsworth v. Evans (1868) L. R. 3 H. L. 268, 37 L. J. Ch. 800, 19 L. T. N. S. 211.

And an arrangement between the directors of a company and some of the shareholders for the release of the latter on payment of a fixed sum of money and the cancellation of their shares, which was never sanctioned at a general meeting of the shareholders, was held insufficient to prevent those whose shares were canceled from being placed on the list of contributories, even though none of the creditors were such at the time of the cancellation of the shares. Spackman v. Evans (1866) L. R. 3 H. L. 171, 19 L. T. N. S. 161, 37 L. J. Ch. 763, affirming Spackman's Case, 11 Jur. N. S. 207, 34 L. J. Ch. 321, 13 Week. Rep. 479, 12 L. T. N. S. 130, which reversed 10 Jur. N. S. 911, 12 Week. Rep. 1123, 11 L. T. N. S. 13.

But where it appeared that the means of notice to all the shareholders of such an arrangement by the directors were sufficient to raise a clear presumption of knowledge and acquiescence, and the arrangement was left unimpeached by any one for a great many years, the forfeiture of the shares under such an arrangement was held sufficient to prevent putting the name of the former holder on the list of contributories. Evans v. Smallcombe (1868) L. R. 3 H. L. 249, 37 L. J. Ch. 793, 19 L. T. N. S. 207.

Forfeiture of shares under articles of association will not defeat the liability of the shareholder as a contributory on winding up the company within one year, under the statutory provision that "no past member shall be liable to contribute to the assets of the company if he has ceased to be a mem-share so forfeited shall be the property of the company. Section 21 is as follows: "Any member whose shares have been forfeited shall notwithstanding be liable to pay to the company all calls owing upon such shares at the time of forfeiture." Section 34, 35, 36, and 37 of the articles as adopted by this corporation are practically and substantially an adoption of sections 17, 18, 19, and 20 of Table A. of the first schedule to the Act of 1862, whilst in lieu of section 21 the following act of association is adopted as section 39:

Sec. 39. "Any member whose shares have been forfeited shall, notwithstanding, be liable to pay, and shall forthwith pay to the company all calls, installments, interest, and expenses owing upon or in respect of such shares at the time of the forfeiture, together with interest thereon from the time of forfeiture until payment at the rate of five per cent per annum, and the directors may enforce the payment thereof if they think fit."

No provisions of the act are pleaded or offered in evidence which authorize a recovery of calls after a declaration of forfeiture other than section 21 of Table A, and a right of recovery in such case being in conflict with the current of legislation here cannot depend on a by-law merely, but to be enforced must exist in the act authorizing the incorporation of the company.

The provisions of section 21 of the Act authorize a recovery after forfeiture of all calls owing upon such forfeited shares at the time of forfeiture. It has no provision authorizing a recovery for interest and expenses hereafter accruing. The by-laws adopted at section 39 if it depends for its existence upon some other provision of the "Companies Act of 1862," such provision should have been properly incorporated into the record. There is no provision that authorizes a recovery for calls, installments, interest and expenses, and a judgment for $2,570.61 on a call of £1, 2s. on 380 shares cannot be sustained even under section 21 of Table A.

Appellants further insist that appellee being a foreign corporation can exercise no rights except such as are conferred on a corporation created by a statute of this state.

Beach in his work on Private Corporations states the rule in reference to stockholders in foreign corporations as follows: "Where a person becomes a stockholder in a corporation organized under the laws of a foreign state, he must be held to contract with reference to all the laws of the state under which the corporation is organized, and which enter into its constitution; and the extent of his individual liability as a shareholder to the creditors of the company must be determined by the laws of that state, not because such laws are in force in the other state, but because he has voluntarily agreed to the terms of the company's constitution. It is equally clear upon both principle and authority, that this liability may be enforced by creditors wherever they can obtain jurisdiction of the necessary parties. This does not depend upon any principle of comity, but upon the right to enforce in another jurisdiction a contract validly entered into. The validity, inter-ber for a period of one year or upwards prior to the commencement of the winding up." Bridger's and Neill's Case (1869) L. R. 4 Ch. 206, 36 L. J. Ch. 201, 17 Week. Rep. 216, 19 L. T. N. S. 624; Creyke's Case (1869) L. R. 5 Ch. 63, 39 L. J. Ch. 124, 21 L. T. N. S. 572, 18 Week. Rep. 103.

After forfeiture for non-payment of calls on shares in a company which is wound up within a year, although a former member is not relieved from liability for calls owing at the time of forfeiture, yet he will not be placed on the list of contributories with present members in respect to those calls, and will be placed on the list of past members only when the liability of the present members is ascertained to be insufficient. Needham's Case (1867) L. R. 4 Eq. 135, 16 L. T. N. S. 472, 36 L. J. Ch. 665; Andrews' Case (1867) L. R. 4 Eq. 458, 18 L. J. Ch. 161, 37 L. J. Ch. 37, 17 L. T. N. S. 305, 16 Week. Rep. 113.

A forfeiture of delinquent shares declared when they were at a premium will prevent the company or the official liquidator from subsequently asserting its irregularity for the purpose of holding the shareholder liable as a contributory. Austin's Case (1871) 24 L. T. N. S. 932.

The liquidators of a company are denied power to cancel a forfeiture of shares which had been validly made before the winding up began, especially when the application was not in reality to cancel the forfeiture but to allow a substitution of shares in a new company to be formed. Dawes's Case (1868) L. R. 6 Eq. 222, 37 L. J. Ch. 901, 16 Week. Rep. 995.

The official manager of a company on winding up cannot have placed on the list of contributories the name of a person whose shares the company has forfeited as a penalty for non-payment of calls, even if creditors of the company might have a right to hold him liable. Webster's Case (1863) 32 L. J. Ch. 135, 11 Week. Rep. 226, 7 L. T. N. S. 618.

37 L. R. A.

A postponement of a former declaration of a call for the purpose of permitting a transfer to be made before the call, prevents the effect of such transfer to release the transferring shareholder from liability as a contributory on the winding up of the company which was begun within one year thereafter. Gilbert's Case (1870) L. R. 5 Ch. 559, 18 Week. Rep. 988, 23 L. T. N. S. 841, 39 L. J. Ch. 397.

A forfeiture of shares for non-payment of calls after the passing of a preliminary resolution to wind up the company, but before the confirmatory resolution, is held effectual in Dawes's Case, supra, on the ground that the commencement of the winding up dates from passage of the second resolution.

In case of a forfeiture of shares which was entirely regular and legal unless a prior conversion of shares from one form to another was not legal, the forfeiture was held valid where the shareholder had made no objection to the regularity of the proceedings but had asked a remission of the forfeiture, so that on winding up more than a year thereafter he was held not to be a contributory. King's Case (1867) L. R. 2 Ch. 714.

A declaration of forfeiture of the interest of one who has agreed to take share in a company on his refusal to execute the deed of settlement, is held sufficient to prevent him from being chargeable as a contributory, as he never was strictly a shareholder. Ex parte Beresford (1850) 2 Macn. & G. 197, 2 Hall & T. 983, 19 L. J. Ch. N. S. 332, 14 Jur. 655.

The mere fact that the name of one whose shares have been forfeited is not erased from the list of members is not sufficient to keep him on the list of contributories. Lyster's Case (1867) 36 L. J. Ch. 616, 15 Week. Rep. 1007, 16 L. T. N. S. 824.

A so-called forfeiture though nominally for non-payment of calls, which was in reality a mere machinery to enable the shareholder to get rid of his liability to the company, which he contested on the pretation, and effect of the act imposing the liability are determined by the law of the state creating the corporation." (sec. 148). And the author cites many authorities which sustain his statement of the rule. The statute of this state which provides that "foreign corporations doing business in this state shall be subject to all the liabilities, restrictions, and duties that may be imposed upon corporations of like character organized under the general laws of this state, and shall have no other or greater powers," does not prohibit a citizen of this state from becoming a stockholder in a foreign corporation, nor relieve him in any way from a contract liability resulting from his voluntary action in becoming such stockholder. The statute by the term "doing business" has reference to the business for which the corporation was organized, and not to the form of its by-laws with reference to its relations to its own members, or a resort to the courts of this state to recover a contract liability. The principle as announced and the rule as stated, in Stevens v. Pratt, 101 Ill. 206; Granite State Provident Assn. v. Lloyd, 145 Ill. 620; and Santa Clara Female Academy v. Sullivan, 116 Ill. 375, 56 Am. Rep. 776,—are not inconsistent with what is here said as in each of those cases active business was entered on of the character for which the corporation was organized. Appellee would not be doing business in this state by resorting to the courts here to enforce a contract liability, nor would the purchase of shares of stock by appellant of one holding such shares and their transfer on the books of the company in a foreign jurisdiction bring such company within this state doing business within the meaning of section 26 of the Act entitled "Corporations."

The contention of appellant that calls could not be made by this corporation until the entire amount of stock had been subscribed cannot be sustained as under the act under consideration it is provided by section 5 of the articles of association authorized by the act of parliament that "the registered holders of shares in the company for the time being, whatever the number issued or subscribed for shall be associated, and shall form the company; and the business of the company may be commenced as soon as the directors think fit."

Under this provision of the articles made in accordance with the act it is not a condition precedent to the right to make a call that all the stock must be subscribed for or the shares allotted. Buckley, Companiees Acts, 4th ed. 19; Ornamental Pyrographic Woodwork Co., Limited v. Brown, 2 Hurlst. & C. 63, 32 L. J. Exch. 190.

There is nothing in the articles of association which states the subscribers shall not be associated for the purpose of the company till a particular event happens, such as a subscription to or the allotment of a particular number of shares, as was the case in Pierce v. Jersey Water Works Co., Limited, L. R. 5 Exch. 209, and in North Stafford Steel Iron & Coal Co., Limited v. Ward, L. R. 3 Exch. 172.

It cannot be held a defense to an action for a call, here, that the capital is not fully subscribed or allotted. It was not error to refuse to hold as law the propositions submitted by appellant.

Previous to the commencement of the trial a motion was made by appellant to suppress and strike out certain portions of the answers of Finley Dun, Thomas Murray, George Milne, and John Reed, witnesses for appellee. The motion as to Dun's deposition was that in his answer to the 5th and 8th interrogatories he purported to give the contents of the register of members of the company, and the minutes of a meeting of the board ground of fraud, was held insufficient to relieve him on the winding up of the company, where although a resolution had been passed declaring the forfeiture his name had continued on the register. Gower's Case (1868) L. R. 6 Eq. 77, 16 Week. Rep. 751, 18 L. T. N. S. 282.

A declaration of forfeiture of the shares of all persons who had not signed a deed of settlement or attended the meeting of the company, which was made by the directors with the sanction of the shareholder at a general meeting, was held insufficient to discharge a person from liability as a contributory on the ground that the directors had no power to declare the forfeiture where there was no power of forfeiture whatever in the deed of the company. Ex parte Barton (1869) 28 L. J. Ch. N. S. 637, 5 Jur. N. S. 420, 4 DeG. & J. 43.

Constructing what is called a very irregular constitution of a company the court in Kelk's Case (1809) L. R. 9 Eq. 107, 18 Week. Rep. 271, 39 L. J. Ch. 231, decided that it provided for no personal liability of the shareholders to pay additional capital created by augmenting the shares, but provided merely for forfeiture in case of nonpayment, and where such forfeiture had been declared the company was denied the right to have the owners of the forfeited shares afterwards placed upon the list of contributories.

A notice sent to a delinquent that if he did not pay within twenty-one days his shares would be irremediably forfeited to the sole and exclusive use of the company, and that his interest in the same would finally cease, which was treated for three years thereafter as having effected a forfeiture, was held sufficient to prevent placing the shareholder on the list of contributories. Woolaston's Case (1859) 4 DeG. & J. 437, 5 Jur. N. S. 853, 28 L. J. Ch. 721, 7 Week. Rep. 645.

Without any declaration of forfeiture it was held that one who fails to pay the second instalment on shares, the certificate of which expressly stated that all rights therein should be forfeited on failure to pay that instalment, was not liable to be put on the list of contributories on winding up the company nearly two years afterwards. Ex parte Collum (1899) L. R. 9 Eq. 238, 18 Week. Rep. 245, 21 L. T. N. S. 350, 39 L. J. Ch. 59.

A deed of release and indemnity given to a shareholder on surrender of his shares was held in Hall's Case (1870) L. R. 5 Ch. 707, 39 L. J. Ch. 730, 18 Week. Rep. 1053, 23 L. T. N. S. 331, to be within a prohibition against a dealing by the directors in shares of the company and not an exercise of the power of forfeiture given them by articles.

But the cancellation of the shares of one who denies his liability on the ground that misrepresentations were made to him, which the directors agree to on payment of a certain call then due, was sustained as within the power of the directors to compromise disputes. Dixon v. Evans (1872) L. R. 5 H. L. 606, 42 L. J. Ch. 139.

Although articles of association provide that in of directors and a resolution adopted, and by his answer to the 7th interrogatory he purported to give copies of the books of account and original entries of the plaintiff, and because of his refusal to answer the 3d cross interrogatory. The objections to the depositions of Murray and Milne in their answers to the 7th interrogatory were based on substantially the same causes as were made to the answers of Dun to the 5th and 8th interrogatories, and the deposition of Reed was objected to for the reason that in his answer to the 8th interrogatory he was permitted to give what purports to the contents of the postage book by him referred to, etc.

The motion to suppress depositions was overruled and an objection to the answers made on trial, which objections were also overruled. By section 15 of chapter 57 of Rev. Stat. of Illinois: "The papers, entries, and records of any corporation or incorporated association may be proved by a copy thereof certified under the hand of the secretary, clerk, cashier, or other keeper of the same. If the corporation or incorporated association has a seal the same shall be affixed to such certificate." By section 18 of the same chapter it is provided that "any such papers, entries, records and ordinances may be proved by copies examined and sworn to by credible witnesses." In addition to the evidence authorized by the statute the original books would be admissible and in case of loss or destruction the contents might be proven and under certain circumstances where there is an omission to make any record on the subject parol evidence may be heard. Ratcliff v. Teters, 27 Ohio St. 66; Bank of United States v. Dandridge, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 64, 6 L. ed. 552.

The original books and the evidence provided for by sections 15 and 18 of the Statute are original evidence, and evidence of a secondary nature is not to be resorted to where there is in the possession of a party evidence of a higher and more satisfactory character. Proof of the papers, entries, and records of a private corporation in the possession of that corporation cannot be shown by an opinion or conclusion of a witness. The evidence must be primary original evidence. Certain parts of the depositions of Dun, Murray, and Milne should have been suppressed where they have stated a conclusion as to what is shown by the records.

The evidence of Reed was as to mailing notice and the entries as to his mailing letters, etc., is a mere memoranda to which he could refer to refresh his recollection and not a record of which copies must be made. It was not error to overrule the motion to suppress his deposition.

For the errors indicated, the judgment of the Appellate Court and Circuit Court of Cook County must be reversed and the cause remanded to the Circuit Court of Cook County for new trial.

Baker, J.: I dissent. I think that the judgment should be affirmed.

Rehearing denied.

the event of nonpayment "any share might thereupon be forfeited without any further act to be done by the company," and a shareholder had declared that he should submit to a forfeiture on certain shares, it was held that where the company had not declared a forfeiture of those shares but had forfeited shares of other persons, their intention to retain this shareholder on their list made him liable as a contributory. Biggs's Case (1865) L. R. 1 Eq. 309.

The forfeiture of shares for default in payment where the holder never executed the deed of settlement of the corporation was held in Ex parte Bailly (1850) 15 Jur. 29, 20 L. J. Ch. N. S. 145, to prevent putting him on the list of contributories.

B. Miscellaneous.

The amount paid in on stock which is forfeited is not converted by the forfeiture into profits to be divided as such. Gratz v. Redd (1842) 4 B. Mon. 178.

A corporation holding stock of its own or of another company as pledgee is not bound by implied agreement to pay assessments thereon in order to protect it from forfeiture. Southwestern Railroad Bank v. Douglas (1844) 2 Speers, L. 329.

A pledgee of shares whose debt has been paid but who buys them on a sale as delinquent while they are standing in his name, is liable therefor to the real owner. Freeman v. Harwood (1859) 49 Me. 195.

The burden of proving a valid sale of stock is on the party claiming title unless the sale where proof is made of general ownership of another person at a former time and that he had never received any notice of sale. Mitchell v. Vermont Copper Min. Co. (1876) 8 Jones & S. 408.

An agreement to release directors by forfeiture which the company refused to complete the court refused to compel specific performance of. Harris v. North Devon R. Co. (1855) 20 Beav. 384.

The right to cancel shares or surrender them on the request of the shareholder is not within the scope of this note and is not touched upon here except where it was attempted to be done by an apparent forfeiture, which was in fact collusive, or at least for the benefit of the shareholder and not in reality with intent to forfeit any of his rights.

The subject of forfeiture of policies, certificates, or other rights in a mutual benefit society is somewhat different from that of the forfeiture of shares of stock in a corporation, and is not here considered.

The forfeiture of interests in a building and loan association, whether represented by so-called shares of stock or not, is also sufficiently distinct to be treated by itself, and is omitted from this note.

B. A. R.

Francis B. PEABODY et al., Appts.,

Charles P. DEWEY et al.

(153 Ill. 657.)

An agreement by one employing another to procure a loan, to give notes and mortgage "in your usual form," does not make a provision of the latter's customary form for payment in gold a part of the contract, so as to exclude evidence that the employer had previously by like application procured loans upon notes and mortgages without such provision, as the expression as to form does not bind him to make payment upon unusual terms and conditions printed in such forms.

(October 29, 1894.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Appellate Court, First District, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for Cook County in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover the commission alleged to have been earned by plaintiffs in negotiating a loan for defendants. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Edwin Burritt Smith and James D. Andrews, for appellants:

The court erred in admitting evidence of two isolated and remote transactions to establish a course of dealing directly in conflict with the express terms of a written contract, such evidence only being admissible to explain, add to, or modify what is admitted to be a binding contract, and never to contradict its express terms.

Barnard v. Kellogg, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 388, 19 L. ed. 987; Gilbert v. McGinnis, 114 Ill. 28; Tulley v. Chicago, 108 U. S. 162, 26 L. ed. 377; Whart. Ev. § 961.

A fact which renders the existence or non-existence of any fact in issue probable by reason of its general resemblance thereto and not by reason of its being connected therewith, is deemed not to be relevant.

Stephen, Digest of Ev. art. 10, chap. 8; Gahagan v. Boston & L. R. Co. 1 Allen, 187, 79 Am. Dec. 724.

All writings to which reference is made in a written contract are parts thereof and binding upon those signing it, even if their terms are not known to them.

Horns Ins. Co. v. Favorite, 46 Ill. 263; Gallena & S. W. R. Co. v. Barrett, 95 Ill. 480; Black v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 111 Ill. 351, 53 Am. Rep. 628; Kennedy v. Ross, 25 Pa. 256; Clinton v. Hope Ins. Co. 45 N. Y. 460; Anson, Cont. 18, 19; Bishop, Cont. § 882; Broom, Legal Maxims, 678.

Parties dealing with a firm are bound by its usages, if notified of their existence, although they may not know the terms thereof, as it devolves upon them to acquaint themselves with such terms.

NOTE—While the above case turns directly upon a question of evidence, the effect of the words as to the "form" of notes and mortgages with respect to a provision for payment in gold is an interesting and novel question on which we think there are no precedents very closely applicable.

27 L. R. A.

Mills v. Bank of United States, 24 U. S. 11 Wheat. 431, 6 L. ed. 512; Fowler v. Brantley, 89 U. S. 14 Pet. 318, 10 L. ed. 478; Renner v. Bank of Columbia, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 582, 6 L. ed. 166.

A contract is not fraudulent or invalid merely because it binds a party to it, to something not intended by him.

Coffin v. Taylor, 16 Ill. 457; Wood v. Price, 48 Ill. 439; Nichols v. Mercer, 44 Ill. 250; Broadwell v. Broadwell, 6 Ill. 599.

Evidence that a party did not acquaint himself with the contents of a contract before signing it is not admissible unless coupled with proof of actual fraud by the adverse party.

Whart. Ev. §§ 1028, 1029, 1243; Pindar v. Resolute F. Ins. Co. 47 N. Y. 114; 1 Bigelow, Fr. 526; Linington v. Strong, 111 Ill. 152.

A written contract cannot be defeated on the ground of mistake, or that the minds of the parties did not meet, without proof of mutual mistake or of intentional fraud on the part of the party seeking its enforcement.

Broadwell v. Broadwell, supra; Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Long, 8 Ill. App. 463; Strong v. Linington, 8 Ill. App. 486; Linington v. Strong, 107 Ill. 295, and 11 Ill. 152; Black v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 111 Ill. 351, 53 Am. Rep. 628.

Messrs. Runyan & Runyan, for appellees:

Until the mind of the lender of the money, and the mind of the borrower of the money, meet and agree upon a proposition as to the loaning of the money and its payment, there can be no contract between the parties, and if no contract was entered into by these two, then the agent who undertook to bring the minds of the parties together failed to earn his money, and having failed to earn their money they are not entitled to recover in this case.

Where persons' attention has been called to a specific thing they have a right to presume that it means the same to-day that it did yesterday, and will mean the same to-morrow that it did six months ago, when their attention was not called to any change, and there was knowledge in the minds of the parties with whom they were dealing, that there had been one, and it was kept from them.

Pittsburg & S. Coal Co. v. Slack, 42 La. Ann. 107; Hogue v. Mackey, 44 Kan. 277; Wagner v. Eggleston, 49 Mich. 222; Brant v. Gallup, 5 Ill. App. 265; Smith v. Crawford, 81 Ill. 296; Young v. Farwell, 146 Ill. 466.

Wilkin, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of assumpsit by appellants against appellees, commenced in the circuit court of Cook county.

The declaration contained the common counts, and one special count. The only cause of action relied on is set forth in the special count, in which it is averred that, on the 23d day of July, 1890, the defendants made and delivered to the plaintiffs the following written agreement:

"We hereby engage your services to procure for us a loan of $250,000 for five years, with privileges of pre-payment as below stated, at six per cent interest per annum, payable half yearly, and principal and interest payable at such place as the lender may appoint.

"As security for such loan we will give a joint and several principal note and interest notes, and a mortgage, or trust deed (in your usual form) conveying in fee simple free of incumbrance, and with release of dower and homestead, the following described real estate, situated in the county of Cook and state of Illinois, to wit: . . . We will furnish a complete abstract of title of said premises, continued so as to show said mortgage or trust deed, which shall remain in your hands for the use of the lender until said loan is paid, and then to be delivered to us, our heirs or assigns. We will pay the fee for recording said mortgage or trust deed, and will pay you a commission of 2½ per cent on the amount of said loan for your services in negotiating same.

Chicago, July 28d, 1890.

"J. Nelson Vance, by C. P. Dewey, Atty.

"Charles P. Dewey, Applicant."

The count then concludes with an averment of performance of the agreement on the part of plaintiffs, in procuring the loan for the amount, and upon the terms therein stated, and that the defendants failed and refused to pay them the commission of 2½%, amounting to the sum of $6,250.

The defendants filed a plea of non-assumpsit, and the issue was tried by the court without a jury, and judgment entered against plaintiffs for costs.

The appellate court having affirmed that judgment, this appeal is prosecuted.

There is no disagreement between the parties as to the fact that the contract declared on was signed by Dewey for himself and Vance as shown by the writing, and that appellants soon thereafter negotiated a loan for the required amount.

Under date of August 6, 1890, they caused to be prepared, and presented to appellees for their signatures and acknowledgment, one principal note for $250,000 and several interest coupons, together with a trust deed securing the payment of the same.

Each of these notes was on a blank form, in which was printed due, "in the gold coin of the United States, of the present standard of weight and fineness."

The trust deed was also on a blank form, in which was printed a description of the notes as above.

Appellees objected to the "gold coin clause" as it is termed, and on that ground alone refused to execute the notes and trust deed.

Plaintiffs insisting that they conformed to the requirements of the agreement contained in the application, refused to furnish the loan on other terms, and it was therefore never made.

Appellants proved on the trial that, on July 28, 1890, and for about nine months prior thereto, the only blank forms of notes and trust deeds used by them for securing loans were like those filled out and presented to the defendants, containing the "gold coin clause," and they insist that the words of the application "as security for such loan, we will give a joint and several principal note, and interest notes, and a mortgage or trust deed (in your usual form) conveying, etc.," was an agreement to give notes and mortgage or trust deed, providing for payment "in gold coin of the United States of the present standard weight and fineness."

Appellees were allowed to prove over objection that, formerly, and for several years, appellants had used forms without the "gold coin clause;" that on two or three occasions in the years 1885 and 1886, Dewey made loans from them signing applications precisely like the one in question, and executing notes and mortgages therefor in the forms then used, making the last payment thereon to appellants by bank check. Also, that he examined two mortgages executed upon their forms, about two years prior to this application.

On these facts appellees insist that, when Dewey signed the application he understood and was justifiable in understanding that the words meant no more than that the notes were to be payable in the usual way, and so secured by a mortgage or trust deed.

The only question of law raised upon the record is, whether the evidence objected to was competent. It is first said it was inadmissible for want of a sworn plea, denying the execution of the agreement sued on. This is so clearly a misapprehension of the defense relied upon that attention need only be called to the fact that the defendants do not deny the making of the contract as it is set out in the declaration, but insist that it does not bear the construction placed upon it by the plaintiff.

That defense could properly be made under the general issue.

The objection to the testimony on the merits of the case is based on the assumption that, by the use of the words, "in your usual form," the "gold coin clause" in their blank notes and trust deeds became a part of the written application, thereby making it an agreement by the defendants to give notes payable in gold, etc., and parol testimony could not be received to give it a different meaning. The error in the position consists in treating the expression, "in your usual form" as being of itself sufficient to import into the contract the "gold coin clause," in the blank forms. The agreement, considered as a whole, bears no such construction. The mere fact that the applicants agreed to give a mortgage, or trust deed in a particular form did not of itself bind them to make payments upon unusual terms and conditions, though printed in those forms.

The application is for "a loan of $250,000 for five years . . . at 6% interest per annum, payable half yearly, and principal and interest payable at such place as the lender may appoint." This clearly means, payable in any money which could be legally offered for that purpose. To say that by agreeing to give notes, and mortgage or trust deed in the other party's usual form to secure them, they bound themselves to pay in gold coin of the United States, etc., because that unusual condition was printed in those forms, but unknown to them, is most unreasonable and can find no support in the law of contracts.

Any one signing this application would reasonably understand the words in parentheses to refer to the form of the mortgage, or trust deed, and not to the particular kind of money in which the notes were to be payable. In the argument, counsel for appellants treat these words as synonymous with "upon the terms and conditions set forth in your usual form." And they liken it to cases in which a written contract refers to, and makes the terms and conditions of another instrument a part of it. Manifestly there is no analogy between that class of cases and this.

It is undoubtedly the duty of a party to acquaint himself with the terms of a contract to which he is a party before he enters into it, and if other instruments or agreements are made a part of the contract he is bound to know the terms and conditions of such instrument or agreement, but as seen, no such agreement is here shown. In our view of this record before the plaintiff below could recover the burden was on them to show by proof other than the written agreement, and forms used by them at the time that the defendants, or Dewey, who signed the application, knew that their forms contained a provision for payments in a particular kind of money, and entered into the agreement with that understanding.

In other words, their own proof failed to make a case, and even if the testimony offered by the defendants had been incompetent, no injury resulted to them by its introduction.

Leaving all that evidence out of the case, the judgment of the circuit court was clearly right.

The testimony objected to was, in view of the case made by the plaintiffs, unnecessary to the defense, but it tended to support the proper construction of the agreement, viz., that the parties signing it are conclusively presumed to have intended by its mere execution to bind themselves to give notes and mortgage to secure the repayment of the money borrowed, in a particular kind of money.

We entertain no doubt as to the correctness of the judgment below.

The judgment of the Appellate Court will be affirmed.

Rehearing denied.

Francis W. HOLBROOK, Receiver, etc., App't.,
v.

J. W. FORD.

(153 Ill. 632.)

1. The rule that a foreign receiver will not be allowed a preference over a

NOTE.—For the whole subject of preferences as between attaching creditors and foreign assignees in insolvency, see note to Long v. Forrest (Pa.) 23 L. R. A. 83.
27 L. R. A.

resident creditor against the assets of an insolvent debtor does not apply to a receiver appointed by the courts of the state and under its laws, in a suit instituted by a nonresident creditor.

2. Previous knowledge on the part of one attaching property in another state in violation of the rights of a receiver, of the appointment of the receiver or of the insolvency of the debtor, is necessary to cause the court to enjoin the suit or commit the plaintiff for contempt.

3. A receiver of the property of a foreign corporation takes no title to debts due it from debtors in another state, although in the ordinary course of business of the corporation the debts would have been payable in the state of his appointment, as the locus of the debt follows the domicile of the owner, and the domicile of a corporation is in the state of its creation.

4. No lien is acquired upon debts due a foreign corporation from residents of a state other than that in which a creditor's bill is brought against such corporation, where there is no service of process upon it.

5. The contempt of a resident creditor of a foreign corporation in attaching in another state debts due such corporation after the appointment of a receiver, and in refusing to dismiss such attachment suits, is waived by the voluntary appearance of such receiver in the attachment suits.

6. Interference with the property of a corporation of which a receiver has been appointed by attaching it is a civil contempt.

7. A court of equity asked to proceed as for a contempt against a creditor who seeks to reach by attachment or garnishment debts due to an insolvent debtor by persons residing out of the state, may inquire which of the parties has a paramount right or superior equity to these debts.

(October 22, 1894.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Appellate Court, First District, reversing an order of the Superior Court for Cook County inflicting punishment upon defendant for contempt in instituting attachment proceedings against property which had been placed in plaintiff's possession as receiver.
Affirmed.

Statement by Magruder, J.:

This is an appeal from a judgment of the appellate court reversing an order or decree of the superior court of Cook county, finding appellee guilty of contempt of court and directing him to be attached and arrested and imprisoned in the county jail, until he should dismiss certain attachment proceedings begun by him in the states of Nebraska and Missouri, as hereinafter stated.

The material facts are as follows:

Charles Palmer, a resident of New York, obtained a judgment for $20,013.75 on December 7, 1892, in said superior court against the Powerville Felt Roofing Company, Limited, a corporation organized under the laws of the state of New York. After execution issued and returned unsatisfied, Palmer on said 7th day of December filed a creditors' bill upon said judgment in said superior court; and on the same day said court appointed the appellant receiver of the books and accounts receivable, notes receivable, debts due and all choses in action of said defendant corporation, or held in trust for it, or in which it had any beneficial interest, with the usual powers and duties of a receiver. Among the accounts due to the defendant corporation were two claims against two firms in Nebraska, and one claim against a manufacturing company in Missouri. The appellee, who is a resident of Lake county, Illinois, but is and has been, for a number of years, engaged in business in Chicago, Cook county, Illinois, being a creditor for about $15,000 of said defendant corporation, commenced attachment proceedings on the 17th and 19th days of December, 1892, against said defendant corporation in the courts of Nebraska and Missouri and garnisheed the firms and company in those states who were debtors of said corporation.

For rights of receiver in property beyond the jurisdiction of appointment, see note to Gilman v. Hudson River Boot & Shoe Mfg. Co. (Wis.) 23 L. R. A. 52.

On January 7, 1893, the appellant, Holbrook, filed his petition in said superior court in said creditor's bill suit, wherein he had been appointed receiver, setting up his appointment; the debts due to the defendant corporation in Nebraska and Missouri; the commencement and pendency of the attachment and garnishee proceedings by appellee, Ford; that, on December 9, 1892, he had mailed notice to said debtors of his right as receiver to collect the amounts due from them; that on December 30, 1892, he wrote to Ford a letter stating his claim as receiver to said Nebraska and Missouri accounts, and requesting him to withdraw his suits; and that said Ford by attaching and garnisheeing said claims was interfering with property belonging to the receiver, etc. Said petition prayed for an order on Ford to show cause why he should not be attached for contempt. The order was entered on the same day. To this petition Ford filed an answer, and the receiver filed eight exceptions to the answer. All these exceptions were sustained by the superior court except one. Ford elected to stand by his answer; and, the cause coming on to be heard upon the petition of the receiver, answer, replication thereto, the original bill, the order appointing the receiver, etc., the court, on February 7, 1893, entered the order or decree committing said Ford for contempt, as above stated.

The defendant corporation, the Powerville Felt Roofing Company, Limited, had its principal office in New York city, and also a branch office and manufacturing plant in New Jersey; and had property and assets in a number of states, especially in New York and Minnesota. Prior to November 25, 1892, it had maintained a branch office in Chicago, where a part of its business had been transacted, and books of account had been kept. On that day it ceased doing business in Illinois, and its officers turned over its books to said Holbrook, an accountant to collect the accounts. Before December 26, 1892, in a proceeding against the defendant corporation which was insolvent, begun in New York, a man named Jowitt was appointed receiver, and was acting as such when the present bill was filed. On November 28, 1892, in a proceeding by a stockholder in New Jersey, the said Jowitt was also appointed receiver of the defendant corporation by a chancery court in that state on December 6, 1892. On November 25, 1892, William H. Eberts, the president of the defendant corporation and his brother, residents of Detroit, Michigan, entered up a judgment by confession for $81,000 against said defendant corporation and caused execution thereunder to be levied upon all of its tangible property in Cook county, Illinois; and on December 7, 1892, one Judson and other creditors of the corporation in Illinois filed a bill in the circuit court of Cook county to set aside said Eberts' judgment as fraudulent and to enjoin the sheriff from selling the property levied upon, in which proceeding the Chicago Title & Trust Company, an Illinois corporation, was on December 13, 1892, appointed receiver by said circuit court, and has possession of all the assets levied upon by said sheriff.

Although a letter was sent to Ford, as above stated, on December 30, 1892, yet Ford did not actually receive notice until January 6, 1893, that the receivers claimed the right to collect said debts under his appointment or requested the withdrawal of said suits and the dismissal of said garnishee proceedings.

On December 30, 1892, the receiver, Holbrook, appeared in the Nebraska courts and moved to be made a party defendant to the suits there pending between Ford, plaintiff, and the said Powerville Felt Roofing Company, Limited, defendant, and the following order was therein entered: "Upon application made by Francis W. Holbrook, receiver, it is hereby ordered and decreed that Francis W. Holbrook, receiver of Powerville Felt Roofing Company, Limited, appointed by the superior court of Cook county, Illinois, be and is hereby made party defendant in the above action, with power to appear and assert rights in said action, to which plaintiff excepts.

The note upon which the judgment in favor of Palmer was entered, was executed on November 25, 1892, by Francis J. Palmer, as treasurer of the defendant corporation, and who was the son of said Charles Palmer.

Messrs. Flower, Smith & Musgrave, for appellant:

This case is not distinguishable from the case of Sercomb v. Catlin, 128 Ill. 556.

Although the Powerville Felt Roofing Company, Limited, was a foreign corporation, it had a branch office and did business in Illinois, and submitted itself to the laws of this state, at least so far as its transactions in this state were concerned. The property in question, for the interference with which Ford was found in contempt, arose out of transactions of the company in this state, and belonged in this state.

These accounts were subject to attachment, or could be reached by a creditor's bill in Illinois.

Harvey v. Great Northern R. Co. 17 L. R. A. 84, 50 Minn. 405; Green v. VanBuskirk, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 189, 19 L. ed. 109; Burlington & N. R. R. Co. v. Thompson, 31 Kan.

180, 47 Am. Rep. 497; Mooney v. Union Pac. R. Co. 60 Iowa, 346; Roche v. Rhode Island Ins. Asso. 2 Ill. App. 860; Rhawn v. Pearce, 110 Ill. 350, 51 Am. Rep. 691; Whart. Confil. L. 1st ed. § 361.

The situs of these debts was at the place where they were payable.

Whart. Confil. L. 1st ed. § 365.

The domicil of a corporation, as well as the situs of a debt, is to be determined by reference to the matter under consideration and the circumstances of the case. A corporation for many purposes may have more than one domicil.

Atty-Gen. v. Bay State Min. Co. 99 Mass. 143, 96 Am. Dec. 717; Ricker v. American Loan & T. Co. 140 Mass. 346; Glaize v. South Carolina R. Co. 1 Strobb. L. 70; Carron Iron Co. v. Maclaren, 5 H. L. Cas. 416.

A corporation may acquire a domicil in a foreign state by doing business there.

Smith v. Pilot Min. Co. 47 Mo. App. 409; Murfree, Foreign Corp. § 383; Dacey, Domicil, 110.

A receiver is not an agent or representative of either party to an action, but is uniformly regarded as an officer of the court, and he has only such power as the court gives him.

High, Receivers, §§ 1, 2; Hooper v. Winston, 24 Ill. 353.

And before he can intervene in a foreign jurisdiction, he must obtain authority of the court to do so.

Screen v. Clark, 48 Ga. 41; High, Receivers, 208; Beach, Mod. Eq. Jur. § 742; Battle v. Davis, 66 N. C. 252; Green v. Winter, 1 Johns. Ch. 60, 1 L. ed. 60, 7 Am. Dec. 475; Tracy v. First Nat. Bank of Selma, 37 N. Y. 523; Barton v. Barbour, 104 U. S. 126, 26 L. ed. 672; Davis v. Ladoga Oremery Co. 128 Ind. 322.

Mr. C. B. Sampson, for appellee:

The court could not legally appoint a receiver of the accounts and notes receivable, debts due and all choses in action, without regard to where they were situated, of a corporation organized under the laws of another state, and there engaged in business, such corporation not being then engaged in transacting or conducting any of its business in this state, and when none of its officers or agents were residing in or engaged in business within this state.

Redmond v. Hoge, 8 Hun, 171; Stettauer v. White, 93 Ill. 72; 20 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 184.

The receiver has submitted himself to the jurisdiction of a foreign tribunal, and that tribunal has now complete jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter in controversy. He has a standing in court and can have presented and litigated whatever rights he has.

United States Exp. Co. v. Smith, 85 Ill. App. 98.

Sereomb's Case, 128 Ill. 556, is not authority for the doctrine that the appointment of a receiver operates ipso facto as a restraint upon domestic creditors from pursuing the assets of the insolvent, which are beyond the jurisdiction of the appointing court.

Ibid.

The commencement and prosecution of the suits was not therefore ipso facto a contempt of the superior court.
37 L. R. A.

Smith v. United States Exp. Co. 185 Ill. 279.

The rights of a receiver appointed by one of our courts are no more sacred, nor should be entitled to greater protection or be more jealously guarded, than the rights of a private citizen of this state.

Hurd v. Elizabeth, 41 N. J. L. 1.

Magruder, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is claimed that the decree of the superior court is erroneous, because it inures to the benefit of Palmer, the nonresident complainant in the creditor's bill, rather than to the benefit of Ford, the attaching creditor in the foreign states, who is a resident of the state of Illinois. Where the controversy is between a foreign receiver, assignee, or trustee, and an attaching creditor who resides in the state where the attachment proceeding is instituted, the courts of the latter state will protect its own citizen. This doctrine proceeds upon the ground that such an official, appointed under the laws of one state, has no extraterritorial right of action except as a matter of comity, and that, as against its own citizens, no state will extend its comity to a receiver, assignee, or trustee appointed under the laws of another state.

In Hoyer v. Alexander, 108 Ill. 385, a voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors, executed by a resident of Missouri in that state and under its laws, and conveying property in Illinois was held not to be operative to convey the title, as against creditors resident in Illinois suing by attachment. The contest there was between an attaching creditor resident here, and an assignee under a foreign assignment.

In Rhawn v. Pearce, 110 Ill. 350, 51 Am. Rep. 691, where creditors residing in Pennsylvania brought an attachment suit in Illinois against their debtor also residing in Pennsylvania, and garnished a debt due to said debtor from a firm in Illinois, and trustees, residing in Pennsylvania and appointed by a court in that state and vested by a statute in that state with the title to said debtor's estate, interpleaded in the garnishment proceeding and claimed the property, it was held that the statutory title of the trustees was inoperative as against the attaching creditors, and that the transfer to the trustees, being by mere operation of the Pennsylvania statute, could not have any extraterritorial effect, so as to be operative in this state, either against our own citizens, or the citizens of other states. There, the contest was between a foreign statutory trustee without any conveyance by the owner of the property, and a foreign attaching creditor.

In May v. First Nat. Bank of Attleboro, 122 Ill. 551, a New York firm made an assignment for the benefit of creditors executed in conformity with our statute for the conveyance of real estate, and conveying land in Cook county, Illinois, and recorded in the recorder's office of that county on July 28, 1884; on August 22, 1884, a bank in Massachusetts commenced an attachment suit against said firm in Cook county, and levied the writ upon said land; the assignee interpleaded and set up the deed of assignment; and it was held that the deed of assignment was valid as against the Massachusetts creditor, it not being in contravention of our laws or public policy. There, the contest was between an assignee in a voluntary assignment executed by a nonresident debtor, and a foreign attaching creditor. To the same effect is Juilliard v. May, 180 Ill. 87.

In Woodward v. Brooks, 128 Ill. 222, 3 L. R. A. 703, creditors living in Pennsylvania brought attachment in Illinois against their debtor who also lived in Pennsylvania and garnished money in Illinois due to said debtor; before the attachment the debtor had made a voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors valid under the laws of Pennsylvania, and had recorded it in that state; the assignee interpleaded claiming the money in the garnishee's hands; and it was held that, "as a voluntary foreign assignment, valid in the state where made, is enforced in this state as a matter of comity, our courts will not enforce it to the prejudice of our citizens who may have demands against the assignor; . . . but for all other purposes, and between citizens of the state where the assignment was made, if valid by the lex loci, it will be carried into effect by the courts of this state." There, the contest was between a foreign assignee, and attaching creditors resident in the same state with the assignor and where the assignment was made.

In the recent case of Townsend v. Coze, 151 Ill. 63, the controversy was between foreign creditors attaching in this state the property of a foreign corporation, and the assignee in a foreign assignment which was not voluntary, but statutory; and it was held that such an assignment was not operative in this state as against the attaching creditors.

In the case at bar, there is no controversy between any foreign receiver or assignee on the one side, and a domestic creditor on the other. The receiver, here seeking to stop the prosecution of the suits in Nebraska and Missouri by a creditor living in Illinois, is an Illinois receiver appointed by an Illinois court in a proceeding pending in Illinois. It is true that Palmer is a resident of New York, but he brought suit and obtained judgment in Illinois, and filed his bill and procured the appointment of a receiver here. But nonresident creditors have the same right to pursue the remedies prescribed by our laws for the collection of debts as resident creditors have. "Once properly in court and accepted as a suitor, neither the law, nor court administering the law, will admit any distinction between the citizen of its own state and that of another." Hibernia Nat. Bank v. Lacombe, 84 N. Y. 867, 38 Am. Rep. 518. A foreign receiver holding his office by operation of a foreign law will not be allowed to maintain a right of action against the assets of an insolvent debtor in this state as against a creditor resident in this state; but no such restriction applies to a receiver appointed by the courts of this state and under its laws, even though such receiver is appointed in a suit instituted by a nonresident creditor.

It is sought to distinguish the present case from Sercomb v. Catlin, 128 Ill. 556, upon the alleged ground that, there, the complainants in the creditor's bill in which the receiver was appointed were either residents of Illinois, or are not shown to have been nonresidents of this state, while here the complainant is a nonresident. We do not think that any such distinction can be drawn, because the residence of the complainant is immaterial where the receiver is the officer of a court in this state.

Nor can any distinction be fairly drawn between this case and the Sercomb Case, on the ground that Sercomb, the party enjoined from prosecuting the attachment suit in the District of Columbia, was the representative of a foreign corporation, while here Ford, the creditor enjoined from prosecuting the foreign attachments, is a resident of Illinois. The right of a court of equity to restrain the prosecution of a suit in another state is founded upon the fact that the court is vested with authority over persons within the limits of its jurisdiction and amenable to its process. Here, Ford is a resident of Illinois doing business in Chicago. In the Sercomb Case, Sercomb, though the agent of a Connecticut corporation, lived in Illinois, was the business manager of the corporation here, began and controlled the attachment suit in Washington, and was amenable to process in this state. Dehon v. Foster, 4 Allen, 545; Cole v. Cunningham, 188 U. S. 107, 33 L. ed. 589.

But there are several respects in which the facts here differ from those in the Sercomb Case. In the first place, the creditor in that case, who instituted the attachment proceeding in the foreign jurisdiction, had full knowledge, before he did so, of the appointment of the receiver in the creditor's suit in Illinois. Here, although the receiver was appointed ten days before Ford began his attachment proceedings in the foreign jurisdictions, yet Ford had no notice or knowledge of such appointment when he garnished the debts due the judgment debtor in Nebraska and Missouri. Such previous knowledge of the appointment of the receiver, or of the insolvency of the principal debtor, has been deemed material in those cases where courts have enjoined the prosecution of foreign suits, or have committed the creditors so prosecuting them for contempt. Dehon v. Foster, supra; Chafes v. Quindick Co. 18 R. I. 442; Vermont & C. R. Co. v. Vermont Cent. R. Co. 46 Vt. 792.

In the second place, the principal debtor in the present case is a foreign corporation. A court in one state may appoint a receiver for a corporation organized in another state and doing business within its own territory and having property there. This may be done, although the courts in the home state of the corporation may have already placed its affairs in the hands of a receiver. De Bemer v. Drew, 57 Barb. 488; National Trust Co. of New York v. Miller, 83 N. J. Eq. 155; Hunt v. Columbian Ins. Co. 55 Me. 290, 92

Am. Dec. 592; Life Asso. of America v. Fassett, 102 Ill. 815. The receiver appointed in the foreign state will be regarded as ancillary or auxiliary to the receiver appointed in the state to which the corporation owes its creation. 8 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 408. Hence, we do not consider the fact that receivers were appointed in New York and New Jersey for the Powerville Felt Roofing Company, Limited, the corporation defendant in the present case, as in any way restricting the right of the courts in this state to appoint a receiver for such defendant, if the other necessary conditions to the appointment of such receiver existed here.

The general rule is, that a court of equity will not appoint a receiver for a foreign corporation, where such corporation has no property in the state of the appointing court, and has not appeared or been served with process in the proceeding in which the appointment of the receiver is applied for, and where none of the officers or agents controlling or representing the corporation reside or are to be found in the state of the appointing court. The object of appointing a receiver for a foreign corporation is to preserve its property and effects for the benefit of creditors and shareholders. Wait, Insolvent Corp. § 188; 8 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 408; Life Asso. of America v. Fassett, supra; Redmond v. Hope, 3 Hun, 171; National Trust Co. of New York v. Miller, supra; Shaw v. Shore, 5 L. J. Ch. N. S. 79; Stafford v. American Mills Co. 18 R. I. 810; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Crane, 102 Ill. 249, 40 Am. Rep. 581.

In the case at bar, it appears that all the tangible property of the Powerville Felt Roofing Company, Limited, in Cook county Illinois, was taken by the sheriff under the Ebert's judgment and is now in the hands of the Chicago Title & Trust Company a receiver appointed in another proceeding; and that the company ceased doing business in this state on November 25, 1892, and that, at the time this creditor's bill was filed, no officer, agent, or employé of said company resided or had any place of business in this state. It furthermore appears from an examination of the record, that the receiver was appointed upon the same day on which the creditor's bill was filed; and that the roofing company, the judgment debtor, was not served with process, nor did it enter its appearance in the cause, either before such appointment or at any time thereafter. We do not deem it necessary, however, to hold that there were no assets of the roofing company in this state, which would justify the appointment of a receiver. As the receiver appointed for a foreign corporation must be appointed to take possession of the assets in the state where he is appointed, and acquires title to such assets only, the question arises whether the debts owing to the roofing company from the parties in Nebraska and Missouri can be regarded as property or assets in Illinois.

In construing the meaning of the words "property in this state," we have held that, "since the only property right which there can be in a debt is the mere right to receive payment of it, it is impossible that there can be anything of a tangible nature connected with such right which can occupy locality, and, so, the property right must accompany and remain with the person of the owner of the debt, and, therefore it cannot be in this state when the domicile of the owner is in another state." Cooper v. Beers, 148 Ill. 25. "Contracts respecting personal property and debts are now universally treated as having no situs or locality, and they follow the person of the owner in point of right." Story, Conf. L. § 862. Mobilia in hærent ossibus domini. Wharton on Conflict of Laws, at § 863, says: "The remaining theory is that of the lex domicilii of the creditor. This theory is now generally accepted in England and the United States. . . . Mobilia sequuntur personam is a maxim . . . peculiarly applicable to debts which have no local site, and which therefore follow the owner."

Here, the debts garnished belong to the Powerville Felt Roofing Company, Limited, which is a corporation organized under the laws of New York. A foreign corporation has its domicile in the state from which it derives its existence. 8 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 390, and cases cited. "A corporation is an artificial being, and has no dwelling either in its office, its warehouses, its depots, or its ships. Its domicile is the legal jurisdiction of its origin, irrespective of the residence of its officers, or the place where its business is transacted." Merrick v. Van Santvoord, 84 N. Y. 208; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Glenn, 28 Md. 287, 92 Am. Dec. 688; Germania F. Ins. Co. v. Francis, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 210, 20 L. ed. 77; State Treasurer v. Auditor General, 46 Mich. 224. The residence of a corporation is the state which creates it. It cannot change its domicile at will, and, although it may be permitted to transact business in another state, it cannot on that account acquire a residence there. Germania F. Ins. Co. v. Francis, supra; Dacey, Domicil, p. 112; Kirtland v. Hotchkiss, 100 U. S. 491, 25 L. ed. 558.

Inasmuch, therefore, as the debts due to the roofing company must be regarded as situated at its domicile, they are located in New York and not in Illinois, and cannot, therefore, be regarded as passing to appellant as receiver. Even if the residence of the debtors should be regarded as the location of these debts, they would not be property or effects in Illinois, but would be located in Nebraska and Missouri.

The commencement of a suit by filing a bill does not constitute lis pendens until summons or subpoena has been served. Grant v. Bennett, 96 Ill. 518. Accordingly it has been held that the lien created by a creditors' bill only comes into existence by the filing of the bill and service of process. Hallorn v. Trum, 125 Ill. 247; King v. Goodwin, 130 Ill. 102; First Nat. Bank of Sioux City v. Gage, 98 Ill. 172. Here, as there was no service of process upon the roofing company, no lien, equitable or otherwise, could have been acquired upon the debts garnished by appellee.

It is claimed that, in the ordinary course of the business of the roofing company as conducted at its Chicago branch, these debts would have been payable at the Chicago office, and that their situs must be regarded as being in Illinois, because they are thus alleged to have been payable in Illinois. There would be much force in this position if the debts were payable to a domestic corporation, but it cannot be considered as entitled to much weight here, where the debts are payable to a foreign corporation. Osgood v. Maguire, 61 N. Y. 524.

In the third place, it appears here, that, before a rule was entered upon appellee requiring him to show cause why he should not be committed for contempt, the appellant as receiver had intervened in the garnishment proceedings in Nebraska, and, upon his own application, had been made a defendant in those proceedings, and had been granted the power to appear and assert his rights therein. The suits which appellee was required to dismiss were suits in which the receiver had voluntarily made himself a defendant. He had, of his own accord, submitted to the jurisdiction of the foreign court with a view of their contesting his rights. It has been held that, where a party has been guilty of a contempt of court by bringing suit against a receiver without leave, the contempt is waived by the appearance of the receiver in the suit. Mulcahey, Jr. v. Strauss, 151 Ill. 70.

Contempts have been classified into direct and constructive, the former being those committed in the presence of the court or so near as to interrupt its proceedings, the latter being those which arise from matters not transpiring in court but from refusal to obey its orders and decrees that are to be performed elsewhere. Interfering with property in the possession of a receiver is a constructive contempt. Rapalje, Contempts, §§ 22, 24. Contempts have been still further classified into criminal and civil, the former being acts in disrespect of the court or its process, or tending to bring it into disrepute, or obstruct the administration of justice; the latter being "those quasi contempts which consist in failing to do some thing which the contemner is ordered by the court to do for the benefit or advantage of another party to the proceeding before the court." Rapalje, Contempts, § 21. "If the contempt consist in the refusal of a party to do something which he is ordered to do for the benefit or advantage of the opposite party, the process is civil." Phillips v. Welch, 11 Nev. 187. In such case, "the private party alone is interested in the enforcement of the order, and the moment he is satisfied, the imprisonment terminates." Ibid. A motion to commit for such a contempt may be answered by showing that the party complaining of it has waived it. "Waiver only applies where the contempt has arisen from breach of an order made in favor of any party—not, of course to contempts of the court itself." Oswald, Contempt of Court, pp. 113, 114.

27 L. R. A.

In the case at bar, the order of committal because of refusal to dismiss the foreign suits was made for the benefit and advantage of Palmer, the complainant in the creditor's bill. A receiver under a creditors' bill is not necessarily a trustee for the benefit of all the creditors, but for the benefit of the creditors in whose behalf he is appointed. Young v. Clapp, 147 Ill. 176. In his answer to the petition of the receiver, the appellee set up the order of the foreign court making the receiver a party to the foreign suits at his own request. We are inclined to think that the answer thereby showed, in connection with the other circumstances heretofore mentioned, a good defense to the motion or petition for an attachment, on the ground that the action of the receiver in submitting to the jurisdiction of the foreign court with a view of having his rights determined there amounted to a waiver of the contempt. It is true that the mere pendency of a suit in one state cannot be pleaded in bar or abatement of a second action in another state even between the same parties and for the same cause of action. Allen v. Watt, 60 Ill. 655. The reason for this rule is that the defendant would not be obliged to pay the money twice, since payment at least, if not a recovery in the one suit, might be pleaded puis darrein continuance to the other suit; and if the two suits should ever proceed pari passu to judgment and execution, a satisfaction of either judgment might be shown in discharge of the other. Bowns v. Joy, 9 Johns. 221; Walsh v. Durkin, 12 Johns. 99; Embree v. Hanna, 5 Johns. 101. But it is manifest that neither the rule, nor the reason for it, has any application here. That may be a good answer to a motion to commit for contempt which may not be a good defense upon the merits. In the Servcomb Case, the receiver had not intervened in the foreign suit when the application to commit for contempt was made, and therefore whatever was there said, inconsistent with the proposition that such an intervention as is shown under the circumstances of the present case can be regarded as a waiver, must be modified to accord with the views here expressed. Where a court of equity is asked to proceed as for a contempt against a creditor, who seeks to reach by attachment or garnishment debts due to an insolvent debtor from persons residing out of the state, it is proper to inquire which of the parties has a paramount right or superior equity to those debts. Dehon v. Foster, supra.

For the reasons here stated, the judgment of the Appellate Court is affirmed, and the decree or order of the Superior Court of Cook County is reversed and the cause is remanded to the latter court for further proceedings in accordance with the views here expressed.

Petition for rehearing denied.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

John F. LANGHAMMER et al., Appts.,

v.

John MUNTER et al., Officers of Registration.

(.....Md. ....)

A voter need not have any particular spot which he calls "home" provided he makes his residence (in the sense of having no other home) anywhere or in however many places, for the required times, within the limits of the state and the voting district.

(February 23, 1895.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from an order of the Court of Common Pleas refusing to strike from the registry list certain names which had been placed there by defendant, but which plaintiffs alleged were illegally there, by reason of the fact that their owners were not residents at the place from which they registered. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Charles J. Bonaparte and John C. Rose, for appellants:

A voter "cannot lawfully vote in a ward or election district in which he does not reside, even though that ward or election district be within the legislative district or county where he has his residence; and where he cannot lawfully vote, he is not entitled to register or to remain registered."

Kemp v. Owens, 76 Md. 338.

Under no definition of residence which has ever been given by lexicographers, text-writers, or courts, is it possible to contend that the alleged voters in question had any residence in the fifth precinct of the first ward.

2 Kent, Com. 431, note F; Roosevelt v. Kellogg, 20 Johns. 208; Re Wrigley, 8 Wend. 140; Long v. Ryan, 30 Gratt. 720; Paine, Elections, § 46; Johnson v. People, 94 Ill. 506; Re Collins, 64 How. Pr. 65; Lambe v. Smythe, 15 Mees. & W. 423; Dale v. Irwin, 78 Ill. 182; Opinion of the Justices, 5 Met. 588; Fry's Election Case, 71 Pa. 302, 10 Am. Rep. 698; Spragins v. Houghton, 8 Ill. 377; French v. Lighty, 9 Ind. 477; Shaeffer v. Gilbert, 73 Md. 70.

Can it be seriously contended that these alleged voters had any home in the residence of the person who allowed them to sleep for two nights in his kitchen? That house was certainly not their home.

Md. Const. art. 1, § 1; Kemp v. Owens, 76 Md. 338.

Every man has had a residence at some period of his life. That residence remains his legal residence until he has acquired another.

Thorndike v. Boston, 1 Met. 242; McCrary, Elections, § 71; French v. Lighty, 9 Ind. 478;

NOTE.—The above case is a novel one, being discussed without any question as to the existence of another residence outside the voting district but solely with references to the necessity of a place within the district which may be more specifically located as that of the voter's home or residence.

As to effect of residence of voters in schools or public institutions, see note to Wolcott v. Holcomb (Mich.) 23 L. R. A. 215.

2; L. R. A.

Paine, Elections, § 45; Moffett v. Hill, 181 Ill. 239.

If the last residence acquired by these men was in the state of Maryland, they are entitled, under the provisions of the constitution, to register and vote at that last place of residence until they have acquired a new residence elsewhere.

Thorndike v. Boston, supra; Shaeffer v. Gilbert, 73 Md. 71.

A man who sometimes pensioned himself upon a friend in one town, and sometimes upon relatives in another town, and sometimes with different persons living in the district in which he claimed to vote, had no residence in it, and no right to vote therein.

Shepard v. Allen (Ill.) 15 West. Rep. 133; Behrensmeier v. Kreitz, 185 Ill. 591; McCrary, Elections, § 71; French v. Lighty, supra.

A temporary resort to a precinct for no other honest purpose of residence is a fraud, and not residence, and gives no rights.

Warren v. Board of Registration, 3 L. R. A. 203, 73 Mich. 398.

Messrs. Peter J. Campbell, James H. Preston, William S. Bryan, Jr., and Edward D. Fitzgerald, for appellees:

Neither the legislature nor the courts can add to the constitutional qualifications of voters.

Quinn v. State, 85 Ind. 485, 9 Am. Rep. 754; People v. Canaday, 73 N. C. 198, 21 Am. Rep. 465.

Page, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from an order of the court of common pleas of Baltimore City, dismissing the petition of the appellants, praying that the names of James Bosley and Charles Williams be stricken from the registry of voters of the fifth precinct of the first ward of Baltimore city.

At the hearing, the petitioners produced the registry of voters of the precinct and ward, and read in evidence so much of the contents thereof as related to the registration of the persons alleged by the petition to be improperly registered. The appellants' counsel, however, contend that these entries can only be used for the purpose of showing what the appeal is from, and are not evidence to be regarded by the judge in determining whether the register has acted properly. We cannot adopt this view. The duty of a register of voters, under our statute, is not merely ministerial. It is his duty to interrogate the party applying for registration under oath, touching his right to register, and if, after this primary examination of the applicant, and of such other evidence as may be immediately accessible, he is in doubt, he may adjourn his determination to a subsequent day, when he must proceed to determine whether the applicant is a qualified voter, or disqualified. He is thus compelled to take evidence, weigh its force and effect, and finally to "determine," and it is from this determination, that any one who thinks himself aggrieved may appeal to one of the judges of the supreme bench of Baltimore city (if the election precinct is in Baltimore city). The appeal is by petition, and with it shall be filed certified copies of all the entries in the registry of voters, relating to the subject-matter, and if, in the opinion of the judge the petition and exhibits show a prima facie cause of complaint, he orders the proceedings provided by the act.

After answer is made, and evidence is adduced, the court is required to consider, in making up its determination, the petition (which includes the entries) the answers and such testimony, for or against the petition, as may be offered, and from the whole case thus made up decide whether the party is, or is not a qualified voter. These entries are not only the sworn statements of the applicant but also the deliberate findings of an officer charged with the public duty of determining their correctness; and as such, should not be disturbed until their falsity has been established by sufficient evidence. Adopting this principle in the case we are now considering, what does the proof establish? There is no evidence assailing such entries as show that James Bosley is white, twenty-five years of age, and has resided in Baltimore city twenty-five years, and in the ward four years. There is no sufficient evidence to controvert the entry with respect to his evidence (the nature of which as proven will be hereinafter examined), in the precinct. The proof that his name does not appear upon the police census of registered voters is too uncertain to be entitled to much weight. The fact that Bosley was a sea-faring man might fully account for his absence at the time the census was taken; even if it be assumed that the police performed their work with perfect accuracy.

It was proved by the testimony of Charles A. Eisensick that he resided at 2325 Essex street the place Bosley had stated as his residence in the ward and precinct; that neither of the alleged voters had ever lived there, but that he knew them, and, in the month of August, 1894, had permitted them, at their request, to sleep for two nights in his kitchen; that they had asked him to permit them to register from his house, and he had replied that he did not object, if it was not contrary to law; that the alleged voters were two young men who followed the water, and he supposed they were then down the bay dredging. He did not know whether they had any permanent home; thought they had not, and if they had, he did not know where it was. He had known them for some years, and on one or two previous occasions they had in like manner slept at his house for a night or two at a time, but never longer. It was also shown that subpoenas had been issued for each of the parties, and returned by the sheriff non est. This is a full statement of all the evidence in the cause. We have stated it particularly with reference to James Bosley, but what has been said is equally applicable to the case of Charles Williams.

Under these circumstances the appellant contends that neither of these men is a qualified voter and entitled to be registered. This depends on the meaning of the word "residence," as used in the 1st section of article 1 of the Constitution, when applied to the particular proof in this case. What constitutes "residence," within the meaning of this section and article of the constitution, has frequently been the subject of judicial decision, in this state and elsewhere. It has often been held to be equivalent to the word "home," in the sense of a home, to which one whenever absent intends to return. It undoubtedly carries with it an element of permanence, differing, however, widely in special cases. "The word 'home' suggests relations differing in breadth and strength, though not in kind, when applied, on the one hand, to a farmer who has resided since his birth, and expects to reside until his death, on the same spot, and on the other hand to the clergyman whose home may change in two years, or to the railroad laborer whose home may change in two months." Paine, Elections, 46; Chase v. Miller, 41 Pa. 408; Story, Conf. L. § 41.

Temporary absence, with a continuous intention to return, will not deprive one of his residence, though it extend through a series of years (Cooley, Const. Lim. 600; Fry's Election Case, 71 Pa. 303, 10 Am. Rep. 698); nor will a sojourn, however prolonged, with the purpose of returning, be sufficient to acquire a residence. There must be the act of abiding, without the intention of removing therefrom. Story, on Conflict of Laws, section 41, says: "In other words, there must be, to constitute residence, an 'actual home in the sense of having no other home, whether he intends to reside there permanently or for a definite or indefinite length of time.'" Shaeffer v. Gilbert, 78 Md. 71. Residence, therefore, is a question depending upon fact and intention, and, if so, it may be applicable to a particular spot or to a whole country. A person who wanders from country to country, with no intention of remaining fixedly anywhere, acquires no new residence. On the other hand, one who confines his wanderings to a particular country or locality, but declines to fix himself upon some particular spot, can very properly be said to be a resident of that country or locality. Home, domicile or residence, may therefore include a spot or a wide area. Each of these words may be applied "either to a house, a precinct, a ward, a county or a state. Dicey on the Law of Domicil, p. 55, says: "It is obvious that . . . state residence and the district residence are of the same nature, and whatsoever is necessary to constitute the one is essential to define the other." Fry's Election Case, 71 Pa. 306, 10 Am. Rep. 698.

The framers of our constitution have in the 1st section of article 1 clearly recognized these applications of the word "residence." That section prescribes as the qualification of a voter, that he shall be a resident of the state for one year, and a resident of the district six months. There is no requirement that the proposed voter shall have some particular spot, which he calls his home, provided he makes his home (in the sense of having no other home) anywhere or in however many places, for the required times, within the limits of the state and the voting district.

Probably it was borne in mind that numbers of citizens, through misfortune or otherwise were without dwelling places, but there is no evidence to be found in any part of the constitution, that these were to be denied the privileges of the elective franchise. On the contrary it seems to have been the purpose to confer the right of suffrage upon every male citizen who has attained the age of twenty-one years, only requiring, for wise reasons, that every such person shall have resided in the state one year, and in the voting district six months. When the general assembly came to provide by law for a uniform registration of voters, as required by the fifth section of article 1 of the Constitution, it was careful to prescribe such regulations as should prevent abuse and fraud in the exercise of this great privilege. The city of Baltimore having been divided into small precincts, officers of registration are provided for each, and large powers are given them effectively to discharge the duties imposed upon them.

For the purpose of clearly identifying the person applying to be registered, the officers of registration are to ascertain his name, color, age, place of birth, place of residence by street and number (if any), the time of his residence in city and ward, and enter the same in the proper column of books, prepared by the state, and furnished them for that purpose. Fraudulent conduct on the part of the registers, or of other persons in or about the registration of voters, is made a misdemeanor punishable on conviction, with heavy penalties. And in addition to all this, if any person, whether he be the person applying to be registered or any other person, shall think himself aggrieved by the action of the officer of registration there is given the right to appeal to a judge of the supreme bench. If these safeguards should prove ineffectual to prevent the fraudulent practices which the counsel for the appellant seems to apprehend, it will be for the legislature to devise and enact other provisions to accomplish the most desirable object of securing absolutely pure elections. But whatever may be done, no restrictions can be imposed that will require other or different qualifications for voting than those prescribed by the first article of the Constitution of the state.

Order affirmed.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF GRAFTON, WEST VIRGINIA, Appt.,

v.
BUCKHANNON BANK.

(.....Md.....)

1. Sending a check by an indirect route will not constitute negligence in presenting it if it reaches its destination as soon as if sent direct, taking the full time allowed by law for mailing it.

NOTE.—The taking of a substituted check considered as a discharge of the maker of the first check is discussed in a note to Anderson v. Gill (Md.) 26 L. R. A. 200.

37 L. R. A.,

2. Taking a substituted check from the drawee of a worthless check who cannot cash it, and then failing to use due diligence in presenting the new check on which no amount of diligence could have obtained payment, will not create any liability to the drawer of the original check.

(February 25, 1896.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Baltimore City Court in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover money which had been due from defendant to plaintiff and for which a draft on a Baltimore bank had been given but which failed of collection because of plaintiff's alleged negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Frank Woods, for appellant:

The plaintiff was not bound by the law to present this check for payment sooner than the close of bank hours on the 14th of January.

2 Dan. Neg. Inst. §§ 1592, 1595, 1598; Story, Prom. Notes, § 493.

The drawees, J. J. Nicholson & Sons, were agents of the defendants to pay its check to plaintiff, and by pretending to pay it as they did, they misled plaintiff's agent and committed a fraud on him, because they had then overdrawn their account with the Western National Bank and must have known they had no funds there to pay their substituted check.

Tiedeman, Com. Paper, § 445, p. 5, par. 10.

No case can be found in the books where under such circumstances the drawer of a bill of exchange was discharged. To establish such a rule would be to hold that the mere receiving of a substituted check by a collector worked the discharge of the drawer of the original bill of exchange, a new doctrine, never before held and nowhere announced.

A banker or other agent holding a bill or note for collection would act at his peril in delivering it up on receipt of a check for the amount; and if the debtor did not pay the amount in money and the drawer and indorsers were not duly notified, they would be discharged, and the loss would fall upon the collecting agent. If, indeed, on the same day that the bill was due the agent received a check for the amount and delivering up the bill, but on presentation of the check at the bank and refusal of payment that very day it had been returned, the bill or note reclaimed and protested and the drawers or indorsers duly notified, then no right would be forfeited, but the liability of all preserved.

2 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 1625; Burkhalter v. Second Nat. Bank of Erie, Pa. 42 N. Y. 538; First Nat. Bank of Meadville, Pa. v. Fourth Nat. Bank of New York City, 77 N. Y. 320, 83 Am. Rep. 618; Johnson v. Bank of North America, 5 Robt. 554; Smith v. Miller, 6 Robt. 157.

Mr. N. P. Bond, with Mr. Robert D. Morrison, for appellee.

McSherry, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The case of Anderson v. Gill, 80 Md. —, 25 L. R. A. 200, is clearly distinguishable from the one now before us. In Anderson v. Gill we held that when the payee of a check drawn on a banker having funds of the drawer available to cash it presents it in due time through his collecting agent, and the latter, instead of receiving money for it, surrenders it and takes in lieu of the money the drawee's own check upon another bank having funds with which to pay the substituted check, and then fails to use proper diligence in presenting the substituted check for payment, which when it is presented is not paid because of the supervening insolvency and suspension of the drawer of the substituted check, the loss must fall, as between the drawer and payee of the original check, upon the latter and not upon the former.

It is not necessary to repeat the reasons or again refer to the adjudged cases upon which the conclusion reached in that case was founded. It is obvious that if the payee's own negligence in not presenting the substituted check in a reasonable time before the suspension of its drawer, has been the direct cause of its non-payment; or, stating it differently, if the substituted check was drawn upon a bank having funds of its drawer, and if it would have been paid had due and proper diligence been used in presenting it, and after the expiration of the time beyond which its presentment would not be within the limits of due diligence, the drawer of it suspends and the substituted check is, in consequence, not paid, this negligence of the payee of the original check in not presenting the substituted check at a time when it would have been paid, cannot be visited upon the drawer of the original check, and he will be discharged. But this doctrine cannot apply where the facts fail to show that the drawer of the original check has been injured by the delay or the want of due diligence of the payee or his collecting agent. If the drawer of the original check has not been injured by the conduct of the payee, he is in no worse position in consequence of that conduct than if due diligence had been used by the payee without securing payment; and if the facts show that the exercise of due diligence in making presentment of the substituted check would have been useless, because of the insolvency of the drawer thereof, and because the drawer thereof was without funds to meet it, then the failure to use such diligence could not prejudice the rights of the drawer of the original check, provided the drawee thereof was insolvent when it was drawn and was unable to cash it when presented.

Assuming always that the original check would have been paid in cash had cash been demanded and insisted on when it was presented; and assuming also that the exercise of due diligence would have secured the payment of the substituted check, then the failure to exert that diligence whereby loss occurs would result in an injury to the drawer of the original check and would discharge him. But injury cannot be predicated of the want of such diligence unless but for the want of due diligence the money would have been paid. Until it is shown that the use of due diligence by the payee or his agent would have resulted in the payment of the substituted check, the first step has not been taken towards establishing injurious negligence on his part.

Now, in the case at bar, the Buckhannon Bank of West Virginia being indebted to the First National Bank of Grafton, West Virginia, and having on deposit with J. J. Nicholson & Sons, of Baltimore, an amount greater than this debt, gave to the Grafton Bank a check on Nicholson & Sons for the amount of the indebtedness due to the Grafton Bank. This check was dated January 11, 1892, and was on the same day mailed to the Grafton Bank and was received by it on the succeeding day. On that day, the twelfth, the Grafton Bank indorsed the check for collection for its account and forwarded it by mail to its correspondent, the Manufacturer's National Bank of Philadelphia. On the 13th the Manufacturer's Bank received it and at once sent it by mail to its correspondent the National Farmers' & Planters' Bank of Baltimore, for collection. On the next day, the fourteenth, the last-named bank received it and at one o'clock presented it, together with other checks and drafts, at the counter of J. J. Nicholson & Sons for payment. Payment was not made in cash but instead thereof, upon the surrender of these checks and drafts, Nicholson & Sons drew their own check on the Western National Bank of Baltimore for the total amount of this and the other checks and drafts, and delivered it to the messenger of the National Farmers' & Planters' Bank.

In thirty minutes afterwards, Nicholson & Sons, having suspended and being hopelessly insolvent, closed their doors. When the check of Nicholson & Sons to the National Farmers' & Planters' Bank was shortly afterwards, but on the same afternoon, and during banking hours, presented to the Western National Bank, payment was refused. Demand was immediately made for the return by the Nicholsonsons of the surrendered checks, but admittance to their banking house was not obtained until next day, when the check drawn by the Buckhannon Bank was protested and then recovered by an action of replevin. It is admitted by the agreed statement of facts that had the check held by the Grafton Bank been presented to Nicholson & Sons at any time on the 13th or up to noon on the 14th it would have been paid by them; and it is further admitted that Nicholson & Sons had no funds to their credit with the Western National Bank, but on the contrary were largely indebted to the bank on account of overdrafts when they drew their check in favor of the National Farmers' & Planters' Bank at one o'clock on the 14th of January. It is also distinctly admitted that this check "was in fact of no value."

We are now asked, in the light of these facts, to say that the receipt by the National Farmers' & Planters' Bank of this worthless check and the failure to present it within thirty minutes thereafter, though it is not shown that it would have been paid had it been presented within that time, has resulted in such an injury to the Buckhannon Bank as to discharge the latter's liability to the Grafton Bank; and this, too, though the Nicholsonsons were utterly unable, by reason of their hopeless insolvency, to pay in cash the check drawn on them by the Buckhannon Bank when it was presented at one o'clock the same day. That is the appellee's contention and so the court below decided. The position is absolutely untenable.

The Grafton Bank having received on January the 12th the check drawn on Nicholson & Sons was bound to present it for payment in a reasonable time. There being no dispute about the facts, what constituted a reasonable time is a question of law for the court. Whilst it is undisputed that if the check be drawn on a bank located in the place where the check is delivered the holder has until the close of business hours of the next secular day to present it, it is equally the settled law that if the check be drawn on a bank situated in another place it should, at the latest, be mailed for presentment on the day after it is received and should be presented at the place of payment on the day after it reaches there. 3 Randolph Com. Paper, §1106; Byles, Bills, 14, 164; Chitty, Bills, 18th Am. ed. 883; Rickford v. Ridge, 2 Campb. 587. In the pending case, as already stated, the check was received by the Grafton Bank on January the 12th, and was mailed, not the next day, but the same day to its Philadelphia correspondent for collection and was received in Baltimore on the 14th and was on that day presented for payment. Though the record contains the admission that if the check had been mailed in Grafton on the 12th to Baltimore direct it would in the due course of the mail have reached the latter place on the morning of the 18th, still the Grafton Bank was under no obligation to mail it for collection until the day after it was received by it, that is until the 18th; and had it forwarded it on that day by mail direct to Baltimore, the check would not have been received there until the 14th, the day it was in fact received.

The forwarding of it through Philadelphia did not, therefore, cause it to reach Baltimore later than the Grafton Bank was bound to have it there for presentment. As under the rule above stated the Grafton Bank had, through its collecting agent, until the close of business hours on the 15th to present the check for payment, it was obviously guilty of no negligence in not presenting it prior to noon of the 14th, up to which time, according to the agreed statement of facts, it would have been paid. But the check having been presented an hour later, when confessedly the Nicholsons were unable to pay it over their own counter, and the National Farmers' & Planters' Bank having taken, upon the surrender of this worthless check, an equally worthless one drawn by Nicholson & Sons on a bank in which they had no funds, but to which they were already heavily indebted on overdrafts, no injury was in fact done to the Buckhannon Bank unless it was made to appear that the Western National Bank would have paid Nicholson & Sons' check within the thirty minutes following its receipt by the National Farmers' & Planters' Bank, even though the drawers of that check had no funds to their credit when they drew it. We cannot assume that the Western National Bank would have paid this check if it had been presented prior to the actual suspension of the Nicholsons; and as there is nothing in the record to show that it would have been paid, there is nothing to indicate that the failure to make the presentment worked any injury to the Buckhannon Bank at all.

As the Nicholsons, according to the conceded facts, were utterly unable to pay the check drawn on them by the Buckhannon Bank when it was presented at their counter, the surrender of the check and the acceptance of the substituted check of itself caused no injury to the Buckhannon Bank; and as, according to the admitted facts, the substituted check was, when drawn, utterly valueless, the mere failure to present it within thirty minutes, produced no injury to the Buckhannon Bank. Neither, therefore, the acceptance of the substituted check, nor the failure for thirty minutes to present it, placed the Buckhannon Bank in a worse position than it occupied at the moment its check was presented to Nicholson & Sons for payment; and that presentment was, in fact, made earlier than, under the law it was necessary to make it. Consequently, no act done by the Grafton Bank, or by its agents, caused any injury to the Buckhannon Bank. In the Anderson Case just the opposite facts were presented, and, of course, the opposite conclusion was reached. In that case it appeared that the check drawn by Anderson on Nicholson & Sons would have been paid in cash when presented had cash been demanded; and further, that the substituted check on the Western National Bank would have been paid had due diligence been used in presenting it. It was shown that two other checks drawn by Nicholson & Sons on the Western National Bank after they had drawn and delivered the one given in exchange for the Anderson check were presented and paid. Had the same diligence been used by the holder of the check given in substitution for the Anderson check, that the holders of these two other checks exerted, that check would also have been paid. The failure to use that degree of diligence, under these circumstances, therefore, resulted in injuring Anderson, and he was held to be discharged.

It follows from what we have said that the judgment of the court below was erroneous and it will be reversed that judgment may be entered for the plaintiff.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded with costs above and below.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT

Kate DECKER et al., Appts.,
v.
August SCHULZE et al., Respts.

(..... Wash. ....)

Equity will not decree the rescission of an executed sale of land merely because of a breach of covenant as to title in the absence of fraud or other ground of equitable jurisdiction except mutual mistake as to the title, especially where the extent of the failure of title is not shown.

(February 1, 1895.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Superior Court for Spokane County in favor of defendants in an action brought to rescind a sale of real estate and to procure a return of the purchase money. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. A. H. Kenyon and Jones, Voorhees & Stephens, for appellants:

For reversal of the judgment in the court below the court relies upon—

Sears v. Stinson, 8 Wash. 615; Moody v. Spokane & U. H. Street R. Co. 5 Wash. 699.

Mr. William A. Huneke, for respondents:

Rescission is generally defined as the "avoiding of a voidable contract"—not of a valid or void one.

21 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 27.

The principal grounds for rescission are the following: fraud, inadequacy of consideration, undue influence, mistake, illegality, coverture, infancy, insanity, intoxication, duress, failure of consideration and nonperformance.

21 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 27 et seq.

The general rule is, if there is a total failure of performance rescission will lie—particularly when associated with other equitable grounds.

21 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 44 et seq.; Moody v. Spokane & U. H. Street R. Co. supra.

In executory contracts, equity answers with a readier ear, its interference being more feasible; while in executed contracts nothing can induce equity to interfere unless it be strong, equitable grounds.

The complaint in the case at bar alleges a partial failure of performance of a valid, executed contract and alleges neither eviction nor any grounds whatsoever for equitable interference. Appellants could not have chosen a more difficult state of facts upon which to base their prayer for the equitable remedy of rescission.

21 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 46; 2 Parsons, Cont. 7th ed. pp. 812, 818; Rawle, Covenants, 5th ed. §§ 854, 861, 875, 876, and

NOTE.—The distinction between executed and executory contracts when relief against them is sought is very clearly made in the above case. For cases on the general subject of mistake as ground for relief in equity, see notes to Miller v. Powers (Ind.) 4 L. R. A. 428; Page v. Higgins (Mass.) 5 L. R. A. 122; Reigel v. American L. Ins. Co. (Pa.) 11 L. R. A. 857; Butler v. Barnes (Conn.) 12 L. R. A. 273.

27 L. R. A.

